4. Seem, that, to effect the expressed intention of the testator, the word "survivor" may receive a different sense in different parts of a will. Winterton v. Cranford, 1 Russ. & M. 407; 8 L. J., Ch., 134.

5. D. by will gave all his real and personal property to his wife for life, and, after certain gifts not material to the question argued, he gave to his five first cousins, naming them, or the survivors of them, the sum of 1,050*l.* stock, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; the whole to be paid as soon as possible after his wife's death. D.'s wife survived him. Three of the cousins died in the lifetime of D., and only one survived D.'s widow:—Held, that the word "survivors" must include the case of one legatee alone surviving. Hearn v. Baker, 2 Kay & J. 383.

6. A testator gave 5,000*l.* to each of his four daughters for their separate use, and if they had any children the principal to be divided between them after her death, if they should attain twenty-one; if not, it was to be divided among "her surviving sisters." A. B., one daughter, died, leaving two children, both of whom died infants, but one of them left a child surviving. Another daughter died before her sister A. B.'s children, leaving three children. The testator had a fifth daughter, for whom he had separately provided:—Held, that the separate provision was no reason for excluding her from taking under the words "her surviving sisters." Carver v. Burgess, 24 L. J., Ch., 401; 7 De G. M. & G. 96; 3 W. R. 308; 3 Eq. Rep. 421; 18 Beav. 541; 2 W. R. 125.

Maintenance having been allowed by an order of this Court out of the income of the legacy, and the surplus having been invested, it was held that such surplus passed to the legal personal representatives of the infants. Ib.

II. WHEN CONSTRUED "OTHERS."

1. When Construed Strictly, not as Importing "Others," 8013.

2. When Construed "Others," 8017.

3. Where word "Others" Associated with word "Survivors," 8021.

4. "Others." When Construed "Survivors," 8022.

1. When Construed Strictly, not as Importing "Others."

7. The word "survivors" construed strictly. Davidson v. Dallas, 14 Ves. 576. And see Milson v. Audrey, 5 Ves. 465.

8. The rule of law, as laid down by modern authorities, is, that the word "survivors" is to be confined to its literal signification, of survivors at the period spoken of by the testator, in every case where it is possible to do so without violating the clear meaning of the rest of the will. Re Arey, 32 Beav. 122.

9. Testatrix, before the statute 1 Vict., c. 20, bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to her son A. and her daughter B., to be divided equally between them, in case they were both living at the time of her decease; but if either of them should happen to die before her, or at any time after, without issue, then she bequeathed the share of him or her so dying, and without issue, to the survivor of them. A. and B. survived the testatrix. A. died unmarried in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that the moiety of the residue given to A. devolved to B. Turner v. Frampton, 2 Colly. 331; 10 Jur. 21.

10. Where there were different bequests to different classes of children, followed by a general clause that the shares of all such legatees as died under twenty-three should go over to the survivor and survivors, such clause was construed distributively as to each class, and the word "survivor" was taken in its usual sense. Cromek v. Lumb, 3 Y. & Coll. 565.

A testator gave a fund between the children of H., and provided that the legacies should vest at twenty-three, and that if any should die under twenty-three without issue, their legacies should go to the survivors; there were five children of H., of whom one, who attained twenty-three, died between the deaths of two of his brothers, who died under that age:—Held, that he took an original fifth, and a part of the share of the one who died before him, but no part of the share of the one who died after him. Id.

1. Legacies to the children (by name) of the testator's late niece, M., to be assigned them when and as soon as they should respectively attain twenty-five: provided that if any should die under twenty-five leaving issue, the issue to take the parent's legacy; but if any should die under twenty-five without having issue then living, the legacy of the child so dying to go and be paid to the "survivors and survivor, and others and other" of the same children in equal shares. At the death of the testator all the children of M. were under twenty-five; all afterwards attained twenty-five except A., who died under that age without issue, having survived two of the children, B. and C. The share of A. devolved to the representatives of B. and C., together with the children who survive A. Slade v. Parr, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 565; 7 Jur. 102.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that the surplus dividends of a legacy after payments for maintenance during the minority of the legatee go with the corpus. Id.

2. Gift of a residue of real and personal estate to trustees to sell, get in, and pay and divide the money arising therefrom unto, and equally among, the testator's children so soon as the youngest should attain twenty-one; the daughter's shares to be invested and secured, and the interest paid to such daughter, and the principal to be disposed of amongst her children as she might direct; if no child the share to be divided amongst the survivors of the testator's children equally; and in case of the death of any of his children leaving lawful issue, the testator gave to such issue the share the parent would have been entitled to have. Semble, that the word "survivors" in the residuary clause must be construed in its natural sense, and not as importing "others," and that this construction of the word in one part of the will must govern the construction of the same word in the other parts. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare 14; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 423; 6 Jur. 663.

3. Bequest to one for life, and then to be divided among four legatees equally, as tenants in common; if either died in the life of the tenant for life, his share to be divided among his children; if either died during that period without leaving issue, then his share to go to the survivors or survivor of them. One died leaving nine children, and then another died without issue, and then the tenant for life died:—Held, that the children of the legatee who died first took no interest in the share of the one who died afterwards without issue. Moate v. Moate, 16 Jur. 1010.

4. Where testator, after giving legacies to daughters for their respective lives, with remainder to their respective issue, and in default of issue the share of the daughter so dying to go to the survivors, directed that if any daughter should die before vesting of legacy, leaving issue, the legacy should descend to such issue:—Held, that the word "survivor" must be strictly taken, but that under the clause of substitution a survivor's share of a deceased daughter's legacy passed to the children of a daughter predeceasing testator, leaving issue surviving him. Willets v.

Willets, 7 Hare 39; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 457; 12 Jur. 670.

5. Gift of a certain sum to each of the children of A. and B. who should attain twenty-one, but in case any of them should die under that age his share to go to his surviving brothers and sisters, the word "surviving" in such a limitation cannot be read "other," so as to entitle a child to the share of a brother who died before he was born. Mann v. Thompson, Kay 638; 2 W. R. 582. S. C. nom. Perkin v. Mann, 18 Jur. 826.

6. The rule as settled by modern authorities is, that the word "survivor" is to be construed strictly, and is not to be read "other," unless the rest of the will should render the more liberal and less literal construction essential, for the purpose of carrying into execution the objects expressed by the will. Hodge v. Foot, 34 Beav. 349.

7. The words "survivor or survivors" in a will must be taken in their proper and usual sense, unless the context plainly shows that the testator employed such words in some other signification. Re Usticke, 14 W. R. 447.

The words "survivors and survivor" of parents construed strictly, although the children of some of them took an interest in remainder. S. C. 35 Beav. 338.

8. A testator devised all his estate to trustees (subject to an annuity to his wife), to pay the rents to his six daughters, share and share alike, as they should respectively attain twenty-one, or be married, and to continue during their respective lives; and in case any of his children should die without having any child or children, then as to the share or shares of her or them so dying in trust to pay the same to the survivors or survivor of them, to be equally divided between them, if more than one; and if but one, to pay the whole to her; provided that such shares should be paid to his daughters for their separate use; and in case any of his daughters should have any child or children living at their respective deaths, it should be lawful for such of his daughters to dispose of their property, thereby devised to them, to and amongst her child or children as she might appoint, and for want of appointment to and among such child or children equally; and in case all his daughters should die without having any child or children, as aforesaid, then for his wife; and he devised all the residue of his property to his six daughters:—Held, that "survivors or survivor" were to be construed in their ordinary sense of "longest liver," and that a surviving daughter took for her life the share of one who died without children, to the exclusion of the children of another deceased daughter. Browne v. Rainsford, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 384; 16 W. R. 198.

9. A father devised real estate to trustees upon trust to receive the rent, and to pay one-fourth part of such rent unto each of his four daughters for her separate use during her life, and after the death of either or any of his daughters, he gave and devised one equal undivided fourth part or share of and in the premises unto the child or children of each of his daughters so dying and leaving lawful issue, and the heirs and assigns of such children for ever, and as tenants in common if more than one child; and in case any or either of his daughters should happen to die without leaving any lawful issue surviving her, then the testator gave and devised the share or shares of any such daughter so dying unto the survivors or survivor of his daughters, and their or her heirs and assigns for ever; and in case all his daughters should die without leaving lawful issue, then he gave and devised the premises unto his two sons:—Held, that the words "survivors or survivor" must be taken in their natural and primary sense, and that on the death of a daughter without leaving a child, the children of a daughter who predeceased her took no interest in her share. Twist v. Herbert, 28 L. T., N. S., 489.

1. Where legacies were given to each of four persons for life, interest at 5 per cent., to be paid till heir attained twenty-one, and "in case of the demise of any of them without legitimate issue, then his or her proportions to be divided equally among the survivors," and one of the legatees died without having been married:—Held, that the survivors were absolutely entitled to the legacy. Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 4 Beav. 419.

2. A testator gave stock to trustees to be divided, after the death of the two persons who had life interest in it, among A, B, C, D., and E., in equal shares; and he directed, that if any of them should die without issue, before their respective shares should become payable, the share of him, her, or them so dying without issue should go to, and be equally divided among, the survivor and survivors of them. A died, leaving issue, who were living at the time fixed for the distribution of the fund. B. died, leaving a son, who died without issue, before the period of distribution. Shortly afterwards, and also before the period of distribution, C. died without issue:—Held, that B.'s personal representative was not entitled to any portion of the fund; that the one-third of B.'s share, which, on the failure of her issue, survives to C, did not, on C.'s death, survive to the other legatees, but was transmitted to her personal representative; and that the words "survivor or survivors" were to be construed in their natural sense, and not as equivalent to "other and others," so that no part of the share of B. and C. went over to A.'s personal representative. Crowder v. Stone, 3 Russ. 217; 7 L. J., Ch., 93.

3. A. devised freeholds to two or their heirs as tenants in common, and in case either should die without leaving lawful issue surviving her, then he devised her part unto the survivor:—Held, that "survivor" was to be read in its ordinary sense, and not in the sense of "other." Greenwood v. Percy, 26 Beav. 572.

4. Testator being possessed of a mill, etc., which had been granted to him and heirs for three lives, devised his property to trustees and their heirs upon trust to let and to pay one-fifth of the profits to his wife for life, and the other four parts he directed to be applied for the maintenance, education, and bringing up of his four children until they severally attain twenty-five, at which time, as they should severally attain that age, he gave, devised, and bequeathed unto such of his children as should attain that age, one-fifth of the property, to hold to them and their heirs. The testator then provided that, if any of his children should die under twenty-five and leave no lawful issue, then he gave, etc., the part of him, her, or them so dying unto the survivors or survivor of his said children, to be equally divided amongst them, their heirs, etc., with a like proviso if any of such children should happen to die under twenty-one; and after the death of his wife he gave the other fifth part to his children subject to the same trusts, provisos, and conditions. The testator left all his four children, E., M., J., and Joseph, him surviving. E. attained twenty-five and married S.; M. married P. and died under twenty-five; J. attained twenty-five, married G., and had one child who died an infant, and afterwards J. died. Joseph died under twenty-five unmarried. On bill filed by E. and her husband against the children of M. and G., the husband of J., in order to ascertain the rights of the parties to the mill:—Held, that the children of the testator did not take vested interests until they severally attained twenty-five. That the words "survivors or survivor" could not be read "others or other;" that the husband of J. was not entitled to the share of J. during his life as tenant by the curtesy. Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50.

5. Testator bequeathed the residue of his estate equally between his two sons and his daughter with a direction that in case either of his sons should die under twenty-one, or in case his daughter should die unmarried, the share of the son or daughter so dying should go to his, the testator's, two then surviving children; and that in case both sons should die under twenty-one, or one son die under that age, and the daughter die unmarried, the share of the second child so dying should go to the only surviving child; and, further, that in case both the sons should die under twenty-one, and the daughter die unmarried, the residue should go over; the two sons attained twenty-one; daughter survived them and died unmarried:—Held, that there was an intestacy as to the daughter's share. Cooper v. Palmer, 1 Colly. 665.

6. On a gift to a class and their issue, and in case of the death of one without leaving issue, to the survivors or survivor and their issue:—Held, that the word "survivors" could not be read "others" merely on the ground of the improbability of the testator intending the interests of the issue to depend on the period of their parents' death. Re Corbett, Johns. 591; 6 Jur., N. S., 339; 29 L. J., Ch., 458; 8 W. R. 257.

A sum bequeathed to trustees, in trust for A., and to pay the income to her, with limitations over to her issue, and to the survivors of A., B., and C., and their issue:—Held, upon failure of the subsequent limitations, that A. was absolutely entitled to the bequest. Id.

7. Under a devise of real and personal estate to the widow for life, and afterwards to the testator's four children, "or" their children, share and share alike; and if any of such children should die without leaving a child, his share was to be divided between "the survivor or survivors" of them "or" their children:—Held, that "or" could not be read as "and," nor "survivors" as "others," and that the effect of the gift was to substitute children for their parents who had died in the life of the tenant for life. One child died in the life of the tenant for life, without issue; and at the death of the latter, the three other children and several grandchildren were living; also, that the three children took exclusively as tenants in common. Blundell v. Chapman, 33 Beav. 648. And see Parsons v. Cole, 4 Drew. 296.

1. The word "survivor" cannot be construed as "others," where the gift over is partly to persons whose interests are not given over. De Garagnol v. Liardet, 32 Beav. 608; 2 N. R. 296.

A testator gave legacies to each of his four daughters for life, with remainder to their children; and he provided, that if either of the daughters should die without children, her share should go over to the survivors of his sons and daughters:—Held, that "survivors" could not be read "others," in consequence of the gift over being to a different class from those whose shares were to go over. Id.

2. A testator gave stock to the four children of his daughter (a son and three daughters), the shares of the granddaughters to be held in trust for their separate use for their lives; and he directed, that in case of any of his granddaughters dying without issue, their shares should accrue and survive to the "survivors" of all the children of his daughter, including the son, the accruing shares of the granddaughters to be subject to the same conditions as their original shares:—Held, that upon the death of the last surviving granddaughter without issue, her share, both original and accrued, was undisposed of, and fell into the residue. Nevill v. Boddam, 6 Jur., N. S., 573; 29 L. J., Ch., 738; 8 W. R. 490; 28 Beav. 554.

3. II. in 1823 bequeathed the interest of a fund in trust for her niece S. for life, and after the death of S. to her three daughters H., M., and I., in equal shares and proportions. She declared, that in case any of them should die without leaving any lawful issue, the share or shares of her or them so dying should go to the survivors of them in equal shares; and if but one, then to such one only; but if any or either of them should leave any child or children, then she gave the share or shares of her or them so dying unto her or their child or children respectively in equal shares; provided that if H., M., and I. should all die without lawful issue, in the lifetime of their mother, S., then the fund should go to S. absolutely. H. and I. died in the lifetime of S., leaving children, and M. survived S., and was unmarried:—Held, that the share of M., in the event of her dying without issue, was at her absolute disposal, and did not pass to the children of her sisters H. and I. Re Hays, 9 Jur., N. S., 1068; 9 L. T., N. S., 197.

should attain a vested interest, then, subject to a power of appointment given to her over a portion of her share, as well the original share of such daughter, as any share or shares which might accrue to her under that provision, or otherwise, should accrue to his other daughters or other daughter surviving in equal shares, if more than one, each accruing share to be held upon the same trusts as the original. The will contained no gift over in the event of all the daughters dying without issue. All the five daughters survived the testator. Then one of them died leaving a child, then another died without issue:—Held, that the words "other daughter or other surviving daughters" referred to survivorship at the death of the daughter whose share was to be distributed, and that the child of the daughter who died first took no interest in the share of the daughter who died next. Beckwith v. Beckwith, 46 L. J., Ch., 97; 36 L. T. 128; 25 W. R. 282. Reversing 25 W. R. 6.

5. A testatrix bequeathed two sums of money upon trust respectively for her nieces M. and E. The legacy given to E. was bequeathed upon trust for E. for life for her separate use, and after her decease for her children, if any, living at her death, as she should appoint; and in default of appointment equally amongst them; or if but one child, the whole to be in trust for such only child. The legacy to M. was bequeathed upon similar trusts; and the testatrix directed that in case her said nieces, or either of them, should die without leaving issue, the legacy of the niece so dying should be equally divided between the children of whichever of the testatrix's nieces should happen to survive, and the children of C. (a nephew of the testatrix), in equal shares, on attaining twenty-one years or day of marriage; and if only one such child then living, the whole should go to such only child. There was no gift over of the whole fund, in the event of there being no children to take it. M. died in 1877, E. died in 1881 without issue, and at the time of her death there were living children of M. and children of C.:—Held, that the children of C. were entitled to the whole of the legacy so bequeathed to E., to the exclusion of M.'s children, and that the words "whichever should survive" should receive their literal meaning, and could not be construed as equivalent to "the other." Re Dunlevy's Trusts, 7 L. R., Ir., 525. Affirmed 9 L. R., Ir., 349.

6. Testator gave, by will made in 1834, the residue of his estate to trustees to pay the income, after the death of his wife, unto such of his four named children as should be living at the decease of his wife, during their lives; and after the decease of any one or more of such children who should leave children, he gave the share, whether original or accruing, of the one so dying in trust for his or her children; and in the event of any one of his children dying without leaving children who should attain twenty-one years, then he gave the share, whether original or accruing, of such of them so dying in trust for the survivor or survivors of his said children during their lives, and after their deaths for their respective children, and their heirs, executors, and administrators. There was no gift over. The four children of the testator survived the widow. One child died leaving two children who attained the age of twenty-one years, and the other three children died without issue:—Held, that the words "survivor or survivors" must be so read, and not as "other or others." Re Horner's Estate, Pomfret v. Graham, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 186; 51 L. J., Ch., 43; 45 L. T. 670.

1. A testator, by will in 1826, gave real and personal estate to trustees in fee, in trust for his four nieces, M., B., S., and J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, and on the death of any of them, then in trust as to the share of her so dying, to stand possessed of and interested in such share for the child or children of such of them as should have died, and if any of them should die without issue, then he directed the share or shares of her or them so dying to go to the survivor or survivors of them and their heirs, and be conveyed to them and their heirs accordingly. B. and J. died leaving children. M. died a spinster. S. was a spinster and over sixty:—Held, first, that the equitable fee was given to the children of the nieces. Maden v. Taylor, 45 L. J., Ch., 569.

Held, secondly, that seeing that S. was past the age of child-bearing, she was entitled to her own one-fourth share in fee, under the gift over to the survivor of the nieces. Id.

By codicil of same date, the testator devised freehold estate on trust for M., B., S., and J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, and on death of all or any of them, then as to the part of her or them so dying, in trust for all and every the child and children of them respectively, and the heirs of their bodies; and if any of them should die without leaving issue living at her death, then in trust for the survivors and survivor of them and the heirs of her and their bodies; and if all except one should die without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for such only or surviving niece and the heirs of her body, and in case of a total failure of issue of them, then in trust for his heirs. B. died, having had four children, three of whom died infants, and unmarried. J. died, having had three children, one of whom died an infant and unmarried. Then M. died a spinster. S. was a spinster, and over sixty:—Held, first, that cross-remainders in tail were to be implied between the children of the tenants for life. Id.

Held, secondly, that "survivor" was not to be read "other," but that S. took M.'s share. Id.

Held, thirdly, that S. being past the age of child-bearing, was entitled to her own one-fourth share in tail under the gift over to the survivors and survivor of them. Id.

2. A testator bequeathed the dividends of a sum of 10,000*l.* consols unto and equally between his four daughters, and from and immediately after their several and respective deceases he bequeathed the 10,000*l.* to their children respectively, viz., one-fourth part thereof unto and equally between the children of each daughter. And, in case any one or more of the daughters should die without leaving issue her or them surviving, he bequeathed the share or shares of the stock as bequeathed to and intended for the issue

(had there been such) "unto the survivors or survivor" of the four daughters, equally if more than one, and if but one, to that one, absolutely. Three of the daughters married, and died leaving children. The fourth was the longest liver, and was a spinster of the age of fifty-four:—Held, that on her death without leaving issue she would be entitled to her own one-fourth share of the 10,000*l.* absolutely; that it might be assumed that she would never have any children; and that the share might be transferred to her at once. Maden v. Taylor (45 L. J., Ch., 569) approved and followed. Davidson v. Kimpton, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 213; 45 L. T. 132; 29 W. R. 912.

2. When Construed "Others."

3. The word "survivors" construed "others." Barlow v. Salter, 17 Ves. 482.

4. An estate was settled by deed upon A., B., and C., for life, as tenants in common, remainder to their first and other sons respectively in tail male, remainder to their daughters respectively as tenants in common in tail, remainder, "in case one or two of the said A., B., and C., should die without issue of her or their bodies, then as to the share of such one or two dying without issue, to the use of all and every the daughters of such survivors, as tenants in common in tail:—Held, that the limitation to the daughters of the survivor was a good contingent remainder, and not void for remoteness, and that the word "survivors" must be construed "others." Cole v. Sewell, 2 Con. & L. 314; 4 Dr. & War. 1; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 66. Affirmed 2 H. L. Ca. 186; 12 Jur. 927.

5. Bequest to three children in thirds respectively, with a direction that they should not be put in possession till their respective attainment of particular ages, and in case of the death of either of the above-named children before the ages mentioned, the third to be equally divided between the two surviving children; and in the event of the death of two surviving children, and in the event of the death of two before the respective ages above mentioned, then the whole to devolve to the surviving child; but should all the children die before they should attain their said respective ages, then the whole of his estate was given over. One died, having attained the age mentioned; afterwards another died under that age; the share of the latter a vested interest in the child who died first, and the survivor attaining the age specified. Wilmot v. Wilmot, 8 Ves. 10.

6. J. having three unmarried daughters, A., L., and C., bequeathed to A. and L. 2,000*l.* each, and to C. 2,500*l.*, to be invested for their benefit, and there to remain until their day of marriage; and in case one or more of his daughters should die before her marriage, then the portion or portions of her so dying should go to and be divided between his surviving daughters, share and share alike; and if only one should survive, then to that daughter. And if all his said daughters should die before their marriage, then their portions should be divided between all his sons. The testator had also three married daughters. C. married, and died in the life of A., who died unmarried, leaving L. surviving:—Held that C.'s personal representative was entitled to a moiety of A.'s share. Re Jackson, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 472.

1. Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to A. and B. for their lives, and on their deaths to their children then living who should attain twenty-one, with a gift over to the survivor of A. and B., in case the children of either of them should die under twenty-one. A. died, leaving a child who had attained twenty-one. B. afterwards died without having had a child:—Held, that A.'s personal representatives were entitled to B.'s moiety of the stock. Aiton v. Brooks, 7 Sim. 204.

2. Testator by will directed his executors to place out upon government securities such a sum of money out of the interest thereof as should be sufficient to produce an annuity of 50*l.*, which he gave unto his daughter J. for her life; and after her decease, in case she should leave issue, he gave the principal unto and equally amongst his surviving children and their legal representatives, share and share alike. The testator had four children living at the date of his will and of his death, of whom the daughter J. was the survivor; she died without leaving issue:—Held, that the words "surviving children" meant children surviving the daughter J., and that the words "legal personal representatives" must be construed in their ordinary sense, and not as importing kindred or representatives in blood; consequently, that the fund, of which the testator's daughter was the tenant for life, fell into the testator's residuary estate. Taylor v. Bererley, 1 Colly. 108; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 240; 8 Jur. 265.

3. A gift over to "surviving daughters," on the decease of daughters without issue, is a gift over to "other" daughters. Crowther v. Evans, 11 Jur., N. S., 902; 13 L. T., N. S., 271.

4. A testator bequeathed all his property to his four daughters, share and share alike, the share of each to be given to each on their days of marriage, with consent; and if his daughters should happen to die unmarried, then the share of the child to go, share and share alike, among his surviving daughters, or daughter so surviving:—Held, that surviving daughters meant other daughters, and therefore that the children of a deceased daughter were entitled to a share of the legacy of a daughter who died unmarried. Re Connellan, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 524.

5. Where a testator manifests a clear intention to give a benefit to certain objects in an event which happens, the legatees shall not be deprived of it, although a circumstance inadvertently coupled with it in the language used does not literally take place. Therefore, under a bequest of equal sums for the benefit of each of two granddaughters, A. and B., for life, and their children respectively; but if either died without issue, her share to go to the children of the surviving granddaughter; A. marries and dies leaving children in the lifetime of B. Then B. dies unmarried:—Held, that A.'s children took each of their shares, though their mother did not actually survive B. Harman v. Dickenson, 1 Bro. C. C. 91.

6. A. bequeathed to four nieces, C., D., E., and F.; and on death of any, the whole bequest should go to survivor or survivors; but if any died leaving a child, then her share should go to such child; if all died without issue, then to B. C. married, and had issue G. and H., who died in life of their mother, H. having issue L. and M.; C., D., E., and F. die in succession, F. being last surviving:—Held, that L. and M. were entitled to the whole bequest. Pitt v. Harbin, Lofft. 19.

7. A testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* equally between his four daughters for life, with remainder to their issue; and directed that the share of every of them dying without issue should devolve to the survivors and survivor of them. There was a gift over, if they should all die without issue:—Held, that "survivors and survivor" were to be read "others and other," and that the issue of one daughter, who died, was entitled to participate in the share of another daughter, who subsequently died without issue. Lowe v. Land, 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 234; 1 Jur. 377.

8. Testator, by a will made since the stat. 1 Vict., c. 26, after directing payment of his debts, and bequeathing several specific articles of plate to his sister L., desired that all his other plate, jewellery, books, pictures, and other property, except freehold and leasehold property, should be sold, and the produce, after deducting funeral and other expenses, be divided in equal parts amongst L., M., N., O., and P. He then directed that his freehold house and his leaseholds, some of which were held for years, and others for years determinable on lives, should be kept in hand and let to the best advantage, and the produce be divided every half-year among the above-named L., M., N., O., and P., or to their lawful heirs; and in case of there being no heirs, the share or shares to be divided in equal parts among the surviving legatees. The testator at his death left L. his heiress-at-law and sole next of kin; M., N., O., and P. were not related to L., but were related to and capable of inheriting from each other; M. died unmarried in the testator's lifetime:—Held, first, that M.'s share of the residuary personal estate lapsed for the benefit of the next of kin; secondly, that M.'s share of the freehold property did not lapse, but went to the surviving devisees, the words "heir and lawful heirs" referring to heirs of the body, and "or" being construed "and"; thirdly, that M.'s share of the leaseholds for years lapsed and fell into the residue, the words "there being no heir" referring to an indefinite failure of issue, and the word "surviving" meaning "other." Harris v. Davis, 1 Colly. 416; 9 Jur. 269.

9. Where a testator has directed his trustees to convey one-third of his real and leasehold property to each of his three daughters for life, with a power to each daughter to appoint her third share among her children, and in default of appointment to go to her children equally as tenants in common in fee-simple, but in default of issue of any one or more of his daughters, then the share or shares of such one or more dying without issue to be limited, so as to go to her surviving sisters and to their issue in like manner as their original third parts were directed to be conveyed to each of them, with a gift over in case all three daughters should die without issue in the lifetime of their mother, and the testator directed, in such conveyance, to be made to his daughters, that all necessary trustees and trusts should be inserted therein for the purpose of protecting the entail and succession designed by him to be effected upon his three daughters and the issue of them:—Held, that this was a case for reading "surviving" as "others." Hurry v. Morgan, 15 W. R. 87; 36 L. J., Ch., 105; 3 L. R., Eq., 152.

1. The word "surviving" interpreted to mean "other" upon a consideration of the whole scope of the will. Holland v. Allsop, 7 Jur., N. S., 856; 9 W. R. 683.

In a gift over, upon the death of any of a class without leaving issue, to the survivors, the word "survivors" was construed "others," in consequence of the ultimate gift over being only to take effect on the death of all the class without issue. S. C. 29 Beav. 498.

2. The rule of law, as laid down by modern authorities, is, that the word "survivors" is to be confined to its literal signification, of survivors at the period spoken of by the testator, in every case where it is possible to do so without violating the clear meaning of the rest of the will. Re Keep, 32 Beav. 122.

The word "survivors" of nieces construed "others," in consequence of the gift over and of the subsequent part of the will referring to the issue of a deceased niece participating in an accrued share. Id

3. T. devised real estate to her three nephews, A., B., and C., for their lives, share and share alike, with remainder, as to the share of each nephew, to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common in tail, and in case of the death of any or either of the nephews without lawful issue, male or female, then to such of her nephews as should survive, and to their and his issue in the manner thereinbefore mentioned, and in case of the death of all the nephews and their issue, then to the right heirs of the testatrix. A. died, leaving a son; then B. died without issue; then C. died leaving a son:—Held, that the words of the will "such as shall survive" of the nephews must be construed as meaning "the others or other" of them, and consequently that A.'s son was entitled to one moiety of B.'s share. Re Tharp, 33 L. J., Ch., 59; 11 W. R. 763; 8 L. T., N. S., 558; 1 De G. J. & Sm. 453; 2 N. R. 253.

4. A testator gave one-third of his real and personal estate to each of his three daughters for life, and after their respective deaths to their respective children. But in case any or either of the daughters should die without leaving any child, or if all should die under twenty-one, then the share of the daughter so dying should be for the separate use of surviving daughter, or daughters and their children, per stirpes:—Held, that "surviving" ought to be construed "other." Consequently, one having died leaving children in 1803, and a second in 1837 leaving a child, and the third in 1864 leaving no child:—Held, that the share of the last was divisible per stirpes amongst the children of the two former. Hodge v. Foot, 34 Beav. 349.

5. A father gave a sum of money in sixths, and directed his trustees to hold one-sixth in trust for each of his six daughters for life, with remainder to her children, to be transferred and vested at twenty-one or marriage; and he provided that in case any of his daughters should die without leaving a child, then her share should go in trust for his surviving daughters in equal shares, if more than one, during their respective lives, and after their decease for their respective children per stirpes and not per capita, in the same manner as the original shares:—Held, that on the death of a daughter without leaving a child who attained twenty-one or married, the children of other daughters who had predeceased her took shares in her one-sixth. Waite v. Littlewood, 8 L. R., Ch., 70; 42 L. J., Ch., 216; 28 L. T., N. S., 123; 21 W. R. 181.

6. A testatrix devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate upon trust to sell and convert, and directed her trustees to stand possessed of her residuary personalty upon trust to invest, and as to one-fourth to pay the income to her daughter A. for life, and after A.'s death to assign, transfer, and make over the same to and amongst A.'s child and children, to be assigned, transferred, and paid at twenty-three. Any child attaining twenty-three in the lifetime of A. was to acquire a vested interest. In case of the death of A. without leaving any such child or children as aforesaid, she directed the trustees to pay, apply, and dispose of the income of the fourth to and amongst her (testatrix's) surviving daughters, such benefit of survivorship to extend to the surviving as well as to the original shares; and directed that the principal should go and belong to, and be divisible amongst, the several child or children of such daughter or daughters. As to the remaining three-fourths, she directed the trustees to stand possessed of the income on similar trusts for the benefit of her other three daughters, B., C., and D., for their lives; and of the principal for their respective children, in such manner and form as before directed. In case of the death of all her four daughters without leaving such children as aforesaid, or leaving such, and they should all die under twenty-three, the trustees were to hold the fund in trust for the testatrix's next of kin. Upon the death of a daughter without leaving children:—Held, that the children of a deceased daughter were entitled to participate in the share of the daughter so dying; in other words, that "surviving" must be read as meaning "other." Badger v. Gregory, 8 L. R., Eq., 78; 17 W. R. 1090; 21 L. T., N. S., 107.

7. A testator devised freeholds in moieties to the use of A. and B. respectively for life, with remainder to the use of their respective children equally as tenants in common in tail, and in default of issue of either A. or B., then to the same uses in favour of the "survivor of them" and her issue as thereinbefore declared concerning their original shares; remainders over. A. died, leaving a child, who thereupon became tenant in tail of A.'s moiety. Subsequently B. died without issue:—Held, that A.'s child then became tenant in tail of B.'s moiety, "survivor" being read "other." Re Row, 43 L. J., Ch., 347; 17 L. R., Eq., 300; 29 L. T. 824.

8. A testator devised real estate upon trust for his three granddaughters for their lives respectively, share and share alike; and after the death of each of them, he gave one-third of his said estate to the children of each of them who should attain twenty-one, or die under twenty-one leaving issue. And in case any one of such three granddaughters should die without leaving such issue, the testator gave his said estate during the lives of his two surviving granddaughters upon trust for them in equal shares; and after the death of each of two such surviving granddaughters, he gave one moiety of his said estate to their children who should attain twenty-one, or die under twenty-one leaving issue. And in case either of such two surviving granddaughters should die without leaving such issue, he gave his said estate during the life of the last survivor of such granddaughters upon trust for her, and after her death to her children who should attain twenty-one, or die under twenty-one leaving issue:—Held, that, according to the true construction of the will, “survivors” and “surviving” must be construed “others.” Re Beck, 37 L. J., Ch., 233; 16 W. R. 189.

1. A testator gave property upon trust for his four children as tenants in common during their lives, and after the decease of his children respectively in trust for the children of his children respectively per stirpes; and in case of a failure of such issue of either of his children then in trust for his other surviving children or child. One of the testator's children predeceased him, leaving an infant daughter. Another of the testator's children survived him, and afterwards died without issue:—Held, that the infant grandchild took one-third of the lapsed share concurrently with the two surviving children of the testator. Re Arnold, 39 L. J., Ch., 875; 10 L. R., Eq., 252; 18 W. R. 912; 23 L. T., N. S., 337.

2. A father directed the income of the residue of his estate to be divided between all his sons as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship between them, in case any or either of them should die without issue, and in case any child or children who should be entitled under the trusts of his will to any principal money, or income, should die leaving issue, the principal money or share, from which the interest of such child or children should be derived, should go to and be divided amongst such issue as tenants in common. The testator left five sons, two of whom died leaving issue, and three died without issue, the last survivor of the five dying without issue:—Held, that on the death of the last surviving son the principal set free accrued to the children of the sons who had died leaving issue. Cross v. Maltby, 20 L. R., Eq., 378; 23 W. R. 863; 33 L. T., N. S., 300.

3. After a bequest to testator's children for life, with remainder to their respective children, a clause of accruer of the shares of any of the testator's children dying without leaving issue in favour of his surviving children was held to carry an accruing share to the then living children of the testator and children of those then dead, although the will contained no gift over on the death and failure of issue of all the testator's children. Re Walker's Estate, Church v. Tyacke, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 205; 43 L. J., Ch., 590.

4. A father gave the residue of his property to trustees, on trust to pay and divide the income equally among his three children, during their respective lives, and after the death of each child the share of the fund to the income of which the deceased child was entitled for life was to be in trust for his or her issue. And in case, and so often as, any of the three children should die without leaving issue, the share to which such child should become entitled during his or her life, as well originally as by survivorship or accruer, was to be in trust for the survivors or survivor of the children, during their, his, or her respective life or lives, and in equal shares if more than one. And, after the decease of each such survivor, the surviving or accruing share, to which such survivor for the time being should become entitled for his or her life, was to be in trust for his or her issue. And, in case all the children should die without leaving issue, the fund was to be in trust for the representatives of the survivor. After the death of the testator one of his children died without issue, then another child died leaving issue, and, lastly, the third child died without issue:—Held, that the issue of the second child, though she was not the survivor, became entitled on the death of the third to the whole of the fund. Wake v. Varah, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 348; 45 L. J., Ch., 533; 24 W. R. 621; 34 L. T., N. S., 437. Affirming 2 L. R., Ch., 350; 24 W. R. 21.

5. A testator directed his trustees to pay one seventh part of his residuary estate, after conversion, to each of his two sons upon their attaining twenty-one, and to pay the income of one other seventh part to his daughter E. for her life, and after her death to divide the capital thereof among such children of E. as should attain twenty-one, and as to the other four sevenths upon like trusts for the benefit of his daughters A., B., C., and D., and their children. And the testator directed that in case any of his daughters should die without leaving issue surviving them, then the shares, as well original as accruing, of such daughters should be divided among his surviving sons and daughters, the shares of any daughters to be held upon the trusts therein declared concerning the other shares as accretions thereto:—Held, that “surviving” was to be read as equivalent to “other.” Jackson v. Sparks, 38 L. J., Ch., 75.

6. A father gave his residuary estate to his six children in equal shares, and directed the shares of his sons who conducted themselves with propriety to be paid to them at twenty-five, and the shares of his sons who did not so conduct themselves to remain vested in his trustees upon trust for such sons for life, and afterwards for their children. The testator also directed the shares of his daughters to remain vested in his trustees upon trust for his daughters for life, and afterwards for their issue; and in case of the death of his daughters or his sons without having received their shares and without lawful issue, then he directed such shares to be divided equally between his “surviving children” in the same manner as the original shares. All the six children of the testator survived him. His three sons attained twenty-five, and their shares were all paid to them. His three daughters all married; one died in 1876 without leaving issue. At that time one son only was living. Two daughters died leaving issue; one son died leaving issue, and one without leaving issue. The question before the Court was the distribution of the share of the daughter who died without leaving issue:—

Held, that "surviving children" must be construed "other children," and that the share must be divided into fifths amongst the representatives of all the brothers and sisters. Lucena v. Lucena, 47 L. J., Ch., 203; 26 W. R. 254; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 255; 37 L. T., N. S., 420. Varying 36 L. T., N. S., 87.

1. Upon a bequest of all testator's real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay certain annuities and weekly payments to his two sons and daughter, and the surplus to accumulate for the benefit of his grandchildren, and, from and after the decease of the surviving annuitant, unto and among all his grandchildren that might be living at the testator's decease, their issue to take the shares of their parents who should die before they became payable, but, in case of the death of any grandchild without leaving issue before the share should be payable, the share of such deceased grandchild to go equally among the surviving grandchildren, to be paid at the same time as the original share would be payable:—Held, that upon the death of any one of the grandchildren, their children were to stand in the place of the parent, both as to the original and accruing shares: the term "surviving" was not to be construed to mean "living at the time of the accrual taking place," affirming the judgment below. Eyre v. Marsden, 4 Myl. & C. 231; 3 Jur. 350. Affirming 2 Keen 564; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 220; 2 Jur. 583.

2. Testator bequeathed a leasehold estate to his son Charles, and directed that, if his son should die without issue, the leasehold estate should be considered as part of his residuary estate, and be divided amongst the children of his three daughters, Isabella, Matilda, and Mary, as thereafter mentioned. And he gave the residue of his estate to trustees, in trust for his son and three daughters, or such of them as should be living at the death of his wife, equally during their lives; and he directed that after their deaths the whole of the residue should be divided amongst all the children of his said son and daughters, in equal parts, shares, and proportions; and in case any of his said son and daughters should die without leaving issue, that the share of him, her, or them so dying should be divided amongst the survivor or survivors of his said children and their issue in the like equal parts, shares, and proportions. Isabella died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving children. Mary died after the widow, leaving children. Then Charles died without issue. Matilda was still living, and had children:—Held, that Isabella's children were entitled to one-fourth of the residue, notwithstanding their mother died before the widow; that Mary's children were entitled to another fourth; and that Matilda was entitled to another fourth for her life, with remainder to her children; and that, as Charles had died without issue, the remaining fourth was divisible into three parts, and one of those parts belonged to Isabella's children, another to Mary's children, and the remaining part to Matilda for life, with remainder to her children. Hawkins v. Hamerton, 16 Sim. 410; 13 Jur. 2.

3. Where there is in a will a gift to two designated devisees, as tenants in common in tail, and if either should die without issue, then to the "surviving" devisee, that word must be taken to mean "other." Smith v. Osborn, 6 H. L. Ca. 375; 3 Jur., N. S., 1181.

O., in anticipation of marriage, executed a settlement, which recited, that "whereas O. is entitled to a contingent remainder on failure of the issue of G. C., party hereto in the town and lands of S., and in certain tenements in W., subject only to such powers over the same as shall appear to be vested in G. C., under and by virtue of the last will of T. C.;" and it went on to covenant, that when and as soon as "the said remainder" should become vested in O. in possession, he would then convey the property to the uses of the settlement. By the will of T. C., both these properties were devised to G. C. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to the testator's daughters Elizabeth and Frances, as tenants in common in tail, and if either daughter should die without issue, then "to the use of my surviving daughter and the heirs of her body lawfully issuing, and in default of such issue to my own right heirs." G. C. died unmarried, and the lands of S. and W. descended to the two daughters (one of whom was O.'s mother), as tenants in common. The two sisters executed disentailing deeds as to S., but not as to W., and soon afterwards O.'s mother died intestate, and her property descended to O., her son, the covenantor. The other sister by will gave all her property to O., her nephew, subject to annuities and legacies:—Held, that as to the lands at S., the entail of which had been barred, and which had not descended to O., under the will of T. C., this covenant did not take effect, but it did take effect as to the lands at W., for the word "surviving" in the will of T. C. must be construed to mean "other," and the words "such issue" include the issue of both daughters, and therefore O. succeeded to both moieties of that estate as tenant in tail under the will. Id.

4. A testator devised to J. certain hereditaments, to E. certain other hereditaments, to M. certain other hereditaments, to A. certain other hereditaments; J., E., M., and A. were children of M., and the estates given to them were in tail general. By a subsequent clause in his will he devised as follows:—"In case if either or all the within-named children of M. shall happen to die leaving no lawful issue, or if they leave lawful issue if such issue die leaving no lawful issue, in any of such cases the property of him, her, or them so dying shall be equally transferred to the use and uses of the surviving child or children of M. that are herein named" in tail general. E. died leaving an only son. A. died leaving a daughter, and after the deaths of E. and A., J. died without having been married, and M. survived E., A., and J.:—Held, that the word "surviving" must be read as the word "other," and E.'s only son was entitled to recover from M. one undivided third part of the hereditaments devised to J. Williams v. James, 20 W. R. 1010.

3. Where word "Others" Associated with word "Survivors."

5. Legacies to the children (by name) of the testator's late niece M., to be assigned to them when and as soon as they should respectively attain twenty-five. Provided that if any should die under twenty-five, leaving issue, the issue to take the parent's legacy; but if any should die under twenty-five without having issue then living, the legacy of the child so dying to go and be paid to the "survivors and survivor and others and other" of the same children, in equal shares. At the death of the testator, all the children of M. are under twenty-five. All afterwards attain twenty-five except A., who dies under that age, without issue, having survived two of the children, B. and C. The share of A. devolves to the representatives of B. and C., together with the children who survive A. Slade v. Parr, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 565; 7 Jur. 102.

1. Semble, that to effect the expressed intention of the testator, the word "survivor" may receive a different sense in different parts of a will. Winterton v. Cramford, 1 Russ. & M. 407; 8 L. J., Ch., 134.

2. A father directed his trustees to pay and divide the residuary moneys arising from the sale and conversion of his real and personal estate among all such of his five daughters as should be living at his death in equal shares, and he directed his trustees to invest every share given to a daughter of his living at his death, and during the life of each such daughter to pay the income of her share to her for her separate use, and after her death to hold the same in trust for her children as therein mentioned, and declared that if there should be no child of such his daughter, who should attain a vested interest, then, subject to a power of appointment given to her over a portion of her share, as well the original share of such daughter as any share or shares which might accrue to her under that provision, or otherwise, should accrue to his other daughters or daughter surviving in equal shares, if more than one, each accruing share to be held upon the same trusts as the original. The will contained no gift over in the event of all the daughters dying without issue. All the five daughters survived the testator. Then one of them died leaving a child, then another died without issue:—Held, that the words "other daughter or other surviving daughters" referred to survivorship at the death of the daughter whose share was to be distributed, and that the child of the daughter who died first took no interest in the share of the daughter who died next. Beckwith v. Beckwith, 46 L. J., Ch., 97; 36 L. T., N. S., 128; 25 W. R. 262. Reversing 25 W. R. 6.

3. A testator gave property upon trust for his four children as tenants in common during their lives, and after the decease of his children respectively in trust for the children of his children respectively per stirpes; and in case of a failure of such issue of either of his children then in trust for his other surviving children or child. One of the testator's children predeceased him, leaving an infant daughter. Another of the testator's children survived him, and afterwards died without issue:—Held, that the infant grandchild took one-third of the lapsed share concurrently with the two surviving children of the testator. Re Arnold's Trusts, 10 L. R., Eq., 252;

4. "Others." When Construed "Survivors."

4. A mother, having two daughters, A. and B., and three sons, C., D., and E., bequeathed a fund upon trust for A. for life, and after her death for her children, with a gift over in default of children "to the others or other of them, B., C., D., and E., equally to be divided between or amongst them, if more than one." The will contained a like bequest in favour of B. and her children, with a like gift over "to the others or other of my children, that is to say, A., C., D., and E., equally to be divided." A. died a spinster, C. and D. predeceased her:—Held, that the words "others or other" could not be read as equivalent to "survivors or survivor at the death of A.," and that upon her death the fund bequeathed upon trust for her life became divisible in fourths. Re Hagen, 46 L. J., Ch., 665.

5. A testator, in case of the death of any of his children without leaving issue, before payment of any part of reversionary legacies, directed such parts to be divided among the others and other of them, and in case of the death of a child leaving issue before such payment, he directed such parts to be divided among the children of such child:—Held, that "others" meant children other than those who had died without leaving issue:—Held, also, that the gift over applied to accrued as well as original shares. Re Chaston, Chaston v. Seago, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 218; 50 L. J., Ch., 716; 45 L. T. 20; 29 W. R. 778.

III. ACCRUING SHARES AND CLAUSE OF ACCRUER.

1. General Rule. No Survivorship, 8022.
2. Effect of words "Share," "Portion," "His Share," 8023.
3. Accrued Shares Directed to go in Same Manner as Original Shares, 8024.
4. Fund Treated as a Whole Fund, 8025.
5. Accrued Shares. Whether Subject to Limitations of Original Shares, 8026.

1. General Rule. No Survivorship.

6. A survived share shall not survive again without express words. Exp. West, 1 Bro. C. C. 575; 1 P. W. 275.

7. A. devises to his grandchildren, B., C., and D., 1,000*l.* each, the interest to their use, and if any dies to the survivors or survivor, share and share alike, the interest to be paid to their father, to their use. B. dies an infant; then C. dies. The share which C. took by the death of B. shall not survive to D., but go to the father, administrator of C. Rudge v. Barker, Forrester, 124.

8. A testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to his wife until his youngest child should attain twenty-one years, she thereout maintaining the children during their respective minorities; and on the youngest child attaining twenty-one years, upon trust to divide the trust fund among the testator's wife and children as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship:—Held, that the shares of children dying before the youngest child attained twenty-one went to the survivors. But whether the accrued shares survived as well as the original shares, quære. Vorley v. Richardson, 4 W. R. 397; 2 Jur., N. S., 362; 25 L. J., Ch., 335; 8 De G. M. & G. 126.

2. Effect of words "Share," "Portion," "His Share."

1. T. by will appointed the interest that should be made of his personal estate to be paid to his father for life, then to his mother for life; and he gave the residue of his personal estate to his brother and sisters, and to A. and B., sisters of his late wife, share and share alike; and then said, "in case of the death of any of them before me, or the survivor of my father and mother, then the share of the deceased to go among the survivors." The brother died in testator's lifetime; but after the will was made the sisters (in the lifetime of testator's mother, who survived her husband, and then died) and A. and B. claimed the residue of the personal estate:—Held, that they were entitled, as the only surviving legatees, not only to their own original shares, but to all accumulations. Pain v. Benson, 3 Atk. 78.

A. gave 1,000*l.* among four persons, as tenants in common, and directed, if one of them die before twenty-one or marriage, it shall survive to the other; if one dies, and three are living, the share of that one so dying will survive to the other three; but if a second dies, nothing will survive but his original share, for the accruing share was a new legacy, and there is no survivorship. Id. 80.

2. One devises several parcels of land to his several children in tail, and if any of them die before twenty-one or unmarried, such child's part to go to the surviving children; if any of the children die unmarried, though above the age of twenty-one, his share shall go to the surviving child, but such survivor shall have such share for life only; what goes over on one child's death shall not go over again a second time. Woodworth v. Glassbrook, 2 Vern. 388.

3. Testator gave a sum to the four children of A., to be divided into equal shares, and paid to them at twenty-one, and the interest of their shares to be paid to their parents in the meantime; and in case of any dying under twenty-one, his, her, or their shares to be divided among the survivors. Two of the children died under twenty-one, in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the original share of each had accrued to the then survivors, but that the accruing share of the one who died last lapsed. Rickett v. Guillemard, 12 Sim. 88; 5 Jur. 818.

4. A testator gave all the property he possessed in the parish of K., consisting of houses, lands, debts, ready money, and other effects which he then possessed or might possess at the time of his decease, and also all his funds in the Bank of England, or that of the United States of America, to his reputed children, Anthony, James, and Richard, and their heirs, share and share alike, as soon as they should have attained twenty-one, it being his will that if one of them should die before he attained that age, his share should vest in and belong to the survivors. James died under twenty-one, leaving Anthony and Richard surviving:—Held, that the share of the testator's property, which James would have been entitled to if he had attained twenty-one, vested in Anthony and Richard as joint tenants. Jones v. Hall, 16 Sim. 300.

5. A testator gave stock to trustees, to be divided after the death of the two persons who had life interest in it among A., B., C., D., and E., in equal shares; and he directed that, if any of them should die without issue, before their respective shares should become payable, the share of him, her, or them so dying without issue should go to and be equally divided among the survivor and survivors of them. A. died, leaving issue, who were living at the time fixed for the distribution of the fund; then B. died, leaving a son, who died without issue before the period of distribution; shortly afterwards, and also before the period of distribution, C. died without issue:—Held, that B.'s personal representatives were not entitled to any portion of the fund; that the one-third of B.'s share, which on the failure of her issue survived to C., did not, on C.'s death, survive to her other legatees, but was transmitted to her personal representative; that the words "survivor and survivors" were to be construed in their natural sense, and not as equivalent to "other and others," so that no part of the shares of B. and C. went over to A.'s personal representatives. Crowder v. Stone, 3 Russ. 217; 7 L. J., Ch., 93.

6. One devises portions to his children, A., B., and C., and if any die before twenty-one or marriage the portion of the child so dying to go to the survivor; one of the children dies in the lifetime of the testator. This is not a lapsed legacy, but shall go over to the surviving children. Perkins v. Micklethwaite, 1 P. W. 274.

7. A married woman, by a testamentary instrument, made in execution of a power contained in her marriage settlement, gave 2,000*l.*, subject to the life interest of her husband, to trustees, upon trust for the benefit of her child or children, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; but, in case the 2,000*l.* should become payable before her children, being sons, should have attained twenty-one, or, being daughters, should have attained that age or day of marriage, then in trust to invest and apply the interest to their maintenance and education, and when they should attain twenty-one or day of marriage, to pay to them their respective shares of the principal; and, in case any of the children should happen to die before their portions should become payable, then they should go and belong to the survivors or survivor of them. The testatrix left a son and two daughters, all of whom had attained twenty-one at her decease. The son and afterwards a daughter died in the lifetime of their father:—Held, that on the death of the father the surviving daughter was entitled to the 2,000*l.* by survivorship, except as to that share of it which accrued to the deceased daughter upon the death of the son, which belonged to the representative of the deceased daughter. Bright v. Rowe, 3 Myl. & K. 316.

1. A gave his leasehold and general residuary estate to trustees, in trust, "as to the clear annual residue of his estate," to divide the same between his three daughters, N., P., and M., for their separate use; but in case any or either of his daughters should die, leaving lawful issue surviving, to pay such "shares or share" to the children of such one or more of them; and if one of his daughters died without issue surviving, upon trust to pay her annual share unto the survivors equally; and in case there should be only one surviving daughter during the continuance of the trusts, then the whole of his estate and effects was to be paid to such surviving daughter, for her own absolute use. All three daughters were married, and died without ever having had children. The husband, as the representative of the survivor, P., who died in 1867, claimed the whole of the estate, but the representatives of M., who died in 1839, submitted that there was an intestacy:—Held, upon the whole language of the will, that the plaintiff, as the representative of the survivor, was entitled to the estate and effects absolutely. Pulbrook v. Bratt, 5 Jur., N. S., 330.

2. Gift to A. for life, and afterwards to seven named persons, equally, "the share of each who shall happen to die to be equally divided amongst the survivors, unless A. (one of them) should die, leaving children; in that case, I mean that her children should inherit the share of the parent." The seven all died before the tenant for life, A. being the survivor of them:—Held, first, that the seven took equally; secondly, that the children of A. took no more than one-seventh; and, thirdly, that the share of one of the seven, who predeceased the testatrix, was undisposed of. Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 409.

3. Accruing share held to go over with the original share, by force of the words "part share and interest." Douglas v. Andrews, 14 Beav. 347.

A testator gave his estate to one for life, with remainder to her children equally, with a gift over (in case of the death of any child in the life of the tenant for life) of the "part and parts, share and shares, and interest" of such child to his issue:—Held, that the gift over comprised the accrued as well as the original share. Ib.

4. The word "share" alone, when there is no gift over of the whole fund, in case of the failure of all the members of the class, is not sufficient to carry over an accrued share. Evans v. Evans, 25 Beav. 81.

5. Bequest to four equally, "and as each dies, his or her part shall be equally divided amongst the others that's living":—Held, that the accrued shares did not go over. Goodwin v. Finlayson, 25 Beav. 65.

6. A testator gave certain securities to trustees upon trust that a moiety should be set apart for his two sons, T. and C., share and share alike, to pay the interest to them respectively until T. succeeded to the F. estates, when the whole of the moiety should be transferred to C., until he attained twenty-seven, then to be paid to him for his absolute use. And in case either of his sons died unmarried his share should go to the survivor; and if both died unmarried under twenty-seven, then over. T. succeeded to the estates, and C. died unmarried, under twenty-seven:—Held, that the whole of the moiety belonged to T. Edmonstone v. Farley, 18 L. T., N. S., 847.

7. A testator in case of the death of any of his children without leaving issue, before payment of any part of reversionary legacies, directed such parts to be divided among the others and other of them, and in case of the death of a child leaving issue before such payment, he directed such parts to be divided among the children of such child:—Held, that the gift over applied to accrued as well as original shares. Re Chaston, Chaston v. Seago, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 218; 50 L. J., Ch., 716; 45 L. T. 20; 29 W. R. 778.

3. Accrued Shares Directed to go in Same Manner as Original Shares.

8. Residuary bequest to the testator's nephews and nieces, per stirpes, equally for their lives, and after the death of either that share of the principal to be paid equally to and among the children of such of his said nephews and nieces as should die; and if any die without leaving any child or children, that share to go to and among the survivors or survivor of them in manner aforesaid. Upon the death of one without a child, that share goes to the survivors for their respective lives only, and will pass to their children respectively with the original shares; but upon the death of the last survivor without a child, his shares both original and accrued are undisposed of, notwithstanding another has left a child. Milson v. Awdry, 5 Ves. 465.

9. A gift between grandchildren living at the testator's death, to be divided between them on the death of the survivor of three persons, with a gift over to the survivors, in case of the death of any before he should be entitled to receive his share, and to be paid at the same time, and in the same manner, as before mentioned touching the original share. The gift over held to apply to the accruing as well as to the original share. Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen 564; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 220; 2 Jur. 583. Affirmed 4 Myl. & C. 231; 3 Jur. 450.

10. After a bequest for the benefit of children and their issue, it was declared that, if any should die without issue, his share should go among the survivors in the manner directed concerning the original shares:—Held, that the gift over comprised an accrued share. Goodman v. Goodman, 1 De G. & Sm. 695; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 103; 12 Jur. 258.

11. Devise of estates to testator's son and four daughters, "and their lawful issue respectively in tail general, with benefit of survivorship, to and amongst their issue respectively as tenants in common; but such issue, being sons, not to have vested interests until twenty-one, or daughters until twenty-one or marriage, with powers to trustees to advance, etc., to the extent of one-half the presumptive share of each child; and in case his son or daughters, or either of them, should die without leaving lawful issue, or with lawful issue, and such issue being a son should not attain twenty-one, or a daughter not attain twenty-one nor be married, then the share of the party so dying to be for the benefit of the survivors and their issue, in same manner as their original shares":—Held (confirming the certificate of the Court of Exchequer), that the son and daughters took estates for lives as tenants in common, with contingent remainders in their shares to their respective children, by purchase, as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders in tail between such children in each respective share, with cross-remainders over in the whole of each of such shares respectively (on failure of all the children of any one son or daughter and their issue), to the survivor or survivors of the testator's son or daughters, for life, remainder in tail general to the children of such surviving son or daughters respectively, in like manner as in the original share given to such son or daughters respectively; and that the son and daughters and their children respectively took corresponding interests in the leaseholds devised by way of executory bequest after the death of the testator's widow. Cursham v. Newland, 2 Beav. 143. And see S. C. at law, 2 Bing., N. S., 58; 2 Scott 105; 4 M. & W. 101.

Consolidation of Shares.] 1. By a settlement trustees were directed to be possessed of 1,760*l.* in trust for a daughter, and her sons, at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one or marriage. Like trusts of two other sums of 1,760*l.* were declared for two other daughters and their children. Benefit of survivorship and accrue between the three daughters and their children, in default of children, was declared, with a declaration that the provisions applicable to the original shares should apply to such surviving or accrued shares; and it was provided, that if either of the three daughters should die without having or leaving any child who should attain a vested interest, she might dispose of any part of "her share" not exceeding one-third by deed or will. On the death of one of the three daughters, her share accrued among the survivors; one of the survivors then died without a child, and appointed by will "one-third of her share or shares, as well accrued as original, in the said sum of 5,280*l.*" The trustees paid so much of the share of the testatrix as had accrued into court, under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that the previous provisions of the settlement consolidated the accrued with the original shares, and that the power to appoint overrode the whole share thus consolidated. Re Hutchinson's Settlement, 5 De G. & Sm. 681; 17 Jur. 59.

4. Fund Treated as a Whole Fund.

2. Testator leaves a residue in trust for four, with survivorship; two died: the survived share shall survive as well as the original shares, being the case of an aggregate fund. Worledge v. Churchill, 3 Bro. C. C. 465. And see Langley v. Langley, 6 L. R., Ir., 277.

3. Where residuary real and personal estate was directed to be all converted into personalty, and to be applied in payment of debts, etc., and the residue to be divided among testator's children, J., M., and C., and grandchild R., the share of M. to be paid as soon after his decease as convenient, and the shares of C. and R. at the ages of twenty-two and twenty-one respectively; and in case any of his children should die before their shares became so vested as aforesaid, the shares to go to the survivors equally; and if but one, the whole to that one. J. and C. died in testator's lifetime, C. under twenty-two, and R. survived testator, but died under twenty-one:—Held, first, that "vested" must mean "payable," and that the original shares of the deceased children survived to the survivors; and, secondly, that "whole" meant the whole residue, and therefore that the accruing as well as original shares devolved to M. as sole survivor. Sillick v. Booth, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 121, 739; 6 Jur. 142.

4. A testator bequeaths the residue of his property to his nephews and nieces on their respectively attaining twenty-five, with a direction that his trustees shall, in the meantime, apply the profits to their maintenance; but in case of the death of any of them unmarried, and without issue, he gives the shares of those so dying unto the survivors equally, to be paid at the same time with their original shares; first a nephew, and then a niece die, under twenty-five, unmarried, and without issue; the whole residue is divisible among the survivors who attain the specified age, and the niece does not, upon the death of the nephew, acquire, under the clause of survivorship, a vested interest in her proportional part of his share. Barber v. Lea, T. & R. 413.

5. A testator gave a fund in trust for W. for life, and after her death in trust for the children of A., of B., and of C. who should survive the testator, "such children taking per stirpes, with benefit of survivorship among members of the same family":—Held, that the survivorship extended to accrued as well as original shares, so that the whole of each third share of the fund went to those objects of gift who survived the tenant for life. Re Cranhall, 2 Jur., N. S., 892; 8 De G. M. & G. 480.

6. The general rule is, that where a fund is given to a class of persons, with a direction that on the death of any of them their "shares" are to go over, the original and not the accruing shares will go over. But a testator may express a contrary intention, thus: where he shows an intention to keep the fund "aggregate" and unsevered, the rule does not apply. Douglas v. Andrews, 14 Beav. 347.

7. Where, in the disposition of real estate amongst various persons in different shares, with clauses of accrue and gifts over in certain events, the intention is shown of keeping the estate together in an aggregate mass, the word "share" will be construed to include accrued as well as original shares. Dutton v. Crowdy, 12 W. R. 222; 10 Jur., N. S., 28; 33 L. J., Ch., 241; 9 L. T., N. S., 630; 3 N. R. 234.

Real estate was devised to A. for life, with remainder to his children, as tenants in common in tail; and in case any of such children should die without issue, then, as to the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying, to the eldest surviving son for the time being of

A. in tail; and in case there should be no son, then to the others or other of the children of A., as tenants in common in tail; and if all such children but one should die without issue, or if there should be only one such child, then to such one or only child in tail; and in default of such issue, over:—Held, that the will showing an intention to keep the estate in an aggregate mass, and to accumulate all the shares which failed upon the eldest surviving son, the word "share" must be construed to extend to accrued as well as to original shares. Id.

1. Upon a bequest of equal legacies to testator's six children, to be paid on their respectively attaining twenty-one, or the marriage of the daughters; the interest to be paid in the meantime, and the principal as they might direct to their issue, but in case they should die without issue the principal to go among "the survivors" of his children in equal proportions; after directing his freehold estate to be sold and all the residue of his personal estate, he declared the trusts to be, equally to pay and divide the money therefrom, so soon as his youngest child should attain twenty-one, unto and amongst all his children, share and share alike, and in case of the death of any, leaving lawful issue, the share of the parent so dying to such issue:—Held, that the first bequest was limited to issue living at the death of the children, and that the gift over, on failure of issue, referred to the same objects; and as to the second bequest, that the residuary share of a child who attained twenty-one, and died before the period of division, passed to his representatives, and, semble, no child not attaining twenty-one took any interest; that the word "survivors," in the latter clause, was to be construed in its natural sense, and not to mean "others," and that the construction of the word in one part of the will determined its construction in the other part also: lastly, that the gift of the parent's share to such issue applied both to the original and accruing shares of the residue, but not to the specific legacies mentioned in the former clause. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare 14; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 423; 6 Jur. 663.

5. Accrued Shares. Whether Subject to Limitations of Original Shares.

2. Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that accruing shares of personal estate were not subject to the trusts declared of the original shares. Macgregor v. Macgregor, 2 Colly. 192.

3. A testator gave the proceeds of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to divide the same into six equal shares, one share for each of the testator's children; the shares of sons to be paid to them as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, the shares of daughters to be vested interests immediately after his decease, and to be settled upon them and their children. The will contained a proviso that, if any of his sons should die without having any issue living at their deaths, the share intended for the son so dying should accrue for the benefit of the survivors of his said children, their executors, administrators, and assigns, in equal shares. One of the sons died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, first, that the surviving children took his share as well as their original shares absolutely, and not as an interest defeasible on their death without issue; secondly, that the accruing shares of the daughters belonged to them absolutely, and were not subject to the trusts for the settlement of the original shares. Ware v. Watson, 3 W. R. 496; 7 De G. M. & G. 248; 2 W. R. 608.

4. A father bequeathed a fund equally for the use of his five sons, Edward, John, Charles, Crofton, and Henry, but directed that they were only to receive the interest on their legacies during their lives, and that after their respective deaths the interest was only to be applied for the use of their wife and children, if any, until the youngest of the children should reach twenty-one, and then the principal be divided among the survivors; and in case of those not leaving a wife or children, their proportion was to go to the next elder brother down to the youngest. Charles having died unmarried, and Crofton, his next younger brother, having subsequently died leaving a wife and children:—Held, that the accrued share which Crofton took on the death of Charles remained his absolute property. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 436.

5. Testator gave a sum of stock to his wife for life, and, after her death, to his sons and daughters, and he directed the interest of his daughter's share to be paid to her for her separate use for life, and, at her decease, the capital to be divided amongst such children as she should have living at his decease, the shares of the sons to be paid at twenty-one, and the daughters at twenty-one or marriage, provided their mother was then dead, otherwise, her children's shares were not to be paid to them until her decease; her share was to be equally divided amongst such of his sons as should be then living; and if any of his said sons and daughters should die before his wife, and without leaving issue, their shares were to be divided amongst his other children:—Held, that the daughter's children living at the testator's death took absolute vested interests at twenty-one, though their mother was still living; and that her interest in the share of one of the testator's sons, who died in the lifetime of his widow, was not subject to the same trusts as her original share, but vested in her absolutely. Gibbons v. Langdon, 6 Sim. 260.

6. A gift between grandchildren living at the testator's death, to be divided between them on the death of the survivor of three persons, with a gift over to the survivors, in case of the death of any before he should be entitled to receive his share, and to be paid at the same time, and in the same manner, as before mentioned touching the original share. The gift over held to apply to the accruing as well as to the original share. Byre v. Marsden, 2 Keen 564; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 220; 2 Jur. 583. Affirmed 4 Myl. & C. 231; 3 Jur. 450.

7. A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees in trust for his daughter, and after her decease, for all and every the child or children of his daughter, share and share alike, when they should respectively attain twenty-one, with maintenance in the meantime; and in case any of the said children should die under twenty-one, and have one or more child or children who should survive the testator's daughter, and live to attain twenty-one, such child or children to be entitled to his or their parent's share: provided, also, that in case any child or children of his daughter should die before attaining twenty-one the share or shares of such child or children should go to the survivor or survivors, and the issue of any deceased child or children who should marry and die under twenty-one to be equally divided between them if more than one, the issue of any deceased child or children to stand in the place of the parent or parents; with a limitation over, provided there should be no child of his daughter, or there being any such, no one of them should live to attain twenty-one, nor leave any issue who should live to attain that age.—Held, that the limitation over was intended to take effect only on failure of grandchildren who should survive the testator's daughter, and not live to attain twenty-one, and was therefore not too remote. Trickey v. Trickey, 3 Myl. & K. 560.

1. A testator gave his real and personal estate to A., B., and C., as tenants in common. By a codicil he declared that if any of the devisees should die in his lifetime, his estate and interest should "go to the survivors or survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of such survivor." A. died in the testator's lifetime.—Held, that B. and C. took as joint tenants the share intended for A. Leigh v. Masley, 14 Beav. 609. And see Jones v. Hall, 16 Sim. 500.

2. Devise of real estate, to be sold after the death of tenant for life, and bequest of specific sums out of the produce to several grandchildren and a child, and of the residue to other children, "to be respectively paid at twenty-one or marriage." "But if any of my said children or grandchildren should happen to die before the time of such legacy becoming due and payable, then I give and bequeath the share or part of such child or children, or grandchildren, so dying unto and among those that shall be then living, share and share alike." Two of the children died before the testator; their shares are to be divided among the other children and grandchildren equally. Another child and a grandchild, having survived the testator and attained twenty-one, died before the tenant for life; their shares transmissible to their representatives; no implication that the survivorship was to take place among the children and grandchildren distinctly from the inequality of legacies, or from the bequest to each class being made by distinct clauses. Walker v. Main, 1 Jac. & Walk. 1.

3. A., by will, directed as to his general residue, to pay and divide same, with the accumulations from the time of the decease of his mother (who had a life-interest therein), between and amongst a brother and four sisters, naming them, "and he did further will and direct that in case his brother, or any of his sisters, should depart this life before his or her share or shares of such residue should become payable, without leaving lawful issue him or her surviving, that in such case the share or shares of him or her so dying should be paid to the survivors or survivor in equal shares," with directions for maintenance and education of infant children of his brother and sisters so dying:—Held, that the original and accruing shares of any of the legatees so dying without issue went to the survivors in equal shares. Spilsbury v. Kent, 5 L. T., N. S., 343.

Held, also, that the children of either of the legatees took vested interests in the parent's share or shares on the death of such parent. Id.

4. Three annuities for a term of years bequeathed in trust for three children, A., B., and C., respectively for life; in case of the death of either leaving any child or children, his or her annuity to be equally divided between such child or children, share and share alike; in case of the death of either without issue, his or her annuity to go to the survivor or survivors of them equally, share and share alike, with a limitation over in case of the deaths of all without issue as aforesaid; A. died without issue; A.'s annuity went to B. and C., subject to the contingent limitation over; and upon B.'s death, leaving children, belongs in moieties absolutely to his administrator and C. Vandergucht v. Blake, 2 Ves. J. 533.

5. The testator devised his residuary freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates to his son and four daughters "and their lawful issue respectively in tail general, with benefit of survivorship to and amongst their issue respectively as tenants in common;" but such issue, "being sons," not to have vested interests until they attained twenty-one, or, "being daughters," until twenty-one or marriage, with power to the trustees, after the death of his son or daughters respectively, to advance such issue during minority to the extent of one half the presumptive share of "each child;" and in case his son or daughters, or any or either of them, should die without leaving lawful issue, or with lawful issue, and such issue, being a son or sons, should not attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should not attain that age or be married, then the part or share of him or her so dying to be for the benefit of the survivors and their issue, in the same manner as their original shares:—Held, that the testator's children took estates for life as tenants in common in the freeholds and copyholds, with remainder to the grandchildren in tail general in the shares of their respective parents, with cross remainders in tail between such grandchildren respectively, and with remainder for life to the survivors or survivor, others or other, of the parents in equal shares for life, with remainder in tail to their children, the shares accruing to such survivors, etc., to be subject to the same limitations and such benefit of survivorship as the original shares. Cursham v. Newland, 2 Beav. 145.

6. A father gave his residuary estate upon trust for his three daughters for life, and if any of his daughters should die leaving issue, a share proportioned to the number of his daughters was to go to the issue of such daughter, and if only one of such daughters should die leaving issue the whole to such issue, and if all his daughters should die without issue then to his sisters. He had three daughters. One died leaving four children, one of whom died leaving two children born after their grandmother's death; afterwards another of his daughters died a spinster:—Held, that there were implied cross limitations, so that the surviving daughter had a life interest in half the share of the daughter so last dying. Re Ridge, 41 L. J., Ch., 787; 7 L. R., Ch., 665; 20 W. R. 878; 27 L. T., N. S., 141.

Held, also, that the gift to issue was to the issue living at the death of the daughter, and therefore the three survivors of the four children and the representative of the dead one were entitled to the second moiety, and would, if the third daughter of the testator died without issue, become entitled to the whole. Ib.

1. Gift by testator to his daughters, "the share or shares of such daughters to be for their sole and separate use," followed by a contingent gift over to the survivors:—Held, that the separate use attached to the accrued as well as the original shares. Re Jarman's Trusts, 1 L. R., Eq., 71.

1. General Principles.

2. Under a bequest over, after an interest for life by words importing both a joint interest and a tenancy in common as to three, "or the survivor, share and share alike," the period to which the survivorship relates depends not on any technical words, but on the apparent intention collected from the particular disposition, or the general context. Newton v. Ayseough, 19 Ves. 534.

3. In construing limitations to a parent for life, and afterwards to his children, with a provision relating to survivorship annexed, whether occurring in wills or settlements, the rule for determining both the class who are to take, and the contingency to which the survivorship refers, is to lean to that construction which will include as many objects of the gift as possible, consistently with the declared purpose of the author of the instrument. Bourerie v. Bourerie, 2 Ph. 349; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 411; 11 Jur. 661. Reversing the judgment below.

4. Words of survivorship are to be referred to the period of division and enjoyment, unless the contrary intent be especially shown. Cripps v. Wolcott, 4 Madd. 11.

5. A testator gave and bequeathed three legacies of 3,000*l.* each to his three brothers, in the words following: "I leave and bequeath to my brother James 3,000*l.*, in trust to his surviving child or children; to my brother Robert W., 3,000*l.*, in trust to his surviving child or children; failing issue, I leave the 3,000*l.* to my brother William W., in trust to his surviving child or children; failing such issue I leave the 3,000*l.* to my brother Daniel O. W., in trust to his surviving child or children; failing issue, I leave the 3,000*l.* to the children of my brother James W." Similar legacies of 3,000*l.* each were given to the brothers Robert and Daniel, with the same phraseology as to "failing of issue, etc.":—Held, that the word "surviving" in the bequest meant surviving at the deaths of the respective fathers, and that the brothers of testator took life interests in these legacies. Blount v. Wheble, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 259.

6. A., by will, in 1841, gave the residue of his estate and effects, subject to a life interest vested in his wife, to his six grandnephews and nieces equally, share and share alike, and to their respective heirs or assigns, "declaring that if any of his residuary legatees shall die without leaving lawful issue before his or her share vest in the party or parties so deceasing, the same shall belong to and be divided equally, share and share alike, among the survivors of his grandnephews and grandnieces equally":—Held, that the word "vest" did not alter the general rule, but that "survivors" meant the survivors at the death of the tenant for life. Young v. Robertson, 8 Jur., N. S., 825. S. C. nom. Richardson v. Robertson, 6 L. T., N. S., 75.

It is a settled rule of construction that words of survivorship in a will should be referred to the period appointed by that will for the payment or distribution of the subject-matter of the gift. Ib.

If a testator gives a sum of money, or the residue of his estate, to be paid or distributed among a number of persons, and refers to the contingency of any one or more of them dying, and then gives the estate or the money to the survivor, the period of distribution is the period of the death of the testator; and accordingly the event of the death upon which that contingency is to take place is referable to the interval of time between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and the words are construed to provide for the event of the death of any one of the legatees during the lifetime of the testator. But where a testator gives a life estate in a sum of money, or the residue of his estate, and at the expiration of that life estate directs the money to be paid or the residue to be divided among a number of objects, and then refers to the possibility of some one or more of those persons dying, without specifying the time, and directs, in that event, the payment to be made or the distribution to be made among the survivors, it is understood and regarded by the law that he means the contingency to extend over the whole period of time that must elapse before the payment is made or the distribution takes place; and in such case the survivors are to be ascertained in like manner by a reference to the period of payment or of distribution, namely, the expiration of the life estate. Ib.

2. Immediate Gift, but not Expressly Contingent.

7. Bequest to A. and B. in equal moieties, but, in the event of the death of either, the whole to the survivor; and on the demise of either, should they have no children, then over:—Held, that the survivorship was confined to death in testator's lifetime. Clarke v. Lubbock, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 492; 6 Jur. 548.

1. A testator gave a leasehold house, which was let for twenty-eight years, to trustees to pay the rents and profits for the benefit of his live children, whom he named, or the survivors or survivor of them, in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike:—Held, that the words "survivors or survivor" referred to the death of any of them in his lifetime; that the words "share and share alike" referred to those children who should survive him, and created a tenancy in common; and that the interests were vested in the children on the death of the testator. Ashford v. Haines, 21 L. J., Ch., 496.

2. Bequest to the children of A. who should be living at the testator's decease, equally, with survivorship in case of death without leaving issue; if leaving issue, the issue to have the parent's share. The survivorship cannot be restrained to the period of the testator's death, as upon the construction the clause would be repugnant. Shergold v. Boone, 13 Ves. 370.

3. Bequest of personal estate in equal shares "to each and every of my children and their issue, whether sons or daughters, with benefit of survivorship":—Held, that the period of survivorship was the death of the testator. Caulfield v. Giles, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 427.

4. Bequest to four persons in equal shares; and in case of the death of any one in the lifetime of the other or others, the share or shares of him or them so dying to go to the survivor or survivors:—Held, that the survivorship referred to the period of distribution, that is, the testator's death; and that consequently, on the death of one of the four legatees in the testator's life, there was not a lapse. Howard v. Howard, 21 Beav. 550.

5. By a will property was given to trustees, to apply the rents, interest, and proceeds for the maintenance of the testator's son Edward for his life, and not to be paid to any person under an assignment by or execution against the son; and after the decease of the son, for the two daughters of the testator absolutely. By a codicil it was declared, that, in case of assignment by Edward, the trustees should stand possessed of the property upon trust for the daughters of the testator, in the same manner and form as declared by his will in the event of the death of Edward. By another codicil the testator gave 600*l.* stock to Edward, in addition to what he had left him by his will, subject to the same controlling powers and restrictions as were appointed by the will; and he gave a like sum to his son William, subject to the like control, "and to the survivor of them, and in the event of both their deaths" for the benefit of the said daughters:—Held, that the true construction of the second codicil was, that, in the event of the death of either of the legatees, both the legacies of stock should go to the survivor, and not that on the death of either his legacy should go to the survivor, which would cut down an absolute gift into a life interest. That, although in one codicil the words "in the event of the death of Edward" meant upon the death of Edward, it did not follow that the words in another codicil "in the event of both their deaths" meant upon both their deaths; for one expression was applied to a life interest and the other to a capital sum. That the period of survivorship must be referred to the period of distribution, namely, the death of the testator. That therefore Edward, having survived the testator, took the legacy of stock absolutely. Re More's Trust, 10 Hare 171.

3. Future Gift not Expressly Contingent, but no Prior Estate.

6. A. B. bequeathed 1,000*l.* to such persons, and in such proportions, as his wife should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment he bequeathed the 1,000*l.* unto, and to be equally divided between, her surviving brothers and sisters. The wife, by her will, which was held not to be an exercise of the power, not referring at all to her husband, or to his will, or to the power, bequeathed many legacies, to the exact amount of 1,000*l.*, and gave her clothes (she having no other property) to one of her sisters. When A. B. made his will, one brother of his wife had died. When A. B. died, there were two brothers and three sisters of his wife. When the wife died, there were no brothers and only two sisters living:—Held, that, under the words "surviving brothers and sisters" of the wife, the two sisters of the wife living at her death were entitled to the 1,000*l.* in equal moieties. Daries v. Thorns, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 212; 13 Jur. 383; 3 De G. & Sm. 347.

7. Testator gave a portion of his personal estate to the seven children of his son and his wife, naming them, "together with every other child hereafter to be born of the said (wife) during the life of the said (husband), or within nine months after his decease, in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship. He then directed their maintenance with the dividends until the youngest child should attain thirty; then upon trust for them respectively and the survivors and survivor of them in equal shares, with power to the trustees to make such distribution sooner if they think fit, provided the youngest child should have attained twenty-one:—Held, that the period of division was the death of the husband, or the short period limited after his death; that the clause of maintenance till thirty, and proposing payment till then, did not disturb the previous vesting in the children surviving at the death of the husband, so as to introduce remoteness; and that consequently one child having died, living the father, her share went over to those who should be surviving at his death. Hodson v. Micklethwaite, 2 Drew. 294; 23 L. J., Ch., 719; 2 W. R. 440; 2 Eq. Rep. 1157.

(a) Death of Testator.

1. J. devised lands to his son M., and other lands to his son J., and in case both of them should die unmarried, and without lawful issue, then his three daughters were to have the lands as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Both the sons died unmarried, and without issue; and two of the daughters died in the lifetime of the surviving son, leaving issue:—Held, that the three daughters had such a contingent interest vested in them upon their father's death as was transmissible to their representatives, and that the surviving daughter was not entitled to the whole. Wilson v. Bayly, 3 Bro. P. C. 195.

2. A testator gave to his wife an annuity, and 100*l.* a year for each of his three children during their minority, and from and after the decease or marriage of his wife, then the 300*l.* to be divided amongst his said children; and subject thereto, he bequeathed his leasehold and personalty unto three children, and the survivors and survivor of them. One died under twenty-one:—Held, that he took a vested interest at the death of the testator. Bass v. Russell, Tam. 18; 7 L. J., Ch., 177.

3. On a bequest of stock to the wife for life, and afterwards a moiety to be received and divided equally amongst the testator's brothers and sisters, and their issue:—Held, that the brothers and sisters living at the testator's death took vested interests, liable to be divested by their dying, leaving issue, before the period of division, and that the issue took by substitution. Shailer v. Groves, 6 Hare 162. But see 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 367; 11 Jur. 485; and 2 Jur., vol. ii., p. 737*n.*, 4th edn.

4. W. S. by his will directed the interest of the residue of his estate to be paid to his children during their respective lives; and, after their decease, to be divided equally between all his surviving grandchildren who should be then living, share and share alike, until the youngest should attain twenty-one years, when he directed the whole to be turned into money, and to be divided equally between all such of his said grandchildren, and the children and child of any such grandchild as might then be dead, leaving lawful issue, such children or child to take only his or their parent's share; and if there should be only one such grandchild who might live to attain the age of twenty-one, then upon trust for such grandchild, his or her heirs, executors, etc.:—Held, that the bequest was confined to the children of the grandchildren who should be living at the death of all the testator's children; and that the children of a grandchild who died in the lifetime of some of the testator's children did not take any interest under his will. Quære, if the bequest was not void for remoteness. Smith v. Furr, 3 Y. & Coll. 328; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 46.

5. Gift by a testator of his real and personal estate to his wife for her life, and the residue to be equally divided between her brothers and sisters, and, in case any of them should be dead at the time of her decease, leaving issue, such issue to stand in their parent's place:—Held, that the brothers and sisters who survived the testator, and afterwards died without issue in the lifetime of the wife, were entitled to shares in the residue. Gray v. Garman, 2 Hare 268; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 259; 7 Jur. 275.

6. Testator gave 5,000*l.* stock to his sister for life; and at her decease the stock was to be equally divided among the testator's nieces, E. T., M. R. R., F. R. B., M. A. G. R., and A. L. R., or the survivors of them. And, after bequeathing another legacy, the testator directed that the remainder of his property should be divided into two equal shares, of which he gave one to his niece M. R. R., and the other between his nieces E. T. and F. R. B. The will then contained the following clause: "In case my niece E. T. should not survive me, her child or children are to inherit what I have bequeathed to her; and the same of any other of my nieces who may marry and leave children":—Held, that the words of survivorship occurring in the gift of the 5,000*l.* stock to the testator's nieces were to be referred to the testator's death. Rogers v. Tomsey, 9 Jur. 575.

7. Gift for life followed by a gift to the surviving children of B. and C., "or their heirs and assigns":—Held, that Cripps v. Wolcott (4 Madd. 11) did not apply, and that the period of survivorship was the death of the testator. Re Hopkins, 2 Hem. & M. 411.

Held, also, that the "heirs and assigns" could not be read next of kin, and that all who survived the testator took vested interests. Id.

8. Survivorship as to a class, in a gift after the death of the tenant for life, referred to the death of the testator, and not to the death of the tenant for life. Evans v. Evans, 25 Beav. 81.

Gift to A. for life, and after her decease to "the surviving children of B. and C., except the youngest son of B.," who was to have 30*l.* to his share more than the other. The will proceeded: "Should either of these children die, leaving no issue, his or her share to be then equally divided amongst the survivors":—Held, that the children of B. and C. took vested interests at the death of the testator in remainder expectant on the decease of A., with a gift to the survivors in the event of any one dying without issue in that interval. Id.

9. A testator gave his residuary estate upon trust to pay to A. an annuity during her life, and to accumulate the surplus income till the expiration of six months after A.'s death, and then to divide the residue and accumulations into as many shares as there should be children "living" of A. and of B., who should have lived to attain twenty-one, or in case of any of them being dead under that age who should have left issue, and pay and apply one share to each of the children of A. and B. that should have lived to attain twenty-one, and to their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, and one share to the issue of each child who should have died under that age, leaving lawful issue:—Held, that the word "living" was not referable to the period of distribution, but to that of the testator's death, so that each child on attaining twenty-one took a vested interest absolutely. Kidd v. North, 3 De G. M. & G. 947.

10. A gift of residuary estate to A., and such of the children of B. as should be living at the death of C., their respective heirs, executors, etc., in equal shares as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; but if any such children should die under twenty-one, their shares to be in trust for the survivors, and other or others of them, the said children of B., and the said A., living at the decease of C., and his and their respective heirs, executors, etc., in equal shares, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, so and in such manner that the children of B. attaining twenty-one, and surviving C. and the said A., in case A. survive C., should take equally her capital:—Held, that A. surviving the testator, and dying in the lifetime of C., took nevertheless, with the children of B. who survived C., a vested share in the residuary estate. Falkner v. Grace, 9 Hare 282.

1. A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for his widow for life, and at her death to sell and pay, assign, or transfer the moneys arising therefrom to the testator's four children by name, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, "or equally to divide the aforesaid effects between the survivors of" his children, immediately after his wife's decease, in case the youngest of the said children for the time being should then have attained twenty-one years; but if the youngest should not then have attained twenty-one years, the testator directed the trustees to receive the annual interest, produce, profits, and proceeds of the trust moneys, and pay and apply so much of the interest as should arise from the equal share of each child in the maintenance and advancement of each such child as the trustees should deem expedient:—Held, that there was a clear gift to the children equally, that the provision as to survivors was not sufficiently clear to control it, and that consequently all the children took vested interests, which were not divested by their dying in the lifetime of the widow. Blackmore v. Snee, 1 De G. & J. 455.

2. S. gave all his hereditaments to his wife for life, or until her second marriage; and after her decease or marriage to trustees to sell and dispose thereof, and the money to arise therefrom he directed should be considered as part of his personal estate. After bequeathing legacies to his sons, he gave to his three daughters, S., E., and C., 600*l.* each; and after directing that his wife should be permitted to carry on the farming business during her life or widowhood, the testator directed that if she should marry again, his trustees should sell his effects, pay her a certain sum out of the produce, and the residue thereof unto and amongst all his children living at his decease (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship and accruer among them in the event of the death of any one of them without issue. But in case C. S. should continue his widow, then he directed his effects to be sold at her death, and gave the produce thereof amongst all his children living at his decease (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship and accruer among them. All the residue of his personal estate not disposed of he gave unto and amongst all his children (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with the usual benefit of survivorship and accruer among them. And as to the legacies given to his daughters, S., E., and C., he directed that in case any one of them should die under twenty-one without having been married, the legacy of such one should be equally divided amongst all his surviving children living at his decease (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship and accruer among them. C. S. survived her co-executors, and died a widow and intestate in 1854. The testator left eight children surviving, including A. All attained the age of twenty-one, and his daughters, S., E., and C., married. E. died in 1836, leaving her husband surviving, who subsequently married again, and died in 1854. The plaintiff, as the executor of this husband, claimed his first wife's share of the testator's estate and residue. On bill for the administration of the estate, the Court held that the three daughters took absolute interests in the property. Gooch v. Slater, 3 Jur., N. S., 881.

(b) Death of Testator where Tenant for Life Predeceases Him.

3. A testatrix bequeathed her property to her mother for life, and at her decease gave a legacy of 200*l.* to A., directing that then the residue should be equally divided between her surviving brothers and sisters:—Held, that the word "surviving" referred to the period of distribution, and the mother having died before the testatrix, that the brothers and sisters living at the death of the testatrix were entitled to the benefit of the gift, and that there was in the events which happened no bequest to the brothers and sisters who died before the testatrix. Spurrell v. Spurrell, 11 Hare 54; 17 Jur. 755; 22 L. J., Ch., 1076; 1 W. R. 322; 1 Eq. Rep. 192.

Where there is a gift to several persons, or the survivors of them, after the determination of previous life estates, the period of distribution of the fund is the period of ascertaining the persons in whom the fund vests. Id.

(c) Period of Division.

4. Legacy after limitations for life, and in default of children to be paid equally between two persons, or the whole to the survivor of them:—Held, not vested till the time of division. Daniell v. Daniell, 6 Ves. 297.

5. Gift of real and personal estate, after a life interest to the testator's widow, to trustees to be converted into money, and divided among several persons named, and the survivor or survivors of them. Those only are entitled who survived the widow. Hoghton v. Whitgrave, 1 Jac. & Walk. 146.

6. Words of survivorship are to be referred to the period of division and enjoyment, unless the contrary intent be especially shown. Cripps v. Wolcott, 4 Madd. 11.

7. A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his widow in trust, to apply the interest and proceeds for her own use, and after her decease he gave what should be remaining of such residuary moneys unto and equally amongst all the daughters of T. D. and their issue, with benefit of survivorship and accruer. T. D. had three daughters living at the testator's death. One of them died without issue in the lifetime of the testator's widow. The two others survived the widow, and had issue living at her death:—Held, that the parties only in existence at the time when the property to be taken was to be ascertained were entitled, and that the two surviving daughters at the widow's death were absolutely entitled. Gibbs v. Tait, 8 Sim. 132; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 344.

1. Upon a bequest to one for life, with remainder to two others, with clause of survivorship between the latter, "if one or the other should die":—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the tenant for life, and that one of the remaindermen having survived the testator, but predeceased the tenant for life, the surviving remainderman was entitled by survivorship. Whitton v. Field, 9 Beav. 368.

2. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his wife for life, after her death to his son and daughter, and their respective issue, with benefit of survivorship unto and between his said children, or their issue respectively:—Held, that the survivorship was to take place only in the event of death and failure of issue of the son or daughter happening during the lifetime of the testator's widow, and that upon her death the son and daughter were absolutely entitled. Turner v. Capel, 9 Sim. 158.

3. Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust (subject to certain legacies and annuities) for A. for life, and after his decease upon trust to convey, assure, and pay the whole of the said real and personal estate to and amongst the children of A. and the issue of such children. But in case A. should die without issue, then to pay and distribute the same equally amongst all and every the children of B. and C. and the survivors of them; but, in case any such children should be then dead, leaving issue of his, her, or their body or bodies lawfully begotten, then such issue to have as well such original share or shares as the father or mother of such issue so dying would have been entitled to if then living, as also such other share or shares thereof as the father or mother of such issue so dying might have been entitled to by survivorship or otherwise. A. survived the testator, and died without issue:—Held, that the period of the survivorship of the children of B. and C. is not to be referred to the time of the death of the testator, but to that of the death of A., being the period of distribution; and that the children of B. and C., living at the date of the will, and those born after that date and before the death of A., were entitled to the real and personal estate, with survivorship between them in case of the death of any such children without issue before the death of A., the children of such of the said children as died before A., leaving issue, being substituted for the original legatees. Buckle v. Favcott, 4 Hare 536; 9 Jur. 891.

4. Testator bequeathed his personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death to a trustee in trust to pay the rents and profits of his personal estate for and towards the support and maintenance of his six nephews and nieces, and in case of the death of any of them for the maintenance and support of the survivors. All the nephews and nieces survived both the testator and his widow. One of the nieces then died:—Held, that her share did not become undisposed of, but that she by surviving the testator's widow had become absolutely entitled to it. Clarke v. Gould, 7 Sim. 197.

5. A testator, after various bequests, gave to his wife, for her life only, all his remaining estates, and also gave her all his capital in trade, with three-quarters of the profits arising therefrom, for her life; but, nevertheless, in trust at his death for his then surviving children, share and share alike, independent of the rental of his said estates, which he gave and bequeathed to his surviving female children to be paid to them as he directed. The testator then proceeded thus: "On the decease of any of these children, should they die without issue lawfully begotten, that share to fall to the rest, and so on to the last female child; but should they marry and have children, then their share to go to the said child or children, and from my last female child to the males of my body lawfully begotten, with the same restrictions as before expressed, and to the heirs and assigns of the last of them." One of the testator's daughters, after his death, married, and died in the lifetime of his widow, leaving children:—Held, that such children did not take any interest under the will, the word "surviving" having reference to testator's widow's death, and not his own. Wordsworth v. Wood, 1 H. L. Ca. 129; 11 Jur. 593. Affirming 2 Beav. 25; 4 Myl. & C. 641; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 29; 9 Jur. 453; id. 1142.

6. Where there is a gift to one for life, and after her decease to be equally divided between three persons and the survivors of them, it is a gift vested subject to be divested, depending upon a special contingency, which not occurring, it was not vested; and therefore two out of the three persons dying in the lifetime of tenant for life, that one who survived her took the whole. Bonyer v. Curvall, 2 W. R. 328.

7. A testatrix by her will gave thus, "to my sister C. N.'s surviving children 30% each;" she then gave to C. N. thus, "the interest of my funded property for and during her natural life, and after her decease such property to be equally divided between her surviving children":—Held, that though on the construction of the word "surviving" in the first clause the period of vesting and distribution was referable to the death of the testatrix, yet that the period of vesting in the last clause was to be referred to the death of C. N., and that those children who survived C. N. were entitled. Neathway v. Reed, 3 De G. M. & G. 18; 17 Jur. 169; 22 L. J., Ch., 809.

8. A testatrix made a gift to her daughter C. S. to be paid to her weekly for "her natural life, and from and immediately after her decease" she directed the same to be divided among "her surviving children":—Held, that the remainder was to the children who survived C. S. Re Pritchard's Trusts, 3 Drew. 163.

9. A testator gave some property to his wife for life, and proceeded thus: "At the decease of my wife, I leave the last-named sum to be equally divided between the families of my two brothers, viz., one-half to the widow and children of my deceased brother J. B., the widow, if surviving, to have an equal share with the children":—Held, that the survivorship had relation to the death of the tenant for life, and not of the testator; and, secondly, that the children took in joint tenancy. Hesketh v. Magennis, 27 Beav. 395.

1. A testator gave all his real and personal property to his wife for life, and he gave a sum of stock to his five cousins by name, or the survivors of them, to be equally divided between them, and to be paid as soon as possible after the death of his wife:—Held, that, following the rule in Cripps v. Wolcott (4 Madd. 11), the survivorship must be referred to the death of the testator's wife, so that one of the cousins who survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of his widow, took nothing. Hearn v. Baker, 2 Kay & J. 383.

Held, also, that "survivors" must be construed to include a sole survivor, so that where only one of the legatees survived the widow such survivor took all the stock. Id

2. A testator bequeathed a fund in trust for his sister A. for life, and after her death to be divided between the children of his sisters, B., C., and D., who should survive the testator, such children taking per stirpes "with benefit of survivorship among members of the same family":—Held, that the latter words of themselves meant survivorship at the death of the tenant for life, and could not be otherwise interpreted by comparison with other bequests in the same will, showing an intention that those bequests should not go over if the legatee had children. Re Crawhall, 8 De G. M. & G. 480; 2 Jur., N. S., 892.

3. A testator gave certain dividends to his son, and at his death to his (the testator's) surviving daughters and their lawful offspring. The testator left his son and also four daughters him surviving. The will was attested by two of the daughters, and of these two one died in the son's lifetime, and the other survived the son:—Held, that the period for ascertaining the survivorship was the death of the son; that the word "offspring" meant "issue," and that therefore the daughters took absolutely as joint tenants. Young v. Davies, 9 Jur., N. S., 399; 32 L. J., Ch., 372; 11 W. R. 452; 2 Dr. & Sm. 167.

4. A legacy to A. for life, and at her death to be equally divided between her two sons (who were named), or given to the survivor of them: the survivorship has reference to the death of the tenant for life. Naylor v. Robson, 34 Beav. 571.

5. A testator bequeathed a house, described as a copyhold, to his wife for life, "and at her death to be disposed of for the benefit of his surviving children, share and share alike." The house was, in fact, leasehold:—Held, that only those children who survived the widow were entitled to share in the proceeds of the house. Thompson v. Thompson, 29 Beav. 654; 7 Jur., N. S., 1263; 9 W. R. 728.

(d) Period of Division where Several Life Interests.

6. A testatrix bequeathed stock to T. P. and J. S. for their lives, and from and after their decease to the surviving children of the said T. P. and J. S., share and share alike:—Held, that the children living at the death of the survivor of T. P. and J. S. were alone entitled, and that they took per capita and not per stirpes. Stevenson v. Gullan, 18 Beav. 590.

7. Devise to trustees in trust to pay the yearly produce to A. and B. in equal shares for life, with survivorship in case of the death of either "without issue." But if either should die "leaving issue," then her part to be paid to her "children" equally; and after the death of both A. and B., to convey "to the heirs of the body" of A. and B., share and share alike, or to the survivors, and if but one, then to such "only child." There was a gift over if A. and B. should die "without issue":—Held, the children took as purchasers, and that a child of A. which survived its parent but died in the lifetime of B. was entitled to a share. Gummoe v. Howes, 23 Beav. 181; 3 Jur., N. S., 176; 26 L. J., Ch., 323; 5 W. R. 219.

8. Bequest to A., and at his death (with certain exceptions) to B., and at her decease to be divided amongst four named persons, "or as many of them as may be living":—Held, that those only took who survived both A. and B. Knight v. Pool, 32 Beav. 518.

9. Devise of residue to the testator's wife for life, then to his daughter A.; upon her decease equally between his surviving brothers and sisters and those of his wife. The wife and daughter survived the testator, but the daughter predeceased the widow. Some of the brothers and sisters predeceased the daughter; the others survived her, but predeceased the widow:—Held, that the words "surviving brothers and sisters" referred to those who should survive the last living tenant for life, and that, in the events that happened, there was an intestacy. Howard v. Collins, 5 L. R., Eq., 349.

10. The period for ascertaining the survivorship among a class of legatees is the time for the distribution of their legacy, unless the testator has himself otherwise directed. Drakeford v. Drakeford, 11 W. R. 977; 9 L. T., N. S., 10; 33 Beav. 43.

Where a testator left all his unfunded property in cash, bills, jewels, plate, furniture, etc., to his widow; and bequeathed the interest on his funded property to his widow for life, and then to H. for his life, at whose death the principal was to be equally divided amongst H.'s surviving legitimate children and the testator's niece and granddaughter, R. H. died in the lifetime of the widow; R. died in the lifetime of the testator, and two of the surviving children of H. died in the lifetime of the testator's widow:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the brother only. Id.

11. Under a bequest to two successively for life, with remainder to the survivors of a class:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to death of the last tenant for life. Re Fox, 35 Beav. 163.

Bequest of successive estates for life in residuary personal estate to the widow and sister of the testator, and after the death of the sister a direction to divide the residue among the testator's surviving brothers and sister and their children. The widow survived the sister and brothers of the testator. Two of the brothers left issue:—Held, that the class of persons to take was to be ascertained at the death of the widow, and that they took per capita. S. C. 6 N. R. 374; 11 Jur., N. S., 735; 13 W. R. 1013.

1. A will contained a gift of the residuary estate to trustees upon trust to divide the same among all such of the testator's daughters as should be living at his death, and the trustees were directed to invest the share of each daughter and pay the income to her for life, with remainder to her children, and remainder in default of issue to the testator's "other daughters or other daughter surviving":—Held, that the period of survivorship referred to the death of the daughter whose share was to be distributed. Beckwith v. Beckwith, 46 L. J., Ch., 97; 36 L. T., N. S., 128; 25 W. R. 282. Reversing 25 W. R. 6.

(e) Rule in Case of Gifts of Real Estate.

2. The word "survivor" in gifts of personal estate may be taken as referring to the period of distribution. It is not equally settled that with regard to real estate it applies to the determination of the prior limitation. Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Ca. 64; 8 Jur., N. S., 919; 6 L. T., N. S., 666.

The benefit of survivorship may be given to those who have life interests as tenants in common. Id.

In gifts of personalty the word "survivor" is considered as referring to the period of distribution; and if the same rule were applicable in respect of real estate, it would be referred to the determination of the prior limitations; but the law in respect of real estate is unsettled. Id.

3. A testator gave real estate to his wife for life, and directed that after her death it should be divided, share and share alike, amongst twelve persons mentioned by name, "or the survivors of them." All those persons survived the testator, but some of them died before the widow:—Held, that the rule laid down in Cripps v. Wolcott (4 Madd. 11) applies to real as well as personal estate, and that the estate belonged to such of the twelve persons as survived the tenant for life. Re Gregson, 2 De G. J. & S. 428; 5 N. R. 99; 10 Jur., N. S., 1138; 34 L. J., Ch., 41; 13 W. R. 193; 11 L. T., N. S., 460. Reversing 4 N. R. 222.

5. Gifts Expressly Contingent.

(a) Whether to Death of Tenant for Life or happening of Event, 8034.

(b) Gift to a Class to be paid at Twenty-one, after a Life Interest with Benefit of Survivorship inter se, 8037.

(c) Direct Gift at Twenty-one, 8038.

(d) Gift on a Contingency to a Class of Survivors, 8039.

(e) Whether to Death of Tenant for Life or happening of Event.

4. Construction of will confining a clause of survivorship on death, not having issue, to the death of the tenant for life. Jenour v. Jenour, 10 Ves. 562.

5. W. devised all his real and personal estate to R. and E. during their lives, and after their deaths he devised "the whole of his estate unto the seven children of R. and E.," to be equally divided amongst the survivors or survivor of them, share and share alike; and should any of the children die leaving issue then the share of him so dying to be equally divided among such issue, the surviving parent or parents of such children receiving the interest of such share until the youngest should attain twenty-one. The seven children survived their parents:—Held, that they took absolute interests in the estate as tenants in common in fee. Bird v. Snales, 2 Jur., N. S., 273; 4 W. R. 227.

6. Bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to eight persons in equal shares, their interests therein to be vested from the time of the testator's decease; and in case of the death of any of the eight legatees before the tenant for life, the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying to be paid to the survivors or survivor equally. The eight residuary legatees survived the testator, but all died before the tenant for life:—Held, that survivorship was to be referred to the death of the tenant for life; and that as none of the residuary legatees survived her, the divesting clause had no operation, and each of the residuary legatees took his original gift. Marriott v. Abell, 7 L. R. 478; 38 L. J., Ch., 451; 17 W. R. 569; 20 L. T., N. S., 690.

7. Immediate gift to four residuary legatees and devisees in equal shares, "with benefit of survivorship" in case any of them should die without issue; and in case any of them should die leaving children, then the share, whether original or accruing, of each so dying to go to such children:—Held, that the clause of survivorship, and the limitation over to children of the legatees, were not confined to the lifetime of the testator, and intended merely to guard against lapse; and that the residuary legatees did not upon surviving the testator at once acquire absolute indefeasible interests in their shares. Bowers v. Bowers, 5 L. R., Ch., 244; 39 L. J., Ch., 351; 18 W. R. 301; 23 L. T., N. S., 35. Reversing 21 L. T., N. S., 134; 8 L. R., Eq., 283; 33 L. J., Ch., 596; 17 W. R. 1004.

8. A testator, by will, made in 1851, having directed his executors to invest his personal estates, after payment of his debts, upon trusts therein expressed, thus proceeded: "As to 5,000*l.*, or the stocks, funds, or securities upon which the same shall be from time to time invested, upon trust to pay the dividends, interest, and produce thereof unto my wife for and during the term of her life, to and for her own absolute use and benefit; and from and after her decease, upon trust to pay, transfer, and assign the 5,000*l.*, or the stocks, funds, or securities upon which the same shall be invested, between my son E. and my grandson A., in equal shares and proportions; and in case of the death of either of them in the lifetime of my wife, then upon trust to pay the whole of the trust fund and interest as aforesaid unto the survivor of them, E. and A., his executors, administrators, or assigns." E. died in the lifetime of testator's wife:—Held (reversing 6 Jur., N. S., 209;

8 W. R. 267), that A. was absolutely entitled to the whole fund, subject to the life interest of the widow. White v. Baker, 6 Jur., N. S., 591; 29 L. J., Ch., 577; 8 W. R. 533; 2 De G. F. & J. 55.

1. A testator bequeathed to trustees 800*l.* upon trust to invest and pay the income equally amongst his four daughters, A., B., C., and D., for their lives, to their separate use; and in case of the decease of any or either of them, leaving issue of her or their body or bodies, then he bequeathed one-fourth of the said principal sum to be equally divided amongst such issue, and if but one to such one only; and in default of issue, then the share of her or them so dying he bequeathed to the survivors of them equally, and if but one to such only. By a subsequent clause in his will, the testator directed that, in case any or either of his children, to whom or to whose benefit any legacy or bequest was given by his will, should die before such legacy or bequest should have become vested in her or them, leaving lawful issue, then such legacy or bequest should descend to and become the property of such issue. A. died before the testator, but after the date of the will, leaving issue, and B. survived the testator and died without issue:—Held, that, by the effect of the subsequent clause in the will, the issue of A. were entitled to participate with C. and D., the surviving children, in the one-fourth share given over in the event of the death of B. without issue. Willets v. Willets, 7 Hare 38; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 457; 12 Jur. 670.

2. A testator gave certain property to trustees upon trust for his widow for life; and after her death directed the same to be sold, and the proceeds divided into two equal shares, one of which he gave, in five equal shares, to A., B., C., D., and E., and directed that, in case of the death of any or either of them before the widow, their respective shares should go to their respective husbands or wives, if any, and if not, then to their children, and, in failure of children, to the survivors of them, share and share alike. He gave the residue of the other moiety, after payment of a legacy, as follows: "To F., G., H., I., and K., and in case of the death of any or either of them, then their respective shares to their children, if any, and if not, then to the survivors of them, share and share alike":—Held, that the second moiety was given to F., G., H., I., and K., in five equal shares, as tenants in common; held, also, that the words "in case of the death," in the gift of the second moiety, meant in case of death before the period of distribution, and applied to death in the testator's lifetime as well as to death after the decease of the testator, but before the decease of the testator's widow; held, also, that, although F. was dead when the will was made, the gift in favour of her children took effect; held, as to each moiety, that the share of each legatee who died before the period of distribution vested absolutely in such of his children as were living at the death of their parent, or at the death of the testator, whichever last happened. G. died a bachelor in the testator's lifetime, leaving H., I., and K. surviving him. H. died in the testator's lifetime. K. survived the testator, but died before the period of distribution. I. survived that period:—Held, that under the gift to the survivors G.'s share was divisible in moieties between I. and the personal representatives of K. Lee v. King, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 560; 16 Jur. 489; 16 Beav. 46.

3. Under a direction, that, after the decease of A., a fund "should be transferred to A. B. and C. D., or the survivor or survivors":—Held, that A. B., who survived C. D., but died in A.'s lifetime, was entitled to the whole. Antrobus v. Hodgson, 16 Sim. 450; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 93.

4. Interest of legacy to A. for life, remainder to B. and C., or in case one should die, living A., then to the survivor. B. and C. both die in the life of A.; the legacy was vested, and went to the survivor. Sparfield v. Jones, 3 Bro. C. C. 90.

5. Devise of real estate to three daughters for life, and after their decease to three grandchildren as tenants in common in fee; and in case of either of the grandchildren dying in the lifetime of the daughter, the share of them so dying to be "transferred" to the "survivors," and if only one should be living, then to him or her so "surviving." The survivor of the daughters outlived the three grandchildren:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the last tenant for life, and not to a survivorship between the grandchildren; that the divesting clause never took effect, and that on the decease of the survivor of the three daughters the heirs of the three grandchildren took as tenants in common in fee. Littlejohns v. Household, 21 Beav. 29.

6. A. gave his residuary estate, upon trust, that the whole should, on his youngest child attaining twenty-one, be valued, and specifically divided into three equal parts for his widow and two daughters respectively, and at the death of the widow her share was to be equally divided between the daughters, with a proviso, that if either of the daughters should die before such division of the property should have been made, leaving no surviving issue, then the part of the deceased should be given to the surviving sister; but if either should die and leave surviving issue, the part of her so dying should be equally divided amongst her surviving children. The income to go to the support of the widow and children. Both daughters having died before the widow:—Held, that the real and personal residuary estate of the testator had devolved on the two daughters in equal moieties, subject to the widow's life interest in one-third thereof. Maddison v. Chapman, 1 John. & H. 470.

7. Bequest after a life estate to A., B., and C. equally; "or, in case of the demise of each or either of them, to be divided between the survivors and survivor, or their representatives." All three died in the life of the tenant for life:—Held, that this being an alternative gift, their representatives were entitled to the fund. Page v. May, 24 Beav. 323; 3 Jur., N. S., 1047; 27 L. J., Ch., 242; 5 W. R. 840.

8. A married woman, having power to dispose of 1,500*l.*, by her will gave the interest of it to her husband for his life, and directed that, after his decease, the principal should be divided equally between the five daughters of her sister B.; and if any of them should die during her husband's lifetime, leaving issue, that the respective issue of such deceased daughters should have equally divided among them their mother's share; but in case any of them should die during her husband's lifetime without lawful issue, that the 1,500*l.* should be divided, share and share alike, among the surviving daughters:—Held, that the word "surviving" had reference to the testatrix's husband; and therefore, as all the daughters died in his lifetime, and only one of them left issue, that four-fifths of the 1,500*l.* were undisposed of. Watson v. England, 15 Sim. 1; 9 Jur. 648.

1. A testator bequeathed his residue to his widow for life, with remainder to his nephews and nieces living at her decease, and he substituted their children for any who should die in her life. But if any of the nephews and nieces should die in the life of the wife without having any child "then living," he directed his share to go to the survivors of the nephews and nieces. A nephew died without children, in the life of the widow.—Held, that his share did not go to the survivors at his death, but the survivors at the death of the widow. Essex v. Clement, 30 Beav. 525.

2. Gift by a testator to his widow, for life, and after her death amongst his four children, naming them, as tenants in common; but if any of his children should die before his, her, or their share or shares should become payable, leaving issue, then such issue to take his, her, or their parents' share or shares; but if any one or more of his children should die before his or her share or shares should be payable, leaving no lawful issue, then such share or shares to devolve and go to his surviving child or children:—Held, that survivorship was not to be referred to the period of distribution, but to the time of the death of the legatees dying in the lifetime of the widow. Wilmott v. Frewitt, 11 Jur., N. S., 820; 13 W. R. 856; 13 L. T., N. S., 90.

3. Bequest of 3,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust to invest same either in a purchase or at interest, and pay interest to testator's wife during her life, and after her decease to divide the whole, principal and interest, "among his four children, share and share alike, and the survivors of them, but not before they should have respectively attained the age of twenty-one years, or days of marriage." C, the plaintiff's wife, who was one of the four children, attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her mother. Trustees laid out greatest part of the money in the purchase of freeholds and copyholds, and lent another part on bond:—Held, that C. had a vested interest, and that survivors meant such as should be living at the death of the child before twenty-one, and not such as were living at the death of the mother, and that representative of C. was entitled to a fourth of the bond, and a fourth of the whole in government securities, and which had not been invested in land. Weedon v. Fell, 2 Atk. 124.

4. A testator devised all his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her decease to such of his children as should be then living, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, share and share alike, as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship, in case any died without issue under twenty-one; but if any of them should die, leaving lawful issue, the testator willed that such issue should take their father's or mother's share. The testator left several children, of whom one only, a son, survived the wife, but one of the others, a daughter, left issue:—Held, that the son was entitled to the whole property. Esop. Hunter, 3 Y. & Coll. 610.

5. A testator, by deed of disposition according to the Scotch law, after giving annuities to three persons, went on to direct that "the capital sums to be set apart to answer such annuities as and when the same should become tangible by the deaths of the said annuitants respectively, should be paid to and amongst seven persons nominatim (being respectively the children of two of the annuitants), and the survivors or survivor of them, on the first term of Whit-Sunday or Martinmas after their respectively attaining twenty-one or marriage." Then followed a provision for maintenance of the legatees during minority, also a power of advancement as to one of the legatees, and then a declaration that in the event of the deaths of any one or more of the said legatees before the term of payment of their shares as aforesaid, leaving lawful issue, and such issue should be in life at the time their fathers and mothers would have been entitled to receive payment of their shares, had they survived, then the share of the parent should go to the issue:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Session, that the legatees had not a vested interest during the lifetime of the annuitants, the survivorship spoken of having reference to the periods of the deaths of the latter. Pearson v. Casamajor, MacL. & R. 685.

6. A husband gave moneys in trust to pay the income to his wife for life, on her death to divide the trust fund amongst his six children, share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship to be paid to them when the youngest survivor shall attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that the period of survivorship was the death of the wife. Wellcock v. Ostle, 21 W. R. 118; 27 L. T., N. S., 481.

7. Bequest of a fund to three granddaughters, in equal shares, for their respective lives, and afterwards to their respective issue; and in case any of the three should die without issue, her share to accrue and survive to the survivors, and the accrued shares to be subject to the same conditions:—Held, that the survivorship as to each share had reference to the death of each granddaughter, and that on the death of the last surviving granddaughter without issue, her share fell into the residue. Nevill v. Boddam, 28 Beav. 554; 6 Jur., N. S., 573; 29 L. J., Ch., 738; 8 W. R. 490.

8. A. gave a life interest in all his property to his wife, and, after her death, he directed that all his property in the funds or elsewhere, of every description, should be sold, and equally divided between his children, B., C., D., E., and F.; and he further directed that his executors should, upon dividing the whole of his said property equally as above directed, immediately lay out the whole of the moneys that would belong to D., E., and F., his above three daughters, as their shares of his said property, in 3 per cent. consolidated annuities; and that neither of them, his before-mentioned daughters, should have the power of receiving more than the dividends due upon their respective shares. But in case of the marriage of all or either of his aforesaid daughters, the child or children of either of them his said daughters that should outlive their mother or mothers, should have his, her, or their mother's shares at their own disposal, both principal and interest; and in case of the death of one or more of his aforesaid children that might die unmarried, his, her, or their shares and share should be equally divided among the survivors of the aforesaid children or their children; and he gave and bequeathed unto his executrix and executor all the rest and residue of his estate and effects, both real and personal. The testator's widow died in 1838; and one of the daughters, who outlived the testator and the tenant for life, died without having been married:—Held (affirming the decision of the Court below), that the period of division as to the daughters' shares was, not the death of the tenant for life, but the deaths of the daughters; and that the gift over, upon dying unmarried, was not to be restricted to dying unmarried in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Re Walker's Trust, 16 Jur. 702; 1 W. R. 408. Affirming 1 W. R. 33.

1. A testator bequeathed a money fund to trustees, to be invested for his "five daughters, share and share alike, for their lives, and after the respective deaths of such of his daughters as should die without leaving issue, or leaving issue, if such issue should die under twenty-one years, to divide the fifth part or share of each of his said daughters who should so die without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid, in the following manner: "immediately, or as soon as conveniently can be after her decease, unto and amongst my son George and the survivors of them my five daughters, share and share alike, to whom I do give and bequeath the same accordingly, or to their respective personal representatives":—Held, that the word "survivors" referred to the death of the tenant for life whose share was to be divided. Re Bate, or Re Bate's Trust, 11 W. R. 768; 9 L. T., N. S., 226; 2 N. R. 265.

On the death of the last survivor of the five daughters without issue:—Held, that "personal representatives" were to be construed in their ordinary sense, and her entire share was directed to be paid to the executors of George, the son. Id.

(b) Gift to a Class to be Paid at Twenty-one, after a Life Interest with Benefit of Survivorship inter se.

2. The word "survivors" in a bequest to children:—Held, upon the context of the will, to mean surviving so as to attain their respective ages of twenty-one. Crozier v. Fisher, 4 Russ. 398; 6 L. J., Ch., 118.

3. A testator bequeathed the interest of 3,000*l.* to his daughter for life; and, after her death, he bequeathed the principal in trust for her children, in equal shares, to be paid to sons at twenty-one, and to daughters at that age or on marriage, with interest in the meantime for their maintenance, with "benefit of survivorship in the event of any of the said children dying without issue":—Held, that the period of survivorship was limited to the time appointed for payment; and that therefore a daughter of the legatee for life, who died in the lifetime of the latter without having been married, but having attained twenty-one, took a vested interest, which did not become divested by the survivorship clause. Tribe v. Newland, 5 De G. & Sm. 236; 16 Jur. 286; 21 L. J., Ch., 283.

4. On a gift, after a tenancy for life, to a class equally, with benefit of survivorship, upon their severally attaining twenty-one, the survivorship held to refer to the attaining twenty-one; and the representatives of one who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, held entitled to a share. Knight v. Knight, 25 Beav. 111.

5. A testator gave a fund to trustees upon trust to pay the income to A. during his life, and after the decease of A. leaving issue, upon trust to pay, apply, assign, and transfer both principal and interest to and amongst all and every the child and children of A., equally to be divided between them, and if but one, then to such only child, to be paid to them, if sons, at twenty-one, and, if daughters, at that age or marriage, with benefit of survivorship; and in case there should be no child or children of A. at the time of his death, or if all and every such child or children should die before attaining twenty-one or marriage, then over. A. had eight children, of whom three died infants in their father's lifetime, two attained twenty-one and died in his lifetime, and three attained twenty-one and survived him:—Held, that the two children who attained twenty-one and died in their father's lifetime took vested interests, and that their representatives were entitled to share in the fund along with the children who survived their father. Cornock v. Wadman, 7 L. R., Eq. 80.

6. Devise of a sum of money to A. for life; then to her daughters and younger sons in such shares as she should appoint; and in default of appointment for the daughters and younger sons equally, and to the survivors; and in case no daughter or younger son, or that they should die before twenty-one or marriage, then over:—Held, that the portions vested in A.'s children at twenty-one, though they died in her lifetime. Salisbury v. Lamb, Ambl. 384; 1 Eden 465.

7. A husband gave property to his wife for life, and after her death to their children, share and share alike, "and the survivors and survivor of them," to be paid on the youngest of them attaining twenty-one; with a gift over in the event of "such issue dying before majority":—Held, that the survivorship was to be referred to the period of attaining twenty-one, and not to the death of the tenant for life. Alty v. Moss, 34 L. T., N. S., 312.

8. A testator bequeathed a reversionary interest, to which he was entitled on the death of a tenant for life, to such of the children of his three daughters as should attain twenty-one, and directed their several shares to be paid on their attaining twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship:—Held, that a grandchild of the testator who survived the testator and attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, was entitled to a share. Reid v. Worsley, 14 Jur. 325.

9. Bequest of stock to trustees on trust for testator's sister for life, and after her death then to pay the stock to her children, with a direction that the same should be paid to them in the manner therein mentioned, and with a gift over in case there should be no child of his sister living at her death, the stock to be paid in the same manner and in the same proportions as was thereinbefore "directed, had any or either of the children of" his sister "survived so as to have become entitled thereto":—Held, that the word "survived" here meant survived the sister, and that consequently on the whole will the interests of the children did not vest until the death of the tenant for life, and a sole surviving child took the whole fund. Daniel v. Gosset, 19 Beav. 478.

1. G. F. bequeathed his personal estate upon trust for the benefit of his wife for life, and at her death upon trust to transfer the same unto his three sons, G., W., and S., or to the survivors of them, if they, or the survivors of them, should all have attained the age of twenty-one years; but in case they should not have attained that age, upon trust to pay the rents, etc., for the maintenance, etc., of his said sons until they should have attained that age, and then upon trust to convey the trust estate to his said sons, or the survivors of them, as aforesaid; but in case neither of his said sons should survive his said wife, then upon trust to dispose of the said trust estate as his said wife should appoint. G. F. died in 1818, leaving his wife and his three sons surviving. Each of the sons attained twenty-one, but G. alone survived his mother:—Held, that G. F. did not intend that any son dying in the lifetime of the widow should have a vested interest. Fisher v. Moore, 1 Jur., N. S., 1011; 3 W. R. 584.

2. Bequest to A. for life, and "at her decease to her surviving children," when they have attained twenty-one:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of A., and that those children only who survived her were entitled. Huffam v. Hubbard, 16 Beav. 579.

3. After certain bequests for life, the general residue was bequeathed to the surviving children of A., who was living:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the testator. Lill v. Lill, 23 Beav. 446.

4. A testatrix gave the interest of the residue to her brother during his life, and, after his death, she gave the residue to her executors, in trust for four persons by name, and the survivors and survivor of them, to be paid to them respectively, when they should attain twenty-one, with interest in the meantime: of those four persons, two died during the life of the brother:—Held, that they did not take a vested interest in any part of the residue, but that the whole of it belonged to the two survivors. During the lifetime of the testatrix's brother, one of the two survivors assigned all her furniture, plate, etc., and all the other estate and effects of or to which she was then possessed or entitled, to trustees upon trust for her creditors; the assignment did not pass her contingent interest in the testatrix's residuary estate. Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Russ. 124; 6 L. J., Ch., 53.

5. Testator devised certain messuages to trustees upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for her life, and after her decease he gave and devised the said messuages to the same trustees in trust to sell, etc., and apply the proceeds amongst all his, the testator's, nephews and nieces, children of his brothers A. and B., and his sister C., and the survivors and survivor of them, share and share alike, to be paid to them respectively as they attained the age of twenty-one years. The testator's wife survived him:—Held, that the property was divisible among such only of the children of A., B., and C. as survived the widow. Williams v. Tarrt, 2 Colly. 85.

6. Testator bequeathed 50,000*l.* to trustees in trust for his wife for life, and after her death he gave one-fifth of that sum to the same trustees in trust to invest it and pay the interest to his daughter for her life, and, upon her demise, to appropriate the interest for the use of any of her child or children until they reached the age of twenty-one years, and then the principal to be paid to the survivor or survivors of the children of his said daughter, share and share alike. The testator also gave 2,000*l.* to the same trustees in trust to invest it and to pay the interest to his daughter for her life, and after her decease to appropriate the interest for the use of any of her child or children until they reached the age of twenty-one years, when the 2,000*l.* was to be paid to the survivor or survivors of the said children of his said daughter. The daughter had two children who attained twenty-one, but only one of them survived her:—Held, that that child became entitled on her death to the whole of the trust funds in which she had a life interest. Turing v. Turing, 15 Sim. 139; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 272; 10 Jur. 366.

7. Testator bequeathed a fund in trust for Elizabeth D. for her life, and after her decease in trust for four of her children, whom he named, "or the survivor or survivors of them, for their maintenance until they severally attain the age of twenty-one years, when each of them will be entitled to claim a fair proportion of the principal." Only one of the children survived the mother:—Held, that that one was entitled to the whole fund, though two of the deceased children attained twenty-one. Dorville v. Wolff, 15 Sim. 510; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 179; 11 Jur. 160.

8. Gift of residue in trust for a testator's wife during widowhood, and on her death or marriage to pay it amongst his five children, or the "survivor or survivors" of them, at such ages as his wife should appoint, or in default at twenty-one. But in case of the death of any before his share should become "payable," leaving issue, then to pay his share to such issue. A child attained twenty-one, and died in the life of the wife, leaving issue. No appointment having been made:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the cesser of the wife's estate, and that the issue, and not the representatives of the child, took the share. Hind v. Selby, 22 Beav. 373.

(c) Direct Gift at Twenty-one.

9. A testator bequeathed to his four children A., B., C., and D. 8,000*l.*, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, but with benefit of survivorship, the same to be paid and payable to them respectively, upon their attaining the age of twenty-one years, the interest thereof in the meantime, or so much as by his executors should be considered sufficient, to be applied to their maintenance and education; and he left to B. and C. all the residue of his personal estate, and, in case of their decease before twenty-one, he bequeathed the said residue to A. and D. or the survivor of them, share and share alike, and, in case of the decease of all his before-named children before twenty-one, he gave the residue, including his lapsed legacies, to his brother. By a codicil he gave to his children E., F., G., and H. (who were born after the will), 4,000*l.* sterling, in equal shares, with the benefit of survivorship, not only as to them, but to the rest of the children named in the will, payable at twenty-one, maintenance to be granted by the Court of Chancery.—Held, that the share of G., who died under twenty-one, went to all his surviving brothers and sisters, and not to his widow and child. Forrester v. Smith, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 70.

The cases as to the period to which survivorship is to be referred reviewed and classified. Id.

1. Personal estate was bequeathed upon trust to pay the income to the testator's wife till his youngest child attained twenty-one, she maintaining the children during their minorities, and then the capital was to be divided among the wife and children (by name), with benefit of survivorship.—Held, that the survivorship referred to the period of distribution, and that a child did not, on attaining twenty-one, acquire an indefeasible interest. Vorley v. Richardson, 8 De G. M. & G. 126; 2 Jur., N. S., 362; 25 L. J., Ch., 335; 4 W. R. 397.

2. A testator bequeathed his residuary estate to R. S., the eldest son of P. S., and failing him to the next male child of P. S., and failing the male children of P. S. to seven persons whom he named, and the survivors and survivor of them, in equal proportions. R. S. died in the lifetime of his father, and P. S. died without any other issue. All the legatees died in the lifetime of P. S.—Held, that the word "survivors" referred to the period of distribution at the death of P. S., and therefore the gift to the legatees failed, and the residue went to the next of kin of the testator. McDonald v. Bryce, 1 W. R. 261; 17 Jur. 335; 22 L. J., Ch., 779; 16 Beav. 581.

The case of Cripps v. Wolcott (4 Madd. 11), is a decision binding on this Court. Id.

3. On a bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to three legatees, to be equally divided, or in case of the demise of each or either of them, to be divided between the survivors or survivor or their representatives.—Held, that the three legatees having predeceased A., the plaintiff, who was the legal personal representative of all three, was entitled. McDonald v. Bryce (16 Beav. 581) overruled. Page v. May, 5 W. R. 840; 24 Beav. 323; 3 Jur., N. S., 1047; 27 L. J., Ch., 242.

4. A testator bequeathed as follows: "I give to my daughter S. 50*l.* per annum for life. I give to each of my other daughters 5,000*l.*, the interest of which for their use independent of any husband they may have, and if they should have any children, the principal to be divided among them after her death if they should attain the age of twenty-one years; if not, it is to be divided between her surviving sisters, share and share alike. The testator died, leaving S. and four other daughters, A., B., C., D., surviving; of these, A. afterwards died, leaving two children, both of whom died under twenty-one, and B. survived A., but died before the survivor of her children.—Held, that the 5,000*l.* bequeathed to A. became, upon the death of the survivor of her children, divisible amongst her sisters, including S. then surviving, in exclusion of the representatives of B. Carver v. Burgess, 7 De G. M. & G. 96; 24 L. J., Ch., 401; 3 W. R. 308; 3 Eq. Rep. 421; 18 Beav. 541; 2 W. R. 125.

5. Testator, by will, directed his executors to place out upon government securities such a sum of money out of the interest thereof as should be sufficient to produce an annuity of 50*l.*, which he gave unto his daughter J. for her life; and after her decease, in case she should leave issue, he gave the principal unto and equally amongst his surviving children and their legal representatives, share and share alike. The testator had four children living at the date of his will and of his death, of whom the daughter J. was the survivor; she died without leaving issue.—Held, that the words "surviving children" meant children surviving the daughter J., and that the words "legal personal representatives" must be construed in their ordinary sense, and not as importing kindred or representatives in blood; consequently, that the fund, of which the testator's daughter was the tenant for life, fell into the testator's residuary estate. Taylor v. Beverley, 1 Colly. 108; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 240; 8 Jur. 265.

I. WHERE INTERESTS VESTED SUBJECT TO A GIFT OVER.

1. Bequest of stock, etc., and interest and dividends to accrue to testator's two great-nieces, equally to be divided and to be assigned, transferred, etc., to them, when and as they should respectively attain twenty-one, with limitations of their respective shares, on the event of death under twenty-one, to their respective children; survivorship in case of no children, and a direction that the executors should, during the respective minorities of the legatees, receive the dividends, interest, etc., and that so much as should be necessary should be applied for maintenance, etc., and the residue accumulate for their benefits respectively, until they should respectively become entitled to their respective parts. The surplus interest held to go with the principal upon the death of one under twenty-one without children. Sisson v. Shaw, 9 Ves. 285.

2. Where a legacy of residue is given in such a way as to vest, but so as to be liable to be divested on a given event, the interest in the meanwhile, and until the divesting, belongs to the legatee. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & C. 688; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 36; 2 Jur. 1029. Affirming on this point 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 70; 1 Jur. 915.

A testator, after bequeathing certain shares of his residuary estate (the produce of a mixed fund) to his son and daughter respectively, directed that the interest of the share given to the son should be applied for his maintenance and education till twenty one, and that after that period he should have power to receive and dispose of such interest till his age of twenty-five, when the whole of the property bequeathed to him was to be at his own disposal. He further directed that half the property given to his daughter should be invested, in trust, for her maintenance, education, use, and benefit, during her life, and for her children, if any, after her decease; and, if there was no issue living at her decease, the said property was to devolve to his son; and in case he was dead also, and had left no issue, the said property was to devolve to his executors thereafter named. The other half of the property bequeathed to his daughter he directed to be invested for her sole use and benefit till twenty-one, and that the said property should then be at her own disposal; and if either the son or daughter should die under twenty-one, the property bequeathed to the one so dying should devolve to the other; and if both should die under that age, then the property bequeathed to them should devolve to and become the property of the four persons therein named and described, to be divided betwixt them in equal proportions, and their heirs for ever; which four persons he also appointed his executors. One of the four persons named executors renounced probate, and declined to act; and afterwards both the son and daughter died under twenty-one, and without issue.—Held, that the interest which accrued upon the shares of the son and daughter during their respective minorities, so far as it had not been applied to their maintenance and education, vested absolutely in them, and passed to their personal representatives. Id.

3. A. by will devises 500*l.* to his infant grandson without appointing any time for payment, with proviso, that if the grandson dies before twenty-one, then the legacy to go over to B. The grandson shall have the interest of the legacy during his infancy. Taylor v. Johnson, 2 P. W. 204; Mos. 98.

4. Where a testator gives legacies to children, provided they attain twenty-one, with a gift over if the children die before twenty-one, and appoints trustees and guardians to the children, with a request that they will attend to their education, the children are entitled to the interest of their legacies for their maintenance and education, until they attain twenty-one or die under that age. Mills v. Roberts, 1 Russ. & M. 555; Tam. 476; 8 L. J., Ch., 141.

5. A bequest of a vested legacy, directed to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, and subject to be divested by death before those events (the testator not being in loco parentis), does not carry interest until the time for payment. Re Bullen, 12 L. T., N. S., 763.

6. Where legacies are given upon trust to accumulate, the interest and dividends will not pass by a gift over of the principal sums, unless the Court is satisfied, by a reference to other clauses of the will, that the interest and dividends were omitted in the gift over by clerical mistake. Harvey v. Cooke, 4 Russ. 34; 6 L. J., Ch., 84.

7. Devise of real estate with the residue of the personal estate upon long limitations in strict settlement, including persons unborn. A subsequent direction that none of the devisees shall take or come into possession before the age of twenty-five, was held confined to the actual possession, and not to operate by way of revocation; and therefore, upon the death of the first tenant for life under twenty-five, the accumulation belonged to his personal representative. Montgomery v. Woodley, 5 Ves. 522.

8. A testator bequeathed to trustees the money secured by a mortgage of Tilt Wood in trust for his nephew R. T. B., and after devising the legal estate in the premises, subject to the trusts and equities thereof, to the trustees, proceeded to provide that, "If the said R. T. B. shall not live to the age of twenty-one years, I give the money secured on Tilt Wood and the legal estate therein, subject as aforesaid to the trustees of my will, to become part of my residuary estate." The will further contained a declaration of the testator's intention that the clauses applicable contained in 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, should apply thereto, but did not otherwise contain any clause relating to the maintenance of infants, or directions as to what was to come of the unapplied income of the estates, shares, and interests under the will. R. T. B. survived the testator, and died under twenty-one. The trustees of the mortgage debt having received and invested (at compound interest) the interest thereupon down to R. T. B.'s death, paid a small sum of uninvested cash, part thereof, into court under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, on a petition by the trustees of the residuary estate for payment out to them of this money, that the legal personal representative of R. T. B. was entitled to the accumulations of interest down to his death. Re Buckley's Trusts, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 583; 52 L. J., Ch., 439; 48 L. T. 109; 31 W. R. 376.

1. As to right of person taking a vested interest under the gift over to interest. See Laundy v. Williams, 2 P. W. 481.

II. BETWEEN DEATH OF TESTATOR AND BIRTH OF CHILDREN.

2. Legacy in trust for the children of A., to be equally divided between them with benefit of survivorship, and a provision for maintenance out of the interest: A. having no children at the death of the testator:—Held, that after-born children would take, and that the interest till the birth of a child fell into the residue. Harris v. Lloyd, T. & R. 310.

3. Devise of the residue of real and personal estate, after provision made for payment of annuities and legacies, to the child or children of testator's natural daughter, and in case she should die without issue to S. and J.:—Held, the intermediate profits till a child was born should go to the residuary devisees, and not to the heir-at-law. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 96; 1 Ves. 485; 4 Ves. 288. n.

4. Testator bequeathed 500*l.* to be paid to his grandson P. if he lived to be twenty-one, and in case he died before then, to the other child or children of his daughter equally, arriving at such age. P. died before twenty-one, and no child of P. was born or living at testator's death. The grandchildren, born after the death of testator, were held entitled to the 500*l.*; for not being in esse in his lifetime, he must have had in his view the future children of his daughter. Haughton v. Harrison, 2 Atk. 329.

A parent is bound by nature to support a child, but this has not been extended to grandchildren, and therefore not entitled to interest. Ib.

If the child or children of P. arrive at twenty-one, then the 500*l.* was directed to be paid to them, and interest from the time it becomes payable. Ib.

5. Devise of real and personal estate to the first son of A. when he should attain twenty-one, with a direction for his proper maintenance and education. A. having no son at the time of the will, the testator's death, or the decree:—Held, that the profits of the personal estate should accumulate; and that as to the real estate, it was a good executory devise, but that the profits thereof descended to the heir until a son should be born, when they should be applied to his maintenance. Bullock v. Stones, 2 Ves. 521.

6. Rents and profits undisposed of belong to the owner of the inheritance, or persons entitled to the enjoyment. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Ves. 268; Ca. temp. Talb. 44, 1 Atk. 581. And see S. C. as cited in 4 Bro. C. C. 390.

7. Where on an executory devise the words "all the rest and residue" include intermediate profits. Gibson v. Montfort (Lord), 1 Ves. 491.

III. GIFT TO A CLASS. RIGHTS OF MEMBERS WHO ATTAIN VESTED INTERESTS.

8. In the case of a bequest to a class, where all the existing objects of it had attained vested interests, they were declared entitled to the annual income of the whole fund, though their shares might be diminished by other objects coming into being. Scott v. Scarborough (Earl), 1 Beav. 154; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 65.

Testator gave a sum of 15,000*l.*, due to him as a charge upon an estate, to his trustees, upon trust after making certain payments thereout to accumulate the interest thereof for twenty years, and at the expiration thereof the trustees to stand possessed of the interest of the said sum, upon trust to make certain payments; and he also directed that the trusts of the sum of 15,000*l.* should be dealt with as the trusts of a certain other term, and that, subject thereto, the said sum and the interest and accumulation should be in trust for a certain class of children; and there was a direction that the capital should sink into the estate upon which it was charged:—Held, that the accumulated interest only of the said sum after payment of the sums charged on it was given to the children specified. Ib.

9. Bequest of residue of real and personal estate to the children of A., equally with a bequest over thereof to other persons, if A. should die without leaving issue; this is a vested interest, defeasible, and the children, as they are respectively born, shall take the accruing interest equally. Shepherd v. Ingram, Ambl. 448.

10. T. gave the residue to trustees, inter alia, to lay out one-third part in securities, the interest to accumulate for the benefit of the children of his niece, and if she should survive her husband, and have issue under twenty-one years of age, the trustees were to apply the interest for their maintenance till twenty-one, and upon the children attaining their ages of twenty-one, equal shares of the principal to be transferred to them; the interest accrued between the elder and the younger children coming of age, decreed to be divided between them. Hankins v. Combe, 1 Bro. C. C. 335.

11. A testator gave 200*l.* a year to S. for her life, and after her decease he gave 6,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* consols to be divided equally among such of her children as should attain twenty-one. S. survived the testator, and died, leaving six children, five of whom had attained twenty-one in her lifetime:—Held, that the testator's residuary legatee was excluded from claiming any portion of the dividends of the fund. Stone v. Harrison, 2 Colly. 715; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 421; 10 Jur. 609.

12. The testator gave legacies out of a sum of stock to the grandchildren named in his will on their attaining the age of twenty-one, and if any of them should die under twenty-one, their portion to be equally divided among such of them as should attain twenty-one, but if the whole of his said grandchildren should die under that age, then he gave the interest of the sum of stock to the father of the said grandchildren for his life, and after his decease the principal as therein mentioned:—Held, that the grandchildren were entitled to the interest during their minority. Boddy v. Daves, 1 Keen 362.

1. Bequest of a personal fund to such of the children of I. N. as should live to attain the age of twenty-one years. I. N. had three children, two of whom having attained twenty-one, applied for payment of their shares. Under the circumstances of the case, the Court declined to pay over to them any part of the capital, but allowed them to receive the interest of two-thirds, without prejudice to the claim of after-born children of I. N. Brandon v. Aston, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 30.

2. Where a legacy depends on a contingency, the intermediate interest between the death of a tenant for life and the contingency happening, does not follow the principal, but falls into the residue. Shaw v. Cunliffe, 4 Bro. C. C. 144.

3. A testator devised the residue of his real estate to a trustee until one of his grandsons attained twenty-one; and in case his grandson Thomas attained twenty-one, in trust to pay him "the future rents." He bequeathed to the same trustee the residue of his personal estate, to accumulate until one of his grandsons attained twenty-one; and he directed payment of "the aggregate" of the residue of his personal estate and its accumulations, and the accumulations of the rents, to his grandson Thomas, from and after his attaining twenty-one. There was an interval of three years between the eldest grandson and Thomas attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the rents during that interval were undisposed of, and passed to the heir-at-law. Marriott v. Turner, 20 Beav. 557.

4. Under a disposition by will to the children of A. and B., payable at twenty-one or marriage, with a limitation over, upon failure of issue in the lives of A. and B., it was held, that all the children without restriction were entitled; and an apportionment being directed and the interest ordered to be paid to those who had attained twenty-one; children born afterwards, though entitled to a share of the capital, were not allowed to claim the bygone interest. Mills v. Norris, 5 Ves. 335.

5. Testator bequeathed 500*l.* to be paid to his grandson P. if he lived to be twenty-one, and in case he died before then, to the other child or children of his daughter equally, arriving at such age. P. died before twenty-one, and no child of P. was born or living at testator's death. The grandchildren, born after the death of testator, were held entitled to the 500*l.*; for not being in esse in his lifetime, he must have had in his view the future children of his daughter. Haughton v. Harrison, 2 Atk. 329.

If the child or children of P. arrive a twenty-one, then the 500*l.* was directed to be paid to them, and interest from the time it becomes payable. Id.

6. Residuary personal estate was bequeathed in trust for all the sons and daughters of A. and B. (who were living), the shares to be vested at twenty-one, though "not payable or transmissible" until the death of A. and B. The will contained powers of maintenance:—Held, that the sons and daughters, on attaining twenty-one, acquired vested interests, subject to the rights of future-born children, and that, after attaining twenty-one, they were entitled, in the life of A. and B., to payment of their shares of the income, though not of the capital. Ellis v. Maxwell, 12 Beav. 104; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266.

7. A residuary gift to trustees, with a direction to apply such part of the interest as they might deem necessary in the maintenance of all and every the testator's grandchildren, the children of the testator's two sons, until they severally attained the age of twenty-one, and to accumulate the surplus; and when and as each of such grandchildren should attain the age of twenty-one years, to pay to each of them 2,000*l.*; and as soon as all and every the said grandchildren should have attained their ages of twenty-one, to pay and divide the trust fund unto and amongst all and every his said grandchildren:—Held, to be a gift for the benefit of all the children of the testator's two sons, born or to be born, not confined to children living at the death of the testator, and not distributable upon the youngest grandchild for the time being attaining twenty-one; but that, on attaining twenty-one, the grandchildren were entitled to the interest on their presumptive shares, until another grandchild should be born. Mainwaring v. Beevor, 8 Hare 44; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 396; 14 Jur. 58.

IV. FUTURE SPECIFIC BEQUEST.

8. Where a legacy depends on a contingency, the intermediate interest between the death of tenant for life and the contingency happening does not follow the principal, but falls into residue. Shaw v. Cunliffe, 4 Bro. C. C. 144.

9. Bequest of 1,000*l.*, the "interest" for A. for life, with power to dispose of the "principal" to her children by will, and if no will, then "the said legacy" to go to her children "at twenty-one years of age." A. died in 1840, and her only child attained twenty-one in 1858:—Held, that he was entitled to the intermediate interest on the legacy. Thruston v. Anstey, 27 Beav. 335.

10. Under a bequest in trust for a parent for life, and after her death for her children at twenty-one, with an executory trust over in the event of all the children dying under that age:—Held, that the intermediate income between the death of the tenant for life and that of her only child, who died a minor, belonged to the child. Ridgway v. Ridgway, 4 De G. & Sm. 271; 15 Jur. 960; 20 L. J., Ch., 256.

11. Gift of personalty on trust to pay income to widow till son attains twenty-one, and then to pay and transfer to son absolutely:—Held, that income, until the son attained twenty-one, belonged to the personal representatives of the widow, who died during son's minority. Lawton v. Redle, 2 W. R. 524.

12. Testator ordered his trustees out of certain funds to pay to his wife what should be to be returned of her portion, and to invest the residue in funds to pay her the interest for life, then to pay the interest to his niece for life, then to pay the principal to her children, if any, if not to the younger children of H. W. W., if any, if not to the defendant W. W., and gave the residue of his effects to his wife. The niece and nephew had neither of them children: the intermediate interest from the death of the niece to that of the nephew shall not follow the principal but fall into the residue, and go to the wife's executors as personal estate of the testator undisposed of. Wyndham v. Wyndham, 3 Bro. C. C. 58.

1. The income of chattels real specifically bequeathed, pending the vesting thereof, falls into the residue of the personalty. Hodgson v. Bective (Earl), 2 N. R. 269; 32 L. J., Ch., 489; 9 L. T., N. S., 18; 1 Hem. & M. 376. See S. C. sub. nom. Bective (Earl) v. Hodgson, 10 Jur., N. S., 375; 12 W. R. 625; 10 L. T., N. S., 202; 10 H. L. Ca. 656.

2. Testator gives part of his stock-in-trade to R. provided he attained twenty-one; he dies before twenty-one. The administrator of R. is not entitled to intermediate profits from testator's death to infant's. Atkinson v. Turner, 2 Atk. 11; Barnard. 74.

3. One devises personal estate to his son, and, if his son died within age and without issue, then the personal estate to go to the testator's brother. The son shall have the produce of the personal estate; and only the capital, in case of the infant's death, etc., shall go to the brother. Tissen v. Tissen, 1 P. W. 500.

4. A testator gives a sum of stock to trustees, which they are to stand possessed of upon trust for D. G. until he shall attain the age of twenty-five years, and are to transfer to him when they, in their discretion, shall think proper; he likewise directs that, if D. G. dies without lawful issue before receiving the bequest, the stock shall sink into the residue of his, the testator's, estate; and he bequeaths the residue to W. F.; while D. G. is under twenty-five years of age, and has not had the stock transferred to him, neither he nor W. F. is entitled to receive the accruing dividends; but these dividends must accumulate to accompany the capital in its final destination. Gordon v. Rutherford, T. & R. 373; 2 L. J., Ch., 50.

5. Bequest of a specific sum in the funds, to be paid within twelve months. The sum was not transferred within the twelve months, and the executors received the dividends accruing during that period:—Held, that they belonged to the legatee. Bristow v. Bristow, 5 Beav. 289.

6. A., by will, gives 100l. South Sea stock to B., and another 100l. South Sea stock to C., payable in six months after his death. Before time expired an addition was made by the company to every 100l. stock:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the additional as well as the original stock. Mason v. Hawkins, 4 Bro. P. C. 8.

7. C., having power to appoint a money fund to all and every or any child or children of hers, and to the exclusion of any one or more of them, in such shares and payable at such times as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to be equally divided between them, by her will appointed different sums to several of her children; and reciting that her daughter M. had declared her intention of becoming a nun, and had retired into a convent preparatory thereto, she declared that she deemed her patrimony in that case sufficient for her maintenance, but in case M. should change her mind, and return to her family and friends, she bequeathed to trustees 1,000l., in trust for M. to receive the interest of the same during her life, and at her decease to be divided amongst her children if any; or in either case of her not leaving the convent or not leaving issue, the 1,000l. to be divided amongst her three daughters therein named, and she bequeathed to her said three daughters any residue of the fund that might be after paying the several legacies in her will mentioned:—Held, that the power authorised an appointment to take effect upon the happening of a contingency; and that the interest which should accrue on the 1,000l. while the contingency was undetermined, passed under the residuary bequest in the will. Caulfield v. Maywire, 2 J. & L. 111; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 164.

8. A testator devised one-fifth part of his freehold and copyhold estates to the use of his daughter J. for life; with remainder to the use of all and every the child and children of such daughter who should attain twenty-one; with remainder over if there should be no child who should attain that age. He then bequeathed his leasehold estates in trust for the persons entitled to the real estates, and to go in the same manner, or as near thereto as the rules of law and equity would permit; and he gave his residuary estate upon the same trusts as were declared with respect to his real estate, or as near thereto as might be. J. died in 1851, leaving one child only, H., who attained twenty-one in 1860.—Held, that the interim income of the fifth of the residuary personal estate followed the residue, and became vested in H. at twenty-one. Holmes v. Prescott, 10 Jur., N. S., 507; 33 L. J., Ch., 261; 12 W. R. 636; 11 L. T., N. S., 38.

Held, also, that assuming the remainder in the freeholds was contingent, H., on attaining twenty-one, became entitled to the corpus of the leaseholds, there being no rule of law to prevent the testator's intention taking effect as to them. Id.

Held, also, that the remainder in the freehold estates was contingent, and, therefore, that the interim income of the leaseholds fell into the residue. Id.

9. The interim income subject to the interim burden of a contingent specific legacy until the happening of the contingency falls into the residue of the testator's estate, or goes to his next of kin, as the case may be. Guthrie v. Walrond, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 573; 47 L. T. 614; 31 W. R. 285.

10. A testator bequeathed 20,000l. upon trust, after the decease of his daughter (a married woman), for all or such of her children as she should appoint; and in default, for all her children who should attain twenty-one, in equal shares as tenants in common. He gave powers of maintenance out of the income of the share to which any such child might be presumptively entitled; and powers of advancement to the extent of one-fourth of the portion to which any child should be presumptively entitled. The daughter, by her will, appointed the fund upon trust to raise for each of her two younger children, F. and M., who should attain twenty-one, 2,000*l.*, and subject thereto, as to the whole of the fund, to all her children who should attain twenty-one, in equal shares as tenants in common. She died leaving four children. The eldest of these having attained twenty-one:—Held, that the child who had attained twenty-one was entitled to one-fourth of the income which had accrued since the death of her mother on the whole of the 20,000*l.*; and that she would, after payment to her of her share of capital, be entitled during the minorities of F. and M. to one-fourth of the income of the two sums of 2,000*l.* appointed to them in the event of their attaining twenty-one respectively. Gotch v. Foster, 5 L. R., Eq., 311.

V. FUTURE RESIDUARY BEQUEST.

1. Under a bequest of the residue of a personal estate to A., if he attain twenty-one, the profits will accumulate. Trevanion v. Vivian, 2 Ves. 430.

2. Where there is a devise of a residue, with devise over on a contingency, the devisee is entitled to the rents and profits till the contingency happens. Shepherd v. Ingram, Amb. 450. And see Lowther v. Cavendish, id. 358.

3. A residuary estate was bequeathed, in the first instance, to be paid into the hands of the legatee on attaining the age of twenty-five years, and not till then, unless she married: the whole property then to be settled on her and her children; the legatee, on attaining the age of twenty-one unmarried, was held entitled to the income and the accumulations thereof. Grant v. Grant, 3 Y. & Coll. 171; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 20.

4. Devise to A., an infant, for life, and his first and other sons in strict settlement, with remainders for similar estates; the will farther directed, "during the minority of the A. family," an accumulation of the rents to be laid out on a purchase, "until the minor arrives at the full age of twenty-five years," and then "the heir to take full possession of this estate." A., being residuary legatee, is entitled absolutely to the accumulation. Bingley v. Broadhead, 8 Ves. 415.

5. Testator, after bequeathing an annuity and goods to his wife for her life, directs the whole of his fortune, in default of his own issue, and of a second son of his brother, and second son of his sister, to be divided between the plaintiff and the defendant, making the latter the residuary legatee:—Held, that under the words "whole fortune," the interest of the moiety, till the determination of the contingency, did not belong to the plaintiff; and that the residuary legatee was entitled to that and the reversionary interest in the goods left to the wife. Mitford v. Wicker, 2 Ken. Ch. 61.

6. A testator gave to three persons annuities of 25*l.* each, and gave the residue of the income of his estate during the lives of the annuitants to M. and N., to be paid to them during their lives in equal shares, and after the deaths of the annuitants, as to the residue of his estate, he gave the same to M. and N., and their several children, to be divided between them in equal shares; one of the annuitants died first, then M., and subsequently N.:—Held, that the surplus income between the death of N. and the death of the surviving annuitants was not undisposed of, but passed by the residuary bequest. Cunningham v. Murray, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 407; 12 Jur. 547. Reversing 1 De G. & Sm. 366; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 484; 11 Jur. 814.

7. Testator bequeathed residuary personal estate to his daughter B. (an infant), to be paid to her at twenty-one or marriage; and if she should die before twenty-one or marriage, he bequeathed the same to such son of E. as should first attain twenty-one; and if no son attain twenty-one, then to P. F. died under twenty-one, and unmarried:—Held, that the interest of the residue, from the death of F. to the time it will vest in the son of E., who is an infant, must accumulate, and is part of the residue, till the bequest to the son vests. Green v. Elkins, 2 Atk. 473.

There is a material difference between the profits of a real and personal estate: rents never can become part of the personal estate, but the profits of the personal estate are the estate itself. In the case of real estates, the thing itself is not disposed of, but descends till the contingency happens; personal estate neither descends nor goes to the next of kin, but is vested in the executor. Id. 476.

8. A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to four persons for life as tenants in common, and after the death of the survivor to sell the real estate and stand possessed of the proceeds and of the stocks, funds, and securities upon which his personal estate should then be invested upon certain trusts for a class of children. By the death of one of the four his portion of the income became released, and was accumulated until the death of the survivor of the four:—Held, that the accumulation of the real estate was undisposed of and passed to the heir, but that the accumulation of the personalty passed as residue to the children. Re Drakeley's Estate, 19 Beav. 395; 2 W. R. 613.

9. A residuary devise of realty does not carry with it income not expressly disposed of, but it results to the heir-at-law as undisposed of. Secus, as to personalty, a residuary bequest of which, or of a share of which, carries with it ex vi termini all the income of such residue or share of residue, though not expressly disposed of, for the benefit of the legatees. Therefore, where a testator gave the residue of his real estate to uses commencing with an executory devise to an unborn person, and gave two-thirds of the residue of his personalty to trustees upon trust to invest in real estate, to be settled to uses, which were the same as those declared of his residuary realty:—Held, that the ordinary rule applied to the intermediate income of each class of property. As to the realty, that there was an intestacy as to such income, and it resulted to the heir-at-law. As to the personalty, that there was no intestacy, and that the income should be accumulated, and be added to the corpus to be laid out in land. Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl), 2 N. B. 233; 32 L. J., Ch., 489; 9 L. T., N. S., 18; 1 Hem. & M. 376. But see S. C. varied on appeal as to the residuary personal estate, sub. nom. Beattie

Earl) v. Hodgson, 10 Jur. N. S., 373; 12 W. R. 625; 10 L. T., N. S., 202; 10 H. L. Ca. 656; 3 N. R. 654.

VI. FUTURE SPECIFIC DEVISE.

1. Devise upon a future contingency, and no intermediate disposition of the rents and profits, a resulting trust for the heir. Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 725.

2. Devise when the devisee attains twenty-one, a resulting trust for the heir until that period, and by the previous death of the devisee, the remainder accelerated. Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 368.

3. A testator by his will dated in 1832, devised lands to T. for life, and from and after his decease to his eldest son if he should have arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and in default of his having a son then over. The legal estates in the land were outstanding. T. died leaving an eldest son a minor.—Held, that the eldest son would on attaining the age of twenty-one take an estate for life, and that the rents and profits in the meantime were undisposed of; but held on appeal, that on the death of T. the eldest son took an estate in fee liable to be divested on his death under the age of twenty-one, with an executory devise over in that event to T. in tail. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 410; 45 L. J., Ch., 232; 34 L. T. 82; 24 W. R. 329.

4. Where either real or personal estate is given upon a contingency, and that contingency does not take effect in the life of the devisee over, yet, if real his heir, if personal his executor, will be entitled. Chauncy v. Graydon, 2 Atk. 621.

5. A. devised lands in trusts for B. for life, remainder in trust for his sons successively, remainder in trust for the future sons of C, remainder over, and the testator provided for the disposition of the rents and profits during the minorities of those who were to take in future. B. died in testator's lifetime, and it was decreed, the contingent limitations should enure as executory devises, and that the profits from the death of the testator till the birth of a son of A. should go to the heir; and afterwards, a son being born to B., upon the death of that son it was decreed, that the rents and profits should belong to the heir, until some person should become entitled under the limitations of the will. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 581; 1 Ves. 268; Ca. temp. Talb. 44. A corrected copy of this case was stated by Lord Loughborough, in Habergham v. Vincent, 4 Bro. C. C. 390.

The resulting trust of a freehold, to support remainders of a trust, may connect with the limitation in tail, though not created together with it. S. C. 1 Atk. 595.

There may be a resulting trust under a trust to appoint contingent remainders for the heir-at-law, in the same manner as under an executory devise. S. C. 1 Atk. 597.

6. One devises lands to his younger sons at twenty-four, and in the meantime the rents and profits of the premises to his eldest son, and dies; and the eldest son devises all those rents and profits of the premises to his younger brothers, but not to be paid them until twenty-four, and dies, leaving his younger brothers under twenty-four; only the rents and profits accruing from the death of the elder brother, the testator, shall pass. Tissen v. Tissen, 1 P. W. 500.

7. Testator devised his estates at S. and H. to trustees, in trust, if there should be only one son of D. who should attain twenty-one, for that son, and in case there should be two or more such sons, in trust for the second of them, and gave all the residue of his estates to trustees, in trust to sell. He afterwards ceased, and by codicil declared that he intended to erase the direction to sell only; he then gave all his estates to the son of D who should first attain twenty-one, and change his name to E. D., at the death of the testator, had a son, who was still an infant, and afterwards had another son:—Held, that codicil revoked the devise of the S. and H. estates, and also the devise of the residue of his estates to the trustees, and that D's eldest son took under this codicil an immediate vested interest, both in the estates of which the testator was seised at the date of his will, and those he afterwards purchased, and consequently was entitled to the rents during his infancy. Duffield v. Elwes, 2 Sim. & S. 544; 4 L. J., Ch., 189. See S. C. on appeal, sub. nom. Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Bl. N. S. 260; 1 Dow & Cl. 195.

8. Lands were devised in trust to maintain an infant till twenty-three, and then to convey them to him, and if he die before, to convey them to another. The infant is not entitled till twenty-three, and as the estate is not devised over if he dies under, the surplus of profits will go to testator's heir. Tilly v. Simpson, Mos. 244.

9. Term to raise portions, and the trustees to hold the estate till the son attain twenty-one, and then to convey to the son, there being no directions as to the intermediate profits:—Held, they should go to the heir-at-law as undisposed of; that case was distinguished from the present by reason that the trustees were to convey at twenty-one and nothing given before to the son. Bland v. Bland, cited Amb. 96.

10. Devise of a house and appurtenances to wife during widowhood, but that the eldest son, when twenty-one or married, might have it on notice; the wife having married after the death of the former eldest son unmarried, and during the minority, etc., of the existing eldest son, it was declared that he would be entitled to the enjoyment on attaining twenty-one or marriage, upon giving notice; the intervening interest in the premises and appurtenances, being undisposed of, held to fall into the residue of the real and personal estates. Bridgewater (Duke) v. Egerton, 2 Ves. 122.

11. There is no case in which the contingent estate of a remainderman has been accelerated for the purpose of giving him a right to rent accrued prior to the time when his estate took effect. Sidney v. Wilmer, 25 Beav. 260.

Where, therefore, an estate was limited to the children of A., born within fifteen years, with remainder to the plaintiff, and A. had no child, and the fifteen years had not expired:—Held, that the plaintiff had no right to the present rents. Id.

An estate was devised to trustees for 500 years, with remainder to persons still unborn, with remainder to the plaintiff. The trustees had active duties as to the management of the estate and large discretionary powers, and they were authorised, "during the minority of any person absolutely or presumptively entitled," to apply the surplus income for the benefit of such person, accumulating the surplus.—Held, that the plaintiff, who had attained her majority, had no right to any part of the surplus rents accruing prior to her estate becoming vested in possession. Ib.

Power of maintenance of the "person for the time being entitled" to the estate.—Held, to include persons absolutely or presumptively entitled. Ib.

1. A testator devised estates to trustees and their heirs upon trust to accumulate the rents until the expiration of the term of twenty-one years, and after the expiration thereof to stand possessed of the estates in trust for the second and every other younger son successively of his nephew W. in tail male, and failing such issue, in trust for the first and every other son of his nephew H. in tail male, with divers limitations over; and he gave a fund of personal estate to be held on similar trusts. At the expiration of the term W. and H. were both living, and each had an only son.—Held, that until it should be ascertained whether there would be a second son of W., the rents of the real estates and the income of the personal estate were undisposed of and belonged respectively to the heir-at-law and next of kin. Wade-Gery v. Handley, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 374; 45 L. J., Ch., 712; 35 L. T. 85. Affirming 1 L. R., Ch. D., 653; 45 L. J., Ch., 457; 34 L. T. 233.

VII. FUTURE RESIDUARY DEVISE.

2. The testator devised all his real estate to a trustee, upon trust to pay the rents to A. for life, and after his death, and after the happening of a certain contingency, to settle the estate upon B. A. died before the contingency happened.—Held, that the intermediate rents belong to the heir-at-law of the testator. Wills v. Wills, 1 Dr. & War. 439; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 531.

3. Real estate was given to F. W. R. in tail; and failing issue, or in the event of F. W. R.'s death before returning from India, it was to sink into the residue of testator's estate, which was given to F. R. The trustees invested rents in real estate at and after the death of testator, and on the death of F. W. R. without issue in India his personal representative claimed the investments; but held they belonged to the residuary devisee and legatee. Robertson v. Densbury, 5 Jur. 260.

4. Testator devised the residue of his real estate to a trustee in fee, upon trust to accumulate the rents until one of his grandsons should attain twenty-one, and in case his grandson T. should attain that age, upon trust to pay to him the future rents for life, with remainder to his eldest son who should attain twenty-one, remainder in default to another grandson. And the testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to the same trustee, upon trust to accumulate until one of his grandsons should attain twenty-one, and then to pay the dividends arising from the aggregate accumulations of his (the testator's) residuary real and personal estate to T. from and after his age of twenty-one for life, and after his decease to pay the principal of such accumulations to his eldest or only son. One of the testator's grandsons attained twenty-one three years before T. arrived at that age.—Held, that the rents of the real estate during the intervening period were undisposed of, and passed to the heir-at-law. Marriott v. Turner, 20 Deav. 557.

5. A devise of residue of real estate upon contingent or future trusts does not carry with it the intermediate income; but such income results to a testator's heir-at-law; and the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, has made no difference in the law in this respect. Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl), 32 L. J., Ch., 489; 9 L. T., N. S., 18; 2 N. R. 233; 1 Hem. & M. 376. Affirmed on this point S. C. nom. Beattie (Earl) v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. Ca. 656; 10 L. T., N. S., 202; 12 W. R. 625; 10 Jur., N. S., 373; 3 N. R. 654.

6. A testator devised a freehold to trustees for the benefit of E. for life for her separate use, and after her death upon trusts for such of the children of E. as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry. E. died after the testator, leaving an infant daughter who did not marry before attaining twenty-one.—Held, that the legal estate was in the trustees, and the daughter of E. took the property on attaining twenty-one, but the interim rents went to the residuary devisee. Re Eddels, 11 L. R., Eq., 559; 40 L. J., Ch., 316; 24 L. T. 223; 19 W. R. 815.

VIII. FUTURE GIFT OF A MIXED RESIDUE.

7. Under an executory devise of a residue of real and personal estate, the intermediate rents and profits of the real estates pass as well as the interest of the personality. Genery v. Fitzgerald, Jac. 468.

8. Devise of the residue of real and personal estate, after provision made for payment of annuities and legacies, to the child or children of testator's natural daughter, and in case she should die without issue to S. and J.—Held, the intermediate profits till a child was born should go to the residuary devisees, and not to the heir-at-law. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 96; 1 Ves. 485; 4 Ves. 288, n.

9. Devise of real and personal estate to the first son of A. when he should attain twenty-one, with a direction for his proper maintenance and education. A. having no son at the time of the will, the testator's death, or the decree.—Held, that the profits of the personal estate should accumulate; and that as to the real estate, it was good executory devise, but that the profits thereof descended to the heir until a son should be born, when they should be applied to his maintenance. Bullock v. Stones, 2 Ves. 521.

10. A. by his will devised all his lands, etc., and all other his real and personal estate, upon trust as to the real estate, to repair and let the same, etc., and upon further trust, notwithstanding any limitation of uses or trusts thereinbefore mentioned, at discretion to sell and convey the same, except the message given to his wife, and as to the money to arise upon such sales, upon trust to add the same to his personal estate, to constitute a part thereof. The testator then gave the residue of his personal estate, upon trust, after payment of debts, etc., and expenses of management and repairs, to be accumulated, by way of compound interest, until J. C. should arrive at the age of twenty-four years, and then upon trust to convey, assign, etc., to J. C. (upon his giving security, etc., for the regular payment of the annuities thereinbefore bequeathed) all the legal estate and interest in all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, lands, etc., and all other his real and personal estate and effects not thereinbefore devised and bequeathed, etc. The testator also directed that his trustees should, for the purpose of J. C.'s education, appropriate out of the income of the testator's personal estate a sum not exceeding 500*l.* per annum until he should attain twenty-one years of age, and afterwards 1,500*l.* per annum until he should attain the age of twenty-four; with limitation over in case J. C. should die without issue before he attained the age of twenty-four:—Held, that the benefit intended to be given to J. C. was the produce of a mixed fund of the real and personal estate of the testator, and that the rents of the real estate until J. C. attained twenty-four did not result to the heir-at-law of the testator as undisposed of, but passed to J. C. as part of the fund given in trust. Ackers v. Phipps, 9 Bli. N. S. 430; 3 Cl. & F. 665. Reversing on this point Phipps v. Williams, 5 Sim. 41; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch. 96.

1. Gift by the testator to his wife for her life, or until her second marriage, of the interest of his real and personal estate, which, whether arising from rents or public securities, was to be applied for the benefit of herself and children; and if she married again, he declared that her power and benefit under his will should cease; and when thirty years were expired, he ordered all his property, both freehold and leasehold, to be sold, and two-thirds to be divided among his children living at that period or their heirs, and one-third to be invested for the benefit of his wife; and after her decease, he bequeathed such third to his children then living and to their heirs.—Held, that the gift at the end of thirty years was not liable to objection on the ground of remoteness; that there was no substitution of the legatee created by the gift to the children "or to their heirs," but that the word "or" must be read "and;" and that the children of the testator living at the end of thirty years (who were also the same children as were living at the death of the widow) were entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the estate, and also to the intermediate rents after the death of the widow and before the expiration of the thirty years. Lachlan v. Reynolds, 9 Hare 796.

2. A testator devised his residuary real estate to trustees, on trust to pay the rents to his wife for her life, and upon her death to apply the rents for the maintenance of his daughter, and to accumulate the surplus, and on the daughter attaining twenty-one, to pay to her the accumulations and the future income for her life, and upon her death on trust to convey the residuary real estate unto and equally between all and every her child and children who should live to attain twenty-one, as tenants in common in fee, but in case his daughter should die without leaving any child or children who should attain twenty-one, then on trust to convey the residuary real estate to such person or persons as the daughter should by deed or will appoint. And by another clause the testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to the same persons as trustees, on the same trusts as those declared of the real estate, except the clause as to maintenance and accumulation. The will contained no disposition of the income of the realty or the personality during the suspense of vesting. The daughter survived the testator and his wife, and died leaving an only daughter, who was an infant. The testator's daughter had, by her will, exercised the power of appointment in favour of other persons in the event of her leaving no child who should live to attain a vested interest under the trusts of her father's will:—Held, that the testator had in effect mixed up the whole of his property in one mass, and that the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald (Jac. 468) applied; and that, consequently, the interim rents of the real estate, until the happening of the contingency, as well as the interim income of the personality, must be accumulated, and follow the destination of the corpus. Re Dumble, Williams v. Murrell, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 360; 52 L. J., Ch., 631; 48 L. T. 661; 31 W. R. 605.

3. L. by his will gave all his freeholds and leaseholds to trustees upon trust to invest the surplus for four years, and to pay the interest from the proceeds of his plate and effects directed to be sold to his daughter for life for her separate use, without anticipation, with "remainder" to her children equally, remainder to the children of his brothers, and a like disposition of all his other property, and on the question whether the accumulations during the four years were undisposed of:—Held, that they were not; but a general gift of the residue passed everything. Jarrard v. Tracey, 1 W. R. 501.

4. T. settled his freehold estates (subject to appointment) on himself in tail, remainder to L. and his sons in strict settlement, remainder to C. for life, provided that if L. or any issue male of his body should become entitled in possession to his father's family estates, then the uses before declared of T.'s estates for the benefit of him or them who should so become entitled, and for the benefit of his or their issue male, should cease, and those estates should go over, as if the person or persons so becoming entitled were dead without issue male. L. having afterwards become entitled in possession to his father's family estates, T. by his will appointed his said estates to H. (the eldest son of L.) and his sons in strict settlement, remainder to the heirs of A., deceased, provided that if any tenant for life in possession under the will should become entitled in possession to L.'s family estates, his interest in the devised estates should cease, and those estates go over to the person next in remainder under the will, as if the tenant for life were dead. The testator devised his copyhold estates upon such trusts as would nearest correspond with the uses and trusts of his freehold estates, and then gave all the residue of his real and personal estates to M. and W., their and each of their heirs, executors, etc., absolutely in equal third parts. On the testator's death in 1824, H. entered upon his estates under the will, and in 1833 he became entitled in possession to L.'s family estates, and had no son. A bill was filed by the residuary legatees, claiming the rents of all the estates accruing between 1833 and L.'s death or his having a son, against A.'s heir, who claimed the same rents, and against C. and B. (second son of L.), who claimed adversely to each other the rents of the freehold estates under the limitations in the settlement, in default of appointment of them by T. :—Held, by the Lords, first (partly affirming a decree made on that bill), that the plaintiffs were entitled to the rents of the copyhold estate under the residuary devise; secondly (partly reversing the decree), that no adjudication could be made in the cause as to the rents of the freeholds, the question as to them being between co-defendants. Sanford v. Morrice, 11 Cl. & F. 667. And see S. C. nom. Morrice v. Langham, 11 Sim. 260; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 38; 6 Jur. 334. S. C. nom. Morrice v. Sandford, 8 Jur. 967. And see S. C. at law, 8 Mees. & Welsb. 196; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch., 289.

1. Devise of residue to an infant, payable at twenty-one, remainder over; the infant died under age; the interest from the death of the testator to that of the infant shall go to her representative, not to the remainderman. Chenorth v. Hooper, 1 Bro. C. C. 82.

2. A testator gave the residue of his real estate to uses commencing with an executory devise to an unborn person, and gave two-thirds of the residue of his personalty to trustees upon trust to invest in real estate, to be settled to uses which were the same as those declared of his residuary realty :—Held (affirming the decree of Wood, Vice-Chancellor), that there was an intestacy as to the intermediate income of the realty, and that it resulted to the heir-at-law; and that the intermediate income of the personalty should be accumulated and added to the corpus, to be laid out in land, but (varying the order below) that such accumulation should be restricted to the term permitted by the Thellusson Act, and that the income from the expiration of that period to the determination of the contingency would pass to the next of kin. Beetive (Earl) v. Hodgson, 3 N. R. 654; 10 H. L. Ca. 656; 10 L. T., N. S., 202; 12 W. R. 625; 10 Jur., N. S., 373. See S. C. nom. Hodgson v. Beetive (Earl), 2 N. R. 233; 32 L. J., Ch., 489; 9 L. T., N. S., 18; 1 Hem. & M. 376.

3. A bequest of a moiety of the interest of the residue of the testator's personal estate :—Held, upon the context of the will, to pass the interest of the proceeds of real estate, which were directed to be invested so as to form one mixed fund with the residue of the personalty. Byam v. Munton, 1 Russ. & M. 503; 8 L. J., Ch., 156.

4. Devise of freehold and leasehold estates to trustees in trust by rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage, to pay debts and legacies which his personal estate should not be sufficient for and, subject thereto, in case J. B. should attain twenty-one, in trust for him, his heirs and executors :—Held, that the rents and profits till J. B. attained twenty-one were not undisposed of, but passed by the devise to the trustees, and were, after payment of legacies, annuities, and interest of the debts, to be applied to sink the principal of the debts. Popham v. Aylesbury, Amb. 68. Report of this case corrected in 11 Ves. 662.

5. M., by will, gave all his property, real and personal, to trustees, directing them to pay the income to his son and heir J. until J. should attain thirty, and then convey to J. the residue. By codicil, M. recalled the direction to pay the whole income to J., and directed the trustees to pay to J. thereout 300*l.* yearly until he attained thirty, and then to dispose of "the said residue" as directed by the will :—Held, that the surplus income beyond 300*l.*, which accrued during the minority of J., was not undisposed of, but passed to the trustees under the word "residue." Sturgis v. Campbell, 12 L. T., N. S., 836.

6. A will contained a devise and bequest to T. of "all my real and personal property except such parts as are or shall at my decease be subject to the trusts of my marriage settlement and are hereinafter otherwise disposed of." The will contained a subsequent gift of 1,000*l.* out of the settled property to R., and of the rents and profits of the remainder of the settled property to R.'s wife in case R. should predecease T., but if R. should survive T., upon other trusts :—Held, that the income of the settled property during the joint lives of T. and R., being undisposed of by the will, passed to T. under the previous residuary gift. Torrens v. Millington, 26 W. R. 753.

7. A testator devised estates to trustees and their heirs upon trust to accumulate the rents until the expiration of the term of twenty-one years, and after the expiration thereof to stand possessed of the estates in trust for the second and every other younger son successively of his nephew W. in tail male, and failing such issue, in trust for the first and every other son of his nephew H. in tail male, with divers limitations over; and he gave a fund of personal estate to be held on similar trusts. At the expiration of the term W. and H. were both living, and each had an only son :—Held, that until it should be ascertained whether there would be a second son of W., the rents of the real estates and the income of the personal estate were undisposed of and belonged respectively to the heir-at-law and next of kin. Wade-Gery v. Handley, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 374; 43 L. J., Ch., 712; 35 L. T., N. S., 85. Affirming 1 L. R., Ch. D., 653; 45 L. J., Ch., 457; 34 L. T., N. S., 233.

IX. OF FUND SET APART FOR LEGACIES.

8. Where an annuity for a term of years forms part of a residue, the executors, until they can sell it, must invest the payments, and interests of the investments will belong to tenant for life of the residue. Where sums are set apart to answer contingent legacies, the interest of them until the contingency happens is part of the income of the residue. Where the interest of a legacy is directed to be accumulated beyond the legal period, the interest of the legacy and the accumulations after that period, and until the time of payment, is part of the capital of the residue. Cranley v. Cranley, 7 Sim. 427; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 265.

1. Gift by will of various annuities, with a direction by the testator that a sufficient part of his personal estate should be invested in 3 per cent. consols to meet the annuities, and that on the deaths of the annuitants the amounts respectively set apart to answer these annuities were to sink into residue. The testator bequeathed the residue of his estate as to two equal fourth parts thereof to his wife absolutely, and as to the other two equal fourth parts thereof upon certain trusts for the persons in his will named. The testator made a codicil to his will whereby he directed that the annuities should not commence till after the death of his wife. On bill filed by the annuitants asking for a sufficient sum to be set apart to meet these annuities, the question was raised who would be entitled to the income thereof during the life of the widow:—Held, that such income formed part of the residuary estate of the testator. Cranley v. Dixon, 3 Jur., N. S., 531.

2. Portions of a fund constituting the residuary personal estate of a testator were set apart by his executors to meet contingent legacies payable on infants attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the tenant for life of the general residue was entitled to the income derivable from those portions of the residuary estate set apart until such capital, or portions of it, were wanted for the payment of those contingent legacies in case they should become payable. Allhusen v. Whittell, 16 L. T., N. S., 695; 36 L. J., Ch., 929; 4 L. R., Eq., 295.

Held, also, that the tenant for life was not entitled to the income which might have been derived from what was clearly necessary for the payment of debts and legacies out of the capital of the residue. Id.

3. Such part of interest of legacy of 4,000*l.* as was not wanted for support of M. Q. to accumulate and be added to, and managed along with, the principal sum for the benefit of the persons to be entitled to the same after M. Q.'s death, in that event the principal and the accumulations to go to her child or children. If no issue, 1,000*l.*, part thereof, to J. H.; 750*l.*, other part thereof, to G. W.; 750*l.*, other part thereof, to J. M.; and the remainder to T. H.:—Held, that the latter took the whole accumulations. Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. C. 62.

4. Testator ordered his trustees, out of certain funds, to pay to his wife what should be to be returned to her of her portion, and to invest the residue in funds to pay her the interest for life, then to pay the interest to his niece for life, then to pay the principal to her children if any; if not, to the younger children of H. if any; if not, to the defendant W.; and gave the residue of his effects to his wife. The niece and nephew had neither of them children; the intermediate interest from the death of the niece to that of the nephew, shall not follow the principal, but fall into the residue, and go to the wife's executors as personal estate of the testator undisposed of. Wyndham v. Wyndham, 3 Bro. C. C. 58.

5. A testator gave his whole estate to trustees to sell, and after payment of debts, expenses, and certain legacies, to pay out of the residue two annuities of 400*l.* each to F. and P., and one of 200*l.* to B., for their respective lives. And for the better fulfilment of that purpose, he directed them to vest sufficient capital sums on securities; and if the residue should not be sufficient, to vest whatever residue there might be, and pay the dividends to the annuitants in the same proportions; and if more than sufficient, to vest the surplus, and divide it and the capital sum set apart for the annuities, as the same should become tangible by the death of each annuitant, among other residuary legatees. B. predeceased the testator. The residue did not yield sufficient income every year to pay F. and P. 400*l.* each. On the death of F., her personal representatives and P. claimed payment of all the arrears out of the then enlarged income of the residue:—Held, by the Lords, that F. and P. were entitled to payment of 400*l.* each only in those years in which the income of the residue was sufficient; that when in any year that income was more than sufficient the excess belonged to the residuary legatees; that on F.'s death half the capital of the residue became divisible among them, and then P. became entitled to the income in each year of the other half; but when in any year this income exceeded 400*l.* the excess belonged to the residuary legatees, and neither P. nor F.'s representatives were entitled to any payment of arrears. No benefit accrued to the residuary legatees from the lapse of the annuity to B., except when thereby the income of the residue exceeded the amount of the other two annuities. Cusamajor v. Pearson, 8 Cl. & F. 69.

6. Under an executory devise of a life interest in real and personal estate, to take effect upon the death of an annuitant, the surplus rents and dividends which accrue due during the life of the annuitant belong to the parties entitled for life. But a specific devise, liable to be resorted to for payment of the annuity, will not contribute pro rata to the annuity so as to increase the amounts of the surplus rents and dividends. Thornton v. Thornton, 3 N. R. 23.

7. A testator directed 6,000*l.* to be settled on the marriage of his daughter, and then went on to give it to trustees, with a separate life interest to his daughter; after her death for her children on their attaining twenty-one if the mother should be then dead; but if not, then not till after her decease; and if no child should live to attain a vested interest, then to fall into his residue. And he gave his residue to A. for life, remainder to B.:—Held, first, that the testator had made a positive settlement, and the Court could not add to it in any way. Fullerton v. Martin, 1 Dr. & Sm. 31; 6 Jur., N. S., 265; 29 L. J., Ch., 469; 8 W. R. 289.

Held, secondly, that the income undisposed of after the wife's death fell into the residue. Id.

Held, thirdly, that it was undisposed of income merely, and passed as such to the tenant for life of the residue. Id.

8. A testator bequeathed a sum of 5,000*l.*, bank annuities, in trust for such child or children of A., a bachelor, as should attain twenty-one, and directed that the same and the income thereof should be transferable and payable to him, her, or them, on their respectively attaining such age; and in case no child of A. should attain twenty-one, he directed the bank annuities and unapplied income thereof to fall into his residuary personal estate, which he bequeathed upon trusts for tenants for life, with remainders over:—Held, that the dividends accruing between the death of the testator and birth of a child of A. fell into the residue as income. Fullerton v. Martin (1 Dr. & Sm. 31) followed. Edmunds v. Waugh, 2 N. R. 408.

1. A testatrix directed the trustees of funds over which she had a power of appointment, from and immediately after her death, to stand possessed thereof, to raise thereout 5,000*l.*, and to pay the same to the five children of her deceased sister in equal shares, the shares of sons to be paid at twenty-one, the shares of daughters at twenty-one or marriage, and to apply the income arising from the residue of the funds as in the will mentioned:—Held, that this was a vested legacy, that it was severed from the remainder of the trust funds, and that the legatees were entitled to the interest of the fund set apart to answer it. Dundas v. Murray, 32 L. J., Ch., 151; 11 W. R. 359; 1 N. R. 429.

2. When a legacy is severed from the residue for the benefit of a tenant for life and a remainderman, the residuary legatees cannot claim the income accruing after the death of the tenant for life, though the remainderman has not yet attained a vested interest in the legacy. Kidman v. Kidman, 40 L. J., Ch., 359.

X. OTHER CASES.

3. A testator gave the dividends of specific sums of stock of different amounts to his sons and daughters by name for their lives, and on the death of any son or daughter he gave the capital of which he had given the dividends to such son or daughter, to his or her children at twenty-one, and if no such child attained twenty-one, the capital was to fall into the residue, the interest of which he bequeathed to his widow for life, and after her death to the sons and daughters "during their several lives, to be divided between them," in proportion to the specific sums of stock of which the dividends were bequeathed to them. After the decease of the testator's "said children," the capital of the residue was to be divided among the children's children at twenty-one, and if any grandchild died under twenty-one, its share was to be divided amongst the survivors at twenty-one or their issue, and after the death of the widow and all the testator's "children and grandchildren without issue as aforesaid," over. By codicils he revoked the bequests to two of his sons and a daughter, and gave them for their lives the dividends of smaller specific stock than that so given by the will:—Held, that the dividends, the gifts of which were revoked, were not undisposed of, but passed by the residuary bequest as income of those tenants for life of whose interests were not revoked. Alt v. Gregory, 8 De G. M. & G. 221; 4 W. R. 436; 3 W. R. 630; 2 Jur., N. S., 517.

4. When a testator had specifically devised certain lands, but such lands were contracted to be sold in his lifetime, so that the devise was adeemed:—Held, that the rents received between his death and the conveyance of the property passed to the devisee. Watts v. Watts, 17 L. R., Eq., 217; 43 L. J., Ch., 77; 29 L. T. 671.

5. Where a testator, having contracted to purchase an estate and taken a transfer of a mortgage on it, specifically devised it:—Held, that the devisee was not entitled to the interest on the mortgage between the testator's death and the completion of the purchase. Pawley v. Pawley, 1 N. R. 509; 8 L. T., N. S., 570.

6. Devise to the children of A., B., and C. who should be living when the youngest attained twenty-one, with a direction that "the present yearly rents" should be paid to the persons who brought up the children of C.:—Held, upon the context, that until the contingency happened, the rents were to be paid to such person in trust not only for the children of C., but of A. and B. Sanders v. Miller, 25 Beav. 154.

I. ACCRETIONS TO SPECIFIC LEGACIES.

7. Dividends on specific legacy of stock given with the dividends are due from death of testator. Barrington v. Tristram, 6 Ves. 345.

8. Bequest of a specific sum in the funds, to be paid within twelve months. The sum was not transferred within the twelve months, and the executors received the dividends accruing during that period:—Held, that they belonged to the legatee. Bristow v. Bristow, 5 Beav. 289.

9. A., by will, gives 100*l.* South Sea stock to B.; another 100*l.* South Sea stock to C., payable in six months after his death. Before time expired, an addition was made by the company to every 100*l.* stock:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the additional as well as the original stock. Mason v. Hawkins, 4 Bro. P. C. 8.

10. If a specific bequest of shares is made under an impression that they are not subject to any increase, an accidental increase caused by a payment out of the general personal estate of the testator himself will pass to the legatee. MacLaren v. Stainton, 7 Jur., N. S., 631; 30 L. J., Ch., 723; 9 W. R. 908; 4 L. T., N. S., 715. Reversing 27 Beav. 460; 6 Jur., N. S., 360; 29 L. J., Ch., 401.

A., under the impression that he was not indebted, dealt with his entire estate, and made a specific gift of shares held by him in a company. A suit was afterwards instituted against his executors by the company to which he was found to be indebted. The debt was paid out of the testator's general personal estate, and, in consequence, bonuses were declared upon all the shares of the company. A specific legatee claimed the bonuses in respect of his bequeathed shares:—Held, that the bonuses on the bequeathed shares did not form part of the general personal estate of the testator, but belonged to the specific legatee. Id.

Some of the shares were bequeathed to parties for life, with remainder to other persons:—Held, that the bonuses belonged wholly to the legatees, and not to the estate. Id.

1. A testator bequeathed all the interest arising out of what money he had in any banks:—Held, that a bonus or extraordinary dividend on the shares of the capital stock of a bank, paid in addition to the usual half-yearly dividend, and out of the net annual profits of the bank for the year, was not an accretion to the capital, and passed under the bequest. French v. Craig, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 142.

2. A testator having two policies upon his life for 1,000*l.* each, by will gave to his wife "the 2,000*l.* insured on his life." Subsequently he surrendered one policy. At his death bonuses were due on the other:—Held, that his widow was entitled to the 1,000*l.*, and also to the bonuses due upon the unsurrendered policy. Roberts v. Edwards, 33 L. J., Ch., 369; 33 Beav. 259; 9 Jur., N. S., 1219; 12 W. R. 33; 9 L. T., N. S., 360.

3. By the rules of an incorporated assurance company each shareholder was required to effect an assurance of a stated amount, and it was provided that one-third of every bonus on the policy should be added to the capital of the company. A shareholder, by his will, bequeathed all and every his shares and interest in this company, and all the advantages to be derived therefrom, and he bequeathed shares in other companies, in reference to which he also used the expression "shares and interest":—Held, that the policy effected by the testator, and the bonus which had been declared thereon, did not pass to the legatee. Harrington v. Moffat, 22 L. J., Ch., 775; 4 De G. M. & G. 1.

4. A testator, being possessed of a policy of assurance for 1,000*l.*, on which a bonus of about 400*l.* had lately been declared, gave to his wife his "premium of assurance in the R. Company":—Held, that the bonus alone passed. Barrow v. Methold, 1 Jur., N. S., 994.

5. Testator gave several legacies in stock and directed his executors to transfer stock to the legatees to the amount of their respective legacies, either in consols or reduced annuities, within twelve months after his death. Some of the legacies were not transferred till after twelve months from the testator's death:—Held, that, notwithstanding the discretion, the legacies were specific, and that the legatees were entitled to the dividends from the death of the testator. Chester v. Urmick, 23 Beav. 402.

6. A testator, at the time of his death, was entitled to one hundred and twenty shares in the Great Western Railway Company. For thirty-eight of these he had been an original subscriber, and had signed the parliamentary contract, undertaking to pay the amount subscribed within ten years to the directors to be appointed by the Railway Act. The remaining eighty-two shares had been purchased by him as scrip. By the Act, which was passed in his lifetime, the directors had power to compel payment of the moneys subscribed, and also to make calls, and to enforce the payment of such calls by action, or otherwise to declare the shares forfeited, and to sell the shares. The Act also gave the proprietors of shares the right of sale and transfer, declaring, in effect, that the vendor ceased to be liable for calls after a proper memorial of such sale and transfer. All the calls had not been paid on the shares at the time of the testator's death. After his death the company passed a resolution, declaring that the proprietors of shares should be entitled to two new quarter shares in respect of each whole share. By his will, the testator had bequeathed thirty shares to A. and thirty shares to B., declaring that the legacies should be deemed specific so as to be capable of redemption:—Held, first, that the legatees were entitled to the income of the shares from the death of the testator; secondly, that the legatees were entitled to a proportional number of new quarter shares; thirdly, that the legatees were not entitled to have the deposits and calls on the new quarter shares, or the calls due on the eighty-two whole shares, or semble, the calls due on the thirty-eight original shares, paid out of the testator's general estate; fourthly, that the legatees, and not the executors, had the right of electing out of which class of shares their legacies should be delivered to them. Jaques v. Chambers, 2 Colly. 435; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 225; 16 id. 243; 10 Jur. 151; 11 id. 295.

7. The testator, after reciting that he was entitled to a policy of insurance on his life for 2,000*l.*, bequeathed 400*l.*, part thereof, to E.; 100*l.* and 100*l.*, other parts thereof, to two other legatees; and he left "the residue" to J. H. C. At the time of the testator's death, considerable sums by way of bonus were added to the policy:—Held, that the gift of "the residue" of the moneys, payable on foot of the insurance, was residuary and not specific, and that J. H. C. took the entire residue of the proceeds of the policy, including the bonuses, but subject to any liabilities for the satisfaction of which the policy was liable to be resorted to, and that such liabilities were to be borne primarily by the legatee of such residue in exoneration of the specific legatees of the insurance. Corballis v. Corballis, 9 L. R., Ir., 309.

8. Where a testator directs a specific sum to be sold, and a certain sum out of the sale moneys to be paid to A., and the residue to B., each of the legacies is specific, and the legatees are entitled to share the income of the fund from the testator's death between them, in proportion to the values of their respective legacies at that time. Ite Jefferys, 35 L. J., Ch., 426.

9. A specific legacy is not liable to abatement for the payment of debts, but a demonstrative legacy is liable to abate when it becomes a general legacy by reason of the failure of the fund out of which it is payable. A specific legacy is liable to redemption, but a demonstrative legacy is not. A specific legacy, if of stock, carries with it the dividends which accrue from the death of the testator, while a demonstrative legacy does not carry interest from the testator's death. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204, 210; 8 W. R. 739.

1. A testatrix had power to dispose by will of property which she enjoyed under the residuary gift of her brother: a part of this property consisted of 7,000*l.* bank stock, which, after the brother's death, was increased by a bonus to 8,750*l.* The testatrix in her will, made shortly after the bonus was declared, described the bank stock as consisting of 7,000*l.* The Court decreed that the 8,750*l.* passed by force of general expressions, which plainly manifested an intention to bequeath all that the testatrix derived from her brother. Mathews v. Maude, 1 Russ. & M. 397; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 106.

2. Legacy of 1,000*l.* stock, held not to pass additional capital given by Bank of England as bonus under 56 Geo. 3, c. 96, subsequent to, and before testator's death. Norris v. Harrison, 2 Madd. 268.

3. A testator gave to W. H. and M. H. the amount of the bond he held for 1,000*l.*: "when they got their principal money paid to them, they then to give to their uncle J. B. the sum of 50*l.*, and also their father and mother the sum of 50*l.* each, arising from the bond":—Held, that W. H. and M. H. were entitled to the interest accrued due upon the bond in the lifetime of the testator, as well as to the principal. Harcourt v. Morgan, 2 Keen 274.

4. A gift of 300*l.* upon a bond does not carry the interest incurred in the testator's lifetime. Roberts v. Kiffin, 2 Atk 112.

5. Under bequests of the interest, dividends, and proceeds of a sum in stock to S. for life, and of the stock to A. after S.'s death; but if A. should die before twenty-one, etc., to S., a bonus on the stock given under stat. 56 Geo. 3, c. 96, was held to belong to A. as legatee of stock. Hooper v. Rossiter, 13 Price 774; 1 McClell. 527.

6. A testator gave all his estates and effects to trustees upon trust, after paying debts and legacies, to employ the residue for the use and behoof of his grandson G. C. and the heirs of the body of G. C. till he or they arrived at majority, when the trustees were to denude thereof in his or their favours; and failing G. C. or his lawful issue, before either of their attaining to majority, then such residue was to pertain to any posthumous heir male of testator's son T. C. (the father of G. C.), who had just died, at his or the heirs of his body attaining to majority; and failing of him without lawful issue, then to the daughters of T. C. equally. By a codicil he declared that, failing heirs of T. C.'s body, then in place of the residue pertaining to the daughters of T. C. equally it should solely pertain to the eldest heirs female of T. C. and their issue, the eldest heir female through the whole course of succession succeeding always without division, and excluding heirs-portioners. By another codicil, failing G. C. and the heirs of his body, he gave 4,000*l.* to each of his granddaughters (except the eldest at the time) who should survive him, and the heirs of their bodies. G. C. came of age in 1793, and died unmarried in 1811:—Held, upon the construction of this will and the codicils, affirming the interlocutor of the Court of Session, that G. C. on attaining twenty-one years did not take absolutely, so that on his death the whole residue would become divisible among his next of kin; but that he took only as first substitute in tail, and that upon the failure of the entail (upon his death leaving no heirs of his body) his eldest sister succeeded as heir substitute to him:—Held, further, that the accumulations of interest and profits from the death of the testator until G. C. attained majority belonged to G. C.; as did also some bonuses on Bank stock, part of the testator's property, which had been declared a few weeks before G. C. attained majority, but were payable at a day subsequent to that date. Cuming v. Boswell, 4 W. R. 752; 2 Jur., N. S., 1005.

7. In June 1865 a dividend of 7 per cent. per annum upon certain shares held by the testatrix was declared payable on the 15th July 1865 and the 13th January 1866. She died on the 31st December 1865.—Held, that the January dividend formed part of the corpus of her residuary estate, and did not pass under a bequest of the annual income of such residuary personal estate. De Gendre v. Kent, 4 L. R., Eq., 283; 16 L. T., N. S., 694.

8. In the case of a specific legacy of Bank stock, if the testator has died a few days before the dividend day, the legatee would take the dividend, although payable in respect of profits earned during the testator's life. Clive v. Clive, 1 Kay 600; 23 L. J., Ch., 981; 2 Eq. Rep. 913.

9. The dividend on shares in a public company, partly earned before the testator's death, but declared afterwards, belongs entirely to the specific legatee of the shares; and the Apportionment Act 1870 does not introduce any new rule in this respect. Whitehead v. Whitehead, 16 L. R., Eq., 528; 29 L. T. 289.

II. AMOUNTS, SHARES, AND PORTIONS.

10. Testator bequeathed to his grandchildren, naming them, the sum of 1,000*l.*, payable to each of them on their attaining twenty-one, and in case of the death of either of them before that period, the legacy to be divided amongst the survivors:—Held, that the grandchildren were entitled to one sum only of 1,000*l.*, and not each of them to a separate legacy to that amount. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398.

11. Where there is a proviso in a will, that in case what is left to one daughter shall exceed in value what is given to another, the former shall refund pro tanto; what is given to either of the daughters' children is to be looked upon as given to the daughter. Thomas v. Bennet, 2 P. W. 343.

12. Testator, possessed of 5,000*l.*, three per cent. consols, bequeathed 2,000*l.* thereof to trustees in trust, as to 1,000*l.* for G., and as to to 2,000*l.* for B.:—Held, that testator meant to give trustees 3,000*l.* in trust; bequest to them being mentioned only once, and the legacy of the 2,000*l.* to B. being mentioned twice. Alfred v. Green, 5 Madd. 92.

1. A testatrix bequeathed as follows: "As to all the rest of my personal estate, I give the same to A. B., C., D., etc., upon trust, to pay one-third to P. S. T., for her own proper use; as to the remaining two-thirds, in trust to invest the same and receive the dividends, and pay the same for the use of F. I. T. and C. H. T., for and during the term of their natural lives; and after the decease of either of them, the said F. I. T. and C. H. T., then in trust to pay one-fourth part of the trust-fund unto P. S. T., to and for her own use and benefit, and to pay the dividends and profits of one other fourth part of the said trust-fund unto the survivor of them, the said F. I. T. and C. H. T., to and for his use, for and during the term of his natural life; and from and after the decease of the survivor of them, the said F. I. T. and C. H. T., in trust, to pay, assign, and transfer, and set over the said trust-fund, together with all interest that shall be due thereon, unto P. S. T., to and for her own proper use and benefit." P. S. T. died in 1821, F. I. T. in 1831, and C. H. T. in 1837:—Held, that C. H. T. was entitled, on the death of his brother F. I. T., to three-fourths of the two-thirds of the income of the trust-fund. Wentworth v. Williams, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 107.

2. By his will the testator bequeathed his residue between Ann Sarah Parker and ten other persons (naming them). Two of the legatees having died, the testator, by a codicil, gave the residue between eight persons, naming them, and Ann Sarah Parker, G. F., and Ann Parker. It appeared that Ann Sarah Parker and Ann Parker were the same persons:—Held, that she was entitled to one-tenth, and not to two-elevenths of the residue. Read v. Strangenays, 12 Beav. 323.

3. Under words in will "to pay to each of my younger children (three daughters), as and for their respective portions, a sum equal to one-fourth of what shall remain to my (eldest) son William, payable to each of my said daughters respectively, at her or their respective ages of twenty-one, or marriage, etc.":—Held, that all daughters were only entitled to a sum equal to a fourth of what remained to the eldest son, or each of them to one-seventh (such appearing to be testator's intent), and that the time of testator's death was that at which the amount of his property and proportions of the shares were to be computed. Colclough v. Gaven, 3 Dow 267.

4. Testator directed his trustees to invest 1,400*l.* upon trust for his wife for life, and 800*l.* upon trust for his daughter for her life; and he directed the income of the 1,400*l.* to be paid to his daughter for life if she survived his wife. He then directed his trustees, after the decease of his daughter, to pay and divide the two sums of 1,400*l.* and 800*l.* between his daughter's children; but if she died unmarried, or, being married, died without issue, then he gave the two sums, as to the sum of 800*l.*, equally between the brothers and sisters of his wife, and the remainder of the sums equally between his own brothers and sisters. The testator's daughter having survived the testator, and having died unmarried in the lifetime of the testator's widow, the brothers and sisters of the testator's widow claimed the whole fund in which the 800*l.* had been invested:—Held, that the same was divisible in the proportion of eight to fourteen between the brothers and sisters of the testator's widow and the brothers and sisters of the testator. Hewitt v. George, 18 Beav. 322.

5. A testator devised his Upton Park estate to his five daughters and his grandson, as tenants in common for their respective lives, with remainders over. By a codicil he devised to his son Alfred and his heirs "the like share he had given to his five daughters in the Upton Park property, in every respect whatever":—Held, that Alfred took one-seventh in fee. Bedborough v. Bedborough, 31 Beav. 284.

6. A testator bequeathed 2,100*l.*, part of his preferential stock in a railway company, upon trust for the benefit of a niece; 1,000*l.*, other part of his preferential stock, upon like trusts for the benefit of another niece; and the rest of his preferential stock upon like trusts for the benefit of a third niece. The preferential stock was composed of various kinds of stock of different values.—Held, that the whole of the stock must be apportioned ratably amongst the three nieces. Sley v. Barber, 16 W. R. 812.

7. A bequeathed property amounting to 1,279*l.* to B. Subsequently B., after referring to the will of A., and that he was desirous of making the following legacies to A.'s relations, bequeathed to them legacies amounting to 2,800*l.*; and proceeded: but if the property "I became entitled to under the will of A. should fall short and be deficient in paying such legacies, my desire is, that 500*l.* out of any other part of my personal estate shall be paid and applied for that purpose":—Held, that the legacies, though nominally amounting to 2,800*l.*, were limited to 1,279*l.* plus 500*l.*, and that they must therefore abate. Read v. Strangways, 14 Beav. 139; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 457.

LIV. Gifts Void, Illegal, or Against Public Policy.

8. Legacy left to procure a dukedom, void. Kingston (Earl) v. Pierrepont, 1 Vern. 5.

9. Bequest of stock to government, "in exoneration of the national debt," directed to be transferred to such persons as the King under his sign manual shall appoint. Newland v. Att.-Gen., 3 Merv. 684.

10. A power given to a charitable institution by its special act to acquire lands by will infers a power to persons to give to it lands by will. Perring v. Trail, 22 W. R. 312.

11. Quære, whether a direction to bury testator in a monument to be erected in unconsecrated ground, is void. Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Ph. 185; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 40.

12. Bequest for purchasing the discharge of poachers, committed to prison for non-payment of fines, fees, or expenses under the game laws.—Held, void, as encouraging offences, and opposed to public policy. Thrupp v. Collett, 26 Beav. 126; 5 Jur., N. S., 111.

I. WHERE GIFT IS IMMEDIATE.

1. Bequest to A., and, in case of her death, to B.:—Held, an absolute interest in A. Hinchley v. Simmons, 4 Ves. 160.
2. A clause of survivorship between two legatees, if either of them should die, confined to a case of lapse, and did not prevent the legacies vesting. King v. Taylor, 5 Ves. 806.
3. Legacy to "A., or in case of his death," etc., construed to mean to A., absolutely, if living. Turner v. Moor, 6 Ves. 537.
4. Legacies to two sisters, with a direction, in case of the death of either, reciprocally to devolve to the other: that direction confined to the case of lapse by the death of either, in the life of the testator, and did not prevent the vesting absolutely. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 12.
5. Residuary bequest in trust for the use and benefit of A., and in case of her death to be equally divided between the children of B. Payment decreed to the executor of A., as having taken the absolute interest. Ommaney v. Beran, 18 Ves. 291.
6. Bequest to the use and behoof of A., and in case of her decease to the use and behoof of her children, share and share alike:—Held, a life interest only in A. The capital to her children after her decease. Douglas (Lord) v. Chalmur, 2 Ves. J. 500.
7. Testatrix bequeathed as follows: "I give the legacy of 4,000*l.* to A., and in case of his decease I give the same legacy to his wife, and at her decease to their eldest daughter:—Held, that A. having survived the testatrix was absolutely entitled to the legacy. Origan v. Baines, 7 Sim. 40.
8. Words of will after giving legacy were, "And in case of legatee's death, then to children":—Held, that words referred to legatee's death before testator, and that legatee surviving him took absolutely. Slade v. Milner, 4 Madd. 144.
9. Rule that a bequest to any person, and in case of his death to another, with no reference to the period within which that event is to take place, vests absolutely if such person survive the testator. Home v. Pillans, Coop. temp. Brough. 198; 2 Myl. & K. 15.
10. A testator resident abroad gave a legacy to A., "or in case of his decease, or at his decease, to be equally divided amongst his children." He gave other legacies in similar terms to B., C., etc., and he directed these sums to be paid to the above persons, then residing in Wales; and he appointed executors in trust, to send them to the respective individuals within six months:—Held, that the parents took absolute interests. Arthur v. Hughes, 4 Beav. 506.
11. Legacy of stock in trust for the use, exclusive right, and property of A., but should she happen to die then in that case among her children; another legacy of stock to A., to be paid her as soon as possible, or, in the event of her death, among her children; another legacy of stock to B., and in case of her death among her children: all these legacies held absolute in the respective mothers. Webster v. Hale, 8 Ves. 410.

12. One devises to A. 500*l.*, to B. 500*l.*, and so to five others the like sum; "and if any to whom I have given any money legacy happen to die, then his or her legacy, and also the residue of my personal estate, to go to such of them as shall be then living." Decreed, it should be taken to be living at the death of the testator, and not at any time after, so that the death of any of the legatees after would not carry it to the survivors. Trotter v. Williams, Pre. Ch. 78.

13. Residuary personal property held to be vested in A. and B. in equal moieties, and descendible in the same proportions to their respective children, notwithstanding words giving the property to the survivor "in the event of the death of either," the word "death" being held to refer to death in the testator's lifetime. Clarke v. Lubbock, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 492; 6 Jur. 548.

14. Bequest of 1,000*l.* to testator's sister, and, in case of her demise, 800*l.* to A., and the remaining 200*l.* to B. The sister entitled for life, then to go in the proportions. Billings v. Sandom, 1 Bro. C. C. 393.

15. General disposition of all the testator's estates, real or personal, to his wife and two children, to be equally divided among them, subject to annuities; on death to devolve to his children equally; the portion of the wife, upon her death, to his children equally; upon their death before her, their portion to her during life, with a limitation over: upon the death of all without issue of the children, whether an estate for life or absolute to the wife, quære. Chalmers v. Storil, 2 Ves. & B. 222.

16. Devise to "children, share and share alike." First codicil appointed a guardian "during minority,"—second codicil "in the event of the death of any of the children, their portion to be divided among the survivors, share and share alike":—Held, that "in the event of the death" meant death during minority. In a will "in the event of the death of the devisee" are never construed to mean the event of a lapse by death before the testator, except from necessity. Montgomery v. Montgomery, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 161.

17. Bequest of a legacy to the plaintiff for her sole use and benefit, and "in the event of her death, then" to her youngest surviving son:—Held, that the event contemplated a death in the testator's lifetime, and that the plaintiff, having survived him, was entitled absolutely. Schenk v. Agnew, 4 Kay & J. 405.

18. Bequest to four persons equally, and "in case of the death" of any or either of them, "in the lifetime of the other or others," their shares to go to "survivor or survivors of them":—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the period of the testator's death. Howard v. Howard, 21 Beav. 550.

19. A testator gave certain gifts to different persons, including some express estates for life. He then gave certain leaseholds to his daughter M. (a married woman) for her own proper and absolute use and benefit; and afterwards provided, that in case she should die, the premises should go and be for the sole use and benefit of her children living at her decease. The testator appointed M. his sole executrix. M. survived.—Held, first, that the gift was not for her separate use independent of her husband. Taylor v. Stainton, 2 Jur., N. S., 684; 4 W. R. 538.

Held, secondly, that the subsequent gift for the benefit of her children was only substitutionary, to prevent a lapse in case of her decease before the testator; and that, as she survived the testator, it did not cut down the absolute interest given to her in the first instance; and the property was therefore held to belong to her husband, and to pass to his assignees in bankruptcy. Id.

1. A testator gave legacies to his two brothers, and directed that if either of them "die in my lifetime" his legacy should go to his children, but the legacies were not to be paid till six months after his wife's death. By a codicil reciting the effect of his will and the death of one of his brothers, he directed his legacy to be held for the benefit of his widow for life, and after her death the principal to be paid to her children; and he directed that if his other brother "shall die leaving a widow," such widow should have an interest in the legacy given him in like manner as he had directed the legacy of the deceased brother.—Held, that the words "shall die leaving a widow" meant die in the testator's lifetime, and that interest was payable from the death of the widow. Hood v. Hood, 19 W. R. 88.

2. The will of S. C., after bequeathing her property to A. C. and J. C., continued thus, "In case of the demise of either the said A. C. or J. C., I do hereby bequeath the same . . . to the survivor for her sole use and benefit during her or their natural lifetime".—Held, that the residue was not disposed of, and that A. C. and J. C. took only as tenants for life. Watson v. Watson, Clarke, In goods of, 7 P. D. 10; 51 L. J., P., 13; 47 L. T. 24; 30 W. R. 275.

3. A testator by his will bequeathed personal estate to J. W. upon trust for his, the testator's, wife absolutely, and in case his said wife should die in his lifetime, he directed that all his said estate should be held by his said trustee upon certain trusts (which failed), and subject to those trusts he bequeathed all his property to J. W. absolutely.—Held, that the gift to J. W. was dependent on the event of the testator surviving his wife, and that J. W. did not become entitled from the mere fact of the gift to the wife failing to have practical operation. Underwood v. Wing, 4 De G. M. & G. 633; 1 Jur., N. S., 169; 24 L. J., Ch., 293.

4. A testator left legacies to three persons, and if any of them died their share was to go to the others. One of the legatees and the testator died at the same instant.—Held, that "death" must, according to the ordinary rule, mean death in the testator's lifetime, and that the legacy of the legatee so dying became part of the residue. Elliott v. Smith, Re Elliott, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 236; 52 L. J., Ch., 222; 48 L. T. 27; 31 W. R. 336.

II. FUTURE GIFT.

5. Whether the expression in a will, "in case of death," refers to a death in the lifetime of the testatrix, or to a death at any time, depends upon the context. Tilson v. Jones, 1 Russ. & M. 553.

6. In order to advance the apparent intention of the testator, the words "if he should die" were construed "when he should die." Smart v. Clark, 3 Russ. 365.

7. Bequest over in case of death of devisee generally, and not expressly referable to any certain event or time, within or before which such dying must occur, to give effect to the remainder.—Held, not necessarily to refer to a dying in the lifetime of the testator, but will be construed so as to give effect to such intention on part of testator as may be presumed from the language of the will to have been his object. Hervey v. M'Laughlin, 1 Price 264.

8. A testatrix bequeathed a legacy to A., his executors, etc., "but in case he should die leaving lawful issue," she bequeathed it to A.'s children. A. survived the testatrix.—Held, that A. took a life interest only. Johnston v. Antrobus, 21 Beav. 556.

9. The expression "in case of either of their deaths," in a gift over.—Held, not to be confined to deaths taking place during the life of the tenant for life after the testator's death only. Le Jeune v. Le Jeune, 2 Keen 701; 1 Jur. 235.

Bequest of copyhold and leasehold property to the testator's widow for life; and at her death, the whole to be sold and divided into five parts, one of which was to be paid to each of the testator's four sons living at her decease; and in case of either of their deaths, his share to be paid to his issue; and in case either should die without issue, his share to be divided amongst the surviving children.—Held, that the child of a son who died in the testator's life was entitled to such share as her parent, if he had survived the widow, would have been entitled to. Id.

10. The words "in case of the death" construed to refer to death in the life of the tenant for life. Galland v. Leonard, 1 Swan. 161; 1 Wils. 129.

Words importing contingency applied to an inevitable event, construed to refer to the occurrence of the event under peculiar circumstances. Id. 164.

11. Construction of will.—Continuance of annuities.—Construction of a gift over, if certain persons should die. Astley v. Dechere, 8 L. J., Ch., 20.

12. Bequest to A. for life, and after her death to B. and C. or their children, in case of their decease. B. died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, leaving children.—Held, that B. took a vested interest, liable to be divested in the event which happened. Bolitho v. Hillyar, 11 Jur., N. S., 526; 13 W. R. 600.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards to the testator's brothers and sisters, share and share alike, or their children in case of their decease.—Held, that the children of a brother, who survived the testator, but died in the life of the tenant for life, were entitled. S. C. 34 Beav. 180.

13. In a bequest of 1,000*l.* to certain persons for life, and (after their decease) of 400*l*, part thereof, to A. and B., put and part alike; viz., 200*l*, to A. and 200*l* to B. for the trouble they might have in the execution of the will; "but in case of either of their deaths," to the survivor; "and in case of both their deaths, to the heirs, executors, and administrators of such survivor, 200*l* only." The words, "in case of death" were held to refer to death in the lifetime of the tenant for life of the 1,000*l*. Green v. Barrow, 10 Hare 159; 1 W. R. 197.

1. A testator gave his whole property to his wife, upon condition that she should pay an annuity of 150*l* to his mother during her life, and after her death to his wife, to be equally divided between those of his children who should survive her, share and share alike. All the testator's children died in the lifetime of his widow, who married again, and died leaving her husband surviving her.—Held, upon her death, that in the events which had happened, the testator's property was undisposed of, and that the next of kin, and not the second husband in right of his wife, were entitled to it. Joslin v. Hammond, 2 Myl. & K. 113; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 148.

2. A testator gave freehold and leasehold property to his wife for life, and after her death, to A., B., and C., share and share alike (there being neither words of inheritance nor of restriction as to their interest), and after their decease to their children. A., after the death of the testator and tenant for life, died without issue.—Held, that A. was not absolutely entitled, and that his share fell into the residue. Waters v. Waters, 3 Jur., N. S., 654; 26 L. J., Ch., 621.

3. Legacy of 3,000*l* to testator's wife A. for life, and after her death one-third to each of his daughters, M. and H., with proviso that if either daughter should die unmarried, or without issue, benefit of survivorship; and if both should die unmarried or without issue, then to son. Also, two-thirds of residue in same manner subject to such contingencies in favour of their issue, and with like benefit of survivorship as was before declared as to the 3,000*l*. A. died in life of testator.—Held, on her death the daughters M. and H. took vested interests in shares of 3,000*l*, and of the residue. Laffer v. Edwards, 2 Madd. 210.

4. A bequeathed stock to his aunt for life, and, after her death, to his father; "and, in case of his death, then to devolve on his brothers and sisters, or their representatives." The father and two brothers predeceased the aunt.—Held, that the death of the father meant death in the life of the tenant for life; that the brothers and sisters who survived the aunt, and the representatives of those who predeceased her, were entitled to the stock. Re Henderson, 28 Beav. 656.

5. A residue was given to the wife for life, and afterwards in separate moieties to different persons. One moiety was given over "in case of the death of any or either of them before my said wife," and the other in case of the death of "any or either of them," without specifying any period.—Held, under the circumstances, that the gift over in both cases was to be construed on death "before my said wife." Jee v. King, 16 Beav. 45; 16 Jur. 489; 21 L. J., Ch., 360.

6. A testator gave stock to trustees, the interest to be paid to A. for life, and after his death the capital to be divided amongst the children of the testator's late daughter B., or their descendants, but should there be none of them surviving, then the capital to be equally divided amongst such other grandchildren as might then be living, or in default thereof to his legal representative. B. had seven children, three of whom died without children in the lifetime of testator; of the remaining four one alone survived, A., the tenant for life; three died before A., and only one of these three left issue.—Held, that the words "should there be none of them surviving" referred to the testator's death, and that the children of B. who survived the testator took vested interests. Re Davies, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 210.

III. DEVISE OF REAL ESTATE.

7. The rule established in numerous cases, that a bequest to A., and in case of his death to B., gives A. an absolute interest in case he survives the testator, is not to be extended to devises of real estate. Accordingly, upon a devise of a certain share of a real estate to the testator's sisters, Mary and Lucy, share and share alike; "and in case of their demise," to be equally divided amongst their children, or their lawful heirs.—Held, that the sisters took estates for life only, with remainder to their children as tenants in common in fee. Bowen v. Seacroft, 2 Y. & Coll. 640; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 25.

1. General Rule. Indefinite Failure.

8. Remainder of trust of a term to one after default of issue of another, is void. Pearse v. Reese, Pol. 29.

9. Limitation of personalty after the death of any person without issue is bad. Green v. Rod, Fitzg. 68.

1. Limitation of trust of term to A. after death of B., without heir of his body, is void. Burges v. Burges, Poll. 40.

2. Limitation of sum of money to K. for life, then to her children, and if no children to L., is void. Boucher v. Anthram, Pol. 37.

3. How far personals may be limited over. Att.-Gen. v. Hall, Fitzg. 314.

4. No personal property can be limited on so remote a contingency as the death of a person dying without issue generally. Grey v. Montagu, 3 Bro. P.C. 314. Affirming 2 Eden 205.

5. Trust of term is limited to issue of J., and for want of issue, to G. J. has issue, and dies; issue die. Limitation to G. is void. Warman v. Seaman, Poll. 114.

6. Remainder of trust of term limited after another's dying without heirs is void. Backhouse v. Bellingham, Poll. 33.

7. Devise of a personal estate to one and his issue, or to one, and if he die without issue over, remainder is void. Gibbs v. Barnadiston, Pre. Ch. 323.

8. Remainder of lease for years on general dying without issue, too remote. Otherwise, if without issue living at the death. Ezel v. Wallace, 2 Ves. 120.

9. Interest of residue of personal estate given by will to a woman for life, then the residue to her nieces; if they die without issue, over: the last limitation over is too remote, and on the death of the aunt the nieces take the whole. Everest v. Gell, 1 Ves. J. 286.

10. Personal estate bequeathed to F., her executors, administrators, and assigns; but in case of the death of F. without issue, remainder over: this remainder over too remote, as it must be construed a general dying without issue. Byge v. Bensley, 1 Bro. C. C. 187.

11. Devise and bequest in trust to pay the income to A. for use during life, with remainder in default of issue to B. for his use during life: remainder in default of issue to C. for life in the same manner, with remainder over. The remainder after the limitation to A. for life is void as too remote, and, A. being heir-at-law and residuary legatee, his title to the real estate and personal was established. Boehm v. Clarke, 9 Ves. 580.

12. A limitation of personal estate, after the death of the first taker without issue generally, is void. Beauclerk v. Dormer, 2 Atk. 308.

Testator says, “I make D. my sole heir and executrix; and if she dies without issue, then to go to plaintiff.”—Held, that the limitation over of the personal estate was void, and cannot be confined to D.'s dying without issue living at the time of his decease. Id.

13. A limitation by will of personal estate, after the death of N., without lawful issue, is too remote, and void. Jeffrey v. Sprigge, 1 Cox 62.

14. Limitation of personal property after an indefinite failure of issue void, as too remote, otherwise if confined to the time of the death. Courts endeavour to support such limitation, taking advantage of any expression to construe the event, never having had issue, or to confine it to the death. Widdison v. Hodgkin, 2 L. J., Ch., 484.

15. Bequest of personal estate to A. during his life, and if he has no heirs, then over:—Held, the bequest over was void, as being too remote. Bodens v. Galway (Lord), 2 Eden 297.

16. Devise of leasehold for years to A., if he dies without issue, remainder over, the whole interest vests in the first taker; otherwise if a lease for lives; for if the taker makes no use of his power on his death, it vests in the remainderman, who takes as special occupant. Saltern v. Saltern, 2 Atk. 376.

17. Bequest of money to testator's wife, and the issue of her body, and failing such issue, to such of her heirs whom she should appoint by written will:—Held, that the subsequent words did not control the previous limitation, and, therefore, that a bequest over of the money was void, as being too remote. Howston v. Ives, 2 Eden 216.

18. Bequest of money to A., upon condition that he should pay an annuity to B., and in case B. should die without issue, then to be equally divided amongst such of the testatrix's nearest relations as should at that time be living:—Held, the bequest over was too remote. Destouches v. Walker, 2 Eden 261.

19. The sense of the words, “die without issue,” or “for want of issue,” not to be departed from without satisfactory evidence, that they were not intended in that sense. Down v. Penny, 12 Ves. 548.

20. Legacy given upon a man's dying without issue; the man dies leaving issue, which issue within six months after died without issue: the legacy not due, it not being intended to aise upon any remoter contingency than the man's dying without issue living at his death. Nichols v. Hooper, 1 P. W. 198; 2 Vern. 686.

21. A., possessed of a term, devised it to his wife for life, remainder to his first son for life, and if he died without issue, to his second son, etc. The remainder to the second son was held void. Love v. Windham, 1 Lev. 290; 2 Ch. Rep. 14.

22. Residue of personal estate bequeathed to the children of the testator's two daughters, their executors, etc., with a limitation over in case both his daughters should die without issue, a vested interest in the grandchildren, and the limitation over, is too remote. Rawlings v. Goldfrap, 5 Ves. 440.

23. Testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* in trust to pay the interest to his nephew John for life, remainder to John's first son for life, remainder as to the principal for the children of John, and for default of such issue to pay the interest to the second and other sons of John successively and to their respective issue; and for default of issue male of John, to pay the interest to the testator's nephew Charles for life, etc., etc.:—Held, that the words in italics did not mean “if John shall never have a son,” so as to make the limitation to Charles take effect by way of substitution, but that that and all the other limitations subsequent to the limitation to the first son of John were void for remoteness. Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290; 12 Jur. 712.

24. Testatrix gave all her estate, real and personal, to her daughter and her heirs, and half the navigation money for her natural life, and in case she dies without issue all to be divided between four nephews and nieces named; the part of one only for life, and then to be divided between the survivors. The limitation over too remote, there being no expression or circumstance to limit the generality of the words to a failure of issue at the time of the death: as to what property it extends to, quære. Barlow v. Salter, 17 Ves. 479.

Devise for life, and in default of issue to another for life, and in default of his issue remainder over; the limitation over void, as to the personal property, either as too remote, or an estate tail by implication. Id. 484.

1. A., by will, gives the surplus of his personal estate to his daughter, whom he makes executrix, and willed, that if she died without issue, it should go over to B. and that she should give security that if she died without issue it should go over accordingly. The devise is void; but whether the directing a bond to be given, etc., does not alter the case, quære. Deering v. Hanbury, 1 Vern. 478.

2. A gift over of money upon the death of a legatee without issue is void, unless from the words of the will it can be collected that the testator meant a death without issue at the time of the death of the legatee. A testator gave to his brother 300*l.* per annum during his life, and to each of two nephews 150*l.* during their lives; but if either of the nephews died, the other to inherit the whole 300*l.*, and, if the brother died without issue, the two nephews to inherit from the brother; and he then proceeded to state that the reason why he left only the interest to his brother and two nephews was, that if they died without issue, the money might go to his three cousins, to be divided equally between them. The brother and nephews all died without issue—Held, that the gift over to the cousins was void, as being too remote. Lapin v. Firard, 2 Russ. & M. 378; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 150.

3. A limited 10,000*l.*, on failure of issue of the body of husband and wife, to B. in tail; the remainder is void as an executory devise, being too remote; otherwise, where the limitations are for life, that confining it to a failure of issue during the lives in being; and in the case of executory devises, it has been held to be a reasonable construction, if it falls within the compass of ever so many lives in being at the same time. Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 449.

4. A testator, who was an Armenian merchant, by his will, made in India in the year 1791, directed that his property of every description should be administered according to the law of England. He then gave various legacies, and directed the residue of his estate and effects to be divided into sixteen shares, six of which were to be placed in the Government funds of Great Britain, there to remain for ever in the testator's name, and the interest thereof to be received by his three sons, Alexander, John, and Lewis, successively for life, and after the death of the survivor of his three sons the interest to be received by the first and other sons of Alexander, and their issue in succession for life; and in default of issue of Alexander, the interest to be received by the first and other sons of John, and their issue in succession for life, with a similar direction in default of issue of John, for the benefit of the issue of Lewis.—Held, that after the life estates to the testator's three sons, the rest of the gifts were void for remoteness. Raphael v. Boehm, 22 L. J., Ch., 299.

5. A father, by will made in 1821, after a gift of leaseholds to his daughter, gave all the remainder of his property whatsoever to his wife, the income to her for life, and at her death to his daughter, for her own benefit and her children, or one only child if she should have any (all that was given to her being for her own benefit, and not to be subject to the debts, control, or disposition of any husband she might marry); but if she should die without issue the leaseholds were to be enjoyed by his wife for life, and at her death to his sister S. for her life, and at her death, together with all that was left to his wife for her life, to be equally divided between all the grandchildren of his sister. The daughter died without having had a child:—Held, that she was entitled absolutely both to the leasehold specifically bequeathed to her and to the residue given subject to the widow's life interest, and that the limitations over, if the daughter "should die without issue," were void for remoteness. Fisher v. Webster, 14 L. R., Eq., 283; 26 L. T., N. S., 765; 42 L. J., Ch., 156.

2. Death Without Leaving Issue.

6. One possessed of a term devises it to A. and B., and if either of them die and leave no issue of their respective bodies, then to C.: this held a good limitation to C., if A. or B. left no issue at their death. Forth v. Chapman, 1 P. W. 664.

7. According to Lord Hardwicke's note of Forth v. Chapman (1 P. W. 664), Lord Maclesfield held, that the words "leave no issue" must relate to the time of the death of the testator's two nephews, and could not be extended to a dying without issue generally. See Beaucherk v. Dormer, 2 Atk. 308.

No authority can be produced where it has been held that a limitation of personal estate shall be confined to a dying without issue living at the death of the first taker. See quære. Id.

8. Devise of a term to A. for life, remainder to such children as the testator shall leave at his death; and if all his children die without leaving issue, then to B. The children die without leaving any issue at the time of their death: this is a good devise over to B. Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 3 P. W. 258.

Where the words of a devise of leasehold would make an express estate tail in the case of a freehold, there a devise over of such leasehold is void; secus, if the words in the former devise would, in the case of a freehold, make an estate tail only by implication. Id. 259.

9. Devise of bank-stock to daughter for life, remainder to such child or children of her as should be living at her death; and if she should not leave any child, or if all children should die without issue, then to J.; the daughter had a son born at the time of making the will:—Held, the words "without issue" were to be construed "without leaving issue," and that the remainder over to J. was a good remainder, and not too remote. Sheppard v. Lessingham, Amb. 122.

Personal estate may be limited on life of child in esse, and twenty-one years after. Id. 124.

The Court never held a limitation after the death of a person not in esse, without issue, good. Ib.

In general a limitation of personalty, after dying without issue, is void: but the Court will, if possible, so construe the words “dying without issue,” as to support the limitation over. Ib.

1. Testator devises leasehold premises to his executor, after payment of certain sums, to pay the rents to A. for life, and then that his natural daughter should have the same for her life; and in case she should die, leaving no lawful issue, he bequeathed the premises to his executors, to be sold for the purposes of the will:—Held, the devise over to the executors not too remote. Taylor v. Clarke, 2 Eden 202.

2. As to limitation of personal estate, after contingent limitation in tail. See Sabbarton v. Sabbarton, Forrest 245.

3. A man gives his estate to his wife so long as she shall remain unmarried, but if she marries then to his daughter; and in case the daughter should die without leaving issue, then to J. The daughter died without issue in the mother's lifetime, who still remained a widow:—Held, that the reversionary interest belonged to J. upon the death of the daughter without issue then living. Gordon v. Adolphus, 3 Bro. P. C. 306.

4. Devise of freehold and leasehold estate to A. and B., as tenants in common, and if either of them should die without leaving issue, then as to the share of such of them as should so die without issue as aforesaid, to the use of the survivors of them, the said A. and B., and the heirs of his body. And in case both of them should die without issue of his or their body or bodies, then to the use of C. for life, with remainder to the trustees to preserve, etc., and divers remainders over:—Held, that the limitation to the survivor was a good limitation by way of executory devise, that by the word issue in the succeeding clause, the testator intended such issue as were to take under the prior limitation, and that consequently the limitation over to C. was not too remote. Radford v. Radford, 1 Keen 486; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 138.

5. Bequest of 2,000*l.* in trust for testator's niece, who was then unmarried, with a bequest over if she should die without leaving any issue to attain twenty-one:—Held, not to give her an absolute vested interest in the 2,000*l.*, as the death referred to could not be construed to mean a death in the lifetime of the testator. Daniel v. Warren, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 290; 7 Jur. 462.

6. Bequest of residue to A. for his life, and his heirs male after him; and, if he should not leave any son, then to go to B. and his heirs male. Upon the death of A. without leaving male issue, the limitation to B. takes effect. Mansell v. Grove, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 484; 7 Jur. 666.

7. Testatrix by her will gave 500*l.* to each of her two nieces to be settled as she should thereafter describe, and directed that the provision therein made for her nieces should not be subject to the control of any husbands they might marry, but should remain vested in her executors in trust until a proper settlement was made. And by a codicil she directed that if either of her nieces should die without leaving issue, the legacy given to her should devolve to the other niece and her children, with a gift over if both should die without issue:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the nieces took life interests with remainder to their children and cross-remainders between them. Holloway v. Collier, 1 W. R. 266.

8. A testator, by his will, dated in 1850, gave all his property real and personal, whether land in New South Wales, or in the Island of Ceylon, or funds in the hands of A. & Co., of Calcutta, or of G. in England or elsewhere, to the members of the firm of A. & Co., in trust for the benefit, in equal portions, to the extent of the annual income of his property, of his brothers E. and C., or the heirs of their bodies lawfully begotten; and the meaning of his will was, that if either brother should die leaving lawfully begotten heirs of his body, then should the share or portion of such brother descend to such lawfully begotten heirs; but if one brother should die without lawful issue, then should the whole annual income be paid to the surviving brother; or in case of his death also, to his lawfully begotten heirs; but in case both brothers should demise without lawfully begotten heirs, then should the whole property be divided among his nearest of kin. The testator then appointed executors, with power to appoint other executors; also with full power to get in all moneys, and to sell, dispose of, and convert into money all his real and personal estate, either by public auction or private contract, as to his executors should seem meet:—Held (6 Jur., N. S., 138; 8 W. R. 176), that the testator's personalty was subject to an executory gift over, on the death of his two brothers without leaving issue living at his death; he also declared that the real estate should be sold, and the proceeds, with the personalty, should form a common fund. On appeal:—Held, that the decision as to the personalty was correct, but that there was no conversion of the realty; and that the brothers took an estate tail as tenants in common, with cross-remainders between them of such lands as were subject to English law; and an inquiry was directed as to the effect to be given to the will regarding the lands in Ceylon, by the law prevailing there. Greenway v. Greenway, 29 L. J., Ch., 601.

3 Gift over “at,” “after” Decease.

9. Testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees for the use of B. during his life, and to the lawful heirs of his body after his demise; but in case of his dying without issue of his body after his decease I give all such residue to O.; this creates a contingency, with a double aspect, and in the event of B. having no child, the limitation to O. is good. Trotter v. Oswald, 1 Cox 317.

10. Testator gave fourth of personal estate to son absolutely, but by codicil directed that son's share should be only for life of himself and wife, provided they had no issue, and that, at their death it should fall into the residue:—Held, son did not take absolutely, but subject to executory bequest over in case there was no issue of him and wife living at death of survivor. Rackstraw v. Vile, 1 Sim. & S. 604; 2 L. J., Ch., 102.

1. One by will gives all his lands, money, etc., to his wife, provided if wife dies without issue, then 80% shall remain to his brother after his wife's death. The brother dies in the lifetime of the wife. It was decreed, the legacy good. Pinbury v. Elkin, 2 Vern. 758, 766; Pre. Ch. 483; 1 P. W. 563.

2. Bequest to testator's daughter and her children, and in default of such issue, and in case of her death, to A. and B., the limitation over takes effect on her dying without children. Gawler v. Cadby, Jac. 346.

3. A testatrix bequeathed a moiety of her residuary estate to her daughter E. B. O., so that the annual interest thereof should be received by her for her natural life, and upon her decease to go and be equally divided amongst all and every her children lawfully begotten; and in case of her decease without lawful issue, then to J. O. E. B. O. married, and had only one child, which died an infant in her lifetime:—Held, that the word "then" did not mean the instant of death of E. B. O., the mother, but death without issue generally, or without ever having had issue; and that the child of E. B. O., notwithstanding its death in its mother's lifetime, took under the will of the testatrix an absolute vested interest in a moiety of her residuary estate. Pye v. Linwood, 6 Jur. 618.

4. Gift Over to Several and the Survivor.

4. One having two nephews, A. and B., devises his personal estate to them; and if either die without children, then to the survivor; this is good. Hughes v. Sayer, 1 P. W. 532.

5. If separate legacies are given to two or more persons with a limitation over to the survivor or survivors, in case of the death of either without issue, the presumption, prima facie, is that the testator had not in his contemplation an indefinite failure of issue. Where pecuniary legacies were bequeathed to several persons for their lives, and if any of them should die without issue, their proportions to be divided among the survivors; the sums were directed to be secured in court, and the dividends paid to the legatees for their respective lives, with liberty to any person to apply upon the death of each legatee. Whether such legatees took an absolute interest in their respective legacies, subject to an executory bequest over in case of their death, leaving no issue, or whether they took an interest for life only, quære. Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 2 Myl. & K. 441; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183.

6. A testator, who had two sons and one daughter, gave the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of 3,000% stock, standing in his name, to W., one of his children, for life; and, after his decease, he gave the said principal stock or sum of 3,000% unto all and every the child and children of W., to be equally divided between and amongst them; if more than one, share and share alike, and if but one, the whole to such one, to be paid or transferred to him, her, or them, on his, her, or their attaining twenty-one, and the interest to be in the meantime applied for maintenance and education. He gave similar legacies to each of his other two children and their children; "and upon the death of either of my said sons or daughters without issue, then I direct that the interest, dividends, and produce so, as aforesaid, given and bequeathed to him, her, or them so dying, shall be paid and payable to the survivors or survivor of them, my said sons and daughter, in equal shares and proportions." The testator's son, W., survived him and had one child, who predeceased him:—Held, that the limitation over referred to the death of either of the testator's children without leaving issue living at his death; that the child of W. took a vested interest at his birth, but liable to be divested by the death of W. without leaving issue living at his death, and that the gift over, therefore, took effect. Westwood v. Southey, 2 Sim. N. S. 192; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 473; 16 Jur. 400.

7. Testatrix, before the statute 1 Vict. c. 20, bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to her son A. and her daughter B., to be divided equally between them, in case they were both living, at the time of her decease; but if either of them should happen to die before her, or at any time after, without issue, then she bequeathed the share of him or her so dying, and without issue, to the survivor of them. A. and B. survived the testatrix. A. died unmarried in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that the moiety of the residue given to A. devolved to B. Turner v. Frampton, 2 Colly. 331; 10 Jur. 24.

8 A., seised and possessed of real and personal estates, devises a chattel interest to B., her executors, administrators, and assigns, and freehold and chattel estates and interests to C. her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, with a proviso that in case either should die unmarried, or being married should die without issue, then that the bequests so appointed for such of them so dying unmarried, or being married should die without issue, should go to and remain to the survivor of them, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that the words, "without issue," meant an indefinite failure of issue, and not issue living at the time of the death of the devisee. O'Donohoe v. King, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 185.

9. Devise of an estate charged with two several legacies to A. and B.; and in case A. or B. die without lawful issue, then the whole of the said two legacies to go to the survivor, his executors, etc. A. dies without issue in the testator's lifetime:—Held, the legacy lapsed, the contingency on which it was given over being too remote. Massey v. Hudson, 2 Meriv. 130.

5. Gift Over to Persons then Living.

10. J. H., by his will, gave to C. H., his adopted daughter, 20,000% 3 per cent. consols, and his house and landed property at C. and M. The will then proceeded in the following terms:—"But in case of her death without lawful issue, I then will the money so left to her to be equally divided betwixt my nephews who may be living at the time; and the land, etc., at C., to my nephew the Rev. J. H.; and that at M., to my nephew, Lieut. J. H., etc. I request R. C. and D. S. to be her guardians, and allow whatever they please for her education annually, and after she has left school; and if she marries, it must be with their consent, and the property to be solely settled upon herself and children, and in no way changed or alienated"—Held, that under this limitation, the 20,000*l.* consols vested absolutely in C. H. Candy v. Campbell, 8 Bli. N. S. 469; 2 Cl. & F. 421.

1. A testator directed, that as his sons attained twenty-five, his executors should pay them a share of his estate and effects, it being his will that his sons and daughters should receive equal shares of his estate. And as his daughters attained twenty-five, the executors were to invest 1,000*l.* each for them for life, and the difference between this and their share paid to them. In case any daughter "should die without issue," the 1,000*l.* was to be divided "amongst such of his children as might be then living, and the issue of such as might be dead, share and share alike," the issue to take the like share as the parent would if living have been entitled to:—Held, that the gift over was on an indefinite failure of issue; that there was an absolute gift of the 1,000*l.*, in the first instance, to the daughters, which had not effectually been cut down, and that the daughters were absolutely entitled to the 1,000*l.* Webster v. Parr, 26 Beav. 236.

2. H., after devises and bequests to his son S., and to his daughters M. and E., gave the whole that was contained in the lease upon the White Lion premises between his wife and his daughter E., share and share alike, during his wife's life; and after her death he devised her share to his daughter E.; but should she die without legal issue, then he devised the White Lion property between such of his aforesaid children as might be then living; or, if none of them should happen to be then alive, he gave the same between his grandson R., and the legal issue of his son S. Upon his death his widow and his daughter E. entered into possession of the White Lion premises, and they continued in such possession until 1853, when E. died, without ever having been married:—Held, that as the gift over was so framed as to show that a personal benefit to R. was intended, the words "should A. die without legal issue," did not mean an indefinite failure of issue, but issue living at the death of E.; and that in the event which had happened, the testator's children living at the death of A. were entitled. Jones v. Cullimore, 5 W. R. 539; 3 Jur., N. S., 404.

3. A testator, after making a gift to the issue of his nephew, directed that if there should be no child or children, or remoter issue, of his nephew who should survive him and his nephew, and should live to attain the age of twenty-one, then the gift should go over:—Held, that the will must be construed to mean issue born in the lifetime of the testator and his nephew, and that the gift over was not void for remoteness. Gee v. Liddell, 2 L. R., Eq., 341; 12 Jur., N. S., 541; 35 L. J., Ch., 640; 14 W. R. 853.

4. A bequeathed to his son Hugh and to his heirs a chattel interest in certain premises, and should his son die without lawful child, he directed that the yearly produce of the premises should be divided in equal portions between the testator's wife and his daughters Isabella and Mary Jane, or such of them as might then be in existence. The wife predeceased Hugh, who died unmarried:—Held, that upon the death of Hugh, Isabella and Mary Jane became entitled in equal shares to the testator's interest in the premises. Wilson v. Chesnut, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 559; 16 W. R. 417.

5. Testator, after giving property to his three children, and the longest liver of them and their heirs, directed "that, should all his children die without heirs, the property was to be divided between the children of his brothers and sisters alive on the death of his last child":—Held, that the limitation over was void for remoteness. Garratt v. Cockerell, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 494; 6 Jur. 909.

6. Gift Over on Death under Twenty-one.

6. Devise of a term to J. S., and his assigns for ever; but if he dies without issue before twenty-one, then to go over to his brother. This is a good devise over. Martin v. Long, 2 Vern. 151; Pre. Ch. 15.

7. Bequest of 1,300*l.* to testator's daughter, provided if she died before twenty-one, and without issue, the legacy should go over to A.; deceased, the devise over in case of the granddaughter's dying without issue under twenty-one, is good, the contingency being to happen before the legatee attains twenty-one. Pawlet v. Dogget, 2 Vern. 56.

8. Bequest of 100*l.* to A., to be improved till he should attain the age of twenty-one; and in case he should die before twenty-one, or afterwards without issue, then the money to be equally divided between the testator's sons and daughter:—Held, the limitation over too remote. Gray v. Shawne, 1 Eden 153.

9. Bequest to the testator's two natural sons with survivorship, upon the death of either before twenty-one and without issue, but in the event of both dying without issue, over; the interest beyond maintenance to be added yearly to the principal for their benefit to be paid when they attain twenty-one. The limitation over upon the death of both established: as to the accumulation:—Held, a vested interest; and the payment only postponed. Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick, 13 Ves. 476.

10. A. devises portions to his four children, payable at their respective ages of twenty-one, or marriage; and in case any of them should die before the time of payment, or should die without issue, then his or their share to the survivor or survivors of them. One of them died under age, and without issue. This, though a limitation of a personal estate, is good, but liable to the contingency of survivorship till it comes to the last of the four children. Nicholls v. Skinner, Pre. Ch. 528.

7. Where Implied Gift to Issue.

11. Tremor devises the term to A. for life, remainder to such of his issue as he shall appoint; and if A. die without issue, remainder to B.; this is a good devise to B. Target v. Gawnt, 1 P. W. 432; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 149; 10 Mod. 402.

12. Testator gave a legacy to his son, an estate in fee to a nephew, then several parts of his freehold estates, and the future purchase of freehold to be made with part of his personal property, and all his leasehold to his wife for life; then to his son and his issue lawfully begotten, or to be begotten, to be divided among them as he should think fit. If he die without issue, as well present freehold and leasehold as the estates to be purchased, to be sold, the produce to go over, no part of his present freehold and leasehold, or the estates to be purchased, to be sold during life of wife and son. All the rest, residue, and remainder of his property and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, after paying debts, etc., to the wife; the son is tenant for life, and the devise over is good; but estates not mentioned do not pass by it. Hockley v. Mawbey, 1 Ves. J. 143.

1. Bequest of a term of years to R. for life, remainder to the issue of R. in such manner as he should appoint, and for want of appointment, remainder to the first son of the body of R., and if no issue male, to the daughters of R., as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and for default of such issue remainder over:—Held, that R. took an estate for life only. Keating v. Keating, L.L. & G. temp. Plunk. 291.

2. A testator gave all his real and personal property in trust to be disposed of for the benefit of his daughter for life, and at her decease that she should be at liberty to will the same to issue as she might think fit, but in case of her dying without issue, then he wished the property to go to his brother and sister for their lives, or if his brother should die in the lifetime of his daughter then to his brother's children:—Held, that the daughter took an estate tail in the realty, and an absolute interest in the personality. Simmons v. Simmons, 8 Sim. 22; 5 L. J. N. S., Ch., 198.

3. When Restricted in Other Cases.

3. Devise of 400*l.* to A., and if A. die without issue, then to B.; this is good, and must be intended, if A. die without issue living at his death. Plydell v. Plydell, 1 P. W. 748.

If the Court should admit of a distinction between chattels real and personal, it would introduce confusion. Id.

4. Limitation of personal property, if A. should die without issue male, to B. if living, if not C. and D. in succession of age to enjoy, etc., not too remote. Southey v. Somerville (Lord), 13 Ves. 486.

5. A father is the judge of the quantum, and also of the time when his daughter's provision shall take place, and a limitation to a daughter on failure of issue male of an eldest son or sons, is not too remote, but shall be considered as a provision. Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 191.

A father limited a copyhold estate to a first son in tail, and to a second, third, fourth, and fifth son, but not having surrendered it, the second son brought his bill to have the want of a surrender supplied. The Court will decree it for all the sons in the same order that the father left it; for where it does not introduce a hardship, or leave other children in distress, the Court will always decree the provision made for one child to be as extensive as he intended. Id.

6. A. gives all his worldly substance to his daughter J., provided she marries with the consent of his executors; but if she should marry without such consent, or should die without issue, then he gives his estate to other persons; the daughter married with consent, but died without ever having any issue; upon a question when this bequest over took effect, it was held to take effect upon the death of the daughter without issue living at that time. Kelly v. Fowler, 3 Bro. P. C. 299.

7. "Dying without issue":—Held, to mean without issue at her (testator's daughter's) death. Chamberlain v. Jacob, Amb. 72.

8. Bequest of personal estate after a contingent limitation in tail, which did not take effect, established. Phypys v. Mulgrave (Lord), 3 Ves. 614.

9. A devise of real estate to A., and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten, and in case of his death without leaving issue of his body, to go over. The testator then bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to A.; and in case he should happen to die without issue of his body lawfully begotten, that in such case the residue should also go over. The bequest over of the residue not too remote, but a good executory bequest, as depending on the same event on which the real estate had been limited over. Foley v. Irwin, 2 Ball & B. 435.

10. A. limited 10,000*l.* on failure of issue of the body of husband and wife to B. in tail, the remainder is void as an executory devise, being too remote; otherwise where the limitations are for life, that confining it to a failure of issue during the lives in being, and in the case of executory devises, it has been held to be a reasonable construction if it falls within the compass of ever so many lives in being at the same time. Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 449.

11. A testator, by his will, gave his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to permit his two sisters to receive the income thereof for their lives, and after the death of the survivor to pay the capital among their children. If they should die without issue, then in trust for the testator's brother Thomas; but if he should be dead, in trust for his children; and if Thomas and his children should be then dead, in trust for the testator's next of kin. By a codicil, the testator gave as follows: "In addition to my will, I do leave my effects, failing my brothers and sisters and their heirs, to my cousins," naming them. The testator had, in addition to his sisters and brother, one other brother. They all died without leaving any children:—Held, that the gift in the codicil was to take effect or to fail at the time of division; that the bequest to the cousins was not too remote, but took effect. Re Pattison, 5 De G. & Sm. 591; 22 L. J., Ch., 286.

12. A testator bequeathed to his daughters A. and C. 1,000*l.* each, to be left at interest by his executors and trustees, and the interest regularly paid to them; and should they marry, it must be with the consent of their brother; and even in that case their husbands were to have no control over principal or interest; and the receipt of his daughters was to be a sufficient discharge of the interest. Should either of his daughters die, or both of them, without issue, they might by their last will and testament dispose of 500*l.* each of 2,000*l.* to any of their brothers or sisters, or nephews and nieces, but to no other person; the remaining 1,000*l.*

to be divided amongst his surviving children, share and share alike; and should his daughters, or either of them, wish to purchase an annuity with their share of the 2,000*l.* for their life or lives, with the consent or under the direction and advice of their guardians, they were to be at liberty to do so. C. died intestate and without issue:—Held, first, that the daughters took life interests only in the 1,000*l.* O'Neill v. Montgomery, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 163.

Held, secondly, that as to 500*l.* of C.'s share, a trust was created for the brothers and sisters, and nephews and nieces, living at her death, and that they were entitled equally to the 500*l.* in default of appointment. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the brothers of C. who survived her were entitled to the remaining 500*l.*, her sisters having died before her. Ib.

II. ABSOLUTE INTERESTS IN PERSONALTY WHERE ESTATES TAIL IN REALTY.

1. Where Interest Only Given, 8063.
2. Where Corpus Given, 8063.

1. Where Interest Only Given.

1. A bequest that 4,000*l.*, and a further sum of 1,500*l.*, shall pertain to J. after the death of R. without lawful issue, is too remote, and the whole shall vest in R. Glover v. Strothoff, 2 Bro. C. C. 33.

2. Interest of money is devised to A. for life, and if he died without issue, then the principal to go over to another. The remainder over is good. Smith v. Clever, 2 Vern. 38.

3. N. devised an annuity of 300*l.* per annum to his wife for life, then to accumulate to make a portion for his first daughter who should marry, then in order to raise portions for other daughters, then to remain to his eldest son, and on his decease to the heirs male of his body, and, in case of his having no issue, remainder to the next eldest son and his heirs male. The daughters married in the life of the wife; the eldest and two other sons of testator died, leaving the wife without issue: this is not personal estate vesting absolutely in the eldest son (on the principle that it would be an estate tail in land), neither does it vest as an executory devise in the fourth son of testator, who survived; but it is an annuity, and being exhausted by the events, there being nobody to take it as such, sinks into the residuary estate of the testator. Turner v. Turner, 1 Bro. C. C. 317; Ambl. 776.

4. A testator gave to each of his five daughters 400*l.* per annum for their lives, and after their respective deceases he gave the same to their children respectively, share and share alike, such children not to be entitled to more than their deceased parent's share; and in case any or either of his daughters should die without issue, then he directed such annuity to cease, and fall into the residue of his estate:—Held, that the words, “in case any or either of his daughters should die without issue,” did not give to the daughters an absolute interest in the annuities. Hedges v. Harpur, Hedges v. Blake or Black, 27 L. J., Ch., 742; 4 Jur., N. S., 1209; 3 De G. & J. 129; 6 W. R. 842.

2. Where Corpus Given.

5. Personal estate bequeathed to F. H., her executors, administrators, and assigns; but in case of the death of F. H., without issue, remainder over; this remainder over too remote, as it must be construed a general dying without issue. Bigge v. Bensley, 1 Bro. C. C. 187.

6. A testator, by his will, gave certain real and personal estate to his daughter for life, with power for her “to will the same to her issue as she might think fit; but in case of her dying without issue,” the testator directed that the property should go to his brother and sister; but if the brother died before the daughter, then to the brother's children in equal shares:—Held, that the testator's daughter took an estate tail in his real estate, and an absolute interest in his personalty. Simmons v. Simmon, 8 Sim. 22; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

7. A testator, by his will, devised all his real estate to executors for the purposes therein-after stated; and after empowering them, either to continue his business, or to dispose of it, he gives the profits of it in the one case, and interest of the moneys arising from such sale in the other, and also the interest of the securities on which the rest of his capital should be invested, to his daughter for life, her receipt to be a discharge. He then gives the rents and profits of all his real estates during her life, and at her decease he devises and bequeaths to her heirs all his estates, real and personal, as tenants in common; if his daughter has but one child, such child is to possess the whole, but if she should die without issue, then at her decease he gives certain legacies. He next directs all his goods and effects to be sold, his said legacies to be paid, and a sum invested sufficient to purchase 150*l.* a year, which is to be paid to the husband of the daughter. He then orders the real estates to be sold at the decease of his daughter, or at the decease of his brothers and sisters, according as a particular event may turn out; and he gives over to certain persons all the residue of his personal estate, including the proceeds of the sale of the real estates, when sold, and the rents of them until they are sold. The daughter died without having had issue:—Held, that the daughter took an estate tail in the freeholds; that the real and personal estate being given over together, she took the personal estate absolutely; that the annuity of 150*l.* was charged both on the real and personal estate. Dunk v. Fenner, 2 Russ. & M. 557.

8. Devise and bequest to A., and the heirs of his body, with limitation over, in case of no such heirs:—Held, an estate tail in real estate, and an absolute interest in personal, the limitation over being void; but if expressed “if he leaves no such heirs,” it would be good, as confined to the time of the death, and not after an indefinite failure of issue. Crook v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 197.

9. Bequest of personal estate to one for life, and if he has no heirs, over:—Held, he took an absolute interest. Boden v. Watson, Ambl. 398.

10. J. H., by his will, gave to C. H., his adopted daughter, 20,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, and his house and landed property to C. and M. The will then proceeded in the following terms: “But in case of her death without lawful issue, I then will the money so left to her to be equally divided betwixt my nephews and nieces who may be living at the time; and the land, etc., at C., to my nephew the Rev. J. H.; and that at M. to my nephew Lieutenant J. H.; and I request R. C. and S. D. to be her guardians, and allow whatever they please for education annually, and after she has left school; and if she marries, it must be with their consent, and the property to be solely settled upon herself and children, and in no way changed or alienated:—Held, that under this limitation the 20,000l. consols vested absolutely in C. H. Candy v. Campbell, 8 Bli. N. S. 469; 2 Cl. & F. 421.

1. Bequest of portion of a chattel real "to my son J., and if he die without a lawful male heir, his part of the land falls to his brother R. I also order that the part of the lands which I bequeath to my son J. is to fall to his youngest son, without any incumbence:—Held, that J. did not take an absolute interest in his portion of the lands, and that the gift over to R. was not too remote. Dodds v. Dodds, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 374, 476.

2. A gift by will of all testator's funded property and other personal and real estate to his daughter S., she paying all his debts; "and S. shall in no way dispose of any of the funded property, but to hold the same for her natural life; and if she should die without issue, the landed property should go to J. for life. I will and direct that all the funded property shall go to W. and her heirs for ever":—Held, that S. took the funded property for life only, and that on her death it belonged to W. Exp. Lloyd, Re Banks' Trust, 2 Kay & J. 391.

III. GIFTS OF REAL ESTATE.

1. Death without Leaving Issue, 8064.
2. Gift Over on Failure of Testator's Own Issue, 8061.
3. Gift Over "at," "after" Devise, 8065.
4. Gift Over in Other Cases, 8066.
5. Enlargement of an Express Gift for Life into an Estate Tail by Implication, 8066.
6. Other Cases, 8067.

1. Death without Leaving Issue.

3. Death without leaving issue signifies, as to real estate, a general failure of issue. Franklin v. Lay, 6 Madd. 258.

4. Feme covert, by will pursuant to power, leaves to her husband "all the profits and revenues of my estate of A. and B. for life, and after his death my said estates to my children, if I should leave any to survive me; but if I leave no such child or children, nor the issue of such, the said estates to J. H., making him sole heir in default of issue, and after the death of my husband." The children take an estate tail, not fee simple, and the remainder to J. H. is good, not a contingent executory limitation on her dying without children living at her death, but a general dying without issue. Southby v. Stonehouse, 2 Ves. 611.

5. Devise to A. and the heirs of his body, but if he leaves no such heirs, over:—Held, that limitation over would be good as confined to the time of his death and not after an indefinite future of issue. Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 197.

6. A gift of real estate to A. for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common, and in case A. should die without leaving lawful issue, then with remainder over, is a gift to A. for life, with remainder to her children for life, with remainder to A. in tail. Parr v. Swindels, 4 Russ. 283; 6 L. J., Ch., 99.

7. Devise to A., B., and C., etc., share and share alike for their lives, remainder to their respective children, for their lives, and so to be continued from issue to issue for life; but if any of them die, leaving no issue, their shares to go to the survivors for their lives, and the issue of such of them as shall be dead, and for default of any issue then over:—Held, that A., B., C., etc., take estate tail with cross-remainders. Mortimer v. Wist, 2 Sm. 274.

8. Devise to A. for life, with remainder to B. and his heirs, but if B. died in the lifetime of A., without leaving lawful issue, then immediately after the death of A. the lands were to be sold, and the produce divided. And in case B. should outlive A. and die "without leaving any lawful issue," then the lands were to be sold by B.'s executors, and the proceeds divided. B. survived A.:—Held, that he took an estate tail, and not an estate in fee, with an executory devise over, and therefore that he could make a good title to a purchaser. Feakes v. Standley 24 Beav. 485.

2. Gift Over on Failure of Testator's Own Issue.

9 The testator, being married and in ill health, devised the estates in question, after failure of issue male of his own body (and issue male would have taken under his marriage settlement), to the defendant, who was his heir-at-law, for life, with remainder over:—Lord Northington declared, that the devise, being after a general failure of issue male, was too remote and void, and that the defendant took as heir-at-law; but reversed upon a bill of review. Lytton v. Lytton, 4 Bro. C. C. 441.

10. A testator was tenant for life of two estates with remainder to his wife for life, with remainder to their first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to himself in fee. By his will (made before 1837) he devised one of these estates, "in default of issue of his body, and subject to the life interest of his wife," to trustees for his brother E., for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. And he devised his other estate, "in the same terms," to the same trustees, to raise money to pay his debts, and subject thereto, in trust for his brother R. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. The testator died without issue:—Held, that by the words "in default of issue," the testator in the case of the estate devised to pay debts, clearly referred, not to a general failure of issue, but to a failure at the time of his death; that the same construction must prevail as to the other estate; and consequently that both estates were well devised. Bagot v. Legge, 34 L. J., Ch., 156; 12 W. R. 1097; 4 N. R. 492; 10 Jur. N. S., 494; 10 L. T., N. S., 898.

11. A devise to A. and B. and their heirs in default of issue male and female of the testator's own body, is, at the testator's death, a devise in possession, and not an executory devise; the contingency being determined at the instant the will takes place, viz., at the death of the testator without issue. French v. Cuddell, 3 Bro. P. C. 257.

1. An estate at C. was settled on A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to A. in fee. A. devised as follows: “As to the reversion and inheritance of the freehold estate at C., purchased by me in pursuance of my marriage articles, bearing date, etc., in case of failure of issue of my body by my said wife, I give and devise the same,” etc. He then limited the estate to his brothers in succession, and to their respective first and other sons in tail male. The Court was of opinion that the devise was good. Egerton v. Jones, 3 Sim. 409.

2. A term being limited in trust for H. in tail, remainder if I die without male issue in the life of H. to C. in tail: the remainder is good. Howard v. Norfolk (Duke), 2 Swan. 454.

3. If personalty be bequeathed to wife and children, and in case she die without issue by him a bequest over:—Held, a good executory bequest. Evitt v. Williams, 9 Mod. 209.

4. Estates settled on the husband for his life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail, remainder to the husband in fee, were devised by the husband, in case he should die without having any issue by his wife, to his wife for her life, remainder to his brother for his life, with remainder in trust for sale, with a direction to pay 4,000*l.* out of the proceeds, rents, and profits, to the eldest daughter of the brother, to be a vested interest on her attaining twenty-one or day of marriage:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the will, the ulterior limitation depended on the failure of issue at the death of the testator, and not on the general failure of issue, and that the daughter was entitled to the 4,000*l.* Re Rye's Settlement, 10 Hare, 106; 16 Jur. 1128; 22 L. J., Ch., 345; 1 W. R. 29.

Where the ulterior limitations in a will are made to depend upon a failure of issue of the testator, and there are found amongst the ulterior limitations provisions which could not reasonably be meant to depend upon a general failure of issue, the will is to be construed as referring to a failure of issue at the death, and not to a general failure of issue. Id.

The fixing of the time of the death of living persons as the period of payment, considered as inconsistent with the notion that the legacy was to take effect only on general failure of issue. Id.

3. Gift Over “at,” “after” Decease.

5. A testator devised lands to his son A. and his heirs for ever, and in case A. should die without lawful issue, desired that, after his death, all the property should go to his daughter and her heirs; and in case both A. and the daughter should die without lawful issue, desired the property should go to his brothers:—Held, an estate tail in A., and not fee simple, with an executory devise over. James v. Ryan, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 249.

6. A devise to J., W., C., etc., and their heirs, each in due succession as named, with usual limitations in failure of issue in A. B., and on the decease of A. B., does not import an indefinite failure of issue in A. B., but the limitation over to J., W., etc., is good by way of executory devise, these words meaning issue living at the time of decease of A. B., the first taker. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 1.

7. A testator, who died in 1833, devised his residuary real and personal estate to his eldest son and his heirs, executors, etc.; provided and his will was, that, in case his said son should die without leaving any lawful issue of his body, such part of his said residuary estate as was freehold and situate in certain places should at his death be divided into two equal parts, one of which parts he gave to his second son and his heirs, and the other to his daughter and her heirs.—Held, as to such part of the testator's residuary estate as was freehold and situate in the places named, that his eldest son took, not an estate tail in it, but an estate in fee, with an executory devise over to take effect at his death, in case he should have no issue then living. Exp. Davies, 2 Sim. N. S. 114; 15 Jur. 1102; 21 L. J., Ch., 135.

8. A devise to A. and to his heirs and assigns for ever, and, in case he should die without child or children of his body lawfully begotten, a gift over to the children of B., their heirs, and assigns for ever, on the decease of A.:—Held, to confer an estate in fee simple upon A., subject to be defeated by an executory devise, if, at his decease, there should be no issue of A. living. Parker v. Birks, 1 Kay & J. 156; 24 L. J., Ch., 117; 3 W. R. 102.

9. A testator was possessed of two estates in Ireland, Flesk Castle and Dick's Grove. The former he held under a lease for lives renewable for ever; the latter he held in fee. In 1833 he made a will, in which he said, “I give, devise, and bequeath to my son John Coltsmann all those my property, lands, tenements, and premises at and about Flesk Castle,” together with plate, furniture, etc. “I also devise and bequeath to my son John Coltsmann my lands, tenements, and premises at Dick's Grove.” All his estates, etc., were made chargeable with an annuity to his wife. He afterwards made a codicil, in which he said, “If it should happen that my son John Coltsmann die without heirs of his body lawfully, etc., in that case, and in default of such heirs I do hereby devise and direct that my lands, etc., at Flesk Castle, and the plate and furniture in my will specified, also my lands, etc., at Dick's Grove,” all charged with the annuity to his wife, “and also with a reasonable provision, made with my consent, by my son for his wife, payable for her life, shall at my son's death descend and be transferred to my grandson Daniel Cronin, his heirs, etc., for ever, the heir for the time being to add the name of ‘Coltsmann’ to the name of Cronin.” In the event of the contemplated death of the son without heirs, a charge was created in favour of a married daughter. The son never had any child. While in possession he executed disentailing deeds of both estates, and devised them to his wife:—Held, that, reading the will and codicil together, John Coltsmann took the estate of Flesk Castle in fee, with an executory devise over to Daniel Cronin, in the event that happened of John Coltsmann dying without heirs of his body living at his death; and, as to Dick's Grove, that as the law then (1835) stood, the gift was a gift of that estate to John Coltsmann for life only, with a contingent remainder to Daniel Cronin, in the event of John Coltsmann dying without heirs of his body living at his death. Coltsmann v. Coltsmann, 3 L. R., H. L., 121; 16 W. R. 943. See also Fay v. Fay, 5 L. R., Ir., 274.

4. Gift Over in Other Cases.

1. Under a devise of one estate to R. and his heirs, and if he dies without lawful issue then to W., he paying his two sisters 500*l.* apiece, and a devise of another estate to W. and his heirs, and if W. die without lawful issue then his estate to R., he paying his two sisters 500*l.* apiece, and if R. and W. die without lawful issue then to testator's three daughters and their surviving issue; R. took an estate in fee which was not cut down to an estate tail. Fisher v. Barry, 2 Hog. 153.

2. A devise of real estate to A., "and his heirs and assigns for ever," and from and after his decease without issue, "to be equally divided amongst the then surviving legatees, share and share alike":—Held, that the first limitation to A., being of an estate in fee in the largest terms, and the gift over being to the survivor of certain ascertained persons, a personal benefit was intended for them, and therefore the gift over must be taken to refer, not to an indefinite failure of issue, so as to cut down A.'s estate in fee to an estate tail, but to a failure of issue to take place within the lives of the executors devisees; and that event not having happened:—Held, that the executory devise had failed, and the estate in fee of A. became absolute. Greenwood v. Verdun, 1 Kay & J. 71; 21 L. J., Ch., 65; 3 W. R. 124; 3 Eq. Rep. 181.

3. A testator, in 1825, left all his property to his executor for the purpose of paying the following bequests, first paying debts and funeral expenses. He then bequeathed lands for ever to his illegitimate son T., giving him power to will and dispose of same if he had a family, but if he shall die without issue, then to go to the use of his daughter J., also illegitimate:—Held, that the executor took the fee in the lands, and that T. took an estate tail, the limitation over being not an executory devise, but a remainder, and that this limitation conferred the fee upon J. on indefinite failure of issue of T., J. taking the entire estate remaining in the executor. Ormsby v. Anderson, 11 W. R. 379.

4. B. by will, dated 1822, gives to his daughter S. certain lands in consideration that she pay to C., or her heirs, 50*l.* by instalments of 10*l.* per annum for five years, to commence twelve months after testator's decease; but in case S. dies without lawful issue, the lands to go to testator's son T. or his heirs, in consideration that he pays to testator's son J. or his heirs the sum of 250*l.* twelve months after the decease of testator's daughter S. After the testator's death S. executed a disentailing deed, by which she affected to convey the property to trustees upon trust for the survivor of herself and her husband. S. died without issue, leaving her husband surviving, and the title deeds of the property were in his possession. On a special case, submitting the questions whether the husband of S. was entitled to retain the deeds, and whether the charge of 250*l.* in favour of J. was a valid charge upon the property:—Held, having regard especially to the two charges of 50*l.* and 250*l.* created by the testator's will, that S. took an estate in fee simple with an executory devise over in the event of her dying without leaving issue living at her death, and therefore that the husband of S. was not entitled to the deeds, and that the 250*l.* was a valid charge on the property. Blinston v. Warburton, 2 Kay & J. 400; 25 L. J., Ch., 468; 2 Jur., N. S., 858.

5. A testator devised realty to trustees on trust to pay the rents and income thereof to his wife for the maintenance, education, and benefit of his infant son until twenty-one, without liability to account for the same, and upon his said son attaining twenty-one, then upon trust for him absolutely; but if he should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then upon trust for his said wife during life or widowhood, with remainder over:—Held, that the infant son was a tenant in fee simple in possession, with an executory limitation over. Re Morgan's Estate, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 114; 48 L. T. 964; 31 W. R. 948.

See also XLIII. v. 10 ante.

5. Enlargement of an Express Gift for Life into an Estate Tail by Implication.

6. An express limitation for life, followed by a limitation over, in case the taker should die without issue not leaving any children:—Held, on objection to title taken in a suit for specific performance, to confer an estate tail. Machell v. Widding, 8 Sim. 4; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 182.

7. Devise in trust for the testator's daughters, M. and C., for their lives, for their separate use; and in case both M. and C. should die without leaving issue, then over-implied estates tail to M. and C., with cross-remainders in tail. Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157.

8. An estate for life cannot be enlarged to an estate tail by connecting it with a gift on failure of issue living at a particular time, as it may by connecting it with a gift upon the failure of issue generally. Jenkins v. Hughes, 6 Jur., N. S., 1043; 8 W. R. 667.

9. A gift of real estate to A. for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common, and in case A. should die without leaving lawful issue, then with remainder over, is a gift to A. for life, with remainder to her children for life, with remainder to A. in tail. Parr v. Swindells, 4 Russ. 283; 6 L. J., Ch., 99.

10. In a devise of land to A. for life, and if A. die without issue then to B.; though here is an express estate for life to A., yet the subsequent words will turn it into an estate tail: but where lands are devised to A. for life, remainder to trustees, etc., remainder to his first, etc., son in tail male, etc., and if A. dies without issue then, etc., this will not give an estate tail to A.; but the words "without issue" must be intended "without such issue." Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. W. 696.

11. J. being seised of some lands in fee and vested que trust or other lands, devises them to A. for life; remainder to his first and second son in tail male (going no further); and after A.'s death without issue male, then to a charity:—Held, that A. was tenant in tail until issue born, saving as to the trust estate. Att.-Gen. v. Sutton, 3 Bro. P. C. 75; 1 P. W. 754.

1. Devise to S. for life, remainder to his eldest son and his issue male, and for want of issue of S., to, etc. S. died without issue, and:—Held, he took an estate tail in remainder, like in Langley v. Baldwin; 1 Eq. Cas. abr. pl. 29, cited in 1 P. W. 759; 1 Ves. 26. Stanley v. Lennard, Amb. 355; 1 Eden 87.

2. The Court held, upon the particular language of a will, that an estate tail would not be implied in A. and B., though an estate was given to them for life, and the property was, upon failure of their issue male, limited over to their granddaughters, and there was no express limitation which would include all their issue male. Houston v. Platt, 7 L. J., Ch., 20.

3. A testator, in a very ungrammatical and obscure will, devised real and personal property, so as to vest the whole legal interest in trustees, in trust for A. and B., during their lives to their separate use. Some unfinished and unconnected portions of sentences succeeded, and these were followed by a direction that, after the decease of A. and B., and failure of their male issue, the property should go to the granddaughter. A. and B. had each only one child, a daughter, and both these daughters were mentioned in the will:—Held, upon the whole context of the will, that A. and B. were only tenants for life, and that an estate in tail male was not to be raised in them by implication. Houston v. Hughes, 5 Russ. 116.

4. When the general intent is to make a strict settlement, it shall prevail, though some of the limitations may seem contingent; but where the intent to create an estate tail is not plain, but doubtful, the Court will lay hold of anything, rather than put it in the power of a person on a remote contingency to bar all subsequent remainders. Lethieullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 781, 797.

J. devised all his lands, etc., to his daughter, B., for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., remainder to the use of the first son of B., remainder to the heirs male of the body of said first son, with divers remainders over, and in case of the death of B. without issue of her body living at her decease, then testator devised said lands to his trustees, until his cousin, C., should attain the age of twenty-one; and in case of the death of C. under twenty-one without issue, then to B. for life, remainder to his first, etc., son in tail, remainder to E. for life, remainder to his first, etc., son in tail, remainder over. The Ld. Ch. inclined to confine the contingency in the will of J. of B.'s dying without issue of her body living at her death, to the death of C. under twenty-one, and that the subsequent limitations to C. after attaining twenty-one, and to D. and E., are not contingent but vested remainders. Id. 775; Amb. 204. And see 2 Ken. Ch. 40.

5. Testator devised to S. K. certain real estate for life, charged with the annuities mentioned in his will, and then proceeded: "But in case the aforesaid annuitants, or any of them, shall survive the said S. K., I then give the aforesaid estate unto the eldest surviving son of S. K., charged with the aforesaid annuities; but in default of issue male, I give the above-demised premises unto his brother T. K., charged in like manner with the aforesaid annuities, and unto his eldest surviving son on the same conditions; but in default of issue male, my will is, that the aforesaid demised premises do descend unto my heirs-at-law, charged nevertheless with the above-mentioned annuities." S. K. survived all the annuitants mentioned in the will, and after his death J. K., his eldest son and heir-at-law, enjoyed the estate during his life, and then died, leaving a widow and an only daughter:—Held, first, that the dispositions of the devised estate after the death of S. K. were not meant to be contingent on his being survived by all or any one of the annuitants mentioned in the will. Secondly, that S. K. took an estate in tail male, and this estate not having been barred either by himself or by his eldest son J. K., his second son S. K. was entitled to the estate as tenant in tail male, subject to the dower of J. K.'s widow. Key v. Key, 17 Jur. 769; 22 L. J., Ch., 641; 4 De G. M. & G. 673; 1 Eq. Rep. 82.

6. Devise to T. during his natural life, and from and after his decease unto his eldest son if he should have arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and in default of his having a son, then over. T. died leaving an eldest son a minor:—Held, that on the death of T. the eldest son took an estate in fee liable to be divested on his death under the age of twenty-one, with an executory devise over in that event to T. in tail. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 410; 45 L. J., Ch., 23; 34 L. T. 82; 24 W. R. 329.

6. Other Cases.

7. Limitation over after legitimate heirs, too remote, unless capable of being confined to the period of the party's death. Barret v. Beckford, 1 Ves. 519.

8. One devises all his lands, after the death of his executors, to A. and his heirs for ever; but if he die, leaving no son, then to B. This is a good executory devise to B. if A. dies without issue, because the contingency must happen within the compass of a life. Fairfax v. Heron, Prec. Ch. 67.

9. A., owner in fee, by his will, left his third son, M., the lands of G. for ever; "but in case he should die unmarried, or without lawful issue, in that case he may will one-half of it as he pleases, and the other half to go, share and share alike, between my surviving sons and their families." The will ended in these words:—"All the bequests given my son R., my grandson M., son to my son J., and also my other three sons M., C., and H., of my property, no part of it shall or will be liable or pay any debts they may contract, nor sell or mortgage same; but always go in the male line, free of any debt of theirs." M. did die without issue, having executed a disentailing deed of the lands of G., and devised them to B. and his heirs:—Held, that M. took an estate tail under A.'s will. Re Thompson, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 517; 16 Ir. Ch. R. 228.

10. A testator by his will devised S. and H. estates to trustees upon trust for R. and the heirs of his body, but in case he should die under twenty-one, and without issue, H. estate was to be in trust for A. and the heirs of her body, but in case she should die under twenty-one, and without issue, upon the same trusts as were thereafter declared concerning S. estate; and if R. should die under twenty-one, and without issue, as to S. estate, for the testator's son and daughter-in-law for their lives and subject to the trusts thereinbefore thereof declared, in trust for other persons named. Both R. and A. attained twenty-one, and died without issue. Per Lord St. Leonards.—The proper construction of the devise is, that the estate should go over if R. died at any time without issue. Grey v. Pearson, 5 W. R. 454; 26 L. J., Ch., 473; 3 Jur., N. S., 823; 6 H. L. Ca. 61.

1. H., by will, gave his personalty to his wife, and all his real estate by description for the maintenance of herself and his three children, until his son G. attained twenty-one, when he gave him certain portions of the property charged with an allowance to his (testator's) wife; to his son H., when twenty-one, certain portions on the same condition; and to his daughter E., at twenty-one, certain portions; as to some to the wife for life, and at her decease to the daughter absolutely. If G. died without issue, then H. to possess the property; and if H. died before G. without issue, then G. to have H.'s property. If E. died without issue, her property to be equally divided between her brothers, or the survivor; but if she survived them and they left no issue, then she to have all the property. But if the wife survived all the children, to her for life; remainder to his (the testator's) nephews and nieces equally. If there should be an after-born child which survived G. and H., they leaving no issue, the whole to such child; and if such child died without issue, to the wife for life, as if there had been only three children. Testator left four children, one after-born, and nephews and nieces. G. died an infant and unmarried; and on petition by H. to have certain money paid into court by a railway company, paid out to him—ordered accordingly; and held, that the wife took a life estate until eldest son attained twenty-one, and that there were three estates tail successively, and H. was now tenant in tail. The after-born child presented a counter-petition, which was dismissed with costs as against the company; but the costs of the daughter and H. appearing separately.—Held, not costs occasioned by adverse claimants. Re Hinks's Estate, 2 W. R. 108.

Implied Gift to Issue.] 2. Testator devised the residue of his freehold estates to his son S. for life, remainder to such issue male or female as S. should appoint; but if S. should die without issue male or female, testator devised same to his daughter M., if she married with consent, and to the issue of such marriage male or female. M. married with consent, and S. died without issue.—Held, that the defendant, a son of M., took no estate under the will. Beasley v. Hourigan, Hay. & J. 497.

3. Devise to testator's son A., and to his issue male and female, in such shares, manner, and proportions as he might by deed or will appoint, with power to jointure a wife; and in case of the death of A. without lawful issue, then to testator's three daughters equally, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and to their heirs and assigns.—Held, that A. took an estate tail. Whitsett v. Thompson, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 119.

4. A testator devised the lands of A. to his son S. during his natural life sans waste, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., and from and after the decease of the said S. to the use of the heirs male of the said S., in such shares and proportions and subject to such charges as the said S. should by deed or will appoint; and in case of the said S. dying without issue male, to permit his second son J. to receive the rents for his life sans waste, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc.; and from and after the decease of the said J. to the use of the male children of the said J. in the same manner and with the like power of appointment, and charging as he had hereinbefore devised the same to the male children of his son S., with remainders over in the same terms to testator's third son T., and remainder to his male children, and remainder to his own right heirs. He then devised the lands of B. to his son J. for life, with remainder to his male children as he should appoint, and in default of appointment to the first son of J., and the heirs male of his body, remainder in like manner to the second, third, and every other son of J., and if J. died without issue male to S., to be disposed of among his issue as he should think proper; and he directed that if S. should die without issue male, and that in consequence thereof the lands of A. should descend to his second son J. and issue male, then the lands of B. should immediately descend and go to T. and his issue male, and he gave powers of leasing to S., J., and T., as they should respectively become seized of the said estates.—Held, that S. took an estate tail in the lands of A. Phillips v. Phillips, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 518.

IV. EFFECT OF THE WILLS ACT,

1 Vict., c. 26, s. 29

5. In ascertaining whether the words "die without issue," in a will made subsequently to the 1 Vict., c. 26, mean an indefinite failure of issue, a contrary intention, within the meaning of s. 29, is not to be inferred from the use of those very words. Re O'Bierne, 1 J. & L. 352; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 171.

Under a bequest of personalty by will executed subsequently to the 1 Vict., c. 26, to "A. and B., to be divided equally, with a request to A. that, should he die without lawful issue, the property which I bequeath him shall revert back to the sons of B." A. does not take an absolute interest in the moiety. Id.

6. Mere presumption of intention is not sufficient to exclude the operation of the 29th section of the Wills Act. Re Mid-Kent Railway Act, 1856, Emp. Bate, 1 N. R. 470.

7. The 29th section of the Statute of Wills has no application to cases in which the words "dying without issue" are combined with other words, such as "dying under twenty-one," which additional words, upon the authority of decided cases, modify their meaning. Morris v. Morris, 17 Beav. 193; 17 Jur. 966; 1 Eq. Rep. 167; 1 W. R. 377.

A testator devised an estate in fee to his son, but if he should die under twenty-one, over. By a codicil he limited the estate over, in the event of the son dying without issue,

"or" under twenty-one:—Held, that "or" must be read "and," and that the executory devise over took effect only on the happening of both events, and consequently that A., on attaining twenty-one, had an absolute estate in fee simple. Ib.

Señble, also, that if the clauses were construed disjunctively, the devisee would have an estate tail by virtue of the words "die without issue," notwithstanding the 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 29. 8 C. 1 W. R. 377.

1. The principle of construction applied, in the case of wills made since 1837, to the words "die without issue" by the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 29, is not affected by the limitation over being in case the first taker shall "die without male issue." Upton v. Hardman, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 157.

By a will, made in 1839, a perpetually renewable freehold was devised to A., subject to payment of debts and legacies, and in case he should "die without male issue," to B, but with a power to A. to charge the lands with a jointure and portions for his female issue:—Held, first, that A. took an estate quasi in fee, with an executory devise over in the event of his dying without leaving male issue at his death. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the language of the will did not evince any contrary intention excluding the application of the rule. Ib.

2. A testator since the Wills Act devised real estate to A., and if he should die without leaving lawful issue in the lifetime of B., then over. A. died in the lifetime of B., leaving issue one child, who also died in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Jarman v. Vye, 2 L. R., Eq., 784; 35 L. J., Ch., 821; 14 W. R. 1011.

3. A., by will dated in May 1839, bequeathed to his illegitimate son R. certain leaseholds, and if R. should die without "heirs or issue," over:—Held, that as s. 29 of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, is expressly confined to the word "issue," it makes no change in the meaning of the expression "die without heirs of the body," and therefore ("without heirs," in the will, meaning "without heirs of the body," R. being illegitimate) the will did not confer the absolute interest on R., with an executory devise over in the case of his dying without issue living at his death, but an estate tail, and, the property being leasehold, the absolute interest. Re Sallery, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 236.

4. A testator, in 1846, gave his residuary real and personal estate to J. S. L. and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten for ever; but in case of his death without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to P. C. L. in the same manner; and if P. C. L. should die without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to A. in the same manner. By a codicil the testator, after reciting that by his will he had directed that in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving," the residue of his real and personal estates should go to P. C. L., revoked that bequest, and in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving," gave the residuary estate to the eldest daughter (if any) of J. S. L.:—Held, that the Wills Act, 1 Vict., c. 26, s. 29, did not apply, and that the gifts over to P. C. L. and A. were void as to the personality, as being on an indefinite failure of heirs male, and that the codicil did not alter their effect, and that under the will and codicil J. S. L. took an absolute interest in the personality, subject only to an executory gift over in favour of his eldest daughter if he died leaving no male issue surviving him. Dawson v. Small, 9 L. R., Ch., 651.

5. A testator devised his fee simple lands to be equally divided between his sons J. and T., and then proceeded as follows: "The fee simple estates and the freeholds to descend to the heirs of J. and T. for ever; but in the event of both sons dying without issue, then to be equally divided between my daughters, share and share alike":—Held, that J. and T. took estates tail with cross-remainders between them. Fay v. Fay, 5 L. R. Ir., 274.

6. A testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* to trustees upon trust for his son A. for life, with remainder to the children of A. He then gave the residue of his estate and effects to his trustees, upon trust for all his children in equal shares, and the heirs of their respective bodies. The following words were then added in a parenthesis: "Except as to my son A. and his children, whose share, in consequence of the 1,000*l.* set apart for him and them as aforesaid, shall be rated at 1,000*l.* less than that of any other child." The will then declared that in case of a failure of issue of any child, the share of him or her whose issue should fail should be held on the trusts therein mentioned. The testator left freehold estates and personality applicable to the trusts declared of the residue:—Held, that the words "failure of issue" were not made by the 29th section of the Wills Act to mean failure of issue at the death of A. Green v. Green, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 465; 14 Jur. 73; 3 De G. & Sm. 480.

7. A. gave his real and personal estate upon trust as to the income for his brothers, E. and C., or the heirs of their bodies, and declared that if either brother should die, leaving heirs of his body, then the share of such brother should descend to such heirs, but if one brother should die without lawful issue, then the whole income should be paid to the surviving brother, or in case of his death also to his lawfully begotten heir; but in case both brothers should demise without issue lawfully begotten, then the whole property should be divided among the testator's nearest of kin. And he appointed executors, with power to appoint other executors, as to them might seem fit, also with full power to get in and receive all moneys, or securities for money, and to sell, dispose of, and convert into money all other his real and personal estate, either by public auction or private contract, as to them should seem meet:—Held, that there was an effectual gift over of the personality to the next of kin, in the event of E. and C. dying without leaving issue at their respective deceases. Greenway v. Greenway, 2 De G. F. & J. 128; 1 Giff. 131; 5 Jur., N. S., 888.

The object of the 29th section of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26 is to redress the inconvenience arising from the words "dying without issue," and similar words having acquired a legal meaning, different from the popular meaning. Ib.

Held, also, that there was no conversion of the real estate into personality from the death of the testator. Ib.

Held, also, that the brothers took the real estates as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders in tail, with remainder to the next of kin in fee. Ib.

LVII. Words "Death without Issue," etc. When Referable to the Objects of a Prior Devise.

- I. Gifts of Personal Estate, 8070.
- II. Gifts of Real Estate, 8073.
- III. Devise of Reversions, 8077.

I. GIFTS OF PERSONAL ESTATE.

1. In General, 8070.
2. Effect of the word "Such," 8072.

1. In General.

1. The words "if he shall happen to die without issue" may be so controlled by the context of a will as to mean children, and the remainder over will in that case not be too remote. Att.-Gen. v. Bayley, 2 Bro. C. C. 553.

2. Three annuities for a term of years bequeathed in trust for three children, A., B., and C., respectively for life; in case of the death of either leaving any child or children, his or her annuity to be equally divided between such child or children, share and share alike; in case of the death of either without issue, his or her annuity to go to the survivor or survivors of them equally, share and share alike, with a limitation over in case of the deaths of all without issue as aforesaid. A. died without issue; A.'s annuity went to B. and C., subject to the contingent limitation over; and upon B.'s death, leaving children, belongs in moieties absolutely to his administrator and C. Vandergucht v. Blake, 2 Ves. J. 533.

3. Produce of estate devised for sale directed to be paid between J. and A., the wife of B., in equal proportions, share and share alike; and in case either should die leaving children, trustees to stand possessed of moiety so given to J. and A. to and for the use and benefit of such child or children at twenty-one, equally to be divided if more than one; and until twenty-one, money to be invested in funds. Interest for children's maintenance. If either J. or A. should die without children, survivor to take share:—Held, J. and A. only tenants for life. Fanthing v. Allen, 2 Madd. 310.

4. Bequest to the children of testator's daughter, to the number of four, of the sum of 1,000*l.* each, if more the 1,000*l.* to be divided between such as should be living at testator's death; but if his daughter should die without issue, then over: a child by another husband, born after testator's death, cannot take, and the bequest over is good, being not a limitation over, but an absolute legacy. Bequest of the residue to his daughter and her issue, and for want of such issue over; the limitation over too remote, and therefore void. Salheld v. Vernon, 1 Eden, 64.

5. Limitation of a trust of a term to a man for life, remainder to his first, etc., son in tail, and for want of issue male then to all his daughters; there never having been a son, adjudged the trust to the daughter good. Higgins v. Dowler, 1 P. W. 98; Salk. 156; 2 Vern. 600.

6. Bequest of an annuity to A. and B., and to the survivor for life; and if A. should have any "children," then to be equally divided between them; but if A. should die "without lawful issue," then to C. and his heirs for ever:—Held, that the children of A. took absolute interests in a perpetual annuity. Robinson v. Hunt, 4 Beav. 450.

7. Where real and personal estates are given together for life, and so limited over that a child of the tenant for life would take a vested interest in the real estate at its birth, and in the personal estate, at twenty-one, being a son, or at twenty-one or marriage, being a daughter, and there is a gift over in the event of the tenant for life dying without issue, it is to be intended a dying without such issue as would take by force of the prior limitations. Malcolm v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. 416.

A testatrix, after bequeathing divers annuities and legacies, and amongst others a sum of stock to M. M., to vest at twenty-one or marriage, devised and bequeathed a West India plantation, and all the residue of her money in the funds, after payment of the annuities and legacies thereinbefore bequeathed, and also her plate, books, and certain portraits unto E. G. T. and M. T., for their lives equally; and after the death of either, the whole to the survivor for life; and after the decease of the survivor, then unto the children of M. T., as she should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, then the plantation and the residue of the money in the funds to be equally divided among the said children and their heirs; the funded property to be an interest vested in them, being sons at twenty-one, and being daughters at twenty-one or marriage; but in case M. T. should die without issue of her body lawfully begotten, the testatrix devised the plantation equally among all the children of A. W., and their heirs; and in case M. T. should die without issue as aforesaid, she then bequeathed her said residue of her money in the funds, and all her said plate, books, and portraits, unto M. T. for life; and after his decease to his eldest son for ever; but in case M. T. should die under age, and without issue, then the said residue of her money in the funds, plate, books, and portraits unto M. M. absolutely. All the rest and residue of her estate and effects the testatrix gave and bequeathed unto E. G. T. and M. T. absolutely. M. T. having survived E. G. T., and died without having been married, it was held that the stock legacy to M. M., which had lapsed by her death under age and unmarried, passed under the residuary bequest of the funded property for the benefit of T. M., and did not sink into the general residue. Id.

1. Bequest of personal estate to A. for life, remainder to the children of A. equally, and in default of issue of A., upon trust to sell and divide equally amongst B. and C. and all their children “then” living, share and share alike:—Held, that the gift was not too remote, and that B. and C. and their children living at the death of A. alone took the personal estate as tenants in common absolutely. Cormack v. Copous, 17 Beav. 397.

2. Gift to daughters for life, with remainder to the child or children of such daughters as they should appoint, in default of appointment equally. And on the death of such of the said daughters after attaining twenty-one as should die without issue, her share to be paid to her personal representative:—Held, that “issue” meant issue who should be entitled under the former gift, i.e., children. Re Wyndham's Trusts, 1 L. R., Eq. 290.

3. Testator devises the term to A. for life, remainder to such of his issue as he shall appoint; and if A. die without issue, remainder to B. This is a good devise to B. Target v. Gaunt, 1 P. W. 432; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 149; 10 Mod. 402.

4. Testator gave a legacy to his son, an estate in fee to a nephew, then several parts of his freehold estates, and a future purchase of freehold to be made with part of his personal property, and all his leasehold to his wife for life; then to his son and his issue lawfully begotten, or to be begotten, to be divided among them as he should think fit. If he die without issue, as well present freehold and leasehold as the estates to be purchased, to be sold, the produce to go over, no part of his present freehold and leasehold, or the estates to be purchased, to be sold during life of wife and son. All the rent, residue, and remainder of his property and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, after paying debts, etc., to the wife. The son is tenant for life, and the devise over is good; but estates not mentioned do not pass by it. Hockley v. Mawbey, 1 Ves. J. 143.

5. Devise to A. for life, with power to trustees to settle a jointure on his wife, and, subsequent thereto, in strict settlement on the issue of such marriage; but if A. should die without any issue of his body, then over. The latter words give him an estate tail by implication. Allanson v. Clitheroe, 1 Ves. 24.

6. A testator bequeathed a sum of stock to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to his son during life, with a direction, if he married a woman with a fortune of a specified amount, to settle the fund upon her and the issue of such marriage; but in case of the son's decease, leaving no issue of his body, the stock was given over to various persons; and the testator also disposed of the residue of his estate. The son married a woman who had not the fortune required by the will, and died leaving issue of that marriage:—Held, that the son's life interest in the stock was not extended by implication to a quasi estate tail; that the issue of his marriage took no interest in the stock; that the gifts over failed; and that after the son's death the stock belonged to the residuary legatee. Andree v. Ward, 1

Russ. 260; 4 L. J., Ch., 98; and Green v. Ward, 1 Russ. 262; 4 L. J., Ch., 99.

7. Upon a bequest of equal legacies to testator's six children, to be paid on their respectively attaining twenty-one, or the marriage of the daughters; the interest to be paid in the meantime, and the principal as they might direct to their issue, but in case they should die without issue the principal to go among “the survivors” of his children in equal proportions; after directing his freehold estate to be sold and all the residue of his personal estate, he declared the trusts to be, equally to pay and divide the money therefrom, so soon as his youngest child should attain twenty-one, unto and amongst all his children, share and share alike, and in case of the death of any, leaving lawful issue, the share of the parent so dying to such issue:—Held, that the first bequest was limited to issue living at the death of the children, and that the gift over, on failure of issues, referred to the same objects; and as to the second bequest, that the residuary share of a child who attained twenty-one, and died before the period of division, passed to his representatives, and, semble, no child not attaining twenty-one took any interest; that the word “survivors,” in the latter clause, was to be construed in its natural sense, and not to mean “others,” and that the construction of the word in one part of the will determined its construction in the other part also; lastly, that the gift of the parent's share to such issue applied both to the original and accruing shares of the residue, but not to the specific legacies mentioned in the former clause. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare 14; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 423; 6 Jur. 663.

8. The testator gave his real and personal estate in trust for his nephew, John, for life, and after his death to be conveyed and transferred to the eldest son of John on his attaining twenty-one, with limitations over in like manner, if there were no such son of John, to two other nephews of the testator, and their sons successively; and in case none of them, the said three nephews, should have a son who should survive the survivor of them, and attain twenty-one, the testator then devised the estate in like manner to a fourth nephew and his sons, with remainders over to their respective daughters:—Held, that the testator, in the words of devise to the fourth nephew, must be construed to mean that such limitation should take effect in case none of the first three nephews should leave a son surviving his parent and attaining twenty-one,—a different construction being repugnant to specific directions as well as to the general scheme of the will,—creating cases of intestacy,—and supposing a capricious and irrational intention; and that, therefore, a son of John, surviving his father and attaining twenty-one, was entitled to an absolute conveyance and transfer of the real and personal estate. Hillerson v. Lowe, 2 Hare 355; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321; 7 Jur. 482.

9. A testator by his will gave to C., described as his natural daughter, a sum of stock, and his house and land at C., with a direction, that if she married, the property should be settled solely upon herself and children but in case of death without lawful issue, the money so left to her to be equally divided betwixt his nephews and nieces who might be living at the time, and the land at C. to his nephew J. H. :—Held, that C. took an absolute interest in the stock. Campbell v. Harding, 2 Russ. & M. 390.

1. A testator gave the income of his personal and the rents of his real estate to his daughter for life, for her separate use; and after her decease and that of his wife, he gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees in trust, to sell and pay half the produce "to the issue" of his daughters equally, to be paid at twenty-one; and if only one child, then to such one child; and he directed the trustees to apply the interest in the maintenance and education of such issue; "and in default of such issue," he gave such moiety of the residue between his nephews and nieces living at the death of his daughter; and he gave the other moiety of the residue at the decease of his wife and daughter, without issue, to the trustees to permit his godson to take the income for life, and after his decease to certain charities:—Held, that "issue," in the first clause, was to be construed "children," but in the second clause in its ordinary, unrestricted sense, and consequently that the gift over of the first moiety upon the death of the daughter without issue was good, but was too remote as to the second. Carter v. Bentall, 2 Beav. 551; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 303; 4 Jur. 691.

2. By a settlement made in 1811 the Cardigan family plate was settled upon trust for Robert Earl of Cardigan for life, and after his death for James Thomas Lord Brudenell, the son and heir apparent of Robert Earl of Cardigan, for his life, and after his death in trust for the first son of the body of James Thomas Lord Brudenell, his executors and assigns; but if such first son should die under twenty-one, without leaving issue male living at his death, then for the second son, his executors, administrators, and assigns, with like executory trusts in favour of the other sons of James Thomas Lord Brudenell; and if he should not have any son or sons, or having such all of them should die under twenty-one, and some of them should leave issue male living at his death, then in trust for the second son of Robert Earl of Cardigan, his executors, administrators, and assigns; but if such second son should die under twenty-one without leaving issue male living at his death, then in trust for the third and other sons of Robert Earl of Cardigan; and if there should not be any son of Robert Earl of Cardigan or James Thomas Lord Brudenell who should live to attain twenty-one or should die under that age leaving issue male living at his death, then in trust for the settlor. Robert Earl of Cardigan had only one son, James Thomas Lord Brudenell, who attained twenty-one and died without issue:—Held, that upon his death the ultimate trust in favour of the settlor took effect, the words "any son" in the gift over being read "any such son as is hereinbefore mentioned." Cardigan v. Curzon-Issve, 9 L. R., Eq., 358; 22 L. T., N. S., 640.

3. Under a gift by a testator to his daughter for her life, with remainder to her children, with remainder, in the event of any such children dying under twenty-one, to their children who should survive his daughter and attain twenty-one; and after several intermediate limitations, with a limitation over, provided there should be no child of his daughter, or, being such, they should not attain twenty-one, or leave issue who should attain twenty-one:—Held, that the limitation over was intended to take effect only on failure of grandchildren who should survive the testator's daughter, and not attain twenty-one, and was therefore not too remote. Trickey v. Trickey, 3 Myl. & K. 560.

4. A testator gave his residuary estate to such children as his nephews and niece W., T., and D. should leave at their respective deceases, one-third to the "child or children" of W., and the two other thirds similarly to the "child or children" of T. and D. respectively, and directed that, in case of the death of a nephew or niece without leaving any "children or child," then that third share should be paid to the "children or child" of the other or others leaving "children or a child;" but that if W., T., and D. should all die "without leaving any issue lawfully begotten," the whole residue should go to the children of G. W., T., and D. All died, without leaving children, but one of them left grandchildren:—Held, that "children" must be construed in its natural sense, and not so as to include grandchildren; that "issue" was not to be read "such issue," so as to be confined to children; and that therefore, in the events which had happened, the fund was undisposed of. Pride v. Fooks, 3 De G. & J. 252; 5 Jur., N. S., 158; 28 L. J., Ch., 81; 1 L. T., N. S., 292. Reversing 4 Jur., N. S., 678.

5. A father gave a fund of 66,666l. 13s. 4d. consols to trustees, upon trust to pay 1,000l. a year to each of his two daughters for their lives, and after the death of each daughter he gave 33,333l. 6s. 8d. consols, which he described as the share of each daughter, unto and among all and every such child or children she might happen to leave at her decease, to be equally divided between them when and as they should attain the age of twenty-one years, and if but one child, then to such only child; and in case either of his daughters should die without issue, he directed that the 33,333l. 6s. 8d. consols, being the share of her so dying, should be transferred by his trustee to such person or persons, and in such manner as she by her will and testament in writing duly executed might direct and appoint. There was a general residuary gift. One of the daughters executed the power and died, having had one child, who died in her lifetime, leaving children who survived their grandmother:—Held, that the words "die without issue" meant such issue as were previously mentioned, and that the power was validly exercised. Re Mercer, Davies v. Mercer, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 182; 35 L. T., N. S., 701.

2. Effect of the word "Such."

6. Devise of a personal estate to A. for life, and afterwards for her children, and the yearly interest and produce to be for their maintenance till the sons attain twenty-one, and the daughter eighteen, at which ages their respective portions to be paid, and for want of such issue, then to B. A. dies without issue, and the devise over to B. was held good, the words "for want of such issue" being the same as "for want of such children." Staines v. Maddock, 3 Bro. P. C. 108; S. C. nom. Maddock v. Staines, 2 P. W. 421.

1. One possessed of a term devises it to A. for life; remainder to his first, etc., son in tail successively; remainder to his daughter; and if A. shall have neither son nor daughter, then to J. S. A. dies, having never had a son or daughter; the devise over to J. S. is good. Stanley v. Leigh, 2 P. W. 686.

2. Limitation of trust of term to several persons for life successively, then to the child, etc., of one of them, and for want of such issue, or after their decease, to S. for life, is a good limitation to S. Oakes v. Chalfont, Pol. 38.

3. A term was limited to A. for life, then to B. for life, then to such child as B. should leave at his death, and for want of such a child to C. Quere, if the remainder to C. is good. Heyward v. Rogers, 1 Vern. 461.

4. Bequest of residue to testator's daughter and her issue, and for want of such issue over. The limitation over too remote, and therefore void. Salheld v. Vernon, 1 Eden 64.

II. GIFTS OF REAL ESTATE.

1. In General, 8073.

2. Gift to some only of the Issue, 8074.

3. Effect of the word "Such," 8075.

4. Death without Leaving Issue, 8077.

1. In General.

5. A testatrix devises to A. for life, remainder to A.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainder to A.'s daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between them in tail, remainder to trustees for a term of years upon trusts to raise and pay such legacies as she had thereafter given or should give by any codicil; and in a subsequent part of the will she bequeaths various legacies from and immediately after the decease and failure of issue of A. :—Held, that "failure of issue" in the gift of the legacies must be construed "failure of such issue" as were included in the limitation of the estate; and that therefore the bequests were not too remote. Morse v. Ormonde (Lord), 1 Russ. 382; 4 L. J., Ch., 158; 5 Madd. 99.

6. Devise to A. for life, with power for trustees to settle a jointure on his wife, and subject thereto in strict settlement on the issue of such marriage; but if A. should die without any issue of his body, then over. The latter words give him an estate tail by implication. Allanson v. Clitherow, 1 Ves. 24.

7. On a gift of real and personal estate to A. and B. for life, with estates tail to their issue in certain events only, as it was held, followed by a limitation over on a general failure of issue male of A. and B., estates tail were raised by implication in A. and B. Franks v. Price, 3 Beav. 182; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 353. And see S. C. at law, 5 Bing. N. S. 87; 6 Scott 710.

Testator, after giving various life estates in his real and personal property, directed that, if M. H. should, after the death of J. and certain other first tenants for life, die before N. H., the last tenant for life, leaving issue male, then his trustees should convey one moiety of his real estate to trustees, to the use of the first and other sons of M. H. successively in tail male, with remainder to N. H. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male; and he directed one moiety of his personal estate to be invested in the purchase of real estate to be settled to the same uses. The testator then gave corresponding directions with regard to the other moiety, in the event of N. H. dying before M. H. And in case M. H. and N. H. should both die without issue male, then the testator directed his trustees to convey his real estate to such persons as would be his right heirs at the death of the survivor of M. H. and N. H., and to transfer his personal estate to such persons as would be his next of kin. M. H. died without issue in the lifetime of J., etc. On J.'s death N. H. claimed an absolute interest in the personal estate, and suffered a recovery of the real estate, and afterwards died without issue :—Held, that although M. H. died in the lifetime of J., and although, from the circumstance of M. H. dying in the lifetime of N. H., the events in which the estate was limited to the issue of N. H. did not take place; still, under the terms of the will, N. H. became entitled, on the death of J., to both moieties; and that he took the personal estate absolutely, and took an estate tail in the real estate. Id.

8. A testator by his will expressed his desire of bequeathing his estates to his children, "in such manner that the same shall be enjoyed by them respectively only for and during the period of their natural lives; in order, therefore, to limit the same strictly in entail on them, my said children, and to their several and respective heirs of their bodies respectively." He then devised his real estates to trustees, upon trust, as to part of his real estates, to his son W., for life, "and after his decease the same to go and descend to his first and other sons and daughters in tail in order of primogeniture, males to be preferred to females, and to the several and respective heirs of their bodies, so as that each possessor shall take only a life estate and interest in the same;" and in the event of W.'s decease without issue, then he devised his estates to his trustees, upon trust to allow his other children, whom he enumerated, "to possess and enjoy the same, strictly limited to life interest, and in tail to each of them respectively, in the order of primogeniture, males to be preferred to females" :—Held, that W. took an estate for life only. Towns v. Wentworth, 11 Moo. P. C. 526; 6 W. R. 397; 1 L. T., N. S., 274.

9. V. bequeathed his residuary estate to M., in trust to be invested in land, and to go with the entail as in his father's (N.'s) will. N. had devised his estates to V. for life; remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail; remainder to his son J. for life; and similar remainders to the first and other sons of J. in tail: remainder, as to one moiety, to the use of his eldest daughter Marianne during natural life; remainder to the use of the first son of Marianne and the heirs of his body; remainder to the use of the second, third, and every succeeding son of Marianne, and their heirs, according as they should be in seniority of age and priority of birth; remainder to the use of the daughter or daughters of Marianne and their heirs, share and share alike, as tenants in common, etc.; remainder to the use of his second daughter Eliza Maher during her natural life, with the like remainders and limitations over to the sons and daughters of Eliza and their heirs, as thereinbefore contained respecting the sons' daughters of Marianne; and as to and for the other remaining moiety of the devised lands to the use of his daughter Eliza Maher during her natural life, with the like remainders and limitations over to the sons and daughters of Eliza and their respective heirs as thereinbefore contained respecting the sons and daughters of Marianne as to the first-mentioned moiety. And in default of issue of Eliza, to the use of his daughter Marianne during her life, with the like remainders and limitations over to the sons and daughters of Marianne and their respective heirs as thereinbefore contained respecting the sons and daughters of Eliza. J. survived V., and died in 1850. Both died without issue. Marianne died in 1854, leaving two sons: Edmond, who died without issue in 1870, and Lory. Eliza died in 1875, without ever having had issue. Edmond, after his mother's death, barred the entail in the moiety, in which she took a life estate, and was paid the half of the residuary estate in a cause instituted to administer V.'s assets:—Held, that, on Eliza's death, Lory, the then surviving son of Marianne, became tenant in tail of the half of V.'s residuary estate, in which she had a life interest, and that he, having barred the entail, was absolutely entitled to that half of the funds; as, on the true construction of N.'s will, Eliza's second and other children would take successive estates tail, as well as her first son, and as (although her daughters would take as tenants in common in fee) the words which preceded the gift over “in default of issue” were to be construed in default of her children, according to the rule approved of in Foster v. Hayes (4 E. & B. 717, 734). Smyth v. Power, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 192.

2. Gift to some only of the Issue.

1. Devise to S. for life, remainder to his eldest son and his male issue, and for want of issue of S., to, etc. S. died without issue:—Held, he took an estate tail in remainder, like in Langley v. Baldwin (1 Eq. Cas. Abr., pl. 29, cited in 1 P. W. 759; 1 Ves. 26). Stanley v. Lennard, AmbL. 355; 1 Eden 87.

2. J. being seized of some lands in fee and certain que trust of other lands, devises them to A. for life; remainder to his first and second son in tail male (going no further); and after A.'s death, without issue male, then to a charity:—Held, that A. was tenant in tail until issue born, saving as to the trust estate. Att.-Gen. v. Sutton, 3 Bro. P. C. 75; 1 P. W. 754.

3. Devise to trustees to invest in stock and pay dividends to testator's son for life, and after his decease to his eldest son and his heirs for ever; and in case of their death without issue, to his (testator's) nearest relation, and the nearest relation of such nearest relation for ever. This is a double contingency, and, in the event of the son dying without issue, is good. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Bro. C. C. 293.

4. A testator, before the Wills Act came into operation, devised his “estate” at A. to S. K. for life, charged with life annuities; but in case the annuitants, or any one of them, survived S. K., he gave the aforesaid “estate” to S. K.'s eldest surviving son, charged with the annuities; but in default of issue male he gave the aforesaid “estate” to T. K., charged in like manner, and unto his eldest son upon the same conditions; but in default of issue male the premises were to descend to the testator's heirs, charged as above:—Held, first, that the limitation to S. K.'s eldest surviving son ought not to be construed literally so as to make it dependent on S. K. being survived by one of the annuitants; secondly, that the words “in default of issue male” were not to be construed referentially as meaning in default of an eldest surviving son, but generally, so as to give S. K. an estate in tail male; thirdly, that the use of the word “estate” was not in the above will sufficient to give the eldest surviving son of S. K. an estate in fee-simple; fourthly, that where, upon the careful perusal of an instrument, it is impossible not to be satisfied that a strict and ordinary interpretation of its language would disappoint the intention with which it was framed, such an interpretation is not to be adopted. Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 73; 17 Jur. 769; 22 L. J., Ch., 641; 1 Eq. Rep. 82.

5. A devise to trustees and their heirs, in trust for A. for life, and his first, etc., sons in tail; but if A. dies without an heir male of his body begotten, then to go over. A. is only tenant for life, and the words “if he dies without an heir male” etc., do not give him an estate tail by implication. Bamfield v. Popham, 2 Vern. 427; 1 P. W. 54; Salk. 236.

6. Devise to A., and after his death to his first and other sons, and in default of male issue then unto his eldest and other daughters, and to their heirs male for ever, an estate in tail male in A. Wight v. Leigh, 15 Ves. 564.

7. A. being seized of an estate for lives renewable for ever, devised it to B., C., and D. as tenants in common for their respective lives, with remainder to the issue male of B., C., and D. respectively, in such shares as B., C., and D. respectively should appoint, with powers to each of charging for daughters' portions; and in case either should die without issue male or female, then the share of B. to go to C. and his issue male with like powers; that of C. to D., and that of D. to B. And in failure of issue male of B., C., and D., then to their issue female as tenants in common during their lives. And in default of such issue, then to E. and his issue:—Held, that C. took an estate quasi in tail. Briscoe v. Briscoe, Hayes 34.

S. J. M. by his will devised the Maytham Hall estate, being of gavelkind tenure, to trustees, upon trust to sell a competent part for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of such first son and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue for every other son of P. M. successively for the like interests and limitations, and in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, for T. G. M., the eldest son of T. M., for life, and after his decease for the first son of T. G. M. and the heirs male of his body; and in default of issue of the body of the said T. G. M. for every other son of T. M. successively, for the like estates and interests, and on failure of all such issue of the body of T. M. upon trust for him and his heirs and assigns for ever. P. M. never had any children:—Held, that P. M. took an estate for life, with remainder to his first unborn son if such son had been born, and that all the remainders over were void; held, also, that effect was to be given to the gift over to T. M. and his sons, in default of issue of the body of P. M., etc., as an independent claim, and that it was subsequently valid. Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 15 Jur. 457; 22 L. J., Ch., 313. And see S. C. 17 Jur. 1050; 14 Jur. 1083; 7 Hare 568.

1. Devise to A. for life, with remainder to his first son who should attain twenty-one, in fee, and in default to all his daughters in fee; but in the event of A. dying without any issue male who should attain twenty-one, or any issue female, then over:—Held, that A. took for life only, and that his estate was not enlarged by the gift over in default of issue. Sanders v. Ashford, 28 Beav. 609.

2. Bequest of a residue upon trust for the testator's grandson, B., the son of Isaac, at twenty-five, for life; and, after the death of B., in case he shall have a son who shall attain twenty-one, then for such son of B. who shall first attain twenty-one, absolutely; and in default of such son of B., and after B.'s death, then upon like trust for the testator's grandson J., etc., with like limitations successively in favour of any other grandsons, sons of Isaac, born in the testator's lifetime, and their respective sons first attaining twenty-one; and in default of a son of any such grandson attaining twenty-one, then upon trust for any son of Isaac, born after the testator's decease, who shall first attain twenty-one, absolutely; and in case no son of any son of the testator's son Isaac then born, or thereafter to be born in the testator's lifetime, nor any son of his son Isaac, born after his decease, shall live to attain twenty-one, then from and immediately after the decease of all the sons and grandsons of his son Isaac, upon trust for the testator's nephew G., for life; and upon the decease of his nephew G., in case he shall have a son who shall live to the age of twenty-one, then upon trust for such son who shall first attain twenty-one, absolutely:—Held, upon the whole context of the will, that the words "after the decease of all the sons and grandsons" must be read as if they had been "after the decease of all the aforesaid," or "all such sons and grandsons;" and that the limitation over in favour of the first son of G. attaining twenty-one was therefore not too remote. Ellicombe v. Gompertz, Myl. & C. 127.

3. A gift to children in tail not comprehending all the issue, followed by a limitation over in terms "on failure of issue," will generally be read as meaning all such issue as are before mentioned, unless it appears from the context that other issue than those provided for were intended to take. If the question had arisen entirely under the will making the gift, and the words "there being a failure of issue of," etc., had been found in that will, following limitations to the issue like those contained in a previous will, in this case those words would have been construed to refer to a failure, not of issue generally, but of such issue as the will had previously provided for. For the purpose of determining the meaning of such a limitation, the principles of construction must be the same whether the instrument be a deed or a will. Eno v. Eno, 6 Hare 171; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 238; 11 Jur. 746.

4. It is a rule of construction that where there is a gift to some only of a class, and then a gift over upon failure of all the class, it is to be construed upon failure not of the whole class, but of those only who are specified before. Bryan v. Mansion, 5 De G. & Sm. 737; 17 Jur. 202; 22 L. J., Ch., 233.

A testatrix gave a fund to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to her niece; and, after her decease if her husband should survive her, and she should leave no "issue" living at her decease, then to the husband for life; but if she should leave "issue," then upon trust to pay a moiety of the dividends to the husband, and to apply the other moiety, during his life, for the benefit of "such issue" during their minorities. After the decease of the niece as to one moiety of the fund, and after the decease of the survivor of her and her husband then as to the whole of the fund, the trust was to transfer and divide the same unto and amongst the "children" of the niece, the shares of sons to be vested at twenty-one, and of daughters at that age or marriage with consent, with survivorship in case of the death of any child before his portion should become vested, with a provision for maintenance for "children," during minority; and in case the niece should die in the lifetime of the husband leaving issue, and all should die unmarried, then the trust was to pay the whole of the dividends unto the husband. "And from and after the decease of my said niece and her husband, and the survivor of them, and failure of issue of my said niece, upon trust to transfer the fund to other persons":—Held, that the word "issue" in previous parts of the will obviously meant "children," and that the gift over on failure of "issue" meant a failure of "children," and that the gift over took effect. Ib.

3. Effect of the word "Such."

5. In a devise of land to A. for life, and if A. die without issue, then to B., though here is an express estate for life to A., yet the subsequent words will turn it into an estate tail; but where lands are devised to A. for life, remainder to trustees, etc., remainder to his first, etc., son in tail male, etc., and if A. dies without issue, then, etc.; this will not give an estate tail to A., but the words "without issue" must be intended "without such issue." Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. W. 606.

6. Testator having given a residue of realty and personally to his daughter for life, upon her death gave one moiety to her issue, using other expressions which showed "issue" to mean "children," and in default of such issue over; and as to the other moiety, she gave it "on the decease of his daughter without issue," on certain trusts:—Held, that "issue" in the first clause was to be construed as "children," but not in the second clause, and that the gift over of the second moiety was too remote. Carter v. Bentall, 2 Beav. 551; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 303; 1 Jur. 694.

1. J. devised all his lands, etc., to his daughter B. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., remainder to the use of the first son of B., remainder to the heirs male of the body of said first son, with divers remainders over; and in case of the death of B. without issue of her body living at her decease, then testator devised said lands to his trustees, until his cousin C. should attain the age of twenty-one; and in case of the death of C. under twenty-one without issue, then to D. for life, remainder to his first, etc., son in tail, remainder to E. for life, remainder to his first, etc., son in tail, remainder over. The Ld. Ch. inclined to confine the contingency in the will of J. of B.'s dying without issue of her body living at her death to the death of C. under twenty-one, and that the subsequent limitations to C. after attaining twenty-one, and to D. and E., are not contingent but vested remainders. Lethcullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 775; Amb. 204. And see 2 Ken., Ch., 40.

2. A testator devised to his grandson C. an estate for his own use during his life, remainder to the first son of the body of C. lawfully begotten, severally and successively in tail male, of the name of C.; and for want of such lawful issue of that name, "either by my grandson C. or my son, then I give and devise it amongst my daughters and their children, share and share alike, to hold unto them, his, or her, or their heirs for ever, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants":—Held, that C. took an estate for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. Parler v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Ch. 143; 11 Jur., N. S., 185; 34 L. J., Exch., 198; 13 W. R. 442; 12 L. T., N. S., 89; 5 N. R. 378. And see S. C. nom. Barrow v. Tootal, 7 H. & N. 962; 8 Jur., N. S., 991; 10 W. R. 357; 6 L. T., N. S., 472.

3. Testator devised an estate to A. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., remainder to all the children of A. as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and for want of such issue to B. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., remainder to all the children of B. as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and for want of such issue to C. in fee:—Held, that the children of A. took estates for life, with cross-remainders between them for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to her children, as tenants in common, with cross-remainders between them for life, with remainder to C. in fee. Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 16.

4. Devise to several for life; and after the death of the surviving tenant for life, to a son of my nephew A. and his heirs and assigns, and for want of such issue over:—Held, that this was a gift in fee to the first-born son of A. Ashburner v. Wilson, 17 Sim. 204; 14 Jur. 497; 19 L. J., Ch., 330.

5. Testator devised lands to his son A. F. for life, and after the decease of A. F. to his first son lawfully issuing, and for default of such first issue to the use of the second, third, and every other son, and the heirs of his or their bodies, the elder to be always preferred before the younger of such sons and the heirs of his body, and for default of such issue, then to the use of all and every the daughters of A. F. and the heirs of the body of such daughter and daughters, with remainders over:—Held, that the first son of A. F. took neither by construction nor by implication an estate tail, but a life estate only. Barnacle v. Nightingale, 14 Sim. 456; 9 Jur. 221.

6. A. being seized in fee, devised one moiety of his estate to his sister M. for life, remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, and for want of such issue, remainder to her issue female and the heirs of their body, with power to M. to charge 1,000*l.* for younger children, and for want of such issue, remainder to his sister I. for life, with precisely similar remainders to her issue. The other moiety was limited to I. for her life and to her issue, and then to M. and her issue, in precisely the same way as the first moiety; and for want of issue of M. and I., the whole to L. for life, with remainders over. By codicil, reciting the marriage of M. and D., he devised one moiety to M. for life, remainder to the issue of M. successively, and the heirs of their bodies, "as in said will limited, and for default of such issue to D. for life, with remainder over, as in said will limited." The codicil contained the following clause: "I ratify my will with respect of my real estate in every particular not hereby altered; the only alteration I intend hereby is, that if my sister Margaret should die without issue, or failing issue, that the said D., her husband, or any other husband she may have, should hold a moiety of my estate during his life." M., after the death of D., suffered a recovery to the use of herself, her heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that, under the limitation in the will, M. took only an estate for her life, and that she did not take an estate tail female, after the estate in tail male to her first and other sons:—Held, also, that from the words "in default of such issue to D.," etc., in the codicil, there was no ground for implying an estate tail in M., the word "such" being referential to the devise in the will of her sons in tail male, and her daughters in tail general:—Held, also, that the devise in the codicil to D., or any future husband, if M. should die without issue, or failing issue, was to take effect on the determination of the express limitations in the will to M.'s first and other sons in tail male, and to her daughters in tail general, and not on a general failure of M.'s issue, and that therefore M. did not take an estate tail by implication. Hamilton v. West, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 75.

7. A. devised an estate to his daughter for life, and after her decease to her son or sons, daughter or daughters, to him, her, or them, or his, her, or their heirs for ever; but should his daughter die without having such heir or heirs, then the estate to be sold within three months after her death, and the produce divided amongst other persons. The daughter died without having had any issue:—Held, that the gift over was valid, and took effect. Polley v. Polley, 29 Beav. 134.

8. In a will of a testator, who died in 1804, he devised real estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to her sons successively in tail, with remainder to her daughters as tenants in common (without words of limitation), and in default of such issue, to his son in fee:—Held, that the daughters took for life only. Re Arnold, 33 Beav. 163; 9 Jur., N. S., 1186; 12 W. R. 4; 9 L. T., N. S., 530.

A devise for life contained in a will cannot be enlarged by a recital in a codicil that such devise was in tail. Id.

1. A testator devised lands in question to trustees, to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of the first and other sons of A., and in default of such issue over:—Held, that the words "in default of such issue" did not operate to enlarge, by implication, A.'s life's estate. Purcell v. Purcell, 2 Dr. & W. 217; 1 Con. & L. 371; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 538.

2. Devise of real estates, upon trust to pay the rents and profits unto or to the use of R. L. and his assigns, for his life; and from and after his decease, unto the first and other sons of R. L.; and in default of such issue, in trust for the first and other daughters of R. L.; and in default of such issue, to pay the rents and profits as therein mentioned; and an ultimate remainder over:—Held, that R. L. did not take an estate tail in the devised premises, nor an estate for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, nor an estate for life, with remainder to his first son in fee. Bridger v. Ramsey, 10 Hare 320.

3. A. devised lands in trust for J. B., a reputed son, for his life, and after his decease for and to his first and every other son successively in tail male, and in default of such issue to his daughter or daughters, to hold to them, if more than one, and their heirs, as tenants in common; and in default of issue of the said J. B., to and for the testator's right heirs:—Held, that J. B. took only an estate for life, and that no remainder in tail to him could be implied after the limitation to the daughter. Baker v. Tucker, 3 H. L. Ca. 106; 14 Jur. 771. Affirming S. C. nom. Tucker v. Baker, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 104.

4. A devise of "all my real and personal fortune" to A. for life, and after his decease to "the first and every other son in succession of A.;" and "in default of such issue," to B. for life, with the same limitations to his sons; and in default of such issue, to the daughters of A. and B.; and in default of such issue, to C. for life, with the same limitations repeated as to her sons and daughters; and in default of such issue, to X. in fee:—Held, to give successive life estates in all the limitations previous to the gift to X. Bevan v. White, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 473.

4. Death without Leaving Issue.

5. Devise to A. for life, remainder to her first child, and his or her heirs; but if such child should die under twenty-one, without leaving issue, in like manner to every other child of A.; for in case of issue, it was the testator's will that they should inherit the estate; but in case A. should die without leaving issue of her body, or having such issue, such issue should die under twenty-one, without leaving issue, then he devised the estate over. A. never had issue:—Held, that she took a life estate only, and that the devise over took effect. Goymour v. Pigge, 7 Beav. 475; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 323; 8 Jur. 526.

6. Devise to A. for life; remainder to all and every the children of her body, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; but in case A. should die without leaving any issue of her body, then over. A. had two children, both of whom died before her. One died, leaving a child who survived A.; the other died without issue:—Held, that the word "leaving" meant "having;" and that the two children of A. took vested interests as tenants in common in fee. Exp. Hooper, 1 Drew. 261; 21 L. J., Ch., 402. And see Tarback v. Tarback, 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129.

III. DEVISE OF REVERSION.

7. A., having the reversion in fee of lands settled upon the marriage of B. his son, in the usual manner, devises all the lands in that settlement on failure of issue of the body of B., and for want of heirs male of his own body, to his daughter F. and the heirs of her body. This will does not give an estate tail by implication to B. The devise to F. is executory, and is void as being on too remote a contingency. Lanesborough (Lady) v. For. Forest, 262.

8. A., by a deed on his marriage, settled his estate upon the issue of the marriage, remainder to his own right heirs; and if he should die without issue male and leave one daughter, then the lands to be charged with 3,000*l.* for her at twenty-one, and 150*l.* yearly maintenance in the meantime. A. having then no issue, by his will devised thus: "And whereas by the settlement made on my wife I have reserved the inheritance of my lands in myself, after the estate tail therein is spent, now in case I die without issue, or that such issue shall die without issue of his, her, or their body, or that the estate tail limited by that settlement shall determine, I give all my said manors to my kinsman B., and to his first and other sons in tail male; remainder to C. in fee." A. had afterwards a daughter:—Held, that this daughter was entitled under the will to the whole estate as a tenant in tail, and that B. took nothing. Cornwall v. Williams, Colles's P. C. 117.

9. A. devises lands to his eldest son for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten; remainder to the youngest son in like manner; remainder to any after-born son of the testator's for life; remainder to the heirs male of the body of such after-born son; and for want of such issue, to his brother J. for life, with remainder to the heirs male of his body. The testator was on his death-bed at the time of making his will, and died in about three weeks afterwards. The younger son, however, died before him, and the eldest son enjoyed the estate, but died without having barred the entail. Upon a question, whether the limitation over to the testator's brother ought not to be considered as depending upon a general failure of issue, and consequently too remote:—Held, that a remainder after estates tail was vested in the brother, and that the testator had not the event of a second marriage in contemplation. Jones v. Morgan, 3 Bro. P. C. 323.

10. A testator, who was entitled, under his son's marriage settlement, to a reversion on the death of the survivor of his son and his son's wife without issue living at the death of such survivor, devised to trustees upon trust to sell, after the several deceases of his son and his son's wife without issue. The proceeds of the sale were to be divided between the testator's six daughters or such of them as should be then living, and the children of such of them as should be dead leaving issue. But in case only one of his said daughters or only one child of his said daughters should be living at the time of the death of the survivor of his son and his son's wife (they leaving no issue), then the whole was to go to such child or grandchild:—Held, that the trust for sale was not void for remoteness, as the will sufficiently referred to the issue mentioned in the settlement. Lucis v. Templer, 12 W. R. 128; 10 L. T., N. S., 638; 33 Beav. 625.

Held, also, that the class to take must be ascertained at the period of distribution. Id.

LVIII. Death Coupled with a Contingency. Death of Object of Prior Gift in the Testator's Lifetime, and Substitution.

- I. Gift Over on Death of A. under a Given Age, who dies under the Given Age, 8078.
- II. Gift Over on Death Before Legacy is Payable or Received, 8078.
- III. Gift Over on Death without Issue, 8079.
- IV. Gift Over on Death Coupled with Other Circumstances, 8080.
- V. Death of Object of Prior Gift Before Date of the Will, 8081.
- VI. Death of Object of Prior Gift Between Date of the Will and Death of the Testator, 8088.
- VII. Clauses Substituting Children for Legatees who die before Period of Distribution or Enjoyment. Whether Children must Survive the Period of Distribution or their own Parents, 8088.

I. GIFT OVER ON DEATH OF A. UNDER A GIVEN AGE, WHO DIES UNDER THE GIVEN AGE.

1. Bequest over, in case of the death of a legatee before a certain period, takes effect on his death within that period during the testator's life. Humberstone v. Stanton, 1 Ves. & B. 388.

2. One devises portions to his children, A., B., and C., and if any die before twenty-one or marriage, the portion of the child so dying to go to the survivor. One of the children dies in the lifetime of the testator. This is not a lapsed legacy, but shall go over to the surviving children. Perkins v. Micklethwaite, 1 P. W. 274.

3. Legacies of 300L each to three children at twenty-one, or marriage, and if any should die before that time his legacy to survive to others. One died before testator:—Held, his legacy survived. Hickman v. Stroud, 2 Eq. Abr. 541.

4. J. devised 3,000L apiece to his three daughters, A., B., and C., at twenty-one or marriage. If any died before, to go to the survivors. B. died in the lifetime of the testator: her legacy shall go to the surviving daughters. Ledsome v. Hickman, 2 Vern. 611.

5. Legacy to A., in case she shall be living with the testatrix at her decease, with limitations over upon the death of A. before twenty-one or marriage, fails by the death of A. in the lifetime of the testatrix. Allen v. Callow, 3 Ves. 294.

6. One gives a legacy of 200L apiece to his children, payable at twenty-one, and if any of them die before twenty-one, then the legacy given to him so dying to go over to the surviving children. One of the children dies in the life of the testator; though the legacy lapses as to the legatee dying under twenty-one, yet it is well given over to the surviving children. Willing v. Baine, 3 P. W. 113.

7. Devise of a legacy of 1,500L to A., payable at his age of twenty-one, and if A. died before then to B. A. dies in the lifetime of the testator, yet B. shall have the legacy. Miller v. Warren, 2 Vern. 207. See quare, note there.

Death of A. Over Age.] See VESTED, CONTINGENT, AND FUTURE INTERESTS, XIV. II.

II. GIFT OVER ON DEATH BEFORE LEGACY IS PAYABLE OR RECEIVED.

8. Divers legacies given by a will, and the will is, that if any legatee died before his legacy was payable, it should go to his brothers and sisters. A legatee died in the testator's lifetime. No lapsed legacy, but shall go to his sister. Darrel v. Molesworth, 2 Vern. 378.

9. A testator gave to A. a sum of stock to be paid to him within six months after the testator's decease, and in case it should happen that A. should die not having received the legacy, and he should leave any children, such children should be entitled to the same in equal proportions, payable at twenty-one or marriage. A. died during the testator's lifetime, leaving three children who had attained twenty-one, and were living at the testator's decease:—Held, that the legacy lapsed, and the children took no interest therein. Smith v. Oliver, 11 Beav. 481; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 80; 13 Jur. 159.

10. A. devises 500L legacy to the second son of I. S., and devises other legacies to the other sons of I. S., and declares, that, if any of the younger sons of I. S. should die before they are capable of receiving their share, the share or legacy of them so dying shall go to the survivor; the second son dies in the testator's lifetime: this 500L given to the second son shall not survive. Rider v. Wager, 2 P. W. 330.

Held, that there was no lapse as to any part of the residue, and that the whole went, upon the death of A., to the surviving nephew C. Humphreys v. Homes, 1 Russ. & M. 639; Taml. 497; 8 L. J., Ch., 165.

1. A testatrix directed her trustees to place out a sum of 1,000*l.*, and to pay the interest to B. R. for life, and after his decease the principal to be divided between his son and daughter, but in case of the decease of either of them before the same should be payable, then such principal and interest to be paid to the survivor of them. The daughter of B. R. died before the testatrix:—Held, that the daughter's share in the 1,000*l.* did not lapse, but that the whole legacy was vested in the son subject to his father's life-interest, and was not liable to be divested by the death of the son during the life of his father. Mues v. Jackson, 23 L. J., Ch., 51; 2 Eq. Rep. 462; 2 W. R. 83.

2. A testator left his residuary estate to M. for life, with remainder over to certain beneficiaries, and he directed that, in case any of them should depart this life before the time of distribution, leaving issue, and such issue should die before attaining twenty-one, the share of the beneficiary so dying should be equally divided amongst the survivors of the class:—Held, that the beneficiaries who survived the testator took an absolute interest in the gift, and that there was a lapse as to the shares of those dying in the testator's lifetime. Taylor v. Sparrow, 13 L. T., N. S., 494.

3. Devise of real estate, to be sold after the death of tenant for life, and bequest of specific sums out of the produce to several grandchildren and a child, and of the residue to other children, "to be respectively paid at twenty-one or marriage." "But if any of my said children or grandchildren should happen to die before the time of such legacy becoming due and payable, then I give and bequeath the share or part of such child or children, or grandchildren, so dying, unto and among those that shall be then living, share and share alike." Two of the children died before the testator; their shares are to be divided among the other children and grandchildren equally. Another child and a grandchild, having survived the testator and attained twenty-one, died before the tenant for life; their shares transmissible to their representatives; no implication that the survivorship was to take place among the children and grandchildren distinctly from the inequality of legacies, or from the bequest to each class being made by distinct clauses. Walker v. Main, 1 Jac. & Walk. 1.

4. A testator declared that the trustees of his will should stand possessed of the residue of the money to arise from his real and personal estate upon trust, "for all and every my first cousins-german, to be divided equally amongst them, share and share alike. And in case any of my said cousins shall depart this life before their respective shares shall become due or payable, leaving any lawful issue, I direct that such issue shall have the same share or shares of the same residue as his, her, or their parent or parents would have been entitled to if living." The testator had several first cousins-german living at the date of his will, two of whom died in his lifetime; the others survived him. One of those who died left seven children, the other left no issue:—Held, first, that the words "due or payable" referred to the time of the testator's death; secondly, that the issue of the deceased cousin were entitled to their parent's share; thirdly, that the share of the cousin who died without issue did not lapse. Coort v. Winder, 8 Jur. 770.

III. GIFT OVER ON DEATH WITHOUT ISSUE.

5. Devise of an estate charged with two several legacies to A. and B., and in case A. or B. die without lawful issue, then the whole of the said two legacies to go to the survivor, his executors, etc.; A. dies without issue in the testator's lifetime:—Held, the legacy lapsed, the contingency on which it was given over being too remote. Massey v. Hudson, 2 Meriv. 130.

6. Executory trust for three for their lives as tenants in common, if any died without issue living at their deaths, their shares to go to survivors with contingent remainders in tail, and remainders over. Two of them dying in testator's lifetime:—Held, their shares lapsed and went over. Sperling v. Toll, 1 Ves. 70.

7. Bequest of chattels to two legatees, share and share alike, and, upon the demise of either of them without lawful issue, then the share of her so dying to go to the other. One of the legatees died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the other was absolutely entitled by survivorship. Mackinnon v. Peach, 2 Keen 555; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 211.

8. A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife, until his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one, and then upon trust to pay the income in fifths to his wife for life, and to his four daughters for life; and on the death of his daughters respectively, to convey and assign their respective shares to their children respectively; and on the death of his wife, he directed the shares given to her to be divided amongst the daughters in the same manner as the original shares given to them. And his will was, that in case any or either of his children should die without issue, the share or shares of her or them so dying should go and belong to all and every the child or children of such of his said daughters as should happen to leave issue, his, her, and their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; but in case all his said children should die without leaving lawful issue, then he devised and bequeathed his said real and personal estate unto his brothers and sisters to hold to them, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns as tenants in common:—Held, that the share of one of the daughters, who died under age and without issue, did not pass under the gift over to the brother and sisters; but that there was an intestacy as to that share in the events that had happened. Bastin v. Watts, 4 Jur. 791.

9. A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay the dividends to A. during her life; and after her death to transfer the trust moneys to his two nephews B. and C., share and share alike, and if either of his nephews died before his share of the trust moneys became payable, without leaving issue, the share of him so dying was to go to the survivor; B., one of the nephews, died in the testator's lifetime, and left no issue:—Held, that there was no lapse as to any part of the residue, and that the whole went, upon the death of A., to the surviving nephew C. Humphreys v. Homes, 1 Russ. & M. 639; Taml. 497; 8 L. J., Ch., 165.

IV. GIFT OVER ON DEATH COUPLED WITH OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES.

1. A testator gave his residuary estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her death he directed that one-sixth of the fund should be held to pay the income to his daughter H., for life, and after her death for her children, who being a son or sons should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters, attain that age or marry. He gave other shares upon similar trusts for others of his children by name, and their children respectively. The will contained a proviso, that if any of his children should die without having any child who, under the above trust, should become absolutely entitled to a share of the trust fund, then, as well the original share given as also the share accruing under the proviso to each child whose issue should so fail and his or her children or child, should go to the survivors or survivor of the testator's children; and if more than one, in equal shares during their lives, and after their deaths the shares to be respectively transmitted to such their respective children or child as thereinbefore expressed with respect to their original shares. H. was living at the date of the will, but died childless in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that her share was not undisposed of, but that the gift over in the proviso took effect. Rackham v. De La Mare, 2 De G. J. & S. 74; 10 Jur., N. S., 190; 12 W. R. 363; 9 L. T., N. S., 699; 3 N. R. 398.

2. A testator gave certain property to trustees, upon trust for his widow for life; and after her death, directed the same to be sold, and the proceeds divided into two equal shares, one of which he gave, in five equal shares, to A., B., C., D., and E., and directed that, in case of the death of any or either of them before the widow, their respective share should go to their respective husbands or wives, if any, and if not, then to their respective children, and in failure of children, to the survivors of them, share and share alike. He gave the residue to the other moiety, after payment of a legacy, as follows: "to F., G., H., I., and K., and in case of the death of any or either of them, then their respective shares to their children, if any, and if not, then to the survivors of them, share and share alike":—Held, that the words "in case of the death," in the gift of the second moiety, meant in case of death before the period of distribution, and applied to death in the testator's lifetime, as well as to death after the decease of the testator, but before the decease of the testator's widow:—Held, also, as to each moiety, that the share of each legatee who died before the period of distribution vested absolutely in such of his children as were living at the death of their parent, or at the death of the testator, whichever last happened. Ive v. King, 16 Jur. 489; 21 L. J., Ch., 560; 16 Bear. 46.

3. A testator gave the income of a fund to trustees, in trust to pay the same to A. B. for life, and after her decease to pay the principal money to her daughters, C. and D., in equal shares, with a gift over to the issue of either of them dying in the lifetime of A. B.; and should either C. or D. die in the lifetime of A. B. without leaving issue, then the whole fund was to go over to the survivor of the two daughters; but in case both of them should die in the lifetime of A. B. without leaving issue, then in trust for W. W. absolutely. The testator died in 1844, leaving A. B. and her daughter D. surviving. C., the other daughter, died in his lifetime unmarried;—Held, that upon the death of A. B. the surviving daughter was entitled to the whole fund. Re Donville's Trusts, 17 Jur 361; 22 L. J., Ch., 947.

4. Testator ordered the interest of the residue to be paid to his sisters for life, and, in case any of them should die leaving issue, then to transfer the principal of the residuum to the children of the sister so dying at twenty-one; one of the sisters died in the life of the testator: her children shall take her share. Rheeder v. Over, 3 Bro. C. C. 240.

5. Gift of personalty to A. for life, remainder to the children of tenant for life nominatim, or such of them as should be living at the death of tenant for life. If any of them should die in the lifetime of tenant for life, leaving issue, such issue to take the share the parent would have been entitled to. There were four children of the tenant for life, who all died in lifetime of tenant for life. Two died in the lifetime of testatrix, and one of those two left issue. None of the others left issue.—Held, that the children of the deceased child took the whole fund. Ashting v. Knowles, 3 Drew. 593.

6. A testator gave to A. a legacy to be vested in him when and as he should attain the age of twenty-one, or if he should die under that age leaving lawful issue at his death; and in case he should die without attaining a vested interest in his legacy, the testator gave the legacy over to other persons. The legatee attained the age of twenty-one, and died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Re Gaitskill, 15 L. R., Eq. 386; 28 L. T. 760; 21 W. R. 768.

7. A testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for all and every his children and child then born or thereafter to be born, who being a son or sons should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters should attain or marry under that age, in equal shares as tenants in common; and if there should be but one child, then the whole in trust for that one child. And he declared that the share to which each of his daughters, on her attaining twenty-one, or marrying under that age, should become entitled under the trusts aforesaid, should be held by the trustees in trust for such daughter for her life, and afterwards for her children:—Held, that the children of a daughter who died in the lifetime of the testator did not take any interest.

Stewart v. Jones, 3 De G. & J. 532; 5 Jur. N. S., 229.

1. Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to his wife, and after her decease to his three sons, to be equally divided amongst them, if they should be all living at the decease of his wife; but if any or either of them should die in her lifetime, leaving a child or children, such child or children who should be living at the time of the wife's death should be substituted in the place of such of his sons who should so happen to die, and take his, her, or their parent's share. All the sons died in the wife's lifetime, two of them leaving children who survived the wife; the third died a bachelor.—Held, that one-third of the stock fell into the residue. Hustler v. Tillbrook, 9 Sim. 368.

2. Bequest to the children of A. who should be living at the testator's decease, equally, with survivorship in case of death without leaving issue; if leaving issue, the issue to have the parent's share. The survivorship cannot be restrained to the period of the testator's death, as upon that construction the clause would be repugnant. Shergold v. Boone, 13 Ves. 370.

3. A father made a general gift by will of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trusts for sale and conversion, and to hold the proceeds in trust for all his children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, the share of each of his sons to be for his own absolute use and benefit. And he directed that the share of each of his daughters should be held upon trusts in effect for herself for life for her separate use, and after her death for her children. The will contained provisions for substituting the issue of sons dying in the lifetime of the testator for the sons, but no similar provision for the case of daughters. A daughter having died in the testator's lifetime leaving children who survived him:—Held, that the gift of the daughter's share did not fail, and that her children were entitled. Re Speakman, Unsworth v. Speakman, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 620; 46 L. J., Ch., 608; 35 L. T. 731; 25 W. R. 225.

4. A., by his will, gave his residuary personal estate, and the proceeds of his real estate, in trust for his nephews and nieces, the children of his brother F., and his late sister, E. B., and the brother and sister of his wife; and in case either of his nephews or nieces should die in the lifetime of his wife, leaving child or children, such children to be entitled to the father or mother's share. A nephew died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving a child:—Held, that such child was entitled to her father's share of the residue, as being a gift to individuals, and not to a class. Jones v. Frewin, 12 W. R. 369; 10 L. T., N. S., 330; 3 N. R. 415.

5. When a testator devised real estate upon trust for A. and the testator's brothers and sisters for their lives, with benefit of survivorship where any of them should die without leaving children, but where any should die leaving children, upon trust to let such children have their parents' share until the death of the survivor of A. and his brothers and sisters, and upon the death of such survivor upon trust to convey the shares of their parents among the children of A. and his brothers and sisters:—Held, that in the case of A. and of a brother and sister of the testator who were living at the date of his will, but who died before him, their children were entitled to shares during the continuance of the life estate of the testator's surviving brothers and sisters, but that the children of a brother who was dead at the date of the will were excluded from such shares. Habergham v. Ridehalgh, 39 L. J., Ch., 545; 9 L. R., Eq., 395; 18 W. R. 427; 23 L. T., N. S., 214.

V. DEATH OF OBJECT OF PRIOR GIFT BEFORE DATE OF THE WILL.

1. Gift to Individuals Nominatim, 8081.
2. Children let in to take Original Shares, 8082.
3. Gift to a Class, or their Issue or Heirs, 8084.
4. Direction that Issue should take their Parents' Share, 8085.
5. Effect of the words "Said," "Such," 8087.
6. Other Cases, 8088.

1. Gift to Individuals Nominatim.

6. Distinction between a substitutional gift after a bequest to persons as a class, and one following a gift to individuals nominatim. Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46; 16 Jur. 489; 21 L. J., Ch., 560.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards equally between a number of persons by name; and in case of the death of any of them before A., their respective shares to go to their respective children, and on failure of children to the survivors. The following points were decided as to the several original legatees: first, Ann was deceased at the date of the will:—Held, nevertheless, that her children took by substitution: secondly, William was living at the date of the will, but he died before the testator:—Held, also, that his children took his share, and that the class was to be ascertained at the death of the testator: thirdly, Thomas survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of the widow:—Held, that his children took, but were to be ascertained at Thomas's death: fourthly, it was held, that to entitle a child to take, it was not necessary that he should survive the tenant for life: fifthly, Charles died without issue:—Held, that the survivors were to be ascertained at his death, and not at the death of the tenant for life. Id.

7. A testator directed his residue to be divided on the death of his wife (who survived him) equally between his brothers and sisters by name, and declared that if any of them should die leaving issue, his, her, or their shares should go to his, her, or their respective issue:—Held, first, that the class was to be ascertained, as to the issue of a legatee who had died before the testator, at the death of the testator, and as to the issue of a legatee who had survived him at the death of the legatee. Hobgen v. Neale, 11 L. R., Eq., 48; 40 L. J., Ch., 36; 95 L. T. 681; 19 W. R. 144.

8. Testator bequeathed a sum of stock in trust for three persons nominatim in equal shares and proportions, to be transferred to them when they shall attain twenty-one. But if any of them shall depart this life under age and unmarried, then the share original and accruing of him, her, or them so dying to go to the survivors; and if all of them should die under twenty-one and unmarried, the stock to fall into residue. One of the three persons named died prior to the making of the will:—Held, that the share of the one so dying passed to the other two persons named. Re Sheppard's Trust, 1 Kay & J. 269.

1. Gift by will to the testator's wife for life, and after her death to A. for life, and after the death of the survivor, to the testator's brothers and sisters, nominatim, and the brothers and sisters of his wife also, nominatim, "now living," and the children of her deceased brother and sister; but in case any or either of his brothers and sisters, or the brothers and sisters of his wife "now living," should happen to die in the lifetime of his wife and of A., or of the survivor of them, without leaving issue, then the share or shares of such of them as should so die should be equally divided between the survivors; but in case any or either of the testator's brothers and sisters, and the brothers and sisters of his wife, so dying, should leave children, then the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying should be equally divided among the children of him, her, or them so dying that should be living at the death of the testator's wife and A. Prior to the date of the will one of the testator's brothers (H.) had died leaving children, but the testator made his will in ignorance of the death of such brother:—Held, that the words "now living" applied only to the brothers and sisters of the testator's wife, and that the children of his brother H. were entitled to the share to which their father would have been entitled if he had survived the testator. Hannam v. Sims, 2 De G. & J. 151; 4 Jur., N. S., 863; 27 L. J., Ch., 251; 6 W. R. 347.

2. Bequest to "each of the present nieces of P. E., for her own absolute benefit, and in case any of them shall die in my lifetime, leaving a child or children who shall survive me, then and in every or any such case the legacy intended for her so dying shall go to her child or children, in equal shares, if more than one." P. E. had seven nieces, but at the date of the will only one was surviving, and she was a widow, seventy-five years of age, without children then living, but there were living several daughters and granddaughters of the deceased nephews and nieces of P. E.:—Held, that the children of nieces who were dead at the date of the will were not substituted for their deceased parents. Crook v. Whitley, 5 W. R. 383; 26 L. J., Ch., 350; 3 Jur., N. S., 703; 7 De G. M. & G. 490. Affirming 4 W. R. 534.

2. Children let in to take Original Shares.

3. Testator devised an estate to trustees in trust for R. T. for life, and after the death of R. T. in trust to convey the estate unto, between, and amongst all and every, and such one or more of the child or children of R. T., who should be living at his decease, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, such issue to take between or amongst them the share which their parent or parents would have been entitled to if then living. R. T. survived the testator, and died, leaving several children, and the issue of another child who was dead at the date of the will:—Held, that such issue were entitled, amongst them, to an equal share of the estate with the surviving children. Tytherleigh v. Harbin, 6 Sim. 329.

4. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his grandchildren, and in case they should all die without leaving issue then to the children of A. and their issue in equal shares, or unto such of them as should prove their right within two years after the death of his grandchildren without issue. A. had five children, two of whom were living at the date of the will and survived the testator; the others died before the date of the will, but two of them left issue:—Held, that all A.'s descendants who were living at the death of all the testator's grandchildren without issue, or who should be born within the two years, would be entitled to participate in the residue. Clay v. Pennington, 7 Sim. 370; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183.

5. Testator, by will dated 1828, bequeathed a fifth of his residuary estate to W. R., E. R., and J. R., and all other the children of J. R. the elder, and the issue of such of his children as should have departed this life, such issue to take the share which their parent would have taken if living. One of the children of J. R., not named in the will, had gone abroad in 1809, and had not been heard of since 1815:—Held, by the Court, that he must be presumed to have died before the date of the will, and that his children were entitled to the share which he would have taken if he had survived the testator. Rust v. Baker, 8 Sim. 413; C. P. C. 172.

6. Bequest in trust for all the children of the testator's late uncle J. B. deceased, to be divided equally amongst them and the issue of such of them as should be deceased, share and share alike, such issue to be entitled to the share of their deceased parents equally amongst them:—Held, that a grandchild of J. B., whose parent was dead at the date of the will, was entitled to take. Bebb v. Beckwith, 2 Beav. 308.

7. Where a sum directed by a testatrix to be set apart for an annuity was bequeathed, on the death of the annuitant, to such of the testatrix's nephews and nieces as should be "then" living, and the child or children of such of them as should be "then" dead:—Held, that the children of a nephew who was dead at the date of the will were entitled to participate, and that their interest vested at the death of the testatrix. Re Farthing, 26 Beav. 263; 4 Jur., N. S., 1289; 28 L. J., Ch., 217.

8. The grammatical construction of a will will be followed so as to give a child the share of its deceased parent, even though the parent was dead at the date of the will, when the testator is shown to be acquainted with that fact. Re Jordan, 8 L. T., N. S., 307; 2 N. R. 57.

When a gift to a child of its deceased parent's share of an estate is made in such terms as show that the testator did not contemplate the future death of the parent, the gift does not come within the strict definition of a "substitution gift." Id.

Therefore, the rule, that where issue are substituted for parents, the parent must have been capable of taking, in order to entitle the issue, does not apply. Id.

1. Children cannot take by substitution for their deceased parent who forms one of a class, unless the parent, if living, could himself have taken. Coulthurst v. Carter, 15 Beav. 421; 16 Jur. 532; 21 L. J., Ch., 555.

A testatrix devised and bequeathed her real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to M. W. for her life, and then to M. W.'s mother for her life (in case she survived M. W., and M. W. left no issue surviving); and after the decease of M. W., and also after the decease of her mother, in case the gift to the mother should take effect, upon further trust to sell the real estate. The testatrix then directed the sale moneys to form part of her residuary personal estate; and in the event of M. W. dying leaving no issue (which event happened), she gave one moiety of her residuary personal estate, from and after the decease of the survivor of M. W. and M. W.'s mother, unto and among the child and children then living of A. A., and the issue then living of any child or children of the said A. A. dying in the lifetime of the said M. W., and to their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, share and share alike, the issue of any such deceased child or children of the said A. A. taking only the share or shares that their respective parent or parents would have taken if living at the death of M. W. And the testatrix declared, that if all or any one or more of the children of the said A. A. should die without issue in the lifetime of M. W., then she gave the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying unto and among the child and children of M. H. who should be living at the death of M. W., and to their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike. The testatrix died in 1825. M. W. died a spinster in 1830. M. W.'s mother died in 1850. A. A. had seven children, of whom the said M. H. was one. Five of them had died without issue before the date of the will. M. H. was dead at the date of the will, but left children, all living, except one H. C., who survived M. W., and died in the lifetime of M. W.'s mother, leaving two children, who survived M. W.'s mother:—Held, first, that the words "then living" referred to the period of distribution, and that H. C. took nothing, as she did not survive that period. Secondly, that H. C.'s children took nothing, as she did not die in the lifetime of M. W. Thirdly, that the words "dying in the lifetime of the said M. W." were not confined to death after the date of the will; and that although M. H. was dead when the will was made, her children, who survived the period of distribution, were objects of the gift, and took among them one-half of the above-mentioned moiety of the trust fund. Fourthly, that in the events which had happened, the other half of that moiety was undisposed of. Id.

2. A father gave property to the children of A. living at a prescribed period, and the issue of deceased children, so as such issue should have no greater share than their parents would have taken if living, and he afterwards provided that if any one or more of such issue should be then dead, having left lawful issue, then the issue of such issue as should be so dead should receive the share which their, his, or her parent would have taken if living:—Held, that the effect was to create a joint tenancy amongst the members of the various families, subject to this, that if any one died leaving issue it must be considered for the purpose of determining the share which such issue were to take, as if he had survived the period of distribution, but had severed the joint tenancy at the date of his death. Heasman v. Pearce, 41 L. J., Ch., 705; 7 L. R., Ch., 275; 20 W. R. 271; 26 L. T., N. S., 299; 40 L. J., Ch., 285; 11 L. R., Eq., 522.

Held, also, that the issue of grandchildren of A. must be confined to children, and that the issue of a grandchild who was dead at the date of the will took. Id.

The words "then living," though in one clause of a will they were held by virtue of the above-mentioned proviso to refer to the period of distribution, were in another clause, to which the proviso was held inapplicable, considered to refer to the death of a tenant for life. Id.

3. A testator gives all his property, real and personal, to trustees, directing them to stand seised and possessed of all his said estates, real and personal, upon trust to receive the rents, dividends, and annual profits, and pay the same from time to time to his son G. during his life until he should become bankrupt or insolvent, or make a composition with his creditors; and from and after any of such events, upon trust to receive the rents, dividends, and profits, and accumulate the same at compound interest, and lay out the same on mortgage, such accumulations to continue to be made for twenty-one years after his the testator's death. There was then power to the trustees to apply such sums as they should think fit towards the maintenance of his son's wife (if he should have one) and the maintenance and education of his children (if any), until the expiration of twenty-one years, and then to apply the rents, dividends, profits, and accumulations equally amongst his son's children until the younger attained twenty-one, and the issue of such as were then dead, such issue to take only the share the parent would have been entitled to if living; and when the youngest attained twenty-one, the testator gave all his real and personal estate and accumulations amongst his son's children in the same words as he had used in the former clause relating to the accumulations for twenty-one years. And in case his son should die without leaving lawful issue living at his death, then over to the testator's brothers and sisters equally, and the issue of such as should be then dead, the issue to take only the parents' share. The testator then gave to his trustees power of leasing during his son's life for seven years, and of sale and exchange at any time. G., the son, died without issue, and never having become bankrupt or insolvent, or made any composition with his creditors; a sister of the testator died before the date of the will, leaving children; the rest survived him, some dying and leaving children before the death of G., the testator's son:—Held, first, that the gift to the issue was original, and the children of a sister deceased before the date of the will took. Etches v. Etches, 3 Drew. 447; 4 W. R. 487.

Held, secondly, that a brother surviving the testator, but foredeceasing the tenant for life, took a vested interest, and his representatives were entitled. Id.

Held, thirdly, as to a sister who survived the testator, but died before the tenant for life, leaving a child who also died before the tenant for life, the representatives of that child were entitled. Id.

1. The testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate (subject to certain trusts for the benefit of his wife) to his son absolutely; but if his son should die under twenty-one without issue, the testator gave the same to his wife during her widowhood, with remainder (subject to certain legacies) as she should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, or in case she should marry again after the testator's decease, he directed, that from and after the second marriage or decease of his wife, which should first happen, a moiety of the trust estate, or so much thereof as the appointment should not extend to, should be held in trust for all and every the daughter and daughters who should be then living of his sister Mary Miles, and the issue then living of such of them as should be then dead, equally amongst them, per stirpes. The testator's son died under twenty-one, without issue, in the testator's lifetime; and the testator's wife also died in his lifetime.—Held, that the time of the testator's death was the period at which the persons entitled to take under the said residuary bequest were to be ascertained; that, notwithstanding a daughter of Mary Miles was dead at the date of the will, the children of such daughter, having survived the testator, were entitled, per stirpes, to a share of the said moiety of the residuary estate; that the children of a daughter of Mary Miles, such daughter being living at the death of the testator's wife, but having died in the lifetime of the testator, were also entitled per stirpes to an equal share of the said moiety of such residuary estate; and that the share of the child of a daughter would not lapse by the death of such a child in the lifetime of the testator, but the entire share of the class would be divisible amongst the children belonging to such class who survived the testator. Gaskell v. Holmes, 3 Hare 438; 8 Jur. 396.

3. Gift to a Class, or their Issue or Heirs.

2. Bequest of a legacy to A. for life, and after her death equally to and amongst her sisters living at her death, or their children:—Held, first, that the children of a sister who was dead at the date of the will took no interest; secondly, that the children of the surviving sister took per stirpes. Congreve v. Palmer, 1 W. R. 156; 16 Beav. 435; 23 L. J., Ch. 51.

3. Bequest to be equally divided between

G. and "my brothers and sisters, or their children," and unto J.:—Held, that the children of such of the brothers and sisters as were dead at the date of the will could not take by substitution. Re Wood, 31 Beav. 323.

4. A testator, after giving his residuary personal estate to all and every the children of his uncle F. or their issue in equal shares, gave his real estate to A. for life, and after her death upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon trust for "all and every the children of F. or their issue in equal shares per capita." Four of the six children of F. were dead at the date of the will, and two survived the tenant for life:—Held, that the issue of the four deceased children of F. alive at the death of the testator or born during A.'s lifetime took as by substitution the shares of their deceased ancestors in the proceeds of the realty, the issue of each of the four taking, inter se, in equal shares. Re Sibley, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 494; 46 L. J., Ch., 387; 37 L. T., N. S., 180.

5. The testator, by will, bequeathed all his share in an estate in Barbadoes "to all the children of" his dear departed wife's sister, M. H. M., "or in event of decease, to their descendants, share and share alike." M. H. M. had six children, of whom five were living at the date of the will and at the death of the testator, and one had died prior to the date of the will, leaving issue an only daughter:—Held, following the decision in Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Meriv. 320), that the issue of the child of M. H. M., who was dead at the date of the will, was not entitled to a share of the property, but that it went to the five children of M. H. M. who survived the testator. Re Webster's Estate, Wigden v. Mello, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 737; 52 L. J., Ch., 767; 49 L. T. 585.

6. Gift to one for life, and after his death to his children "then living, or their legal personal representatives, share and share alike":—Held, that the representatives took, as a distinct class, and not by substitution, and that the representatives of children who died in the lifetime of the testator, and of those who were dead at the date of the will, participated. King v. Cleveland, 26 Beav. 26; 4 Jur., N. S., 702; 28 L. J., Ch., 76. Affirmed 4 De G. & J. 77; 28 L. J., Ch., 835.

7. A testator directed that certain stock should, after the death of his wife, be divided among his "children then living, or their heirs." Two of the children were dead at the date of the will; three survived the testator and died in the lifetime of his wife; and two survived her:—Held, first, that the "heirs" of the children who predeceased the wife (including the two who were dead at the date of the will) were entitled to share in the fund along with the children who survived her. Re Philips, 7 L. R., Eq., 151; 19 L. T., N. S., 713.

Held, secondly, that by "heirs" were meant the statutory next of kin of the children. Id.

Held, thirdly, that such next of kin were to be ascertained, in the case of the children who survived the testator, at the time of the death of each child; but in the case of the children who predeceased the testator, at the time of the testator's death. Id.

8. A testator gave real and personal estate to A., charged with the payment of annuities to the testator's six children "or their heirs respectively".—Held, that the annuities were personal estate, and that the statutory next of kin of one of the six children who was dead at the date of will were entitled to one of the annuities. Parsons v. Parsons, 8 L. R., Eq., 260; 17 W. R. 1005.

1. A testatrix by her will, dated in 1836, gave all her personal property and also her real property to trustees on trust for payment of her debts and legacies, and subject thereto she gave "all her personal and real property as aforesaid," between her five sisters, nominatim, and the survivors of them, in equal shares during their lives and spinsterhood, and upon the death or marriage of all her said sisters she directed that her "property should be divided into equal proportions or shares between her brothers and sisters then living or their heirs." She had twelve brothers and sisters, of whom one brother died before the testatrix was born, one sister died before the date of the will, two brothers and one sister died in her lifetime after the date of the will, and the rest survived her. The last survivor was one of the five sisters named in the will, who died a spinster.—Held, first, that (notwithstanding the will was before the date of the Wills Act) the word "or" in the gift in remainder could not be read "and," and that there was no intestacy. Wingfield v. Wingfield, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 658; 47 L. J., Ch., 768; 39 L. T. 227; 26 W. R. 711.

Held, secondly, that the word "heirs" must be construed distributively so as to mean heirs-at-law as to the real estate, and statutory next of kin (including widows) as to the personal estate. Id.

Held, thirdly, that such heirs-at-law and next of kin were to be respectively ascertained, as regarded brothers and sisters who predeceased the testatrix, at the death of the testatrix, and as regarded those who survived her at their respective deaths. Id.

4. Direction that Issue should take their Parents' Share.

(a) In General, 8085.

(b) Direction to take Parent's Share which he would have been entitled to if living, 8086.

(a) In General.

2. Dequest "to each and every the child and children of my brother and sisters which shall be living at the time of my death; but if any child or children of my said brother and sisters shall happen to die in my lifetime, and leave issue, then the legacy or legacies hereby intended for such child or children so dying shall be for his, her, or their issue." The issue take only by substitution; therefore only the issue of such children as were living at the date of the will are entitled in the event of the death of their respective parents during the testator's lifetime. Christopherson v. Naylor, 1 Meriv. 320.

3. A testator, in 1858, gave legacies to his cousins, the sons and daughters of the brothers and sisters of his late mother and father; and if it should happen that any of those cousins should die during his lifetime, and leave issue which should survive him, he directed that the legacies which would have been payable to any deceased parent should be paid to the children; and if the executors should fail to discover any one or more of his said cousins who might be living at the time of his decease, or any one or more of the children of his cousins as might have died during his lifetime, and an application should be made to the executors by any one or more of his cousins, or by the children, within eighteen months after his decease, the bequests were to be void.—Held, that the children of cousins who had died before the date of the will were entitled to legacies. Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Meriv. 320) commented upon. Phillips v. Phillips, 10 Jur., N. S., 1173; 13 W. R. 170; 11 L. T., N. S., 472; 5 N. R. 102.

4. Where a testator gave the residue of his property, in trust to divide it per capita, and not per stirpes, among his nephew and nieces, the children of his brother and sister; and in case any or either of his nephews or nieces should die in his lifetime, leaving lawful issue, then to pay the share of each so dying unto his or her children.—Held, that the children of a nephew who died before the date of the will were entitled to the shares which their parent would have taken. Parsons v. Gulliford, Tarry v. Skurray, Ex p. Tarry, 10 Jur., N. S., 231; 10 L. T., N. S., 60.

6. A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate, after the death of two persons, to such children of B. as should be then dead, leaving children; he directed that the children should stand in the place of their parents.—Held, that the children of such children of B. as died in the testator's lifetime and who were also dead at the date of the will took no share of the residue. Butter v. Ommanney, 4 Russ. 73.

7. Gift by a testator of his real and personal estate to his wife for her life, and the residue to be equally divided between her brothers and sisters; and in case any of them should be dead at the time of her decease, leaving issue, such issue to stand in their parent's place.—Held, first, that no brother or sister who died before the date of the will was capable of taking under the bequest, and, therefore, the issue of any brother or sister who was dead before the date of the will could not take by substitution; secondly, that it was not an original and substantive gift to the issue of those brothers and sisters who were dead at the death of the wife. Gray v. Garman, 2 Hare 268; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 259; 7 Jur. 275.

1. Testator, by will in 1860, gave property to trustees on trust for his sister for life, and after her death on trust to pay the principal to the child or children of his sister equally at twenty-one, "and if any of them die leaving issue, the share or shares of such of them as shall so die shall go to their respective issue," and if any should die under the age of twenty-one without issue, the share or shares of such of them as should so die should lapse. The testator died in 1861. His sister died in 1881, having had three children, two of whom were dead at the date of the will, one leaving issue, and the other without issue:—Held, that the issue of the child dead at the date of the will were not entitled under the will. Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Meriv. 320) followed. Re Barker, Asquith v. Saville, 51 L. J., Ch., 835; 47 L. T. 38.

2. A testatrix, having a power of appointment over a fund, bequeathed all her money under settlement to be divided, share and share alike, between her nephews and nieces, the children of those who might be deceased to be entitled to the share of their parents:—Held, that the children of a nephew who was dead at the date of the will were not entitled to a share of the fund. Atkinson v. Atkinson, 6 L. R., Eq., 184.

3. When a testator devised real estate upon trust for A. and the testator's brothers and sisters for their lives, with benefit of survivorship where any of them should die without leaving children, but where any should die leaving children, upon trust to let such children have their parents' share until the death of the survivor of A. and his brothers and sisters, and upon the death of such survivor upon trust to convey the shares of their parents among the children of A. and his brothers and sisters:—Held, that in the case of A. and of a brother and sister of the testator who were living at the date of his will, but who died before him, their children were entitled to shares during the continuance of the life estate of the testator's surviving brothers and sisters, but that the children of a brother who was dead at the date of the will were excluded from such shares. Habergham v. Ridehalgh, 39 L. J., Ch., 545; 9 L. R., Eq., 395; 18 W. R. 427; 23 L. T., N. S., 214.

4. A testator gave the surplus of his property to trustees to divide among his nephews and nieces, and directed that, "in case any of them should be dead or die leaving issue," such issue were to take their parents' share:—Held, that the issue of three who were dead at the date of the will were entitled to their parents' shares. Re Jenks, 18 W. R. 1085.

5. A testator devised his real estate to trustees, upon trust during the lives of the children of A., B., and C. (all deceased), and of the survivors and survivor of them, to pay the rents and profits to them in equal shares, and directed that the shares of such of them as should die in the lifetime of the others or other of them leaving issue should be paid to such issue, the share of the parent being divided equally among the issue if more than one. He further directed that after the death of the survivor of the children of A., B., and C., his real estates should be sold, and the proceeds of sale divided between the children of A., B., and C., equally; and that the shares of such of them as might die under age and without issue should accrue to the other or others of them, but that the shares of such of them as might die under age leaving issue should belong to such issue, and be divided amongst them equally if more than one:—Held, that the representatives of those children of A., B., and C., who died without issue in the lifetime of other members of the same class, were not entitled to a share of the rents and profits; and that the issue of such of the children of A., B., and C. as were dead at the date of the will took no benefit under it. Kelsey v. Kelsey, 38 L. T., N. S., 471.

6. A father gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, and after her decease to such of the children of his two late sisters as should survive his wife and should attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares; but in case any of such children should be dead at his decease, then he directed that such issue should take the share of their deceased parent:—Held, that the gift to the issue of deceased children was a substitutionary gift, and that the issue of a child who was dead at the date of the will could take nothing. West v. Orr, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 60; 47 L. J., Ch., 294; 38 L. T., N. S., 5; 26 W. R. 409. Affirming 35 L. T., N. S., 51.

7. A testator bequeathed a legacy to his first cousins, to be equally divided between them. He then gave the share or shares of those of his first cousins, if any, who might die in his lifetime, unto all and every the children of all his first cousins who might so die in his lifetime, share and share alike; such shares to be taken per capita and not per stirpes:—Held, that the children of a first cousin who had died before the date of the will were not entitled to participate in the legacy. Re Hotchkiss, 8 L. R., Eq., 643; 38 L. J., Ch., 631.

(b) Direction to take Parent's Share which he would have been entitled to if living.

8. A testator may so express himself as to cause a child of a deceased child to represent, and be substituted for that deceased child; though he never intended a share for the deceased child. Loring v. Thomas, 1 Dr. & Sm. 497; 7 Jur., N. S., 1116; 30 L. J., Ch., 789; 9 W. R. 919; 5 L. T., N. S., 269.

A. gave property to trustees to divide equally between the children of D.; provided, that in case any child or children of D. shall die in her lifetime, then the child or children of each such child or children so dying should stand in the place of his, her, or their deceased parent, and should be entitled to the same share or shares which his, her, or their parent would have been entitled to if living at the time of the decease of the testatrix:—Held, that the words "shall die" did not necessarily refer to a death after the date of the will, but that the children of a child who was dead at the date of the will would share. Id.

9. Bequest to the testator's nephews and nieces living at his death, with a proviso, that in case any of his nephews or nieces should die in his lifetime, leaving children him surviving who should attain twenty-one, then such children were to stand in the place of their respective parents, and were to be entitled to the same share as their deceased parent would have been entitled to if living at the testator's decease.—Held, that the child of a niece (who died before the date of the will) having survived the testator, and attained twenty-one, was entitled to her parent's share. Re Chapman, 9 Jur., N. S., 657; 11 W. R. 578; 32 Beav. 382.

1. A brother bequeathed to his sister Susan all the property he might die possessed of for life, and after her death he desired the property to be equally divided among his brothers and sisters, and should any of his brothers or sisters die (leaving issue) during the lifetime of his sister Susan, the share which would have been theirs to be equally divided among their children.—Held, that the children of a brother who died fifteen years before the date of the will were entitled to take the share of their deceased parent. Adams v. Adams, 14 L. R., Eq., 246; 20 W. R. 881; 27 L. T., N. S., 505.

2. A testatrix by her will gave a sum of money to trustees on trust, after the death of the widow of a cousin, for the children of the cousin, share and share alike; provided that in case of any of the children dying in the lifetime of the testatrix leaving issue, such issue should take the share to which their parent would have been entitled if living. One of the children was dead when the will was made, and a codicil showed that the testatrix was aware of this.—Held, that the issue of that child took a share in the money. Re Lucas's Will, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 788; 29 W. R. 860.

3. Gift by will in trust for A. for life, and after her death for the children of A. who should be living at her death equally, with a proviso that if any child of A. should die in the lifetime of A. leaving issue who should be living at A.'s death, the issue of such child should take the share which his, her, or their parent would have taken if living at the death of A., and with a gift over if there should be no such child or children or issue of a child or children of A. so living at her death. One child of A. died before the date of the will leaving issue who survived A.—Held, that the gift to issue was original, not substitutional, and that, therefore, the issue of the deceased child of A. were entitled to take. Re Woolrich, Harris v. Harris, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 663; 48 L. J., Ch., 321.

4. A testator bequeathed his residuary estate and effects to trustee upon trust to pay the income to certain persons for their lives, and subject thereto bequeathed one-fourth of his estate and effects to his nephews and nieces, the children of L., in equal shares; and in case of the death of any of his said nephews and nieces leaving issue, he directed that such issue should take the share that his, her, or their deceased parent would have taken if living.—Held, that the children of nephews and nieces who died before the date of the will, and of a nephew who died after the date of the will, but before the testator, took, by substitution, the shares which their respective parents would have taken if living at the testator's death. Re Potter, 8 L. R., Eq., 52; 20 L. T., N. S., 649; 39 L. J., Ch., 102.

5. A testator gave a sum of 5,000*l.* in the event of the death of his nephew, J. W., without leaving issue, to be equally divided among all the brothers and sisters of J. W. who should be living at the time of his death, and the children then living of any of his brothers and sisters who should have previously departed this life, but so that the children of such deceased brother and sister should take only the share that their parent would have taken if living.—Held, that a child of a brother of J. W., which brother was dead at the making of the will, took no share of the 5,000*l.* Waugh v. Waugh, 2 Myl. & K. 41.

5. Effect of the words "Said," "Such."

6. Testator bequeathed his residue to trustees in trust for all his children living at the decease of his wife, as tenants in common; and if any such children should die before his wife, and should leave issue, then the children of such his son or daughter should be entitled to the portion of such his son or daughter who might be deceased before the decease of his wife, provided that until the portions thereby provided for any of the said children of his said sons or daughters who might have died before their mother should become vested, it should be lawful for his trustees to apply the interest of the portion to which any such child might be entitled in expectancy for the maintenance of such child. The testator at the date of his will had four sons and one daughter, and he had had another daughter who was then dead, leaving children who survived the testator.—Held, that those children were entitled to a share of the residue. Giles v. Giles, 8 Sim. 360; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 176; 1 Jur. 234.

7. Testatrix, having two sons and two daughters living, gave a legacy to each of them, and then gave the residue to Mary, one of her daughters, for life, "and after her decease I will that the said property be equally divided amongst such of my sons and daughters as may be living at the decease of the said Mary, and in case of the decease of any of my said sons or daughters, the surviving children of any of my sons or daughters to have their father's or mother's part." The testatrix had another son and daughter, both of whom were dead at the date of her will, leaving children.—Held, that their children were entitled to shares of the residue. Jarvis v. Pond, 9 Sim. 549; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 167.

8. A testator bequeathed stock in trust for a daughter for life; and in case there should be no child of the daughter living at her decease, or being such, they should all die under twenty-one, then he bequeathed the stock unto all and every his children then living, and the child or children of such of his children as should be then dead, in equal shares, but so that such his grandchildren should only have among them such share as their parents would respectively have been entitled to in case they had been then living.—Held, that children of a child of the testator, known by him to be dead at the date of the will, did not take any interest. Re Thompson's Trusts, 5 De G. M. & G. 280; 2 W. R. 218, 445; 2 Eq. Rep. 236.

9. When a testator gave legacies to his brother and three sisters, nominatim, and gave his residue in trust for his brothers and sisters who should be living at the death of his wife, and the child or children of such of his said brothers and sisters as should have died in the lifetime of his wife, equally to be divided between his said brothers and sisters and child or children of deceased brothers or sisters, such child or children taking, nevertheless, no more than his, her, or their parent would have taken, and it appeared that he had one brother only surviving at the date of his will, but had had two other brothers, who were then dead, leaving children:—Held, that such children were entitled to a share in the residue. Re Thompson's Trusts (5 De G. M. & G. 28) explained. Re Jordan's Trusts, 2 N. R. 57.

1. A testator gave property to trustees to pay the income after the death of his wife to "all the children of my sisters or late sisters who shall be living at the decease or second marriage of my wife, and the issue then living of such of the said children of my sisters as shall be then dead":—Held, that the issue of one of the nieces who was dead, to the testator's knowledge, at the date of the will took the share to which their mother would have been entitled, had she survived the wife. Hall v. Woolley, 18 W. R. 129; 39 L. J., Ch., 106.

2. Testator bequeathed one-sixth part of his residuary estate amongst the children of his late sister J. T., and directed that their share should be paid to them at twenty-one, and that, in case any of them should die under that age leaving issue, their shares should be paid to their issue at a certain time, but if any died without leaving issue their shares to be paid to the surviving children, and the issue of such of them as were dead, per stirpes; and he bequeathed another sixth part to his sister M. C. for life, and after her death unto and amongst her issue, and to be payable at the like time, and with the like benefit of survivorship, and in like manner as before expressed as to the other sixth part. M. C. had six children living at testator's death, and had had another, who had died before the date of the will, leaving a daughter:—Held, that she was not entitled to take either in her own right under the description of issue, which by reference meant the children of M. C., or by substitution for her mother, as she died in the lifetime of the testator. Peel v. Catlow, 9 Sim. 372; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 273; 2 Jur. 759.

3. Bequest to each of A.'s sisters and brothers, or to such of them as may be living at the time of my decease, in case of those who may not be in existence at my death, to go to their respective descendants:—Held, that the descendants of a sister who was dead at the date of the will were excluded. Smith v. Pepper, 27 Beav. 86.

6. Other Cases.

4. Words in a will indicative of a class must be taken to denote the class as it was constituted at the date of the will, or at the death of the testator. Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Ca. 143; 11 Jur., N. S., 185; 34 L. J., Exch., 198; 13 W. R. 442; 12 L. T., N. S., 89; 5 N. R. 378.

Where, therefore, there was a gift (after the happening of certain events) amongst my daughters and their children, the child of a daughter who had died before the date of the will was not entitled to a share of the property thus devised. Id.

VI. DEATH OF OBJECT OF PRIOR GIFT BETWEEN DATE OF THE WILL AND DEATH OF THE TESTATOR.

5. Devise of estate to B., for life, then to testator's nephews, etc., and to the children of them that should be then dead. Issue of nephews who died in testator's lifetime not entitled. Thornhill v. Thornhill, 4 Madd. 377.

6. Testator gave the residue of his estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her death for his children who might then be living, the shares of each to be paid at twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship as to the shares of any dying in the wife's lifetime and without issue, provided that if any did die in the wife's lifetime, leaving issue, such issue should have their parent's share. One of the children, after he had attained twenty-one, died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue:—Held, that such issue was entitled to the parent's share. Smith v. Smith, 8 Sim. 353; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 175. Overruling Thornhill v. Thornhill (4 Madd. 377). And see Collins v. Johnson, 8 Sim. 356.n.

7. A testator bequeathed his residuary personality to trustees in trust for the children of L., to be divided equally between them, and directed that, "in case of the decease of either of them leaving a family, then such share as the parents would have taken shall be equally divided amongst the children of such deceased parents":—Held, that "decease" meant decease during the testator's life—that the children of L. who survived the testator took absolutely, and that the children of one child of L., who died between the date of the will and the death of the testator, took the share which this parent would have taken. Re Haynard, Cherry or Creery v. Lingwood, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 470; 51 L. J., Ch., 513; 45 L. T. 790; 30 W. R. 315.

VII. CLAUSES SUBSTITUTING CHILDREN FOR LEGATEES WHO DIE BEFORE PERIOD OF DISTRIBUTION OR ENJOYMENT. WHETHER CHILDREN MUST SURVIVE THE PERIOD OF DISTRIBUTION OR THEIR OWN PARENTS.

8. Bequest to widow for life, and afterwards to transfer to testator's children then living, with a gift to the issue of such children if dead, the issue to take only the share their father would have been entitled to:—Held, that the issue took by substitution, and that to entitle them they must survive the tenant for life. Bennett v. Merriman, 6 Beav. 360.

9. Testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees in trust, to pay the interest to and amongst all the children of his brother for their respective lives; and after their deaths, as they should respectively die, he gave the principal of their respective shares to their respective children, and, if any of his brother's children should die without leaving any child, he gave their shares to their surviving brothers and sisters for life, and afterwards to their respective children, in the same manner as their original shares were given. One child of the testator's brother had three children, one of whom was born at the testator's death, and that child and another died in their parent's lifetime:—Held, that, on the death of the parent, the surviving child became entitled to the whole share of which the parent had been tenant for life. Amies v. Skillern, 14 Sim. 428; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 165; 9 Jur. 129.

1. Testator bequeathed one moiety of his residuary personal estate to trustees to pay the interest and dividends equally amongst such of his children as should be living at a certain period for their lives, and, after the death of any of them, upon trust to stand possessed of a proportionate share of the fund for the use of the issue of the child or children so dying absolutely; "but in case of such child or children dying without leaving issue, then upon trust to stand possessed of the proportionate share of the child so dying, in trust for, and equally to be divided between and amongst my other children then living and the issue of such of them as may then be dead, such issue nevertheless only taking the share their, his, or her parent would have taken if living." H., one of the children of the testator, who was living at the period of distribution, died, leaving issue a daughter, who died without issue. Afterwards W. and A., two others of the testator's children, died without issue:—Held, that the daughter of H. took no interest in the shares of W. and A. Macgregor v. Macgregor, 2 Colly. 192.

2. A. bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust to pay the dividends to his cousin for life; and as to the principal from and after her decease, in trust for all her children who should be living at her decease, and the issue of such of them as should then be dead leaving issue, as tenants in common; but the issue, if more than one, of any deceased child to take as a class as if by representation, and not as individuals:—Held, that the issue of a child who died in the cousin's lifetime, were a class to be ascertained at her death. Penny v. Clarke, 1 De G. F. & J. 424; 6 Jur., N. S., 307; 29 L. J., Ch., 370; 8 W. R. 286. And see S. C. Johns, 619.

3. A testator left the residue of his estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her decease to belong to all and every such of his brothers and sister as should be living at the decease of his said wife, and all and every the children and child of such of his said brothers and sister as should be then dead, per stirpes and not per capita. The sister died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, leaving a son and daughter. The daughter also died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, leaving issue:—Held, that the personal representative of the daughter was entitled to participate, together with the son, in the deceased's sister's share. Re Cantor, 13 W. R. 215; 11 Jur., N. S., 9.

4. A testator directed payment of his debts, and gave all his personal estate and effects (by description) to his wife, for her sole use for life. He then gave to her a cottage at B. for her sole use for life, and after her death to fall into the residue of his estate; and he gave two houses in N. Street, one in K. Place, and one in

M. Street, to her in the same words. And he directed that the aforesaid properties, and all other his property, real and personal, should be disposed of for the benefit of his children (or any of them) or so many as should survive the death of his wife; nevertheless if any married and died leaving issue, they should inherit and have the benefit of the father's or mother's share, and that the property therein contained should be kept in repair and let for the best rents; and after deducting the interest on mortgage and repairs, he divided among his sons and daughters, provided that his property should not be sold, but let until his youngest son attained twenty-one. Then there was a discretionary power to the executors to sell and pay off interest and just claims, and divide the residue equally among his sons and daughters. The widow claimed to be entitled in fee to the premises in N. Street, K. Place, and M. Street, and to be recouped the mortgage money she had paid off; she also claimed dower:—Held, that she was put to her election, both as to the property given by the will, and as to dower. Also that there was a forfeiture. And that there was a gift to those children who survived the wife, and the issue of those that died in her lifetime, leaving issue. Hilton v. Hilton, 15 W. R. 193.

5. Testator had four daughters, A., B., C., and D., and by his will gave 4,000*l.* to each of his daughters A. and B., with a direction, that if either of them died unmarried, 3,600*l.* part of the 4,000*l.*, should be divided among his surviving daughters, and the child or children of such of them as should be then dead. A. died unmarried. C. had five children, two of whom survived A., but the other three died in her lifetime. The five children of C. took vested interests in equal fifths of the fund, as well those who died before as those who survived A. Stanley v. Wise, 1 Cox 432.

6. Testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees, in trust to pay the rents, interest, and dividends thereof to his wife for her life, and after his decease to sell, convert into money, collect, and get in the same, and to pay and divide the moneys to arise therefrom unto and equally between and amongst such of the children of his sisters Martha, Phoebe, Alice, etc., as might be living at the time of the decease of his wife, and the issue of such of them as might be then dead, in equal shares and proportions, such issue only to take the share which their respective parents would have taken if living; provided such children or issue should then have attained twenty-one, otherwise to pay to them the interest of their shares until they should attain that age, and then to pay them the principal. The testator's wife survived him. Each of his sisters had several children. A child of Martha died before the testator's wife, leaving children, and one of those children also died before the testator's wife:—Held, nevertheless, that that one took a vested and transmissible interest in the testator's residuary estate. Lyon v. Coward, 15 Sim. 287; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 460; 10 Jur. 486.

7. A testator gave a sum of money to trustees in trust, to pay the interest to his daughter for life, and after her decease to divide the principal between all and every the children of his said daughter, who should be living at the time of her decease, and the lawful issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, so as that the issue of each child so dying should take the share which their deceased parent would have taken if living; and so as that such issue of each child so dying should take equally, share and share alike, to be paid to all such children and issue upon their respectively attaining, and in case they should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, with clauses directing the application of the income for the maintenance of the children and issue as the trustees might think fit. One of the children of the tenant for life died in her lifetime, leaving children, some of whom died in the lifetime of the tenant for life:—Held, that the time of the death of the child of the tenant for life, and not the time of the death of the tenant for life, was the period for ascertaining the class of his issue who were to take; and that the children of the deceased child living at his death, though they subsequently died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, took vested interest. Barker v. Barher, 5 De G. & Sm. 753; 17 Jur. 125; 21 L. J., Ch., 791.

1. J. B., after giving certain annuities and legacies, gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, with liberty to sell the same for the benefit of his personal estate; and upon further trust to pay the annuities and legacies, and from and after the decease of the last survivor but one of the annuitants, his children and grandchildren, upon further trust for sale as aforesaid, and to render residue into money, and divide the same equally share and share alike with and among the said survivor, whose annuity should then cease; and all and every the testator's grandchildren as should be living, if any should be born after the date of that his will, and the children of such living grandchildren, either the said annuitants or born after the date of his will, as tenants in common, except only that the child or children of any grandchild should be entitled to the share or part the parent would be entitled to receive, if more than one, in like manner as tenants in common. All the testator's children being dead, and two annuitants being still living, as between whom it appeared that an arrangement had been come to abandoning the right of survivorship:—Held, on a petition by a great-grandchild of the testator claiming to be entitled to a vested interest in the share of his deceased mother, and in opposition to the wishes of an assignee of the share of one of the grandchildren of the testator, that the great-grandchildren of the testator took vested interests under the will, and that a part of the fund might be distributed under the order of the Court. Bellamy v. Hill, 2 Sm. & G. 328.

2. Under a deed of appointment the trustees were directed to pay the interest of the trust funds to the husband of the appointor for life; and after his death to divide the property equally between all the children of A., born or to be born, who should be living at the death of her husband, and the children of those who might then be dead, such children to stand in the place of their parents respectively, and to take such share as their parents, if living, would have been entitled to. A. left five children, one of whom died, leaving six children, and four of these six died before the husband of the settlor:—Held, that the six children, or their representatives, were entitled equally to one-fifth of the trust funds, but that there was no substitution. Harcourt v. Harcourt, 26 L. J., Ch., 536; 5 W. R. 478.

3. Bequest of interest to one for life, and after her death upon trust to transfer the principal among the children living at her decease, "or the children of any child who may be then dead." A grandchild who predeceased its parent:—Held, excluded from a share in the fund. Crause v. Cooper, 1 John. & H. 207.

4. Under a bequest for the testator's daughter A. for life, and in case of her death without issue, her share to go among the survivors of the testator's children and the children of such of them as shall have died leaving issue, such issue to take the share of their respective parent:—Held, that children of testator's children who survived their own parents and predeceased the tenant for life, took vested interests on the death of their parents. Re Wildman, 1 John. & H. 299.

5. Where a gift to one and his issue is an original gift to the issue, it is not necessary for the issue to survive their own parent, but where it is substitutional it is necessary; but neither in the case of an original nor a substitutional gift is it necessary for the issue to survive the tenant for life. Lamphier v. Buck, 2 Dr. & Sm 484; 11 Jur., N. S., 837; 34 L. J., Ch., 650; 13 W. R. 767; 12 L. T., N. S., 660; 6 N. R. 196.

6. A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to trustees, to pay the annual proceeds to his wife for her life, and from and immediately after her decease, to divide and distribute it amongst such of his nephews and nieces named in his will as should be living at her death in equal shares; but if any or either of them should then be dead, leaving issue, then such issue to be entitled to their father's or mother's share, but in equal proportions:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be read as "children," and that the gift to the issue was not substitutionary for the gift originally given to the parents, but an original, independent, and unconditional gift; and that the only child of one of the testator's nephews, who died after the testator, but before the period of distribution, acquired a vested interest in the share her father would have taken if he had then been alive, even although such child also died before the period of distribution. Martin v. Holgate, 1 L. R., H. L., 175; 15 W. R. 135; 35 L. J., Ch., 789. Reversing S. C. nom. Holgate v. Jennings, 34 Beav. 79; 11 L. T., N. S., 501; 11 Jur., N. S., 5; 34 L. J., Ch., 120; 5 N. R. 180.

7. Real estate was devised upon trust (after the death of the tenant for life) to sell and divide the proceeds equally among such of the testator's five daughters as should be living at the decease of the life tenant, and the children, grandchildren, and issue respectively to take and have equally amongst them, if more than one, the part or share which their, his, or her parent respectively would have been entitled to had such parent been then living." One of the daughters, whose share was now in question, died before the tenant for life, having had ten children, of whom three survived the period of distribu-bution, the other seven having died before that period, some with, others without, issue:—Held, that the gift to the children, grandchildren, and issue was an original gift, and that the share was divisible into tenths, and that one-tenth went to each stock, irrespective of the objects of gift surviving the mother or the period of distribution. Re Orton, 3 L. R., Eq., 875; 36 L. J., Ch., 279; 15 W. R., 251; 16 L. T., N. S., 146.

1. A husband, who died in 1854, gave all his property to his wife for life, and after giving pecuniary legacies and annuities, devised and bequeathed to his son C. all the residue after his mother's death, and to his heirs: and in case his son should die leaving no issue, then his freehold estate was to be equally divided between his (testator's) surviving children or their families. All the children of the testator survived their mother, who died in 1861, and, excepting one, all (two without issue, two leaving children, one leaving a child, and the issue of another child) died in the lifetime of C., who died, in 1869, a bachelor and intestate:—Held, a gift on the death of C. without leaving issue living at his death to the other children of the testator then living, and to the families of such of them as were dead. Burt v. Hellyar, 14 L. R., Eq., 160; 41 L. J., Ch., 430; 26 L. T., N. S., 833.

2. A testator gave 500*l.* upon trust to pay income thereof to a daughter for life, and if she died without issue, then to pay the same sum and interest to his four sons (naming them), share and share alike; but in case any of his sons should be then dead, the testator directed that the part or share of him or them so being dead, should be paid to his or their child or children, share and share alike if more than one; or if but one, then to such only child; but if there should be no child, then to his or their legal representatives. One of the sons died a bachelor, and the others leaving children, some of whom died in their parent's lifetime; others survived their parent, but died before the tenant for life; and others survived both their parent and the tenant for life:—Held, that legal representatives meant executors and administrators; that the gift to the sons, being an absolute gift, liable to be divested, the gift to the children was by substitution; and that the gift being substitutional, it was necessary, to entitle the children to take, that they should survive their own parents, but that it was not necessary for them to survive the tenant for life. Re Turner, 2 Dr. & Sm. 501; 34 L. J., Ch., 660; 13 W. R. 770; 12 L. T., N. S., 695.

3. Bequest to H. S. for life, and after her decease to the testator's four brothers and sister, "or such of them as should be then living," equally. And in case any of them should be then dead, then he bequeathed the deceased child's share to the children, "to be paid at the time before mentioned." The brothers and sister all died in the lifetime of H. S., one (A. B.) having had no children:—Held, that the representatives of A. B. were entitled to his share, and that all the children took, whether living at the death of H. S. or not. Masters v. Seales, 13 Beav. 60.

4. Gift by a testator of personal estate to his wife for life, remainder between and among his seven children by name, or such of them as should be living at his wife's decease and the issue of such as should be dead leaving issue, with power to apply the presumptive share of such issue for maintenance. A son of the testator died after his father's death, leaving an infant daughter, who died in the lifetime of the testator's widow:—Held, that such infant took a vested share. Re Poll, 3 Giff. 152; 9 W. R. 733; 4 L. T., N. S., 511; 8 Jur., N. S., 207.

5. A testator gave his Three per Cent. Consols to his wife for life, and after her decease he directed that one-half of his consols should become the property of his son-in-law M., or in case of her decease he directed that it should be "equally divided between her children living." M. died in the testator's lifetime, leaving one daughter B., who survived the testator, but died before the tenant for life:—Held, that B. took a vested interest in the fund, notwithstanding her death in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Hodgson v. Smithson, 5 W. R. 3; 26 L. J., Ch. 110; 8 De G. M. & G. 604; 2 Jur., N. S., 1199. Affirming 21 Beav. 354; 2 Jur., N. S., 315; 1 W. R. 427.

6. Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust (subject to certain legacies and annuities) for A. for life, and after his decease upon trust to convey, assure, and pay the whole of the said real and personal estate to and amongst the children of A. and the issue of such children. But in case A. should die without issue, then to pay and distribute the same equally amongst all and every the children of B. and C., and the survivors of them: but, in case any such children should be then dead, leaving issue of his, her, or their body or bodies lawfully begotten, then such issue to have as well such original share or shares as the father or mother of such issue so dying would have been entitled to if then living, as also such other share or shares thereof as the father or mother of such issue so dying might have been entitled to by survivorship or otherwise. A. survived the testator, and died without issue:—Held, that the period of the survivorship of the children of B. and C. is not to be referred to the time of the death of the testator, but to that of the death of A., being the period of distribution; and that the children of B. and C., living at the date of the will, and those born after that date and before the death of A., were entitled to the real and personal estate, with survivorship between them in case of the death of any such children without issue before the death of A., the children of such of the said children as died before A., leaving issue, being substituted for the original legatces. Buckle v. Fawcett, 4 Hare 536; 9 Jur. 891.

7. A testator by his will gave 4,000*l.* to be invested in stock in trust to pay the dividends to his daughter S., during her coverture, and upon the death of G., her husband, to transfer the capital to her for her sole use; but in case G. should survive his daughter, then in trust for H., F., E., A., and W., his five sons, and their respective issue (if any), to be divided among them in equal shares and proportions, such issue to take per stirpes and not per capita; he gave also the residue of his personal estate to his sons H., F., E., A., and W., "and their respective issue (if any), such issue to take per stirpes and not per capita,"

to be divided among them in equal shares and proportions; the shares of such of them as shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, to be paid to them respectively forthwith after the testator's decease; the shares of such of them as should be under that age to be paid to them when and as they should respectively attain such age." Declared that, S. dying in the lifetime of G., the sons of the testator living at such event would be absolutely entitled to the stock in equal shares, but if any of the sons should die in the lifetime of S., leaving issue, such issue, if living at the death of S., would be entitled to the share or shares of the fund which their parents would have been entitled to if living, such issue to take such shares equally among them, and adjudged, that the sons living at the death of the testator took an absolute interest in the residue. Dictum, that if any of the sons had died in the lifetime of the testator, his children, living at the death of the testator, would have taken, by substitution, the share of the parent. Whether grandchildren, or more remote descendants, would take as issue, and in what proportions, quære. Pearson v. Stephen, 5 Bli. N. S. 203; 2 Dow & Cl. 328.

1. Where a testator gave a life interest to his wife, and immediately after her death to his two sons, at twenty-one, if then living, and to the issue of either of them that shall be then dead, such issue taking the share the parent (if living) would have been entitled to only, with a gift over, in the event of both dying under twenty-one without lawful issue; and one of the sons died in the lifetime of the wife, without leaving issue, but having had a son who had died in his lifetime:—Held, that the child of the son who predeceased the tenant for life, and who had died in his father's lifetime, did not take, but that there was an intestacy as to the moiety given to the son, who died during the life of the tenant for life. Humphrey v. Humphrey, 2 Dr. & Sm. 49; 8 Jur., N. S., 500; 10 W. R. 286; 6 L. T., N. S., 13; 31 L. J., Ch., 622.

2. Testator gave 20,000*l.* stock in trust for his daughter A. for life, for her separate use, and after her death in trust for her children as tenants in common, to be vested at twenty-one, or death under that age, leaving lawful issue. By a codicil testator, instead of the 20,000*l.* given by his will, gave 15,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for her life, after her death to her children to be equally divided amongst them or the survivors, share and share alike:—Held, that only those children of A. who survived their mother took shares. Haley v. Bannister, 23 Beav. 336.

3. A testator devised realty to his wife for life, with remainder to A., B., C., D., and E. as tenants in common, and in case of the death of either in the life of his wife, leaving issue, his share was to go among all his children as tenants in common in fee, but in case of the death of any one in the lifetime of the wife without leaving issue living at his death he gave his share to the survivors:—Held, that the gift to children was substitutional, and those children only who survived their fathers could take under it. Hurry v. Hurry, 39 L. J., Ch., 824; 10 L. R., Eq., 246; 18 W. R. 829; 22 L. T., N. S., 577.

4. A condition of survivorship does not attach to a substitutionary gift. Re Merricke, 14 W. R. 473.

A testator, by reference, gave the income of a fund to M., who was unmarried, for life, with a gift to her husband (if any) for his life; and upon the decease of the longer liver of M. and her husband, he directed his trustees to pay, assign, and transfer the capital to his four children, A., B., C., and D., who should be then living, "or to the issue of such of them as should be then dead," such issue taking their parent's share. "Issue" as used in the will was clearly equivalent to "children":—Held, that upon the death of any one of the four, A., B., C., and D., whether before or after the termination of the life estates, his children then living took vested interests in the fund, and that his children then dead were wholly excluded. S. C. nom. Re Merrick's Trusts, 1 L. R., Eq., 551; 12 Jur., N. S., 245; 35 L. J., Ch., 418; 14 L. T., N. S., 130.

5. Bequest to A. for life, and after her death to pay and divide it amongst her children living at her decease, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, such issue to take their parents' share, with a gift over if all the children of A. should die in her lifetime without leaving issue. Two children died in the life of A., leaving children:—Held, that grandchildren of A. who predeceased their parents did not take; but that grandchildren of A., who survived their parents, but died in the life of A., took vested interests, which passed to their representatives. Thompson v. Olive, 23 Beav. 282.

6. A bequest of personality to trustees upon trust to pay the interest thereof to the testator's daughters A. and B. for their lives and the life of the survivor, and upon the decease of the survivor to pay and transfer the capital equally among all the testator's children, and the issue, if any, of A. and B., and of any other deceased child, in such manner that such issue might be entitled to such share or shares as his or their deceased parent or parents respectively if living (A. and B. excepted), would have been entitled to:—Held, that the whole fund belonged to the testator's children other than A. and B., and to the children living at the death of such as had died leaving children. Re Bennett, 3 Kay & J. 280.

7. When there is a gift by will to such of a class of persons as shall be living at the happening of a particular event, and to the issue of such of the class as shall be then dead leaving issue, the gift to issue is not to be restricted to issue who survive their parent, but all the issue of any member of the class who has pre-deceased the particular event leaving issue are entitled to share, whether they have or have not survived their parent. Re Smith, 47 L. J., Ch., 265; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 665; 26 W. R. 418.

VIII. OTHER CASES.

8. A gift to the sisters of the testator living at a particular time, or the issue of any or either then dead, is not a substitutionary but a substantive gift to the issue. Attwood v. Atford, 2 L. R., Eq., 479.

1. A testator devised his estate and effects to trustees to pay the proceeds to his wife for life, and "after her decease to distribute and divide the whole, etc., among such of my four nephews and two nieces" (naming them) "as shall be living at the time of her decease; but if any or either of them should then be dead, leaving issue, such issue shall be entitled to their father's or mother's share":—Held, that "issue" here meant children; and that the words, "should then be dead leaving issue," meant, should before then have died leaving issue, and that the gift to the issue was not substitutionary for the gift originally given to the parents, but an original independent and unconditional gift. Martin v. Holygate, 1 L. R., H. L., 175; 15 W. R. 135; 35 L. J., Ch., 789. And see Smith v. Smith, 5 L. R., Ch., 342.

2. Bequest of a fund in trust for A. and his wife B., for life; and after their decease, upon trust to pay the principal sum equally amongst the testator's nephews and nieces, children of A. and B. then living, or their legal personal representatives, share and share alike. A. and B. had seven children; two of them died in the lifetime of the testator, another died before the surviving tenant for life, and the remaining children survived:—Held, that the representatives took as a distinct class, and not by substitution, that the fund was divisible into sevenths, payable to the surviving nephews and nieces, and the representatives of those that were dead. King v. Cleveland, 4 Jur., N. S., 702; 26 Beav. 26; 28 L. J., Ch., 76. Affirmed 4 De G. & J. 477; 28 L. J., Ch., 835.

I. GENERAL RULE. DEATH AT ANY TIME.

1. Immediate Gifts, 8093.
2. Future Gifts after a Prior Interest, 8094.

1. Immediate Gift.

3. A testator directed his residuary real and personal estate to be divided into fourteen shares, and gave such shares to persons whom he named, and directed that the whole of them should have the benefit of survivorship between them, in the event of any one or more of them dying without issue:—Held, that the "dying" meant was not "dying in the testator's lifetime." Smith v. Stewart, 4 De G. & Sm. 253; 15 Jur. 834; 20 L. J., Ch., 205.

4. When there is a gift over in the event of death without issue, the rule is that death without issue must be held to mean death without issue at any time, unless a contrary intention appears in the will; and the introduction of a previous life estate does not alter that principle of construction. Olivant v. Wright, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 346; 45 L. J., Ch., 1; 33 L. T. 457; 24 W. R. 84.

5. Bequest of residue to the testator's daughters, A. and B., in equal proportions, and in case of the death of either the whole to the survivor of them, and in the event of marrying, and having children, then to the child or children of them, or the survivor of them, if they should attain the age of twenty-one years, but if not then among the children of C. A. and B. survived the testator, and A., who died without having been married, bequeathed the whole of her property to B.:—Held, that the bequest did not become absolutely vested in A. and B. on the death of the testator, but continued subject to the executory bequest over in favour of C. Child v. Giblett, 3 Myl. & K. 71; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124.

6. Produce of estates devised to be sold, directed to be paid between J. and A., the wife of B. in equal proportions, share and share alike, A.'s share to her sole use and benefit; and in case of death of either, leaving any children or child, trustees to stand possessed of moiety so given to J. and A., to and for the use and benefit of such child or children at twenty-one, equally to be divided if more than one, and until twenty-one, money to be invested in funds; interest for children's maintenance; if either J. or A. should die without children, survivor to take share: J. and A. held only tenants for life. Farthing v. Allen, 3 Madd. 310.

7. Whenever there is an interest limited by will, either by way of remainder or by way of executory interest, if all the preceding estates are out of the way, or the events on which the executory interest is limited have occurred, it is immaterial whether those estates are taken out of the way, or those events occur in the lifetime of the testator, or after his decease. Varley v. Winn, 2 Jur., N. S., 661; 25 L. J., Ch., 831; 4 W. R. 792.

If there be an executory bequest of personalty depending either upon the determination of a preceding limited interest or upon a collateral event of defeating an interest previously given, and such limited interest determine, or such collateral event happen during the lifetime of the testator, the executory bequest does not lapse. S. C. 2 Kay & J. 700.

Where, therefore, there was a bequest to the testator's five daughters of 6,000l. each, to be invested by the executors within seven years from his death, "in trust for them or their children, but if any of my daughters should die leaving no issue, then the share or portion so invested shall be divided amongst those who have issue, share and share alike, as they arrive at the age of twenty-one; and if only one, the whole to go to that one only." One daughter died without issue in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that the 6,000*l.* given to her passed by the gift over to those of the testator's daughters who were living at his death, and had issue then living, absolutely. Ib.

Held, also, that the words above printed in italics ought to be read as though in a parenthesis. Ib.

As to each daughter's own legacy of 6,000*l.*, it was directed to be invested, and the interest paid to her for life. Ib.

2. Future Gifts after a Prior Interest.

1. Gift by will of freeholds and leaseholds to A., durante viduitate, and then to B. absolutely, with a gift over to B.'s brother and sister, "if he should die and leaving no children." B. survived A.:—Held, that he then took an absolute vested interest not liable to be divested on his subsequent death without children, and that, therefore, the gift over in that event failed. Edwards v. Edwards, 15 Beav. 357; 16 Jur. 259; 21 L. J., Ch., 324.

Construction of gifts in the following form: first, to A., and if he shall die, to B.; second, to A., and if he shall die without children, to B.; third, to X. for life, with remainder to A., and if he shall die, to B.; and fourth, to X. for life, with remainder to A., and if he shall die without leaving children, to A. In the first case the contingency has reference to the death of the testator; in the second, to the death of A.; in the third and fourth, to the death of the tenant for life. Ib.

A testator gave all his freehold and leasehold property to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for her life, if she should so long continue his widow, and directed that in case of her marrying again she should receive an annuity. He then disposed of the property among his three children, the gift to take effect in possession immediately upon the decease or marriage of the widow. He directed his trustees to make over the shares of the children to them immediately upon the widow's death, as soon as they arrived at the age of twenty-one years; and further directed, that if one of his children should die leaving no children, his or her share should be equally divided between the other two and for their heirs forever:—Held, that the share of a child who attained twenty-one, and survived the widow, did not go over on his subsequently dying without leaving children. S. C. 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 324; 16 Jur. 259.

2. The fourth rule laid down in Edwards v. Edwards (15 Beav. 357; 21 L. J., Ch., 324), that where a life or other estate is given to one or more of the objects of a testator's bounty, and on the determination of that estate the subject disposed of is given to another person with a direction that if the latter shall die, without leaving a child, his share shall go over, the words indicating death without issue refer to that event occurring before the period of distribution, that is, before the determination of the estate, as there stated, disapproved of. Ingram v. Soutten, 44 L. J., Ch., 55; 7 L. R., H. L., 408; 23 W. R. 363; 31 L. T., N. S., 215. Reversing S. C. nom. Re Heathcote's Trusts, 9 L. R., Ch., 45; 43 L. J., Ch., 259; 29 L. T., N. S., 445; 22 W. R. 42. And affirming 21 W. R. 862; 29 L. T., N. S., 161.

The fourth rule would be better stated thus: "The period to which the executory devise will be referred will be the period of the death of the first taker, unless there are directions in the will inconsistent with that supposition."—Per Lord Hatherley. Ib.

A husband bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death upon trust (in the events which happened) to pay the income to his daughter for life, with a gift over in the event of her death without issue, to his two sons; with a gift over in the event of both his sons dying without issue to H. "But in case H. shall die without leaving any issue living at the time of her death," then over. The widow died in 1823; his two sons survived her, and both died without issue in the lifetime of his daughter, who died without issue in 1866. H. survived the daughter, and died without issue in 1872:—Held, that H. having died without issue, the gift over took effect; for in such a case death without issue at any time must be taken to be intended, unless there are any expressions in the will pointing to an earlier termination of the trust. Ib.

3. When there is a gift over in the event of death without issue, the rule is that death without issue must be held to mean death without issue at any time, unless a contrary intention appears in the will, and the introduction of a previous life estate does not alter that principle of construction. Olivant v. Wright, 24 W. R. 84; 33 L. T., N. S., 457; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 346; 45 L. J., Ch., 1.

4. There is no authority that the words introducing a gift over in the case of the "death unmarried or without children" of a previous taker, do not indicate, according to their natural meaning, death unmarried or without children at any time, or that the ordinary and literal meaning of the words is to be departed from otherwise than in consequence of a context which renders a different meaning necessary or proper. O'Mahony v. Burdett, 7 L. R., H. L., 388; 23 W. R. 361; 31 L. T., N. S., 705.

II. GIFT OVER ON SEVERAL EVENTS. IMMEDIATE GIFT.

5. A. B. devised real estate to C. D., his heirs, executors, and administrators; he then directed that if C. D. should die without issue, the estate should go to other persons; and in case C. D. died and leaving issue, they were to take their deceased parent's share:—Held, that the words "in the lifetime of the testator" could not be imported into the will. Gee v. Town Council of Manchester, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151; 14 Jur. 825. And see S. C. at law, 21 L. J., N. S., Q. B., 242; 16 Jur. 758.

6. Testatrix bequeathed to trustees 3,000*l.* upon trust to pay the interest for the maintenance of A., and to pay him the principal when he should attain twenty-one; but directed that in case he should die before his legacy should become payable, leaving lawful issue, such issue should take his legacy. The testatrix then gave half the residue of her estate upon trust for B. for her life, and after her death she gave this half to A. at the time his 3,000*l.* legacy became payable, and, "in case of his death without leaving lawful issue," then the same to be equally divided between C., D., and E. A. survived the testatrix, attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of B., without having been married:—Held, that the share of the residue had vested in him absolutely, subject to the life estate of B., and that C., D., and E. took no interest therein. Woodburne v. Woodburne, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 88; 14 Jur. 565; 2 W. R. 131; 3 De G. & Sm. 643.

1. A testatrix made the following bequest: "I give to A. A. the sum of 400*l.*, to be paid at and after my decease, and vested in the public funds, the interest whereof she shall receive when she attains twenty-one. In the event of her decease, at, before, or after the said period, the sum so bequeathed to be divided between E. M. and A. M." A. A. took a life interest only in the legacy. Miles v. Clark, 1 Keen 92.

2. Bequest of testator's residuary personalty equally between his four children (nominatim) to be equally divided between them share and share alike, and in case of either of them leaving issue, the issue of such child to take the parent's share; but in the event of their dying without leaving issue, then the share or shares of the one so dying to form part of the residue:—Held, that the testator's children took for their respective lives only. Cooper v. Cooper, 1 Kay & J. 658; 3 W. R. 470.

3. A testator by his will (dated in 1841) gave all his real and personal estate to trustees in trust, to convert, and pay, apply, and divide the proceeds into three equal shares; one he directed his trustees to invest upon trust to pay the income to his daughter H. for her separate use; and from and after her death leaving issue, to such issue as therein mentioned. And the will contained provisions that, in case any of his said children or grandchildren should happen to die without leaving issue, the share or shares of him, her, or them, so dying, should go to the survivors of them, his said children and grandchildren. And also that, if any of his said children or grandchildren should happen to die leaving issue, the share or shares of him, her, or them should go to such issue as therein mentioned:—Held, that the sons J. and T. took life interests only. Clayton v. Lowe (5 Barn. & Ald. 656) observed upon. Gosling v. Trenshend, 2 W. R. 23. Affirming 17 Beav. 245.

In a gift to A. (without any limitation of interest), "and if he should happen to die, leaving lawful issue," then to such issue, the contingency has reference to the death of A., and not to that of the testator. A., therefore, does not take an absolute interest. S. C. 17 Beav. 245.

4. Immediate gift to four residuary legatees and devisees in equal shares, "with benefit of survivorship" in case any of them should die without issue; and in case any of them should die leaving children, then the share, whether original or accruing, of each so dying to go to such children:—Held, that the clause of survivorship, and the limitation over to children of the legatees, were not confined to the lifetime of the testator, and intended merely to guard against lapse; and that the residuary legatees did not upon surviving the testator at once acquire absolute indefeasible interests in their shares. Bowers v. Bowers, 5 L. R., Ch., 244; 39 L. J., Ch., 351; 23 L. T. 35; 18 W. R. 301. Reversing 21 L. T. 134; 8 L. R., Eq., 283.

III. WHEN RESTRICTED TO PERIOD OF VESTING.

5. Bequest to a female when and if she should attain twenty-one, to her sole and separate use; and in case of her death leaving children, her share to go to her children:—Held, to vest an absolute interest in the legatee on her attaining twenty-one. Horne v. Pillans, 2 Myl. & K. 15; Coop. temp. Brough. 198; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 2.

6. In applying the rule that a clear gift in a will is not to be cut down by any subsequent provision, unless the latter is equally clear, the plain intention of the testator, and not the comparative lucidity of the two parts of the will, is to be regarded. Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Ca. 225; 30 L. J., Ch., 177; 6 Jur., N. S., 901; 9 W. R. 1. And see S. C. 6 W. R. 98; 5 W. R. 768; 2 De G. & J. 57; 4 Drew 147.

A. devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to his son, "when he have obtained the age of twenty-one, upon the following conditions," and directed that his own widow should receive an annuity out of these estates; he then gave to his son all his personal estates, consisting of ships, bonds, and funded stock, "but should the hand of death fall on my widow and son, and my having no other children, or my son any issue, my will is then that should he leave a widow, she shall receive an annuity out of my real estates as before mentioned, the residue then to be equally divided, share and share alike, after paying such legacies as I may hereafter name, the division to be" between certain persons specifically mentioned ("they paying all my son's debts, funeral expenses, and demands, or my wife's, should she be the longest liver"). The son became twenty-one some years before the will was executed; he married, but died without ever having had issue:—Held, that the gift over affected only the real estate. Id.

7. A testatrix devised to trustees freehold premises in trust to receive the rents, and after paying thereout all proper outgoings, and applying thereout, if they thought fit, any money towards the maintenance of S., to let the residue accumulate until S. should attain twenty-one, and then to pay such accumulations to him, but if he should die under such age without leaving issue living at his decease, then such accumulations should be for the benefit of the person to whom and in like manner and form as these premises were limited in the like event, and when S. should have attained twenty-one, then the trustees were to stand seised of the premises in trust for him in fee; but if he should not leave any issue living at his decease, then the trustees should stand seised of the premises in trust for A. in fee, and if A. should not leave any issue living at her decease, then over. S. attained twenty-one, and died without ever having had issue:—Held, that the premises vested in S. in fee on his attaining twenty-one, subject to be divested in the event of his dying without issue, which event having happened, the limitation over in favour of A. took effect. Smith v. Spencer, 6 De G. M. & G. 631; 6 W. R. 136; 3 Jur., N. S., 193. Affirming 2 Jur., N. S., 778; 4 W. R. 729.

1. A testator gave to two trustees, in trust for the child or children of his daughter-in-law, the sum of 700*l.* to each child, to be paid by his executors as soon as each child became of the age of twenty-one years; or by mutual agreement the trust was to continue longer after each child should have passed the age of twenty-one; the aforesaid sums to remain in the stock and possession of his executors until the whole sum be paid to the said trustees, for the sole use of the said children; but should either child or both children of his daughter-in-law die without leaving issue, then the 700*l.* for one child; or if both die and leave no issue living, 1,400*l.* for the use of other persons:—Held, that the grandchildren of the testator, upon attaining twenty-one, took absolute interests in the money liable to be divested in the event of their dying without leaving issue. Cotton v. Cotton, 23 L. J., Ch., 189; 2 W. R. 207.

2. A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to pay, apply, and dispose of it to two women, A. and B., when they should attain their respective ages of twenty-one years, directing that their shares should not be subject to the control of their husbands; but in case both or either of them died without issue living at the time of their respective deceases, then he gave the share of her or them so dying to his nephews and nieces:—Held, upon the whole context of the will, that the executory devise over of the residue was not confined to the death of A. and B., or either of them, under twenty-one, and without leaving issue; but would take effect upon their respective deaths at any time, without leaving issue then living. Gray v. Folds, 7 L. J., Ch., 182.

3. Under a bequest of stock to A. for life, and after the decease of A. to the testator's great-grandchildren, share and share alike, if they were living at the time of A.'s death, but that they should not receive any part of the capital till they arrived at twenty-one; but if any one, or all, of the said children should die before they arrived at the age of twenty-one years, the shares or part of those so dying should go to B. and C., share and share alike:—Held, that the attaining twenty-one was not confined to the event of surviving A., and, therefore, that on the decease of one of the children in the lifetime of A., under twenty-one, the share of such child passed to B. and C., and did not lapse so as to go to the testator's residuary legatee. Goodchild v. Fenton, 3 Y. & J. 481.

4. A testatrix in 1823 devised lands to A. and B. as tenants in common in fee, and in case of the death of either under twenty-one and leaving no child, the whole to go to the survivor, and in case of the death of both leaving no child, then over. A. died under twenty-one without issue; B. attained twenty-one:—Held, that the gift over would take effect in case of his death, leaving no child. Else v. Else, 41 L. J., Ch., 218; 13 L. R., Eq., 196; 20 W. R. 286; 25 L. T., N. S., 927.

5. A testator bequeathed his personal estate to his brothers and sisters absolutely; and declared, that if any of them should die in his lifetime, or afterwards, without leaving lawful issue, his share should go amongst the survivors; and that if any should die in his lifetime, or afterwards, leaving issue, his share should be divided amongst his issue; and he declared, that none of the legatees should be entitled to any bequest until they attained twenty-one:—Held, that on attaining twenty-one the brothers and sisters took absolute interests, and that the limitation over was to take effect only in the event of the death of a legatee under twenty-one, in the lifetime of the testator, or afterwards. Monteith v. Nicholson, 2 Keen 719; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 247.

6. A testator bequeathed his residue to his children, in terms which gave them a vested interest, subject to be divested in favour of their children on their death under twenty-one. He then provided, that if it should happen that he should leave no such children or child living to attain twenty-one, "or such, if any, dying without leaving lawful issue," then over:—Held, that "the dying" referred to was dying under twenty-one, and that the testator's children, on attaining twenty-one, acquired an indefeasible interest. Pearman v. Pearman, 33 Beav. 391.

7. J. devised land to trustees for R. for life, and after her death for sale and investment of the proceeds, and to pay and apply the interest in the educating and bringing up of all and every his nephews and nieces, the children of G., during their minorities, and to pay to his nephews and nieces his, her, or their equal part or share in the proceeds when and as he, she, or they should respectively arrive at his, her, or their ages of twenty-one; and in case any or either of his nephews or nieces should die without leaving issue, then the share of him, her, or them so dying should go the survivor and survivors of them, and be paid to him, her, and them respectively when his, her, and their original share and shares should become payable as aforesaid; and if any or either of them should at the time of such sale be of such age, then to be paid to them so of age immediately after such sale, and he gave and bequeathed the same to his nephews and nieces accordingly:—Held, that the shares of the nephews and nieces were indefeasibly vested at twenty-one. Re Johnson, 10 L. T., N. S., 455.

8. A testator bequeathed a legacy to each of his two nephews and his niece, if they should respectively survive him and attain twenty-one, when the legacies to his nephews were "to be paid." In case of the death of either of his nephews or niece leaving issue, such issue to take the parent's legacy, as by his or her will directed; if no will, equally; but in case of the death of either, before his or her legacy payable, his or her legacy to go to the survivor; during minority income to be applied for maintenance and education; the niece's legacy to be settled:—Held, that the nephews took only a life interest in the legacies, and that after their deaths, if they left children, the corpus would go to such children as their parents might appoint by will; if no children, that the nephews would take absolutely. Martineau v. Rogers, 25 L. J., Ch., 398.

1. A testatrix bequeathed a legacy of stock upon trust for her nephew R. until he should attain the age of twenty-one, and then over. And she directed that in case any of the four legatees therein named (R. being one of them) should happen to depart this life without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for the survivors or survivor of them, in certain proportions. R. attained his age of twenty-one, but died without issue.—Held, that he took an absolute vested interest in the legacy on his attaining twenty-one. Re Hayne, 18 L. T., N. S., 16.

IV. WHERE GIFT CONTINGENT ON SURVIVING THE TENANT FOR LIFE.

2. A testator gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, and then to be divided into three shares; and he gave one-third between the children of his brother T. B., living at the death of his wife, one-third to his niece F. G., and the remaining one-third to his nephew and niece T. B. and S. B.; and in case such, any, or either of them should die, having left a child or children surviving them, he declared that the expectant's share should go between his and her children. T. B.'s children all died in the lifetime of the widow, but some left children.—Held, that the latter were entitled to the first-mentioned one-third. Garvey v. Whittingham, 5 Beav. 268; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 334; 6 Jur. 545.

3. C. in 1814 bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees, in trust for the benefit of his wife for life; and after her death he directed that an annuity should out of the same be purchased for his brother; and then he bequeathed the residue to H., "in case he was living at the time of the decease of his wife, or to his children, if he should marry and leave any; but if he should die without leaving issue," then he bequeathed the residue to other persons. The widow died in the lifetime of H., who in 1844 died a bachelor.—Held, that the words "die without leaving issue" referred to the death of H. in the lifetime of the widow, and that as he survived her, his residuary legatee was entitled to the fund. Andrews v. Lord, 6 Jur., N. S., 865; 8 W. R. 405; 3 L. T., N. S., 803.

4. S. bequeathed property to his wife's niece "for her own absolute use, provided that she survived his wife, or if she married before her aunt's death, then the property was to go equally between her children; but if none, then to her husband." If she died unmarried before her aunt, the testator directed that at his wife's decease the property should go to other persons in the will named. The niece married, and had children in the lifetime of the aunt, whom she survived. The dividends on the fund in court had been, since the death of her aunt, paid to the niece, who petitioned to have the principal transferred to her.—Held, that in the events which had happened, she was absolutely entitled. Re Serjeant, 9

Jur., N. S., 116. S. C. nom. Re Serjeant, 11 W. R. 203; 7 L. T., N. S., 501.

V. WHEN RESTRICTED BY EXPRESS DIRECTIONS TO DIVIDE, CONVEY, OR SETTLE.

5. Bequest of personal estate, being in trust, to pay the interest to M., the testator's widow, during her life, and on her death "to pay and divide the trust moneys unto and equally between his daughters H. and A., for their own use and benefit absolutely, and in case of the death of them, H. and A., or either of them, leaving a child or children living," to apply the interest for the maintenance of the children till twenty-one, then to divide the trust money among them, expressing that the testator's intention was, that the children of his daughters should be entitled to the same shares to which their mother would be entitled if then living, with an ultimate trust in case of the death of H. and A., without leaving issue living at their respective deaths, or of all their children dying minors. On surviving the tenant for life, H. and A. become entitled to the absolute interest. Galland v. Leonard, 1 Swan. 161; 1 Wils. 129.

6. A testator gave all his freehold and leasehold property to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for her life, if she should so long continue his widow, and directed that in case of her marrying again she should receive an annuity. He then disposed of the property among his three children, the gift to take effect in possession immediately upon the decease or marriage of the widow. He directed his trustees to make over the shares of the children to them immediately upon the widow's death, as soon as they arrived at the age of twenty-one years; and further directed, that if one of his children should die leaving no children, his or her share should be equally divided between the other two, and for their heirs for ever; and that if two of his children should die leaving no children, their shares should go to the surviving one, and his or her heirs for ever.—Held, that the share of a child who attained twenty-one, and survived the widow, did not go over on his subsequently dying without leaving children. Edwards v. Edwards, 16 Jur. 259; 21 L. J., Ch., 324; 15 Beav. 357.

7. A testator, being entitled to a reversionary fund upon the death of a husband and wife without leaving issue who should attain the age of twenty-one years, bequeathed the fund to trustees upon trust to divide the same between "his children living at the time of the decease of the tenants for life, or such others lawfully begotten as would have been entitled to it at the death of their parents".—Held, that the surviving children took, to the exclusion of a grandchild whose father died after the testator, but before the death of the last tenant for life. Miller v. Chapman, 3 W. R. 101. And on appeal, 3 W. R. 300; 24 L. J., Ch., 409.

8. Real and personal estate, including a business, was devised and bequeathed in trust to pay an annuity out of the income to the testator's widow during her life, and after her decease the property, including all accumulations, was devised and bequeathed to the testator's son W.; but if he should die without leaving issue, the testator directed the trustees to sell and convert, and to distribute the proceeds among certain persons:—Held, that the gift over only contemplated the son's death in the lifetime of his mother, and that the son having survived the widow, took on her death an absolutely vested interest. Edwards v. Edwards (15 Beav. 357) approved and followed. Dean v. Hanley, 6 N. R. 93; 11 Jur., N. S., 686; 13 L. T., N. S., 89.

1. A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to stand possessed of the rents and proceeds thereof, and to pay an annuity of 500l. a year to his widow for her life, or so long as she should continue his widow; and from and immediately after her death or marriage again, upon trust to pay and apply such annual rents and proceeds for the maintenance and advancement of such of his children as should be under twenty-one as his trustees should think proper; and when the youngest of his children should attain that age, then upon trust to call in all his moneys, and distribute all his property equally between his children, except so much as would secure to his wife (if she should be then alive and married) an annuity or yearly sum of 100l., as thereafter mentioned:—Held, that the period of division among the children of the testator was upon the death or second marriage of the testator's widow, in case the youngest child should have attained twenty-one, and not absolutely upon the youngest child attaining such age. Beckton v. Barton, 5 Jur., N. S., 349; 28 L. J., Ch., 673; 27 Beav. 99.

The testator directed, that in case of the death of any of his children leaving issue, the share or shares of such deceased parent or parents should go to his, her, or their children:—Held, to have reference to the death of the children before the period of distribution. Id.

The testator, upon the marriage of his daughter, and after the date of his will, settled a sum of money upon his daughter, her husband and children:—Held, to amount to an advancement, and that the daughter must be put to her election. Id.

2. A wife gave all her property (consisting of realty and personalty) to her husband during his life to receive the rents and profits, and after his death to be divided amongst her five children, share and share alike; and if any of her children should die without issue, then that child or children's share to be divided, share and share alike, among the children then living; but if any of her children should die leaving issue, then that child, if only one, should take its parent's share; if more than one, to be divided equally amongst them:—Held, that there was a sufficient contrary intention within the meaning of the above-stated rule, that "after his death" meant immediately after his death, at which time the property was to be divided, that this was the time of division referred to throughout the will, that death without issue must be restricted to death without issue in the life of the tenant for life, and that therefore all the children who survived the tenant for life took indefeasible shares in the property. Osman v. Wright, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 346; 45

L. J., Ch., 1; 24 W. R. 84; 33 L. T., N. S., 457. Reversing 20 L. R., Eq., 220; 23 W. R. 406; 32 L. T., N. S., 18.

3. A gave the income of his residuary real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death gave the same to all his children absolutely; but in the event of the marriage of any of his daughters, he directed that the interest should be paid to them for life, and after the death of any of them to their husbands for life; and upon the death of the survivor, that the principal should be divided amongst the children of his married daughters, to vest in them at twenty-one, or at twenty-one or marriage, with benefit of survivorship, and with clauses for maintenance and advancement; and if any of such daughters should have no children living at her death, the principal of her share was to be at her own disposal:—Held, that this was an express gift to the children of the daughters, and that the direction applied to all the daughters of the testator, and not to those only who married before the death of the testator's widow. Witham v. Witham, 30 L. J., Ch., 888; 5 L. T., N. S., 138.

Held, also, that the contingency of a daughter's marrying was not restricted to a marriage in the lifetime of the widow. S. C. 3 De G. F. & J. 738.

4. A testator bequeathed his residue to his wife for life, and at her decease "to be equally divided between his two daughters B. and C.," and in case of marriage to be settled on themselves. The tenant for life was still living, and B. had never been married:—Held, that B. took an absolute vested interest on the death of the testator. Smith v. Colman, 25 Beav. 216.

5. (i. by his will bequeathed property to belong to and be given up to his child or children on attaining twenty-five. And he provided that if his eldest son should come to the inheritance of a certain estate, then that the share of such son in the above-mentioned property should be made over to his brothers and sisters equally:—Held, that the eldest son having attained twenty-five without having come to the above-mentioned inheritance, was entitled to his share absolutely. Glyn v. Glyn, 5 W. R. 241; 26 L. J., Ch., 409; 3 Jur., N. S., 179.

6. A testator gave and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his trustees in trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trust to convey, assure, and divide the same unto and amongst all his children in equal shares as tenants in common on their respectively attaining twenty-one; and in case of the decease of any or either of his said children without issue under that age, or before they should acquire vested interests therein, then the trustees were to convey, assure, pay, and divide the shares of the children so dying to the survivors:—Held, that the testator's children, on attaining twenty-one, acquired absolute vested interests in the real and personal estate. Wheable v. Withers, 16 Sim. 505; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 156.

7. Where there was a gift over in the event of a legatee dying "before receiving his legacy," and a legatee died after the period contemplated for payment had arrived, but without receiving the legacy, by reason of a suit having been instituted, and the money paid into court:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect. Whiting v. Force, 2 Beav. 571; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 345.

VI. WHEN RESTRICTED IN OTHER CASES.

1. Future Gifts after a Prior Interest, 8099.
2. Immediate Gifts, 8100.

1. Future Gifts after a Prior Interest.

1. The words "if A. B. shall happen to die, leaving a child or children," construed to mean, upon the effect of the whole will, the death of A. B. before the testator's widow. Da Costa v. Keir, 3 Russ. 360; 5 L. J., Ch., 161.

2. A testator gave a fund, subject to the life interest of his wife, to A., B., and C., equally to be divided between them; "but in the case of the decease of C. without leaving lawful issue," he gave one-third between A. and B.:—Held, that upon the decease of the wife, C., who was then living, became absolutely entitled to one-third of the fund. Barker v. Cochs, 6 Beav. 82.

3. Devise of copyholds in trust for the testatrix's sisters E. and N. for life, and after the death of each her moiety to go to her children, to be equally divided between them and their heirs and assigns respectively, with benefit of survivorship as tenants in common in fee, and not by way of entail; and if all of them should die without lawful issue before attaining twenty-one, then the moiety of the children so dying to go to the children of the other sister; the moiety of the children of N. to those of E. in the one case, and, in the other, the moiety of the children of E. to those of N. N. had two children only, who were born after the death of the testatrix, and died infants:—Held, the children of N. took an absolute fee. Grimshaw v. Howarth, 1 Jur. 558.

4. A testator, after directing the interest of a sum of stock to be paid to his widow for her life, and after her death to be applied towards the bringing up of his three children, until they attained twenty-one years, proceeded: "And upon their severally attaining twenty-one years, after the decease of my wife, to pay, transmit, and divide the principal sum unto and amongst my three children in equal shares; and in case all my said three children should die without leaving lawful issue in the lifetime of my wife, then I give and bequeath the same unto my wife absolutely; and if either of my said sons shall depart this life leaving lawful issue, such issue shall have and be entitled to such share as their respective parents would have had or be entitled to." T., a son of the testator, died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, having attained twenty-one, and leaving lawful issue:—Held, that the gift over to the issue of T. had taken effect, and that T. had not acquired an absolute vested interest so as to pass to his administrator; held, also, that as to the share of E. B., a son of the testator, who had died under twenty-one, there had been an intestacy. Rowell v. Suggers, 1 W. R. 517.

5. Devise to A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee; but if B. should die, leaving issue, then to his children. B. survived A., and died leaving children:—Held, that the gift to his children did not take effect. Slaney v. Slaney, 33 Beav. 631.

6. A testator devised the residue of his estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to receive thereout during her life 40*l.* per annum, and after her decease he gave and bequeathed his residuary estate and effects equally between and amongst his three children and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, share and share alike; and in the event of the death of any or either of his children without leaving lawful issue, the share or shares of him or them so dying without leaving such lawful issue should go and belong to the survivors or survivor of his children, and to the child or children of any deceased child or children which might then be dead, so that the child or children of any deceased child or children should take only the share or shares absolutely which his, her, or their parents or parent were or was entitled to, or interested in during his, her, or their lifetime or respective lifetimes. The widow having died:—Held, that the three children who were living at her decease were entitled absolutely, and not for life only, to equal shares of the property. Re Allen, 3 Drew. 380; 25 L. J., Ch., 286; 4 W. R. 137.

7. A testator gave certain funds upon trust for three persons during their lives, and after the death of the survivor, upon trust for the six children of A. who should be living at the time of the testator's decease, and the issue of such of them as should be living at the time of the testator's decease, and the issue of such of them as should have departed this life leaving issue then living, but so that the issue should take their parent's share. But if any of the six children should die without leaving lawful issue then surviving them, the share of those so dying should go to the survivors or survivor of them. All the six children survived the tenants for life:—Held, that the property vested in them absolutely to the exclusion of their issue. Johnson v. Cope, 2 W. R. 90; 17 Beav. 561.

8. A testator directed his real estate to be sold on the death of his widow, and the produce paid to his six children and the issue of such of them as should die leaving issue, equally, "the issue of any such children being respectively entitled amongst them to such share only as their parents would have been entitled to if living." The will contained a gift over, in case of any of the children dying in his lifetime or after his decease, without having a child:—Held, that a child who survived the widow became absolutely entitled, and that her children took nothing. Wood v. Wood, 35 Beav. 587.

9. A mother devised lands to her daughter S. for life, with remainder to her husband for life, and after the death of the survivor of them to all the children of S. by her then husband who should be living at the testatrix's death as tenants in common in fee, and added a proviso giving over the shares of any of the children of S. who should "depart this life without leaving lawful issue" to the survivors or survivor of the children that should leave such lawful issue as tenants in common in fee.—Held, that the words "depart this life without leaving lawful issue" must be restricted to death without issue at the period of distribution, viz, the death of the surviving tenant for life. Besant v. Cox, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 604; 25 W. R. 789.

1. A husband gave the income of 4,000*l.* to his wife, which he directed after her death to fall into the residue. He gave his residue to his four sons nominatim, with benefit of survivorship; but if they should leave issue, their shares were to go over to their issue.—Held, that the 4,000*l.* belonged absolutely to the sons who were alive at the death of the widow, and the issue of such as were dead. Re Hill, 40 L. J., Ch., 594; 12 L. R., Eq., 302; 24 L. T., N. S., 494; 19 W. R. 740.

2. Immediate Gifts.

2. A testator, having three sons and three daughters, gave by will his residuary estate in trust to be divided into six shares ("being as many shares as" he had children), one share to be for the benefit of each child in manner following, viz., the share of sons to be paid to them as soon as convenient after the testator's death, and the shares of daughters to be vested in trustees for their respective benefit as thereinafter mentioned; provided, that if any son died without leaving issue living at his death, the donee intended no such son, etc., any share accruing under that proviso, should accrue to the survivors of the testator's children, their executors or administrators; and he directed his daughters' shares to be invested upon trusts therein mentioned for them and their children. By a codicil, reciting that he desired to settle more distinctly the shares of one of his daughters, he revoked the will as to her share, and gave it in trust for her for life, and after her death to such of her children as should attain twenty-one, or being daughters, marry; and in case she should have no child living at her decease who would attain a vested interest, in trust for the testator's children who should be living at her decease, and the representatives of such as should be dead. One of the testator's sons died in his lifetime, a bachelor, and the above-mentioned daughter died after the testator's death, a spinster.—Held, first, that the surviving son's shares, both original and accruing, vested absolutely on the testator's death, the clause of substitution, as to sons' shares, operating only in case of death in the lifetime of the testator. Ware v. Watson, 7 De G. M. & G. 248; 2 W. R. 603; 3 W. R. 496.

Held, secondly, that the daughters' accruing shares vested in them absolutely. Id.

3. W. C., by an instrument bearing date the 10th March 1788, conveyed his estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to pay his debts and legacies; and after payment of the same, he directed his trustees to lay out and employ the residue for the use and behoof of G. C., his grandson, and the heirs of the body of G. C., till he or they should arrive at majority, when the trustees were to denude thereof in his or their favours, with such conditions, as to not altering the succession thereof, as to the trustees might seem proper; and failing of G. C. or his lawful issue before either of their attaining majority, the residue should pertain, under the same conditions, to any other heir male of his (the testator's) son's body, if such should exist, by his widow bearing a posthumous child, and that also at his or the heirs of his body attaining majority; and failing of them without issue, then the residue was to pertain to the daughters of his (the testator's) son T. equally. By a codicil, dated the 22nd March 1788, he declared that failing heirs male of his son T. C.'s body, and the succession opening to the heirs female of his body, then in place of the residue pertaining to the daughters of his son T. C. equally, the same should solely pertain to the eldest heirs female of his son T. C. and their issue, the eldest heir female, through the whole course of succession, succeeding always, without division, and secluding heirs portioners; and the trustees were directed to denude upon such heir attaining his majority. By another codicil, dated the 23rd February 1790, the testator, failing his grandson G. C. and the heirs of his body, gave to each of his granddaughters (except the eldest at the time) who should survive him, and the heirs of their bodies, 4,000*l.*, over and above the 1,000*l.* which he had given to them by the instrument of the 19th March 1788, and which it was provided should bear interest from the failure of his grandson and his heirs. W. C. died on the 27th March 1790. G. C. came of age on the 21st May 1799, and died unmarried and intestate on the 30th April 1811. There was no posthumous child of T. C. Upon proceedings being instituted by the trustees for the purpose of having the trust estate wound up.—Held, upon the construction of the instrument and the codicils referred to, that G. C. did not take an absolute interest in the capital of the residuary estate of the testator on attaining his majority, but that on his death, without leaving heirs of his body, the succession opened to heirs female successively, and therefore that the eldest sister succeeded as heir substitute on the death of G. C. Cum- ington v. Boswell, 2 Jur., N. S., 1005; 4 W. R. 752.

4. Bequest of residue to A. and B. equally; and in case they should be married at the time it became payable, to be paid for her separate use, "and her receipt alone for the same to be a sufficient discharge." There was a gift over to C. and D., in case A. and B. should die without leaving issue.—Held, that this case was an exception to the general rule, and that the gift over was confined to A. and B. dying without leaving issue in the life of the testator. Re Anstie, 23 Beav. 135.

5. Bequest to four persons equally; but in case any one should die leaving lawful issue, then to his sons at twenty-one, etc.; but in case any of the four should die without leaving lawful issue, then his share should go to the others or other of them, and to A., and to the respective issue of such one or more of them, including A., as should die leaving issue, such issue taking the respective shares which the parent would have taken if living. One of the four legatees died in the lifetime of the testatrix without ever having been married; A. survived the testatrix.—Held, that there was no lapse, and that A. took an absolute interest in a share of the deceased legatee's bequest. Johnston v. Antrobus, 21 Beav. 556.

1. Gift over, after an absolute bequest, in the event of death without leaving issue surviving, construed, upon the context, such a death under twenty-one. Brotherton v. Bury, 18 Beav. 65; 2 W. R. 46.

A testator gave his personal estate, and the produce of his real estate (which was to be sold on his youngest child attaining twenty-one) between his children equally. There was a gift over, if any child should die after the testator's decease, without leaving issue surviving him (omitting the words "under twenty-one"). There was a maintenance clause, out of interest, and an advancement clause, out of capital, until the "shares should become payable and transferable," and which referred to the time when the legatees would be absolutely entitled to receive, as being on attaining twenty-one. A child died after attaining twenty-one, without leaving issue:—Held, that his share did not go over, but belonged to his representative. Id.

2. A brother gave all his personal estate to his two sisters, one of whom was twenty-five years old, and the other under that age; and he directed that the former should have the immediate control of her share, and the younger upon the age of twenty-five years. And "in case of the death of either of my sisters before me, or before marrying and having children, the whole of the property to go to the survivor":—Held, that the younger sister who after the testator's death attained twenty-five, but had not married and had children, took, at twenty-five, an absolute and indefeasible interest in her share. Clark v. Henry, 40 L. J., Ch., 151; 11 L. R., Eq., 222; 24 L. T., N. S., 256; 19 W. R. 319. Affirmed 40 L. J., Ch., 377; 6 L. R., Ch., 588; 19 W. R. 706.

3. A father gave his residuary estate upon trust to be divided equally amongst all his children in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship in case of the deaths of any of his children without leaving lawful issue, his, her, or their respective executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that death without issue meant death in the testator's lifetime; that there was no implied gift to the issue of a child dying between the date of the will and the testator's death; and that the children who survived the testator took absolutely. Re Smaling, Johnson v. Smaling, 26 W. R. 231.

4. By a will, made before 1838, a testator devised unto his seven children, "and their heirs for ever, the fee-simple" of real estate; and if either of his children should die leaving children, the share of him or her so dying to go to such children; but if any of his children should die, and leave no child, the share of him or her so dying to go to his (the testator's) surviving children and their heirs for ever. All the seven children survived the testator:—Held, that the word "die" must be construed to mean die in the lifetime of the testator; and therefore that the seven children took as tenants in common in fee. Apsey v. Apsey, 36 L. T., N. S., 941.

5. Residuary bequest to two granddaughters of testator "in trust, till they come of age or marry, the interest to be received in the meantime, and paid to them; but if one of them should die before marriage, or twenty-one, then to survivor and her children; but if both should die, leaving no issue, then I give them power to leave it by will as they should think proper." One legatee married, and the other attained twenty-one:—Held, that both acquired vested interests. Thackeray v. Hampson, 2 Sim. & S. 214. S. C. nom. Thackeray v. Dorrien, 3 L. J., Ch., 89.

6. A testator gave legacies to his two brothers, and directed that if either of them "die in my lifetime" his legacy should go to his children, but the legacies were not to be paid till six months after his wife's death. By a codicil reciting the effect of his will and the death of one of his brothers, he directed his legacy to be held for the benefit of his widow for life, and after her death the principal to be paid to her children; and he directed that if his other brother "shall die leaving a widow," such widow should have an interest in the legacy given him in like manner as he had directed the legacy of the deceased brother:—Held, that the words "shall die leaving a widow" meant die in the testator's lifetime, and that interest was payable from the death of the widow. Hood v. Hood, 18 W. R. 88.

I. IMMEDIATE GIFTS.

7. A testator declared that the trustees of his will should stand possessed of the residue of the money to arise from his real and personal estate upon trust, "for all and every my first cousins-german, to be divided equally amongst them, share and share alike. And in case any of my said cousins shall depart this life before their respective shares shall become due or payable, leaving any lawful issue, I direct that such issue shall have the same share or shares of the same residue as his, her, or their parent or parents would have been entitled to if living." The testator had several first cousins-german living at the date of his will, two of whom died in his lifetime; the others survived him. One of those who died left seven children, the other left no issue:—Held, first, that the words "due or payable" referred to the time of the testator's death; secondly, that the issue of the deceased cousin were entitled to their parent's share; thirdly, that the share of the cousin who died without issue did not lapse. Coort v. Winder, 8 Jur. 770.

8. A. bequeathed pecuniary legacies to two nephews and a niece by name, if they survived him and attained twenty-one, when the nephews' legacies were to be paid. In case of the death of either of the nephews, or of the niece, leaving issue, such issue to take the parents' legacy as the parents should by will appoint; but in case of the death of either of the nephews or the niece before his or her legacy became payable, the legacy to go to the survivors. During the minorities of the legatees the trustees were to apply the income of the legacies for their maintenance and education. The legacy of the niece, and any share she might acquire by the death of her brothers, or either of them, were to be settled for her separate use:—Held, that the word paid must be construed as vested, or payable, and that the executory gift to the issue would take effect in the event of the parent dying after attaining twenty-one. Martineau v. Rogers, 8 De G. M. & G. 328.

II. FUTURE GIFTS AFTER A LIFE INTEREST.

1. A testator gave stock to trustees, to be divided after the death of the two persons who had life interest in it among A., B., C., D., and E., in equal shares; and he directed that, if any of them should die without issue, before their respective shares should become payable, the share of him, her, or them so dying without issue, should go to and be equally divided among the survivor and survivors of them. A. died, leaving issue, who were living at the time fixed for the distribution of the fund; then B. died, leaving a son, who died without issue before the period of distribution; shortly afterwards, and also before the period of distribution, C. died without issue:—Held, that B.'s personal representatives were not entitled to any portion of the fund; that the one-third of B.'s share, which on the failure of her issue survived to C., did not, on C.'s death, survive to the other legatees, but was transmitted to her personal representative; that the words "survivor and survivors" were to be construed in their natural sense, and not as equivalent to "other and others," so that no part of the shares of B. and C. went over to A.'s personal representatives. Crowder v. Stone, 3 Rus. 217; 7 L. J., Ch., 93.

2. Real and personal estate were given upon trust, during the life of A., out of the income, to pay A. 200*l.* a year, and one-third of the residue to B.; and on the death of A., to sell and pay one-third to B., then a gift over, on the death of B., before his share should "become due and payable." B. died in the life of A.:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Creswick v. Gaskell, 16 Beav. 577.

3. A husband by his will gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, and then to stand possessed of the same for all and every of his children, share and share alike, until his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one, and upon his youngest child attaining such age, then upon trust for all his children, share and share alike. He then directed that if any of his children should die before his, her, or their share or shares should become transferable and payable, without leaving issue, then the share or shares of the child or children so dying should go over to the survivors; but in case any of his children should die before his, her, or their share or shares should become payable, leaving issue, then the trustees were directed to transfer and pay the share or shares of such deceased child or children unto his, her, or their issue, share and share alike, when they should attain twenty-one:—Held, that the substitutionary gift to the issue of deceased children was sufficient to divest the share of a child who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, the tenant for life. Chell v. Chell, 23 W. R. 252.

4. Gift of residue in trust for wife during widowhood, remainder among five children or the survivor at such age as wife should appoint, in default at twenty-one; but share of child dying before it should become payable, to issue of child:—Held, that the issue of a child who attained twenty-one and died in the lifetime of the wife was entitled. Hind v. Selby, 22 Beav. 373.

5. The rule in Emperor v. Rolfe (1 Ves. 208) applies to the will of a person in loco parentis. The Court will apply this rule in cases where the language of the testator does not necessarily imply an intention to benefit children dying before the tenant for life. Jackson v. Dover, 4 N. R. 136.

6. Testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* in trust for his son, J. L. J., for life, remainder in trust for the children of J. L. J. when and as they should attain twenty-one, as tenants in common, and if any of them should die before their shares became payable, leaving issue; but if any of them should die before their shares became payable, leaving no issue, their shares to be paid to the survivors at the same time as the original shares should become payable; and if J. L. J. should have no child, or having such, they should all die under age and without issue, then the trust fund to sink into the residue, which the testator gave to two of his other children. J. L. J. had four children, all of whom attained twenty-one. One of them died in his lifetime without issue:—Held, that "payable" meant "attain twenty-one," and, consequently, that one-fourth of the fund vested in the deceased child. Jones v. Jones, 13 Sim. 561; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 16; 7 Jur. 786.

7. A testator devised his real estates to his widow for life, and after her death directed the executors to sell, and divide the proceeds equally between his seven children; the shares of his three sons to be vested in them respectively when and as they should attain twenty-one, and the shares of his four daughters to be vested interests in them when and as they attained that age or were married. During the minorities of his children, their shares were directed to be invested and applied for their maintenance and advancement. In case any of the children should die leaving issue lawfully begotten "before the share of such child or children so dying as aforesaid shall become due and payable," the share was to be equally divided "amongst all the issue of such child or children as and when such issue shall attain the said age of twenty-one years;" the interest of such child's share so dying, leaving issue, to be applied for the advancement, etc., of such issue during minority. E.

one of the testator's daughters, married and died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving an infant child, and having assigned her share by way of mortgage:—Held, that the words due and payable did not postpone the vesting of the share until the death of the tenant for life, and that E.'s assignee was entitled, and not her infant daughter, under the gift over. Mendham v. Williams, 2 L. R., Eq., 396; 15 L. T., N. S., 130.

1. A testator, after giving all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust after payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to permit his wife to receive the rents of the realty and enjoy the personalty for her life, she maintaining his son E. during his minority, and after his decease to the use of the testator's sons T., J., and E., as tenants in common, subject to the payment of 200*l.* to each of his daughters H. and M. at the expiration of six calendar months after the decease of his wife, provided that if either or both of his said daughters should happen to die in the lifetime of his wife, or before their respective portions became payable, leaving lawful issue, such issue should have the portion of the parent so dying. H., one of the daughters, died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, unmarried; and upon the question whether the legacy of 200*l.* given to her was vested or not:—Held, that it was vested. Wilkinson v. Chamberlain, 3 W. R. 601.

2. A testator, by his will, bequeathed an annuity to his daughter, and directed that after her death the trustees should hold 2,000*l.*, part of the fund set apart to secure the annuity, upon trust to pay and divide the same unto and equally between the child and children of the daughter as and when they should respectively attain twenty-one, and in case any of the children should die before their shares should become "payable as aforesaid" without leaving issue, the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying should be paid to the survivor or survivors of them, equally if more than one, and if but one, the whole to that one, with power for the trustees, during the respective minorities of the children, to apply the income of his, her, or their expectant share or shares towards his, her, or their maintenance and education. And if all such children should die under twenty-one, without leaving issue, the fund was given over:—Held, that the children's shares absolutely vested at twenty-one, and were not divested by subsequent death without issue in the lifetime of their mother. Partridge v. Baylis, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 835; 44 L. T. 737; 29 W. R. 820.

3. A testator gave the interest of a fund to his widow for life, with a power of appointment amongst all his children, and in default of appointment amongst all such children, with a gift over to the widow, in case all the children should die before their shares should become payable. The widow appointed the fund to her two children, one of whom died in her lifetime:—Held, that the survivor took the whole fund. Bislefield v. Record, 2 Sim. 354.

4. Testator directed his executors to purchase out of his residuary estate a certain sum of stock, etc., to pay the dividends to his wife for her life, and after her death to divide the capital between such of his three daughters as should be then living.

Provided, that if any one of them should be then dead, or should afterwards die before her share should become payable or divisible, leaving a child or children, that share should go to such child or children. The testator's wife died in his lifetime; one of the daughters died three months after the testator:—Held, nevertheless, that she had a vested interest in one of the shares. Collins v. Macpherson, 2 Sim. 87.

5. A testator gave his real and personal estate, after paying four annuities, to one for life, and after his death, he directed his personal and the produce of his real estate to be divided amongst the children of A. living at the testator's death, when the youngest attained twenty-one, if the annuitants should be then dead; but if not, then his trustees were either to invest it and pay and apply the residue of the income in the maintenance, etc., of the children, according to their discretion, or accumulate, such accumulations to be paid, after the death of the surviving annuitants, with the original shares. There was a gift over in the event of the death of any child who should become entitled to a distributive share before his share became payable. One of the children predeceased an annuitant:—Held, nevertheless, that the bequest was vested, and that the gift over did not take effect. Butterworth v. Harvey, 9 Beav. 130; 9 Jur. 999.

6. Personalty was given to parents for life, with remainder to all their children equally, the shares to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, unless in the lifetime of the parents, in which case payment was to be made on the death of the survivor. There was a gift over on the death of a child before becoming entitled to payment. A child attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her parents:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect. Re Williams, 12 Beav. 317; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 46; 13 Jur. 1110.

7. Devise of real estate, to be sold after the death of tenant for life, and bequest of specific sums out of the produce to several grandchildren and a child, and of the residue to other children, to be respectively paid at twenty-one or marriage. "But if any of my said children or grandchildren shall happen to die before the time of such legacy becoming due and payable, then I give and bequeath the share or part of such share of my child or children, or grandchildren, so dying, unto and among those that shall be then living, share and share alike." Two of the children died before the testator. Their shares are to be divided among the other children and grandchildren equally. Another child and a grandchild, having survived the testator and attained twenty-one, died before the tenant for life. Their shares transmissible to their representatives. No implication that the survivorship was to take place, amongst the children and grandchildren distinctly, from the equality of legacies, or from the bequest to each class being made by distinct clause. Walker v. Main, 1 Jac. & Walk. 1.

8. Trust by will subject to an interest for life, to pay and transfer to the testator's nephew and nieces equally at twenty-one, with survivorship, in case any should die before his or their shares should become payable, and a limitation over in case all should die, etc. Vested interest at the age of twenty-one, before the death of the tenant for life. Hallifax v. Wilson, 16 Ves. 171.

Trust to pay the dividends of stock to the testatrix's niece for life, and after her death to divide the capital among the brothers and sisters of the testatrix, and in like manner to the survivors or survivor of them; the share of those who died in the life of the niece passed to their representatives. Id.

1. A testator gave real and personal estate to trustees on trust, after the death of a tenant for life, to sell and convert into money, and "to pay and divide the moneys arising therefrom among" eleven persons named equally, as and when they should respectively attain twenty-one, with a gift over of the shares of any of them who should die "before such legacy, or share, or any part thereof, should become payable." All of them survived the testator, and attained twenty-one, but some of them died before the tenant for life:—Held, that "payable" was equivalent to "vested," and that the gift over did not take effect. Haydon v. Rose, 39 L. J., Ch., 688; 10 L. R., Eq., 224; 18 W. R. 1146; 23 L. T., N. S., 334.

2. Where there is a gift for life, followed by a gift in remainder, which is to vest upon the attainment of a particular age, or any other event personal to the legatee in remainder, with a gift over in the event of the latter dying before the legacy is payable or receivable, or vested in possession, or the like, in any form of expression that signifies "paid" or "received," all such expressions are to be read as equivalent to "vested," and refer to the period at which the property is to vest. West v. Miller, 37 L. J., Ch., 423; 6 L. R., Eq., 59; 18 L. T., N. S., 429; 16 W. R. 602.

A testator bequeathed his personalty to trustees, to invest the same and pay the income to his wife, until his daughter should attain twenty-one, and as soon as she should attain that age then to call in all invested moneys, and divide the same between the daughter and his son; and in case of the death of either without issue before their respective estates or interests should be received, then to pay the estate or interest of him or her so dying to the survivor. But in case of the death of either previous to the time aforesaid leaving issue, then to such issue, with other remainders over. By a codicil, he directed the investments and payments to his wife to be continued during her life, though she might live beyond the daughter's attainment of the age of twenty-one; and, reciting that his son was dead, he gave the share and interest, which he would have taken, to the daughter, to be paid and applied along with her own. The daughter survived the testator and attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of his wife, leaving a child:—Held, that the daughter took an absolute vested interest in the fund on attaining twenty-one, which her death in the lifetime of the wife did not divest in favour of the child and the other persons entitled over. Id.

III. EQUIVALENT WORDS—"ENTITLED"; "ENTITLED IN POSSESSION."

3. Construction of a gift over upon death before becoming entitled to payment. Re Williams, 12 Reav. 317; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 46; 13 Jur. 1110.

Trust of a sum of consols for all and every the children of A. and B., the shares of sons to be paid, assigned, or transferred to them at twenty-one, and the shares of daughters at twenty-one or marriage, unless such respective times of payment should happen in the lifetime of A. and B., or the survivor, in which case the same should be paid, assigned and transferred immediately on the death of survivor of A. and B.: and in case any of the same children should happen to die before he or she should become entitled to the payment, assignment, or transfer of his or her share, then the share of the party so dying should be paid, etc., to the survivors or survivor who should become entitled to have their, his, or her shares or share paid, assigned, or transferred to them, him, or her, as aforesaid:—Held, that a child who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of A. and B., was entitled to a share, and that the benefit of the trust was not confined to children living at the period of distribution. Id.

4. A testator gave the residue of his estate upon trust, to pay the interest to his widow during her life for her separate use, and after her decease to pay the principal to C. for her own use, and to be at her own disposal, but if C. should happen to die leaving any child living at her decease, then to such child or children; and if she should happen to die without any child living at her decease, then to D. and E.; but if either of them should die before they should become entitled to receive the fund, then he gave the whole to the survivor, and if they should both die in the lifetime of his widow then he gave the whole to his wife absolutely. C., having survived the widow, was entitled to the residue absolutely. Da Costa v. Kier, 3 Russ. 360; 5 L. J., Ch., 161.

5. Testator, having a power to appoint by deed or will, executed a will, and afterwards a deed, and then a codicil to his will. By his will he appointed four denominations of land to his four sons, giving one denomination to each and his heirs, "to go to them immediately after the death of his wife, and in case of the death of any or either of his said younger sons before he or they should be respectively entitled thereto,—then the part or share of him or them, so dying, to go to and be divided amongst the survivors equally, share and share alike." By the deed he partly displaced the appointment contained in his will, and appointed to his third son and his heirs the denomination of land given by his will to his fourth son, leaving the latter without provision; then, by a codicil, he appointed to his fourth son and his heirs another denomination of land "instead of" that given by his will:—Held, that the words "and in case of the death of any or either of his said younger sons," etc., referred to the event of the death, not of the testator, but of his wife. Held, also, that although the appointment by the will would have been subject to the clause of survivorship, the appointment by the codicil was absolute to him and his heirs. Charitable Donations (Commissioners of) v. Cotter, 2 L. R. 196; 2 Dr. &

Wel. 615; and the decision was affirmed, S. C. 1 Dr. & War. 498; where, however, it was held, that the period of vesting was the death of testator, not of tenant for life.

1. Entitled construed as entitled in possession. Turner v. Gosset, 34 Beav. 593.

Subject to prior life and possible absolute interests, there was a bequest of a portion of the residue to A., with a gift over to his children or other issue, in case of his decease before he should become entitled:—Held, that this meant entitled in possession. Ib.

2. The will of the testator in this matter contained a bequest of 25,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust to invest the same, and to pay the interest to his daughter for life, and from and after her decease to pay the principal unto and amongst all her children equally, share and share alike, if more than one, and their respective executors, administrators, and assigns: and if but one, to that one, his or her executors, administrators, and assigns, "on the respective attainments of such children to the age of twenty-one years, being sons, or on their respective attainments to that age or days of marriage, being daughters;" the interest of their respective shares from time to time, until their respectively becoming entitled to the principal, to be applied in their respective maintenance; and in case any of the children of his said daughter should happen to die before being entitled in possession to his, her, or their share or shares under the will, the share of the child so dying was to go to the survivors or survivor of them. The daughter had two children only who attained twenty-one, the rest having died under age, and unmarried. One of these two children survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of her mother:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect, but the personal representatives of the deceased child were entitled to her share. Re Yates's Trusts, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 281; 16 Jur. 78.

3. Bequest of personal estate to A. for life, and after her death to the testator's brothers and sisters; but if any of the brothers or sisters should die before they became entitled to their shares, the shares of them so dying to go to their children. The testator left five brothers and sisters; two of whom died in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that the word "entitled" had reference to the death of the testator, and not to the death of A., and that the shares had therefore vested absolutely in the brothers and sisters, and that the representatives of each of them who had died were entitled to a fifth of the fund. Henderson v. Kennicot, 2 De G. & Sm. 492; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 40; 12 Jur. 848.

4. A gift over, after a tenancy for life, on death "without becoming entitled to the receipt of the trust moneys," construed "without attaining a vested interest." Hayward v. James, 28 Beav. 523; 6 Jur., N. S., 689; 8 W. R. 676; 29 L. J., Ch., 822.

A testator gave to trustees shares in his residuary estate for the benefit of his daughters for life, and after their death for their children, to be equally divided, and to be "assigned and paid," the shares of sons at twenty-one, the shares of daughters at twenty-one or marriage; but if either should die before his or her share became "payable," and in case her daughters or either of them should die without issue, or leaving issue, all of them should die without becoming entitled "to the receipt of the trust moneys," then over:—Held, that the shares of children vested at twenty-one or on marriage, and that they took an interest in the fund absolutely, and that the gift over did not take effect. Ib.

5. The testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to sell and invest, and set apart a sufficient sum to produce an annuity to his widow for her life, and that the trustees, during the life of his wife, should stand possessed of the residue of the moiety arising from such sales, and after the decease of his wife of the whole of such moneys, upon trust to pay and divide the same unto and equally between and amongst all and every his children as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and to their several and respective executors, administrators, and assigns; but in regard to such of his children as had already attained the age of twenty-one years, he directed that the share or shares of such children should be paid to them respectively at the expiration of twelve months after the decease of his wife; but in the event of the decease of any or either of his said children before he, she, or they should have received or become possessed of their shares, leaving issue, that the share of the child so dying should go to the children of such child on their attaining twenty-one; and on failure of issue of any of his (the testator's) sons or daughters, then the share of such his sons or daughters should go to such of his (the testator's) children as should be then living:—Held, that the children of the testator who had attained twenty-one at the date of the will took vested interests in their shares, liable to be divested in the event of their dying before the widow, but that they were entitled to receive the interest of their shares in the meantime, and that the children who had attained twenty-one since the date of the will were entitled to an immediate transfer of their shares, except as to the fund appropriated to the widow's annuity. Rammell v. Gillon, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 35; 9 Jur. 704.

LXI. Gift Over on Death before Actual Receipt of Legacy or Distribution of Estate.

See also LVIII. II. ante.

6. Legacy out of a fund in the Indies given over in case of death of legatee before he might have received it, vested from death of testator. Hutcheon v. Mannington, 1 Ves. J. 366.

7. Where there was a gift over in the event of a legatee dying "before receiving his legacy," and a legatee died after the period contemplated for payment had arrived, but without receiving the legacy, by reason of a suit having been instituted, and the money paid into court:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect. Whiting v. Force, 2 Beav. 571; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 345.

1. A testator bequeathed personal estate in trust to pay the proceeds to his widow for life, and after her death to divide the capital between his brothers A. and B. and his sisters C. and D. He declared, that in case any of them should die in his lifetime, and before they should have received any benefit from the bequest, then the share of him or her so dying should be divided among his or her respective children. A. survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, having bequeathed his share:—Held, that "and" could not be read "or," and that on the death of the testator the share of A. was absolutely vested in him, and transmissible by his will. Re Kirkbride, 2 L. R., Eq., 400; 14 W. R. 728; 15 L. T., N. S., 51.

2. A residuary bequest upon the whole will vests only as the property is received:—Held, therefore, that the representatives of a deceased residuary legatee are entitled only to that part which was got in before his death. Gaskell v. Harman, 6 Ves. 159. From this decree, plaintiff appealed, when the Lord Chancellor reversed that part of it which declares that the residuary property vested only as it was converted into money, his lordship holding, that such an intention, though, if clearly expressed, must, notwithstanding its inconvenience, be executed, was not the true construction of the whole will, and it is not to be collected unless clearly expressed. S. C. 11 Ves. 489. And see Innes v. Mitchell, 6 Ves. 461.

3. Devise to the testator's wife for life, and as soon after her decease or refusal to release dower as conveniently might be, upon trust to sell and divide the produce between five nephews, at such time as the sale should be completed, if then living, if any should die in her life, or before the sale should be completed, his share to his children, if none, to the survivors: the interests not vested till the sale. Elwin v. Elwin, 8 Ves. 547.

4. Devise upon trust, by mortgage, or out of the rents and profits, to pay debts, and afterwards to raise portions for the testator's daughters, "such portions to become due, and be considered as vested at the expiration of two years next after my decease, if my debts shall then be paid." This is a condition precedent to the portions becoming vested; and one of the daughters having died while her portion remained unpaid, upon a question between her representative and the persons who would be entitled in the event of the portion not having become vested in her lifetime, an inquiry was directed as to the time when the debts were, or might have been paid. Bernard v. Mountague, 1 Meriv. 422. See 11 Ves. 508.

5. A gift over of a legacy, in case the legatee should die before the actual receipt of it, is bad in law, if the bequest is immediate. Martin v. Martin, 12 Jur., N. S., 889; 35 L. J., Ch., 281; 14 L. T., N. S., 129.

A testator gave a mixed fund, to be equally divided between his nephews and nieces; and he directed that the property which he left to his nephews and nieces should on their decease severally be divided equally between such of their children as might survive them, and if either or any of his nephews and nieces died before him, or before they should have actually received what was to go to them, their share should be divided equally between their children, and, in default of children, between his nephews and nieces:—Held, that the nephews and nieces who survived the testator took absolute interests. S. C. 2 L. R., Eq., 404; 12 Jur., N. S., 889; 35 L. J., Ch., 679; 14 W. R. 986; 15 L. T., N. S., 99.

6. Where a testator directed the trustees of his will to pay a sum of money, and a share of his residue, to a legatee, but in case the legatee should die before the property was "actually paid or payable," then to hold it for other parties:—Held, that on the death of the legatee three months after the testator without any actual payment having been made to him, the gift over took effect. Whitman v. Aitken, 2 L. R., Eq., 414; 12 Jur., N. S., 350; 14 L. T., N. S., 248.

7. Testator gave personal estate, outstanding on securities, to his wife for life, remainder in a moiety to six of his children; provided that, if any one died before receiving his or her share without leaving lawful issue, it should go over. One of the children died after the wife's death, before the securities were realised and the produce divided:—Held, that the proviso contemplated the time when the children should be entitled to receive their shares, not the time of actual payment; and that the representatives of the deceased child took a share. Re Dodgson's Trust, 1 Drew. 440.

8. A testator bequeathed to his executors the residue of his ready money, and money at interest that should be due and owing to him at his decease, upon trust, to receive and get in all his said moneys, and after paying certain legacies, to divide the remainder unto and between all his nephews and nieces who should be then living; and in case of the death of any of his nephews and nieces before receiving their respective shares, then the share of him or her so dying to go to the survivors. The testator, by a codicil which he directed should be annexed to and form part of his will, bequeathed to his wife all his real and personal estate and effects, of what nature or kind soever, which he should be possessed of at his decease, to hold and enjoy the same during her life:—Held, that the gift to the testator's nephews and nieces was a specific bequest, and no life interest in that fund was given to the widow; that the legacies vested in the nephews and nieces at the decease of the testator, subject to be divested upon the death of any of them before the expiration of twelve months, the usual period allowed for payment of legacies; and that the daughter of a niece who died within a year was not entitled to her mother's share. Re Arrowsmith's Trusts, 29 L. J., Ch., 774; 6 Jur., N. S., 1231; 8 W. R. 555. And see S. C. on appeal 2 De G. F. & J. 474; 30 L. J., Ch., 148; 7 Jur., N. S., 9; 9 W. R. 258.

9. A testator gave his real estate and the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust with all convenient speed after his death to sell and convert the same, and to hold the proceeds on trust to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and subject thereto and to the payment of an annuity, to divide the residue of the trust moneys into six equal parts, among two nephews and four nieces of the testator named in the will. He directed that the shares of the nephews should be paid to them as soon after his death as possible. He directed that the trustees should invest the shares of the nieces and pay the income thereof to them for their separate use. He directed that, in case any of his nephews should die before him, or before the division of his estate as before directed, his share should go over. And there was a similar direction with regard to the share of any of the nieces who should die before him, or before the division of his estate as before directed:—Held, that the "division" of the testator's estate meant the expiration of twelve months from his death, and that the share of one of the nieces, who survived him but died within that period, went over. Re Collison, Collison v. Barber, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 834; 48 L. J., Ch., 720; 28 W. R. 391.

1. Bequest of share of residue to K. and G., "but in case K. shall die before he shall actually have received the whole of his share and without leaving issue living at his decease, then and in such case, and whether the same shall have become due and payable or not, such part or parts as he shall not have actually received to be paid to G." K. died unmarried, without having received any share of the residue:—Held, that the gift over was not void for uncertainty, but took effect. Johnson v. Crook, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 639; 48 L. J., Ch., 777; 41 L. T. 400; 28 W. R. 12.

2. Where a legacy is absolutely vested it cannot be divested by a subsequent gift over in the event of the legatee dying before he has received the legacy. Bubb v. Padwick, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 517; 49 L. J., Ch., 178; 42 L. T. 116; 28 W. R. 382.

A testator gave his residuary estate in trust for all his children who should attain the age of twenty-one years, as tenants in common, but so that they should not be entitled to receive their respective shares until the youngest child attained the age of twenty-one years, unless the trustees of the will should in their discretion consider it proper that the shares, or any of them, should be paid; and the testator directed that in case any child should die before the youngest attained the age of twenty-one years and without having actually received his share, then that share should go over to the other children:—Held, that each child on attaining the age of twenty-one years acquired an indefeasibly vested interest in his share. Ib.

Re Arrowsmith's Trusts (2 De G. F. & J. 474) observed upon, and Johnson v. Crook (12 L. R., Ch. D., 639) not followed. Ib.

3. Bequest of proceeds of real and personal estate (directed to be converted with power of postponement) on trust for the testator's three sons and daughter equally, the daughter's share to be retained for her separate use for life, and after her decease for her children; with a direction in the event of any child of the testator dying before the testator, or before the execution of all or any of the trusts of the will, leaving issue, to pay to the issue of such deceased child the share which their parent would have taken if living. The three sons having survived the testator were held to be absolutely entitled, the gift over on death before execution of the trusts being void for uncertainty. Johnson v. Crook (12 L. R., Ch. D., 639) disapproved. Roberts v. Youle, 49 L. J., Ch. 744.

4. A testator gave each of four persons a fourth of the proceeds of his residue, and in case of the death of any legatee before the "final division" of his estate he gave that legatee's share over. One legatee died more than a year after the testator but before the estate had been distributed:—Held, that his personal representatives were entitled to his fourth share. Re Wilkins, Spencer v. Duckworth, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 634; 50 L. J., Ch., 774; 45 L. T. 244; 29 W. R. 911.

5. A testator, in case of the death of any of his children without leaving issue, before payment of any part of reversionary legacies, directed such parts to be divided among the others and other of them, and in case of the death of a child leaving issue before such payment, he directed such parts to be divided among the children of such child:—Held, first, that "payment" referred to the time when the shares given over became payable, and the gift over was not void for uncertainty; secondly, that "others" meant children other than those who had died without leaving issue; thirdly, that the gift over applied to accrued as well as original shares. Re Arrowsmith's Trusts (29 L. J., Ch., 774; 2 De G. F. & J. 474) approved and followed. Hutcheon v. Mannington (1 Ves. 366) and Martin v. Martin (2 L. R., Eq., 401) distinguished. Bubb v. Padwick (13 L. R., Ch. D., 517) disapproved. Johnson v. Crook (12 L. R., Ch. D., 639) approved. Re Chaston, Chaston v. Seago, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 218; 50 L. J., Ch., 716; 45 L. T. 20; 29 W. R. 775.

6. Frederick Hobson, the elder, by his will, gave to three trustees (one of whom was his eldest son William) all his real and personal property, which included the proprietorship of a newspaper, on trust, to carry on the newspaper during the life of his wife, and they were annually to set apart and invest one-fourth of the profit of the paper as a reserve fund to meet emergencies, and to divide the remaining three-fourth parts of the profits of the same, and the income from his real and personal estate, into six equal parts for his wife and five children (all specially named), and in case of the death of any such child during the life of the wife, to pay the share of that child to the lawful issue of that child, or if none such, equally among the survivors of his children. And, after the decease ("or during her life if she and the majority of my children, and my trustees, shall deem it proper and expedient so to do), at the sole discretion of my trustees," to sell the real and personal estate and the newspaper, and divide the proceeds among the wife and children, bringing in the amount of the reserve fund as part; the shares to be for their absolute use and benefit immediately after such division. He declared that, "in case, under the above clause, it shall be agreed, or my trustees shall decide to sell" the paper, and if any of his sons should wish to carry on the same, such one should be entitled to purchase it at 500% less than the market price. Till all the property was sold the trustees were to apply the income of the part unsold in the manner before expressed as to the income of the real and personal estate. The will also contained a provision that "in case any of my children shall survive my wife and die before he or she shall have received his or her share of my trust estate and without leaving lawful issue," then that such share should go over:—Held, that these words imposed on the trustees an absolute trust for sale, not merely a power of sale, and that the discretion given to them referred only to the time and manner of selling to the best advantage. Minors v. Battison, 35 L. T., N. S., 1; 25 W. R. 27; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 428; 46 L. J., Ch., 2.

Held, also, that the word "received" in the divesting clause must be taken to mean "became de jure receivable," and that the shares vested indefeasibly immediately on the death of the widow, and (there being but three children of the testator then surviving) that William Hobson took an absolute vested interest in an equal third part of the testator's real and personal estate, including the newspaper. Id.

1. A testator gave to his wife the rents and interest of all property for her life, but still giving her liberty to sell and dispose of the whole or any part of the property if she should think proper so to do; and he directed that all his property remaining at her death should be divided into two equal parts, one moiety among six persons, and the other moiety among three, but that if any of the nine legatees should die before receiving their share, having no child, such legatee's share should be equally divided between the other legatees:—Held, that the widow took only a life interest in the property. Rose v. Rowe, 21 L. T., N. S., 349; 17 W. R. 1077.

Held, also, that none of the legatees to whom one moiety of the property was bequeathed were entitled to share in the other moiety. Id.

LXII. Gift Over on Death before Legacy is Vested.

2. In a gift over on the death of A. before the estate became vested in him, the word "vested" means vested in interest and not vested in possession. Re Arnold, 33 Beav. 163.

The word "vested," used in a gift over, must be construed "vested in interest," and not "vested in possession," unless the rest of the will and the context require that it should receive the latter construction. S. C. 9 Jur., N. S., 1186; 12 W. R. 4; 9 L. T., N. S., 530.

3. Where residuary real and personal estate was directed to be all converted into personality, and to be applied in payment of debts, etc., and the residue to be divided among testator's children, J., M., and C., and grandchild B., the share of M. to be paid as soon after his decease as convenient, and the shares of C. and B. at the ages of twenty-two and twenty-one respectively; and in case any of his children should die before their shares became so vested as aforesaid, the shares to go to the survivors equally; and if but one, the whole to that one. J. and C. died in testator's lifetime, C. under twenty-two, and B. survived testator, but died under twenty-one:—Held, first, that "vested" must mean "payable," and that the original shares of the deceased children survived to the survivors; and, secondly, that "whole" meant the whole residue, and, therefore, that the accruing as well as original shares devolved to M. as sole survivor. Sillick v. Booth, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 121; 6 Jur. 142.

4. Devise before 1837 to the testator's daughter K. for life; remainder to the use of all and every the daughter and daughters of the body of M., as tenants in common; and in default of such issue, to A. in fee. By a codicil the testator recited that he had devised the reversion in fee in several estates expectant on the decease of his several daughters (including H.), to his son A.; and also that he had devised other estates to trustees, to the use of A., his heirs and assigns, until he attained twenty-five, and thereupon to him, his heirs and assigns for ever; and declared, that in case A. should die without issue, "and before the several estates should become vested in him by virtue of the said several limitations," then over. A. died after the testator's death, and without issue, and subsequently H. also died unmarried:—Held, that the word "vested" must be construed "vested in interest," and not "vested in possession." Richardson v. Power, 19 C. B., N. S., 780; 11 Jur., N. S., 739; 35 L. J., C. P., 41; 13 W. R. 1104.

5. Testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees in trust for his three nephews, their heirs, etc., as tenants in common, with cross remainders and benefit of survivorship in case any of them should die before their shares in the trust property should become vested in them, which he desired might not be shared until his youngest nephew should attain twenty-four; and he directed his trustees to maintain and educate them out of the income of the property during their minorities; the nephews were infants at the testator's death:—Held, nevertheless, that they took vested interests under the will. Parkin v. Hodgkinson, 15 Sim. 293.

6. A testator gave to A. a legacy to be vested in him when and as he should attain the age of twenty-one, or if he should die under that age leaving lawful issue at his death; and in case he should die without attaining a vested interest in his legacy, the testator gave the legacy over to other persons. The legatee attained the age of twenty-one, and died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Re Gaitshell, 15 L. R., Eq., 386; 21 W. R. 768; 21 L. T., N. S., 760.

7. A testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees to pay the interest to his wife for life, and after her decease he gave four-sixths of the capital to each of his four brothers and sisters, and in case of the death of any or either of the legatees in his lifetime, the sixth part of him or her so dying to go to his or her children. He then gave the remaining two-sixths to the children of a deceased brother and sister: provided always, that in case of the death of any or either of his legatees before their respective shares should have become vested, the share or shares of him or her so dying were to sink into the residue, and go to the survivors as if the legatees so dying had not been named, or had never existed. One of the legatees survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of his widow, the tenant for life:—Held, the period of vesting was the death of the tenant for life, and that her representatives were not entitled to her share, but that it sank into the residue as if she had not existed. Re Morris, 26 L. J., Ch., 688; 5 W. R. 423.

1. A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees to sell and divide the proceeds into four parts, and as to each of three of the fourths upon trust for one of the testator's children for life, with remainders to such of his or her children as being a son attained twenty-two, or died under age leaving issue, or being a daughter attained that age or married, equally, with benefit of survivorship. As to the other fourth, the son being dead, the life estate was omitted; and there was a direction, that if all those constituting a set or class of beneficiaries died without acquiring a vested interest in the capital, the share, extinguished or lapsed, should go equally amongst the surviving sets or classes. A son died intestate and without issue:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Beardsley v. Beynon, 13 W. R. 831; 12 L. T., N. S., 698.

2. A testator, by his will, directed a fund to be set apart to answer an annuity which he directed to be paid to his widow. After her death he directed the fund to form part of his residuary estate; and he bequeathed his residuary estate to all his children equally, to be divided between them; with a proviso that if any child should die, either in his lifetime or after his decease, and before the part or share bequeathed to such child should become a vested interest, without leaving issue, then such share should go to the survivors: but in case any child should die leaving issue, then such issue should take their parents' share:—Held, that the second branch of the proviso must be read in connection with the first, and that in both the death contemplated was a death before the share vested in possession. King v. Cullen, 2 De G. & Sm. 252.

3. Where a testator gives a life estate in his funds, and at the expiration thereof gives the principal to be divided among several, and if any die then to the survivors, without specifying the time of survivorship, he is held to mean the contingency to extend over the whole period which elapses before the time of distribution or expiration of the life estate, unless the context points out time; in other words, the legacy does not vest till the death of the tenant for life. Richardson v. Robertson, 6 L. T., N. S., 75. S. C. nom. Young v. Robertson, 8 Jur., N. S., 825.

Therefore where A. gave a life estate to B., and at B.'s death to six persons equally, declaring that "if any die without issue before his share vests, the same shall belong equally to the survivors." There was nothing in the word "vest" to prevent the application of the rule. Ib.

The word "vest" means prima facie "come into possession," and not "accrue in point of interest." Ib.

4. A testatrix directed that her trustees should stand possessed of the residue of her estate as to one moiety, and the dividends, to pay the same to her daughter A. for life, and then as to this moiety and the dividends and accumulations, until it should be distributable, to pay the same to the children of A. who should survive her, at twenty-one, with benefit of accruer and survivorship; and she gave the other moiety in similar terms to her daughter B.; and in case, at the decease of either of her daughters, there should be no children of such daughter who should have lived to attain a vested interest, then the moiety of such daughter so dying and the dividends and accumulations to be held for the other daughter for life, and her children afterwards. And if upon the death of the survivor of the two daughters there should be no child or children of either who should have lived to attain a vested interest in the two moieties, then the entirety of the two moieties and the dividends and accumulations to be held for the testatrix's six nephews and nieces on attaining twenty-one. A. died before the testatrix, and she then made a codicil, directing that her moiety should go to B. in the same manner as it would have gone to A. if she had lived; and she gave an annuity for the maintenance of the only daughter of A. until she should attain twenty-one. B. died, leaving six children infants:—Held, that the interest of the six grandchildren of the testatrix was not vested until they attained twenty-one, and the dividends must be accumulated, and that the nephews and nieces were not entitled under the gift over until default in the attainment of twenty-one by the grandchildren. Bull v. Jones, 31 L. J., Ch., 858; 10 W. R. 820.

Meaning of word "Vest" when used by Testator. In general.] See VESTED, CONTINGENT, AND FUTURE INTERESTS, V.

LXIII. Gift Over on Death without, or without having, Children or Issue.

— Children construed as a Word of Limitation. See XVIII. II. 4 ante.

5. Bequest to H. D. for his own use, and in case he should die in the testator's lifetime or afterwards, without having any child or children, then over. H. D. survived the testator, and died without having had a child:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Stone v. Maule, 2 Sim. 490.

6. One having two nephews, A. and B., devises his personal estate to them; and if either die without children, then to the survivor; this is good. 1 Hughes v. Sayer, P. W. 534.

7. A testator bequeathed to his daughter an annuity of 100*l.*, while she remained single, but on her marriage, and on some adequate provision made, and which he directed to be made by settlement for her life, and to the use of her issue, he bequeathed to and for her use 2,500*l.*, and in default of such issue, he bequeathed that sum for the benefit of his grandchildren who should be then living. The daughter married, but no settlement was made, and the annuity continued to be paid to her. She had an only child, who died in her lifetime under age.—Held, that the gift over did not take effect, and that her personal representative was entitled to the 2,500*l.* Findon v. Findon, 1 De G. & J. 380; 26 L. J., Ch., 561; 5 W. R. 794. Affirming 24 Beav. 53; 5 W. R. 485.

1. Residuary bequest to A., in case she should have legitimate children, in failure of which to go over. A., having only one child born alive, who died before her, entitled absolutely. Wall v. Tomlinson, 16 Ves. 413.

2. S. gives the residue of his estate to his daughter E. for life, and after her death to be equally divided among her children, when the youngest should attain twenty-one. But if his daughter should die without any child, or the youngest should not arrive at twenty-one, and none of them should have left lawful issue, then he gave the residue to other persons. E. had only one daughter, who married and had four children, but both she and all the children died in the lifetime of E.—Held, that upon the death of E., without any child then living, the devise took effect. Thicknouse v. Liege, 3 Bro. P. C. 365.

3. Bequest to testator's three children, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; but in case of the death of any, without being married and having children, the share of such child so dying to be divided between the surviving children; and so, if one should only survive. One having been married, and having had a child, her share vested. Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 453.

4. One devises a term for years to A., and if A. dies without a child, then to B.: this is a good devise to B. upon such contingency. Studholme v. Hodgson, 3 P. W. 304.

Though the freeholds of lands cannot be kept in abeyance, but must vest in somebody, yet there is no such rule with regard to personal estates which may remain in suspense and wait till a contingency happens. Id. 303.

Testator devised a term for years, and all his personal estate, to A., an infant, and if A. died during his infancy, and his mother should die without any other child, then to B. A. died during his infancy; though the mother was living, and might have a child, yet the Court aided B., the devisee over, by directing an account and discovery of the estate, in order to secure it, in case the contingency should happen. Id. 300.

5. A testator directed the interest of his residuary estate "to be divided between his four sons, and at the decease of either without lawful issue, such share to revert to the remainder then living, or their child or children":—Held, that each of the four sons took an absolute interest, subject to being divested in the event of his death without issue. Dowling v. Dowling, 1 L. R., Ch., 612; 12 Jur., N. S., 720; 14 W. R. 1003; 15 L. T., N. S., 152. 5 Q. B. 11 Jur., N. S., 1033; 14 W. R. 47; 1 L. R., Eq., 442.

6. A devise of real and personal property to the testator's unborn child, and in case of its death under age, to be equally divided between the children, male and female, of testator's two married daughters, L. W. and E. H., when they should arrive at their respective ages; and the interest of that part to the children of E. H. during such nonage to go to the sole and private use of B.; and in case she should not have children, such share to the children of L. W. share and share alike in manner aforesaid. The posthumous child died about a year after its birth, at which time L. W. had several children, and E. H. had not any. L. W. and her husband filed a bill, claiming the whole of testator's fortune which had vested in his posthumous child:—Held, that E. H. was entitled to the interest of a moiety of her father's estate, and that on her death without issue the moiety should go to her sister's children. Williams v. Hopkins, Wal. Lyn. 285.

7. The words "if A. die without having any child or children," construed "without having had any child;" and the words "should A. die without any child or children" construed "any child surviving him." Jeffreys v. Conner, 28 Beav. 328; 6 Jur., N. S., 986; 8 W. R. 572.

The duty of the Court is, if possible, to give effect to every part of a will; and, therefore, where a testator gave property to his son and niece, and directed that if his son should die without having any child or children, the whole property should go to his daughter and niece equally; and that if his son and daughter should die without any child or children, then the whole property should go to his niece:—Held, that the words in the first clause, "die without having any child or children," must be construed as equivalent to "die without having had any child or children," so that the testator's son having had several children, but who were all dead, the gift over did not take effect; and that the words in the second clause, "die without any child or children," meant without any children living at the death, so that the gift over to the niece would only take effect if the son should die without leaving a child living at his death. Id.

LXIV. Gift Over on Death without Leaving Children or Issue.

8. Bequest to A. for life and to her child, etc., at twenty-one, is a vested interest at twenty-one, and not divested if child should attain twenty-one, and die in life of A., by subsequent expression in will, that in case A. should die not leaving child, etc., or leaving child, such child should die before twenty-one, gift over. Maitland v. Chalie, 6 Madd. 248.

9. Devise to A. for life, remainder to all and every the children of her body, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; but in case A. should die without leaving any issue of her body, then over. A. had two children, both of whom died before her; one died leaving a child, who survived A.; the other died without issue.—Held, that the word "leaving" meant "having," and that the two children of A. took vested interests as tenants in common in fee. Exp. Hooper, 1 Drew. 264; 21 L. J., Ch., 402.

1. Bequest to trustees, upon trust for the six children (by name) of L. F., deceased, for their respective lives, and the capital equally among the children of each tenant for life, per stirpes, to be paid at twenty-one or marriage; and if any of said six children should die without leaving any children or child, then over:—Held, a vested indefeasible interest in each child of a tenant for life, on attaining twenty-one. Casamajor v. Stode, 8 Jur. 14.

2. Testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees in trust, to pay and divide the interest between her two nieces equally during their lives, and after their death, to pay and divide the principal unto and amongst the lawful issue of her said nieces, or of such of them as should leave issue equally, per stirpes, and not per capita; and in default of such issue, to pay the interest to certain other persons for their lives, etc. One of the nieces died, having had seven children, five only of whom survived her:—Held, that those five became entitled on their mother's death to her moiety of the residue. Cross v. Cross, 7 Sim. 201; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 38.

3. Bequest upon trust to pay and divide equally to and amongst all the children of testator's daughter when the youngest should attain twenty-one, followed by a gift over in case of the death of his daughter "without leaving any child or children":—Held, the youngest child having attained twenty-one, that the fund was divisible equally amongst all the children, and that such interests were not defeasible in the event of the death of the testator's daughter without leaving any child or children. Kennedy v. Sedgwick, 3 Kay & J. 540.

In such a case the gift over being contradictory if the word "leaving" be construed literally, that word will be read as equivalent to "having." Ib.

4. A. devised his whole property to trustees to the use of his daughter for life, and after her decease for such one or more of her children, or his, her, or their issue as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment, "in trust for all and every of her children, and the heirs of their body or bodies lawfully begotten, in equal shares and proportions; and in case of the death of my daughter without leaving any child her surviving, and in the event of such child or children her surviving dying without leaving any issue of his or her body, then in trust for my own right heirs for ever." The daughter had one son, who died in her lifetime:—Held, that her son took a vested estate tail under the will, and not an estate tail contingent upon his surviving his mother. Richards v. Davies, 32 L. J., C. P., 3; 11 W. R. 38; 7 L. T., N. S., 357.

5. In a will by her father, giving a life interest in a fund to his daughter, with words importing the gift of a vested interest in remainder after her decease to her child and children, followed by these words: "In case the said [the daughter] shall leave no child or children, or having such, all of them shall happen to die under age without issue," then a gift over in that event:—Held, that it requires very strong words to take away the effect of a prior clear vested gift, and notwithstanding the ordinary sense of "leave," that it was the testator's intention to give the fund over only in case the previous limitations should fail, and that the fund vested absolutely in the only child of the daughter, who died in the lifetime of its mother. Re Thompson's Trust, 5 De G. & Sm. 667; 17 Jur. 16; 22 L. J., Ch., 273.

6. Gift of residue, on trust, to pay the dividends to the testatrix's son for life (except what was required for education of her son's children); and should her son die before all or any of his children should attain twenty-one, she wished each child to receive their share on attaining twenty-one; but should all his children die before himself, at his death, then over:—Held, that a child who died an infant, in the lifetime of the son, had not acquired a transmissible interest. Chadwick v. Greenall, 3 Giff. 221; 7 Jur., N. S., 950; 5 L. T., N. S., 232.

7. A testator devised specific real estate to trustees and their heirs upon trust for his daughter R. for life, and after her decease he gave the same unto and equally between all and every her children, if more than one, as tenants in common, their heirs and assigns; and if but one such child, to his or her heirs and assigns; and in case his daughter should depart this life under twenty-one, or afterwards, "without leaving any child or children," the testator gave the hereditaments and premises to his son C, his heirs and assigns:—Held, that the children of R. took at their births indefeasible interests in fee, in remainder expectant on the death of their mother. White v. Hill, 4 L. R. 263; 16 L. T., N. S., 821.

8. A testatrix devised and bequeathed the residue of her real and personal estate to trustees, with a direction that they should receive the rents, and invest the same until a daughter should attain her age of twenty-one, and then "to pay the same to and for her sole and separate use and benefit. But, if my daughter should die without leaving any lawful child or children, then I direct the same to be paid to the lawful children or child of my brother, if more than one, in equal shares":—Held, that the gift was an absolute gift of the real and personal estate to the daughter, defeasible in the event of her dying without children. Drake v. Collins, 20 L. T., N. S., 970.

9. A father gave a fund to trustees to pay the dividends to his daughter for life, and after her death to transfer the principal equally amongst all the children of his daughter, whether by her present putative husband, or by any other person whom she might marry, who should attain twenty-one, their executors, administrators, and assigns. But in case his daughter should die leaving no issue, then to the testator's other children. Long before the date of the will the daughter was, with the testator's knowledge, living with a gentleman to whom she was afterwards married, and she had one son by that person, who was born four years before the date of the will, and was known by the testator to be illegitimate, and acknowledged by him as his grandson. The daughter being sixty-seven years of age, and having had no other child, and her husband being dead:—Held, that the illegitimate son was entitled absolutely to the capital, and the word "leaving" being construed "having," and he being over twenty-one, the money was ordered to be paid to the mother and son, who petitioned for payment to them jointly. Re Brown, 16 L. R., Eq., 239; 21 W. R. 721; 28 L. T., N. S., 616; 43 L. J., Ch., 84.

1. A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, to invest and pay one fourth of the income to each of his four sisters for life, and when and so soon as any of them should die, without leaving issue, then he directed that the share in the trust moneys of her or them so dying without issue should be divisible among his surviving sisters, and the issue of any who might then be dead, in equal shares, but such issue to take only their respective parent's share; and when and so soon as any of his sisters should die and leave issue, then upon trust to call in the share of her or them so dying leaving issue, and pay the same unto such respective issue, if more than one child, equally.—Held, that issue here meant children, and that leaving issue meant having had issue. Bryden v. Willett, 7 L. R., Eq., 472; 20 L. T., N. S., 518. Affirmed 17 W. R. 336; 20 L. T., N. S., 502.

One of the testator's sisters died, having had two children, one of whom survived her mother, and the other died in her mother's lifetime, leaving a family:—Held, that a moiety of her mother's share vested in the daughter who died in her lifetime, and consequently passed to her family. Th

2. Testator devised real estate to his granddaughter absolutely, and "after her decease without leaving any issue," over. The granddaughter married and had a child.—Held, that upon the birth of a child the granddaughter's interest became indefeasible. White v. Hight, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 751; 41 L. T. 17.

3. Bequest upon trust for A. B. for life, and in case he should leave any child or children, upon trust for such child or children, to be payable at twenty-one, and the share of each child to be a vested interest; and in case A. B. should not leave any child, then upon trust for C. D. for life; and after the death of C. D. and of A. B. without issue as aforesaid, then over. A. B. survived the testator, and had one child only, who attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of A. B., leaving a child, who survived A. B.:—Held, that upon the death of A. B., the gift over took effect. Bythessea v. Bythessea, 1 W. R. 257; 17 Jur. 615; Affirmed 23 L. J., Ch., 1001; 2 W. R. 667.

4. A testator devised dwelling-houses to trustees for the life of his niece M., to permit her to take the rents and profits of the same during her life; and from and immediately after the decease of his niece unto her issue, to be equally divided amongst them at their respective ages of twenty-one, or days of marriage, and to the heirs and assigns of such issue; and if any of such issue should be under twenty-one at the decease of his niece he directed an equal share of the rents and profits to be appropriated towards the education and maintenance of such issue as should not have attained twenty-one at the decease of his niece; and if his niece should die leaving only one child, then to such only child, and his or her heirs, as soon as he or she should attain twenty-one. But in case his niece should die without leaving any issue of her body at the time of her decease, or in case all such issue should die under twenty-one and unmarried, then to his brother's children. The niece married, and had one daughter, who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her mother, unmarried:—Held, that, if an estate in fee in remainder vested in her daughter, upon her attaining twenty-one, such estate was divested upon her death in the lifetime of her mother. Young v. Turner, 1 B. & S. 350; 8 Jur., N. S., 52; 30 L. J., Q. B., 268; 5 L. T., N. S., 56.

5. Bequest of 4,000*l.* to A. for life, and afterwards if she shall "leave" any children, upon trust to divide it equally amongst all "such children" to be payable and become vested interests at twenty-one; and in case there shall be only one "such child" who shall attain twenty-one, then to pay it unto such only child. There was a power of maintenance during minority, and also of advancement, not exceeding "such presumptive share," and a gift over, if the daughter should "have" no child who should arrive at twenty-one:—Held, that a daughter of A. who attained twenty-one and married, but died in the life of A., took no share. Sheffield v. Kennett, 27 Beav. 207; 4 De G. & J. 593.

6. By a marriage settlement a fund was settled, after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, in trust for the "children then living, to be paid at twenty-one, and in case the parents should die "without leaving any lawful issue," then as the husband should appoint; and in default, "in case there should be no child or child or children as aforesaid," over "children attained twenty-one, but they all died in the life of their parents, leaving issue, who survived the parents.—Held, that the gift over took effect. Re Heath, 23 Beav. 193.

7. Bequest to A. for life, and after the death of A., then if A. shall leave issue, upon trust to transfer the share of A. to such issue equally if more than one, when and so often as they shall severally and respectively attain twenty-one, with a trust for maintenance in the meantime; and in case of the death of A. leaving no issue, or if A. should happen to leave issue, then upon the death of "such" issue under twenty-one, over:—Held, that the contingency of surviving A. was part of the gift to A.'s issue, and that therefore three children of A. who attained twenty-one, but died in her lifetime, took nothing; but that one child, who alone survived A., took the whole. Re Watson, 10 L. R., Eq., 36; 39 L. J., Ch., 770; 18 W. R. 642.

8. A testator bequeathed to each of his five daughters 400*l.* per annum, to be payable half-yearly during the term of their natural lives; and after their respective decease, he gave the same to their children respectively, share and share alike, such children not to be entitled to more than their deceased parent's share; and in case any or either of these daughters should die without issue, he directed such annuity to cease, and to fall into the residue of his estate:—Held, upon the whole context of the will, that a daughter's children, who died in the lifetime of their mother, were not entitled to any share, and that, on the death of a daughter who had issue, but left none living at her death, the capital of the fund producing her annuity fell into the residue. Hedges v. Harpur, Hedges v. Blicke or Blick, 3 De G. & J. 129; 4 Jur., N. S., 1209; 27 L. J., Ch., 742.

1. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests are not, under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 77, entitled to sue or liable to be sued, for the specific performance of contracts entered into with and by them. Nurse v. Seymour (Lord), 13 Beav. 254.

The commissioners were authorised, with the consent of the Lords of the Treasury, to demise, or previous to any demise, to contract to demise. The bill alleged that the commissioners having first obtained the consent required, determined to demise, and afterwards contracted to demise to the plaintiff, and prayed a specific performance:—Held, on demurrer, that the bill could not be sustained. Id.

2. An Act of Parliament empowered the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to make certain new streets according to a particular plan therein referred to, and to lease and enter into agreement for leasing the grounds in the lines of the new streets. Under this power leases were granted of two plots of ground, upon which the lessees erected two particular houses, in the line of one of the new streets. Each of the leases described the plot of ground which it demised, as being "on the north side of a new street then forming there, called," etc., "and as fronting towards the south on the said new street." The plan referred to in the Act of Parliament exhibited an open space in front of the sites of these houses, but that plan was not mentioned in either of the leases. The intended streets were completed, and the space in front of the houses was left open. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests and the paving committee of the parish afterwards gave permission to certain persons to erect an equestrian statue in the open space, and those persons proceeded to place it upon a part of that open space, but without interfering with the line of the carriage way of the new street in which the houses stood. The lessees of the houses thereupon filed a bill to restrain the erection of the statue, alleging that upon the treaty for the leases, the lessees were shown the plan of the intended new street, and parts adjacent, by which it appeared that the space in question was to be quite open and free from all obstructions, and that it was upon the treaty represented and stated, that opposite the two houses a free passage would be left of certain dimensions, which would be contracted by the erection of the statue; they also alleged that the proposed erection would diminish the value of their property, and be a public and a private nuisance:—Held, that these circumstances did not entitle the lessees to an injunction to restrain the erection of the statue. Squire v. Campbell, 1 Myl. & C. 459; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 41.

3. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests having no power under the statute 57 Geo. 3, c. 97 to make sale of any royalties, honours, hundreds, manors, lordships, or franchises, "or any rights, members, or appurtenances thereof," belonging to the Crown, within the ordering and survey of the Exchequer, contracted for the sale of the Crown manor of E., and all courts baron, courts leet, and all fines, reliefs, rents, profits, waifs, strays, decodands, and "all other rights, members, emoluments, and appurtenances thereto belonging":—Held, that this being in effect a contract for sale by the Crown, the advowson of E., which was appended to the manor, did not pass under the contract, and consequently, that the purchaser was bound to take a conveyance of the manor without the advowson. Att.-Gen. v. Sitwell, 1 Y. & Coll. 559; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 86.

Semble, that if the contract had been between subject and subject, the advowson would have passed, although, at the time of the contract, it was not known by either party to be appendant to the manor, and, therefore, the sale of it was not in contemplation. Id.

4. Injunction granted to restrain the Commissioners of Woods from building on part of the site of Carlton Palace, in violation of one of the terms of an agreement entered into by them with the plaintiffs for a building lease of an adjoining part of the site. Rankin v. Huskisson, 4 Sim. 13.

1. Tender.

1. A contractor sent in a tender to a railway company for the execution of part of the works either with a double or single line of rails. He was informed, in writing, by the engineer of the company, that his tender was accepted; and that intimation was confirmed by the directors, upon his attendance at one of their board meetings, but no document accepting the tender was executed by the company, in such a manner as to be binding at law; nor was any conclusion ever come to whether there should be a single or a double line. The railway was afterwards abandoned, and the contractor then filed a bill, seeking to have a binding contract executed by the company, or to recover from them the loss which he had sustained in preparing for the works:—Held, upon demurrer, that he had no claim to relief in equity upon the general merits of the case; and that an allegation, unsupported by any additional facts, that the company held money in their hands for the purpose of paying the plaintiff, and were trustees of it for his benefit, under an instrument in writing, was not sufficient to sustain the bill. Jackson v. North Wales Railway Co., 1 H. & Tw. 75; 6 Rail. Ca. 112; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 91; 13 Jur. 69.

2. Tenders for the supply of stone were invited by a corporation. Four neighbouring quarry owners entered into an agreement to supply the stone in certain proportions inter se, and that the plaintiffs should make the lowest tender to the corporation. The plaintiffs entered into contracts with the other quarry owners to purchase the proportion of stone agreed upon from each. Notwithstanding the agreement, one of the quarry owners sent in a tender, which was accepted by the corporation. The plaintiffs then filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendants from supplying the stone during 1875. They demurred:—Held, overruling the demurrer, that the corporation were not necessary parties, and that the agreement was not void either as against public policy, or for want of equity. Jones v. North, 19 L. R., Eq., 426; 44 L. J., Ch., 388; 32 L. T. 149; 23 W. R. 468.

3. When plans and a specification, for the execution of a certain work, are prepared for the use of those who are asked to tender for its execution, the person asking for the tender does not enter into any implied warranty that the work can be successfully executed according to such plans and specification. Thorn v. London (Mayor), 1 L. R., App. Cas., 120; 45 L. J., Exch., 487; 24 W. R. 932; 34 L. T., N. S., 515.

The contractor for the work cannot, therefore, sustain an action for damages as upon a warranty should it turn out that he could not execute it according to such plans and specification. Id.

T. contracted with a corporation to take down an old bridge and build a new one. Plans and a specification prepared by the engineer of the corporation were furnished to him, and he was required to obey the directions of the engineer. The descriptions given were stated to be believed to be correct, but were not guaranteed; and, in one particular matter at least, he was warned to make examination for himself. Part of the plan consisted in the use of caissons. These turned out to be of no value, and the work done in attempting to use them was wholly lost, and the bridge had to be built in a different manner. In this way much labour and time were wasted. The contract contained provisions as to the payment for extra work, and that work had (with the contract work) been duly paid for. The contractor sought for compensation for his loss of time and labour occasioned by the failure of the caissons, and in his declaration alleged that the corporation had warranted that the bridge could be inexpensively built according to the plans and specification. There was no express warranty to that effect in the contract:—Held, that none could be implied. Ib.

Semble, that if he had any remedy under these circumstances it was not in an action for damages as for breach of warranty, but for compensation as upon a quantum meruit. Ib.

2. Assignment.

1. Two persons contracted with a railway company to execute certain works, and after some progress had been made with the works, a judgment creditor of one of the contractors took in execution his share of the plant and effects, which the sheriff sold and assigned to the other contractor; the other contractor assigned the interest of the firm in the contract and all the effects and moneys due or to become due in respect of the same, to a third person by way of security, with power to such assignee to enter on the works and take possession and execute the contract. The assignee afterwards took possession of the works, and proceeded to complete them. The company had notice of the execution and sale by the sheriff of the property of one contractor, and of the assignment to the other, and by the other to the assignee; and the company allowed the works to be continued by the two latter persons respectively, and made payments to them on account. The assignee having, after the insolvency of his assignor, filed a bill in equity against the company for an account of what was due from the company in respect of the contract:—Held, that the subsequent prosecution of the works by the other contractor or his assignee did not necessarily involve any new contract with the company, but was consistent with that theretofore made; and that the contractor, or his assignee, who, without objection from the company, prosecuted the works, could sustain a suit against the company for payment of what had become due from them in respect of the works done under the contract. Aspinall v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 11 Hare 325.

2. A contractor entered into an agreement for the completion of a building at a certain time, in a certain specified manner, and the contractor was to set out the works and be responsible for errors, to provide and employ workmen, to provide and keep at the building a competent general foreman, to provide materials, labour, etc.: also if the contractor should, from any cause, not comply with the terms of the contract within three days after being requested to do so in writing, the architect should have power to prevent his further execution of the works, and cause the same to be finished by others. After he had received notice from the employer that he was neglecting and delaying to complete and finish the building, the contractor, on the following day, entered into a composition deed for the benefit of his creditors under s. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, and in the form prescribed:—Held, that the trustees of the deed were not at liberty to adopt the contract, containing, as it did, obligations of a personal character. Knight v. Burgess, 33 L. J., Ch., 727; 10 L. T., N. S., 90.

3 Enforcing.

3. Where there is an agreement to do certain works, such works to be done to the satisfaction of a referee named, without specifying the nature, materials, or extent of such works, no decree for specific performance can be made upon such agreement. Semble, a court of equity makes a decree in the sense that a court of law awards damages, and will not make a decree which it cannot enforce. London & South Western Railway Co. v. Humphrey, 6 W. R. 781.

4. The Court has not jurisdiction to decree the specific performance of a contract, for which the consideration on the part of the plaintiff is the execution of certain works which the Court is unable to superintend. Peto v. Brighton, Uckfield, & Tunbridge Wells Railway Co., 1 Hem. & M. 468; 11 W. R. 874; 9 L. T., N. S., 227.

Therefore, where a bill stated an agreement to employ the plaintiffs as contractors for making a railway, and to pay for the works in debentures and shares of the company, a motion for an injunction to restrain the company from dealing with the debentures, and transferring the share to others, in derogation of the plaintiffs' rights, was refused. Ib.

5. Specific performance will be decreed of a contract to employ a person to construct works which the Court is unable to superintend. Greenhill v. Isle of Wight (Newport Junction) Railway Co., 23 L. T., N. S., 885; 19 W. R. 345.

Therefore, where directors of a railway company entered into a written agreement to give G. "a contract for the construction of the line for 55,000*l.*, subject to a specification of the works on the line included in the sum to be agreed upon between G. and the engineer of the company, in case of dispute the matter to be referred" to an arbitrator, and a bill was filed for specific performance:—Held, that the terms of this agreement were too indefinite to be enforced in a specific performance suit; but that even had the terms been sufficiently definite, the agreement was of such a nature that specific performance could not have been decreed. Ib.

6. A court of equity has jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of a contract by a defendant to do defined work upon his property, in the performance of which the plaintiff has a material interest, and which is not capable of adequate compensation in damages. Storer v. Great Western Railway Co., 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 48; 3 Rail. Ca. 106; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 65.

7. The defendants agreed with the plaintiffs to undertake to execute a branch railway according to the terms of a specification to be prepared by the plaintiffs' engineer for the performance of their contract. The plaintiffs had, at the date of the agreement, a bill pending to enable them to make the branch, and holding them to complete within a specified time, on pain of a suspension of dividends on the capital of their entire line. The specification was prepared by the company's engineer, but, prices having risen, the defendants repudiated their agreement. The plaintiffs then filed their bill for a specific performance of the agreement according to the terms of the specification, and to have the bond executed, charging that they would have withdrawn the bill before Parliament by reason of the liabilities incurred on the passing thereof, had not the defendants (to whom, as owners of a large estate adjacent to the proposed branch, it was of great importance that the plaintiffs should be bound to make the branch) assented to the terms of the agreement and the plaintiffs believed that they would bona fide carry out the same; that the defendants by their agreement induced the plaintiffs to come under the obligation to make and complete the lines, and the Act was passed upon the faith of the agreement. The bill also charged that the not carrying out the agreement was a fraud on the plaintiffs, there having been a part performance on their part:—Held, on demurrer (assuming the agreement to be valid within the Statute of Frauds, and in other respects one upon which the plaintiffs could recover), first, that the agreement could not be enforced as regards the construction of the railway, because, from the nature of the works the subject of the agreement, it was an agreement the execution of which the Court could not superintend consistently with public convenience, inasmuch as the motions would be incessant for committal or otherwise for non-performance of orders with regard to the making of particular works, besides the difficulty, on the ground of reciprocity, in enforcing that part of the agreement by which the plaintiffs were to provide the land, and because the plaintiffs, having by their Act power to acquire the land, could make the railway for themselves, and, having so ascertained the expense the defendants had put them to, would have an adequate and the better remedy in damages, and that the circumstances of fraud alleged in the bill did not prevent the application of the foregoing reasons. Secondly, that as the Court could not superintend the general execution of the whole works, or enable the defendants to earn the whole of the money to which they would be entitled for the works when made, the execution of the bond would be a piecemeal performance of the agreement, which the Court would not direct, and the demurrer was allowed. South Wales Railway Co. v. Wythes, 1 Kay & J. 186; 24 L. J., Ch. 1; 3 W. R. 3; 3 Eq. Rep. 70. Affirmed 24 L. J., Ch., 87; 3 W. R. 133; 3 Eq. Rep. 153.

Whether, in the simple case of an advance of money with an agreement to execute a bond for its repayment, such an agreement would be executed in this court. Quare. Ib.

1. A railway company agreed with contractors that the contractors should work the line and keep the engines and rolling plant in repair at a specified remuneration, and that the contract should be in force for seven years, but with a proviso for its determination if the contractors did not, within forty-eight hours after notice given by the company, obey the instructions contained in such notice:—Held, that the agreement was not of such a kind as to be enforceable by injunction restraining the company from determining the contract and resuming the possession of their line for non-compliance with impracticable requisitions. Quare, whether such an agreement is consistent with public policy. 2. Disputes having arisen between a railway company and a contractor employed in making the railway, the company insisting upon a right under the contract, owing to the alleged default of the contractor, to discharge him, take possession of the line and materials, and complete the works itself. The contractor resisted such claim, imputing the backward state of the works to the acts of the company, and held forcible possession. Collisions occurring between the workmen of the two parties, each being charged with impeding the operations of the other, and the completion and opening of the railway for traffic being in the meantime delayed, the Court, on the application of the company, restrained the contractor from continuing on the line, or interfering with the operations of the company; directed an account of what was due to the contractor for works and materials done and provided, without regard to the formal certificates of the company's engineer, and without an issue to try whether the company, at the time it proceeded to enter upon the works and remove the contractor, was lawfully justified in so doing; reserving as well the question of the right of the contractor to compensation for loss of profit on unexecuted works, as all other directions, until after the trial and the report. East Lancashire Railway Co. v. Hattersley, 8 Hare 72.

3. The plaintiff covenanted with the defendant (a railway company) to do certain works within a given time to the satisfaction of the engineer of the company, and that if the works should not be so done the company might enter into possession of the plaintiff's plant and complete the works. The company covenanted to pay for the works from time to time during their progress, according to the certificate of the engineer. All disputes were to be referred to the latter. The works were not completed within the period originally limited, and some time afterwards the company gave notice of its intention to enter, under the agreement, and complete the works. The plaintiffs filled a bill, stating that they had done all which they contracted to do, except what the company had prevented them from doing, and that they had not been fully paid for the work done; alleging that the engineer fraudulently and collusively with the company certified a less amount than what was due to the plaintiffs, and praying for an injunction and account. A demurrer for want of equity was overruled, on the ground that the plaintiffs would be entitled to some relief at the hearing, and that the species of fraud alleged in the bill gave jurisdiction to the Court, although the plaintiffs had not completed the whole of their work. Waring v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 7 Hare 482; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 14 Jur. 613. Affirmed 2 H. & Tw. 239.

4. A railway company agreed with contractors that the contractors should work the line and keep the engines and rolling plant in repair at a specified remuneration, and that the contract should be in force for seven years, but with a proviso for its determination if the contractors did not, within forty-eight hours after notice given by the company, obey the instructions contained in such notice. Quare, whether such an agreement is consistent with public policy. Johnson v. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 914; 17 Jur. 1015; 22 L. J., Ch., 921.

By the contract between a railway company and its contractors it was agreed between the parties that the contractors should, in consideration of certain money payments, proportional to the traffic upon the lines, at all times during the term of the contract run and work all the trains of the company, and provide for the purposes of the contract a sufficient number of efficient foremen, mechanics, engine-drivers, etc., and the requisite coke, firewood, stores, etc., and also at all times during the term of the contract, keep on foot and in repair all the rolling stock of the company, except where any damage thereto should be occasioned by defect or want of repair or maintenance of the permanent way; and further, to deliver up the same in good and substantial repair to the company at the termination of the contract. It was further provided that the contractors should not be liable or answerable for any loss, damage, or compensation recovered or recoverable from the company in respect of the death of, or any damage or injury to, any passengers or live stock or goods conveyed on the line during the term of the contract, except where occasioned by the neglect of the contractors, and even then not to a greater amount than 100*l.* Lastly, the contract provided, that if the contractors should not, within forty-eight hours after notice in writing from the company should have been left at their principal office, obey the instructions contained in such notice, it should be lawful for the company, by another notice similarly served, to determine the contract, and assume the custody of the sheds, buildings, and rolling stock intrusted to the contractors in consequence of the contract. The company served the first notice under the contract, instructing the contractors to make certain repairs in the building and rolling stock; whereupon the contractors filed their bill against the company, alleging that the repairs mentioned in the instructions were not such as could be made in forty-eight hours, and that the necessity therefore had been occasioned by the defect or want of repair of the permanent way; and praying that the Court would declare, that, according to the true construction of the contract, the instructions to be contained in the first notice to be given thereunder referred to such matters or things as might be reasonably done and performed by the contractors within forty-eight hours after service of such notice upon them; and that it would grant an injunction, consequent upon such declaration, to restrain the defendants from proceeding to take possession of the buildings and rolling stock intrusted to the plaintiffs, by means of a second notice under the contract or otherwise. Upon a motion, by way of appeal, for an injunction, being made by the plaintiffs, the Court refused to interfere. 17.

VOL. VIII.

2. A contractor agreed to execute the works of a railway within a certain time, and on being paid in a certain manner, and under a condition that if he failed to proceed with the works as required by the engineer of the company, the contract should be void, and the implements and materials belonging to the contractor should be forfeited. The contractor did not satisfy the engineer of the company, and the company proceeded to take possession of the works. The contractor alleged that the proper payments had not been made to him:—Held, that the Court would not restrain the company by interlocutory injunction until the questions between the company and the contractor were decided. Munro v. Wivenhoe & Brightlingsea Railway Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 612; 13 W. R. 880; 12 L. T., N. S., 655; 4 De G. J. & S. 723.

3. A contractor agreeing to execute the public works of a company, and binding himself for the due performance of his contract, by forfeitures subjecting himself to the arbitrary decision of a person nominated by the company as to his liability thereto, is not entitled to relief in equity against the forfeiture. Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., 2 Jur. 787.

4. In a contract with a railway company for the execution of works, there was a clause empowering the company, after notice, to take possession of the plant and to finish the work; the company acted on this clause:—Held, that this did not furnish ground for a bill in equity as putting an end to the contract, though it might be the subject of an action for damages. Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., 5 H. L. Ca. 72.

The plaintiff entered into three contracts in writing with a railway company, whereby it was agreed inter alia, that the engineer of the company should, every fortnight, ascertain the value of the work done according to its quantity and relative proportion to the whole works, and that the plaintiff should thereupon receive 80 per cent. of such value, the remaining 20 per cent. being reserved by the company until such reserve amounted to 4,000*l.*; that, if the engineer of the company should not be satisfied with the works, the company should be enabled, after notice given to the contractor, and his default of a satisfactory compliance with its terms for the space of seven days, to take possession of the works, and thereupon not only the plant and materials of the contractor, but also the value of the work done and not paid for, and the reserve fund should become forfeited to the company. For the performance of two of the contracts, the plaintiff with two sureties, and for the performance of the third with such two and an additional surety, executed joint and several bonds to the company. A further contract, not in writing, was entered into by the plaintiff and the company for executing certain other parts of the works at stipulated prices. In the course of the work the company advanced several sums of money to the plaintiff upon the security of his plant and machinery, upon the works comprised in the written contract, and of the reserve fund. The company, having given a notice as above mentioned, and having, at the expiration of seven days therefrom, taken possession of the works, plant, and machinery comprised in all the contracts, the plaintiff filed his bill, insisting that the engineer had not so estimated the works as to give to the plaintiff the 80 per cent. to which he was entitled, and that upwards of 30,000*l.* was due to him under the several contracts for works actually completed, insisting that no forfeiture had been incurred by him, and that, by the terms of the deed of mortgage, the use and possession of the plant and machinery thereby assigned to the company were expressly reserved to the plaintiff: and praying that the company might elect to permit the plaintiff to complete the works, or otherwise that the contracts might be considered at an end; and praying, in either alternative, for the taking of accounts between the plaintiff and the company:—Held, that a demurrer to the bill on the ground of multifariousness could not be sustained. S. C. 1 Rail. Ca. 1.

1. By a contract between a contractor and a railway company, under which the former was to execute the company's works, it was provided (amongst other things) that surplus chalk should be the contractor's property, and that if the contractor should in the judgment of the company's engineer fail in the due performance of the contract, the engineer might, by order of the board of directors, take the further performance of the contract out of the contractor's hands, and employ for the purposes of the contract such persons and on such terms and conditions as the engineer should think fit. In alleged exercise of the power conferred by the latter provision the company resumed possession, and took the further performance of the contract out of the contractor's hands, who thereupon filed a bill for an injunction, alleging impropriety of conduct and duress on the part of the engineer, and that the chalk taken would, upon the completion of the works, become the plaintiff's property as surplus, allegations the truth of which were bond fide disputed by the company:—Held, that the contract being one where, if the company was wrong, the contractor could be amply compensated in damages, whereas if the contractor were allowed to resume work the Court could not enforce specific performance of the contract in order to compel the completion of the works, the contractor was not entitled to an interlocutory injunction. Garrett v. Banstead & Epsom Downs Railway Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 462; 11 Jur., N. S., 591. And see Jennings v. Brighton Intercepting & Outfall Sewers Board, 4 De G. J. & S. 735, n.

II. CONTRACTOR'S PLANT.

See also I. IV. ante.

2. An agreement between a railway company and a contractor provided that, in case the contractor should be guilty of any delay or default in the fulfilment of the contract, the company might take the execution of the works out of his hand, and might use all or any of his plant, materials, or implements; and that, in addition to all other rights and remedies which the company might have against the contractor, the company might apply any moneys to which the contractor would otherwise be entitled under his contract towards satisfaction of all losses or expenses occasioned to the company by the delay; and that all the materials, plant, and implements which at the time of such delay or default should be in or about the site of the works, should thereupon become the absolute property of the company, and be valued or sold, and the amount of such valuation or sale credited to the contractor in reduction of the moneys (if any) recoverable from him by the company. The company took the execution of the works out of the contractor's hand under this clause. The contractor brought an action for breach of contract, which, with all matters in difference between the parties, was referred to arbitration:—Held, that the plant and materials did not become the absolute property of the company, unless loss or expense had been occasioned to it; and an interlocutory injunction was awarded to restrain them from removing and selling the plant and materials pending the arbitration. Garrett v. Salisbury & Dorset Junction Railway Co., 2 L. R., Eq., 358; 14 W. R. 816.

3. A railway company consenting to the removal of its plant by the plaintiffs, the contractors for works, and the latter not having on affidavits made out a case of mala fides on the part of the engineer or the company in determining the contract, a motion for injunction against the company was refused, and the latter was left to assert at law its rights under the agreement. Waring v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 2 H. & Tw. 239; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 14 Jur. 613.

4. A contractor supplied materials to a railway company for the purpose of carrying out his contract. By the terms of the contract it was provided that the materials brought upon the railway should immediately become the absolute property of the company, except that they were to remain under the dominion of the contractor; that, if he should duly complete his contract, the company would give to the contractor, as part of his payment, the unconsumed materials; and that if, instead of the contractor, the company should use the materials, the company should compensate him in respect of them:—Held, that the materials were not, by the terms of the contract, so absolutely the property of the company as to be seizable by the sheriff under an execution upon a judgment. Boston v. Marriott, 9 Jur., N. S., 960; 11 W. R. 896; 8 L. T., N. S., 690; 2 N. R. 437.

5. A railway company entered into a contract (dated December 27th, 1836) with certain builders for building a bridge, all necessary implements and materials to be found by the builders, with power to the company if, in the opinion of its architect, the contractors should not proceed with sufficient expedition, to employ other or additional workmen to complete the works on giving them seven days' notice, and in such case to use the cranes, machines, implements, and materials used on or about the works by the contractors, who were to defray the extra expenses incurred. The contract provided that the company should have a lien upon such machines, implements, and materials as should, for the time being, be in and upon the land, as a security for the completion of the bridge. On the 26th July 1837 the contractors committed an act of bankruptcy, and a fiat was issued on the 31st. Divers goods, timbers, etc., for building the bridge had been previously deposited by them on it and the land adjoining. These consisted of four kinds:

—1. Those actually on the line of the railway. 2. Those upon land adjoining the line (not the property of the company, but enclosed and taken possession of by them under the Act). 3. Those deposited upon the line of a temporary railway made by the bankrupts, over land not belonging to the company, for the convenience of conveying materials. 4. A crane erected by the contractors at the end of the temporary railway. On the 31st July the company took possession of all these goods. On the 1st August it gave the seven days' notice, that other workmen would be employed, and on the 2nd they took upon themselves the completion of the bridge, using some of the goods, and retaining the remainder. In trover brought by the assignees for these goods.—Held, that the company had a lien upon the first and second classes, but not upon the third and fourth, which, nevertheless, at the expiration of the notice, it had a right to retain and use about the work, for the agreement was lawful, not being made in contemplation of bankruptcy. Hawthorn v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne & North Shields Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 288.

Held, also, that these rights of the company were not invalidated by the possession of the bankrupt, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72, he being the true owner; nor by other implements and materials so used having been removed without any objection from the company's authority, the lien being a shifting one, and attaching to such articles as were brought, from time to time, and ceasing as to such only as were removed; nor by the implements and materials not being scheduled. Id.

1. A contract by a trader to do certain works contained a clause, that if he should become bankrupt, or delay proceeding with the works, his employer should have power, after seven days' notice to him to proceed, to employ others to do the work, the advances made to the trader before his default should be taken as full payment, and that all tools and materials being upon the works should become the property of the employer. The trader, having delayed to proceed with the works, was served on the 11th April by his employer with notice to proceed. On the 17th April the trader committed an act of bankruptcy; on the 19th April the notice to proceed not having been complied with, his employer took possession of the tools and materials. In June a fiat issued against the trader. In trover by his assignees, against the employer for tools and materials left upon the works by the bankrupt:—Held, that they did not become the property of his employer at the expiration of the seven days' notice, because they had vested in his assignees by relation on the 17th April, before the notice had expired. Rouch or Roach v. Great Western Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 505; 5 Jur. 821.

2. A contract for executing sewage works made between a contractor and Improvement Commissioners provided that all plant brought by the contractor on to the works should be deemed to be the property of the commissioners and should not be removed during the progress of the work without the written order of their engineer; in case of suspension of the works by their engineer for any default of the contractor, or of the work being taken out of the contractor's hands, the same should be subject to be used as should be ordered by the engineer in and about the completion of the works. The engineer suspended the works, and the commissioners took possession of the plant and completed the works. The contractor having become bankrupt, and a sum of 2,876l. 7s. 5d. having been certified to be due to the commissioners from him for default under the contract, the commissioners claimed to retain the plant, which was sold by consent for 685l.:—Held, first, that the contract gave the commissioners no property in the plant but only a right of user. Exp. Bolland, Re Winter, 47 L. J., Bky., 52; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 225; 26 W. R. 512; 38 L. T., N. S., 362.

Held, secondly, that this right of user was not such a dealing within s 39 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, as to give them a right to set off the value of the plant against the sum due to them from the contractors. Id.

3. Disputes arose between a contractor for the construction of a railway, and the company for which the railway was to be constructed, as to the time which the works done had taken for their execution; as to the probable time within which the railway could be finished; as to defaults in the execution of the works and in payment, which were alleged on the one side and denied on the other, and as to which there was a considerable conflict of evidence. The contract and specification provided, that if the contractor failed to proceed with the works in the manner and at the rate of progress required by the company's engineer, the contract should be, at the option of the company, but not otherwise, considered void so far as related to the work remaining to be done, and that all sums of money which might be due to the contractor, together with the materials and implements in his possession, and all sums of money named as penalties for the non-fulfilment of the contract, should be forfeited to the company, and the amount considered as ascertained damages for breach of contract. The company seeking to avail itself of these provisions in the contract on the ground of alleged default on the part of the contractor, claimed the right of completing the works itself. The contractor thereupon filed a bill against the company, seeking an injunction to restrain it from declaring the contract void as to work remaining to be done, and from declaring the amount remaining due to him for work already done under the contract forfeited, and from taking possession of the materials and implements in his possession or belonging to him. He then moved interlocutorily for an injunction in the terms of the prayer of his bill, and also for an injunction to restrain the company from entering upon the line of railway mentioned in the contract:—Held, that the case was not one for an interlocutory injunction. Munro v. Wivenhoe & Brightlingsea Railway Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 723; 11 Jur., N. S., 612; 13 W. R. 880; 12 L. T., N. S., 655.

4. An agreement dated 17th September 1878 between an owner of land and a builder provided, that in consideration of the rent thereby reserved and certain agreements on the part of the builder the landowner would, as the builder should erect and completely cover in the messuages thereafter agreed to be erected by him, demise to him a piece of land for ninety-nine years, at a yearly rent of 800*l*. And the builder agreed to erect and completely finish forty houses, each of a specified value, within fifteen months from the date of the agreement, and vigorously and effectually to proceed continuously with all buildings once commenced by him on the ground, and to accept leases of the land and houses as the same should be erected and covered in. Until the leases should be granted the builder was to hold the premises subject to the payment of the rent, and to the observance and performance of his part of the terms and stipulations of the agreement, and subject to the power of distress and entry in default of any of the stipulations on his part, or on his becoming bankrupt or insolvent, in either of which cases all improvements, materials, and effects on the land, or adjacent thereto, which should not have been actually demised to the builder, should become absolutely forfeited to the landlord, but without prejudice to any right of action which might have accrued to him under the agreement (which was not to be construed as an actual demise), and the landlord was to be at liberty to re-enter and take possession of the ground, premises, chattels, and effects, and to re-let or sell the same, or otherwise to use and enjoy the same, as fully as if the agreement had never been made. In January 1879 the builder filed a liquidation petition. At this time there was a large quantity of building materials on the land comprised in the agreement, which had been placed there by the builder. Up to the time of the filing of the petition the builder had made no default in performing his agreement:—Held, that the provision for forfeiture of the materials to the landlord on the bankruptcy of the builder was void, as contrary to the policy of the bankruptcy law, and that the materials on the land were the property of the trustee in the liquidation. Brown v. Bateman (2 L. R., C. P., 272), and Exp. Dickin, Re Waugh (4 L. R., Ch. D., 524), distinguished. Exp. Jay, Re Harrison, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 19; 42 L. T. 600; 28 W. R. 419. Reversing S. C. *sub nom. 1. A builder contracted with a building club to erect houses for them on their own land. The contract contained a stipulation that, if the contractor should neglect or refuse to proceed with the work in a proper manner to the satisfaction of the architect of the club, or become bankrupt, or insolvent, or otherwise rendered incapable of completing the contract, the architect should have power, after giving two days' notice in writing to the contractor, to appoint other persons to complete the work, and to provide the requisite materials, and also to seize and retain all materials, plant, and implements provided that the contractor should have drawn money on account of his contract. The contractor commenced the works, and carried them on for some time, receiving a considerable sum from the club. On the 30th of May he filed a liquidation petition. On the 2nd of June the architect of the club gave notice to the contractor that as he had neglected to proceed with the works, he should, on the expiration of two days, employ other means of completing the works, and that he must not remove any materials, implements, or plant from the works, and on the expiration of this notice the club took possession of the materials, implements, and plant:—Held, that the club was entitled, as against the trustee in the liquidation, to retain what they had seized, the seizure being a protected transaction within s. 94 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. Exp. Dickin, Re Waugh, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 524; 25 W. R. 258; 35 L. T., N. S., 769; 46 L. J., Bky., 26.

2. A contract for the construction of a railway provided that if the contractor should make default the company might enter and complete the works, and make use of the contractor's waggons, machinery, and plant, and also have a lien on the same, with power of sale to reimburse itself any loss or damage it might sustain by reason of such default. The contractor having become embarrassed, the company made a second contract with him, which provided it should take to and complete the works, and for that purpose should be allowed 10,000*l*., and the use of all the contractor's plant, etc., which should on the completion of the works be restored to the contractor in whatever state it might then be. And this second contract provided that, if it should then be found that anything was due to or from the company from or to the contractor, the amount should be paid by the one to the other within three months after the engineer should have certified the amount that should be due. And it provided that, "in all other respects the original contract should stand, except so far as it was altered by or should be inconsistent with the second contract." The contractor had made no default down to the date of the second contract. The company completed the works, and the engineer certified that a large sum was due to it from the contractor. The company thereupon refused to deliver up the plant to the contractor, and claimed power to sell the plant, and to reimburse itself out of the proceeds:—Held, by the House of Lords, that it was not so entitled, for the provisions of the second contract were in substitution of the corresponding provisions in the first contract; the two instruments were not to be read as one, nor were the clauses of the first, conferring the lien and power of sale, to be taken as incorporated into the second contract. Hunt v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 45 L. J., C. P., 87.

III. EXTRAS.

See also V. post.

3. Account directed of extra works done by a contractor under his contract:—Held, not to authorize an account to be taken of works (other than the specified works) done with the privity of employer without written instructions, but liberty was given to bring an action in respect of works done without such instructions. Nixon v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 7 Hare 136. Affirmed sub nom., Taff Vale Railway Co. v. Nixon, 1 H. L. Ca., 111.

Quære, whether, if the contractor could not recover for extra works done for the company without written instructions, he might not recover in assumpsit. Id.

By a contract for the execution of railway works after specifying certain works to be done for a gross sum, it was provided that extra works which the company or the engineer should by any writing under his hand require to be executed, should be deemed to be included in the contract, and should be paid for at a certain rate, and that the contractor should not be entitled to make any claim for any alteration or addition which he might make without such written and signed instructions : — Held, that a suit for an account of the moneys due to the contractor in respect of works done under the contract was a proper subject of jurisdiction in equity. Ib.

1. A builder agreed, by a written contract under seal, with a board of guardians, to build a workhouse according to a certain plan for a certain sum ; and any deviations from the plan which the board or their architect might order in the course of the work were to be valued in a particular manner, and the value added to or deducted from the stipulated price, as the case might be ; but it was expressly provided that no allowance was to be made to the builder for additional work, unless the same should be ordered in writing. After the builder had been paid for all the work done pursuant to the written agreement, he filed a bill against the board, alleging that much additional work had been done with the knowledge and sanction of the board, and on the faith of an assurance from their agent that no written order for it was necessary, and paying an account and payment of what was due in respect of such work. On a general demurrer to the bill — Held, first, that the subject matter of the claim was not of itself within the jurisdiction of this Court ; and, secondly, that the alleged fraud on the part of the board in taking advantage of the want of a written order to avoid paying for work which they had sanctioned, would not give the Court jurisdiction, and that bills to enforce parol contracts within the Statute of Frauds, on the ground of part performance, were different, the Court having jurisdiction in those cases over the original subject matter, viz., the contract, and the question being whether that jurisdiction was ousted by the want of a writing, whereas, here the attempt was to make the want of a writing the ground of jurisdiction. Kirk v. Bromley Union (Guardians), 2 Ph. 640 ; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 127 ; 12 Jur. 85. Reversing 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114 ; 11 Jur. 49.

2. A contract for the construction of a railway made between a firm of contractors, and the company formed for the purpose of making and working the railway, provided that the company should not, under any circumstances, be liable to pay to the contractors a greater sum than 1,745,000*l.*, and that the contractors should execute and provide, not only all the works and materials mentioned in the first schedule thereto, but also all such other works and materials as in the judgment of the company's engineer-in-chief were necessarily or reasonably implied in and by, or inferred from, such specification, and the plans and sections of the railway and works. The contract also provided that all accounts relating to the contract should be settled by the company's engineer-in-chief, and his certificate of the ultimate balance of the accounts should be final and conclusive on both parties. After the railway had been constructed the contractors filed a bill claiming to be entitled to payment in respect of extra works which they had executed under the directions of the company's engineer-in-chief, alleging that they had done so upon the faith of his promise that they should be paid for the same, but for which he refused to certify : — Held, that the contractors were bound by the contract to complete the railway for a specified sum ; that the company's engineer-in-chief had no power to alter the terms of the contract ; and that the contractors had agreed to abide by the certificates of the company's engineer-in-chief. Sharpe v. San Paulo Brazilian Railway Co., 27 L. T., N. S., 699 ; 8 L. R., Ch., 603*n.*

Held, also, that, although the amount of the works to be executed might have been understated in the engineer's specification, the contractors could not under the circumstances maintain any claim against the company on that ground. Ib.

3. A contract for the construction of large iron buildings for a lump sum contained a clause, that no alterations or additions should be made without a written order from the employers' engineer, and no allegation by the contractors of knowledge of, or acquiescence in, such alterations or additions on the part of the employers, their engineers, or inspectors, should be accepted or available as equivalent to the certificate of the engineer, or as in any way superseding the necessity of such certificate as the sole warrant for such alterations and additions. During the execution of the contract the contractors alleged it was impossible to cast certain iron tough-girders of a specified weight, and subsequently they were allowed to erect girders of a much heavier weight ; and the actual weights were entered in the engineer's certificates issued from time to time authorizing interim payments. On the completion of the work the contractors claimed a considerable amount in excess of the contract price for the extra weight of metal supplied : — Held, that the engineer's certificates were not written orders, and the claim was therefore excluded by the terms of the contract. Tharsis Sulphur & Copper Co. v. McElroy, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 1040.

4. D. employed an architect to prepare designs for a mansion-house, the architect guaranteeing that the total cost should not exceed 15,000*l.* A builder, forming his estimate partly on certain rough plans prepared by the architect and partly on his verbal explanations, signed a tender to complete the house for 13,690*l.* He afterwards signed a formal contract and specifications, being at the time when he signed it in weak health, and being unaware of the existence of the architect's guarantee as to the cost of the buildings. The contract contained a clause making the architect the arbitrator in case of any dispute, and giving him power to determine whether any work was extra work or not, and what sum should be paid for any extra work. The builder proceeded with the works, the cost of which vastly exceeded the estimate, owing, as he alleged, to the fact that the quantities in the working drawings prepared by the architect exceeded the quantities which he had given to the builder as the basis of his estimate. The architect having refused to certify for anything beyond the contract price, the builder filed a bill praying for a rectification of the contract, and for a declaration that he was entitled to be paid by measure and value for all quantities of work executed by him in excess of the quantities included in his estimate:—Held, that he must be bound by the general terms of the contract, as it was owing to his own negligence that he entered into it without due deliberation, but that the arbitration clause could not be enforced owing to the architect's interest to disallow any claims for extra work; and that he was, therefore, entitled to be paid for all works not included in the specifications by measure and value. Kimberley v. Dick, 25 L. T., N. S., 476; 20 W. R. 49; 41 L. J., Ch., 38; 13 L. R., Eq., 1.

1. In rebuilding a church, the architect employed by the defendants, after giving them an assurance that the whole of the works should not exceed the sum named, prepared a statement or bill of particulars showing the quantities of the works to be performed by the contractors, and also prepared plans and a specification. The plaintiffs tendered for portions of the works, and their tender was accepted at a fixed sum. The architect then prepared a form of contract, whereby the plaintiffs agreed to do certain things mentioned "according to the plans and the quantities there given by the architect"; and they signed the specification, the conditions of which stated, that if any doubt should arise during the execution of the works, in making out the accounts "the admission or allowance of claims should be judged of, determined, and adjudged by the architect, without reference to any other person," and that "in all matters the decision of the architect should be final." Although no time for completion of the contract was named, it being left in blank, they were to be subject to a penalty if the works should remain unfinished. The plaintiffs performed quantities of work in excess of the quantities stated by the architect in his bill of particulars, and claimed to be paid over and above the fixed sum; but the architect rejected the greater portion of such claims, and debited the plaintiffs with a sum (to which, however, they would not consent) for delay in completing their contract. On a bill for a declaration that the plaintiffs were not bound by the conditions in reference to their claims being adjusted and all matters decided by the architect, that an account might be taken of what was due to the plaintiffs, and that they were not chargeable with any sum in respect of penalty for delay:—Held, first, that there was no ground for imposing the penalty for delay, and secondly, that the plaintiffs were entitled to be paid, in addition to the fixed sum, for all quantities of work done by them beyond the quantities mentioned in the bill of particulars. Kemp v. Rose, 4 Jur., N. S., 919.

2. A contractor agreed with an incorporated company to do certain works, the contract being under seal. In this contract there was a stipulation, that if the company should think proper at any time to make any addition to the original works, the company should be at liberty to do so on giving him written instructions for that purpose, signed by the principal or assistant engineer. A verbal arrangement was afterwards made by the principal engineer for the execution of certain extension works, allowing for a variance in the prices, but stipulating, that with the exception of that variance, all the provisions of the contract should be considered as applicable to the extension work. This work was executed by the contractor under this arrangement:—Held, that he could not afterwards reject the terms of the contract and claim remuneration for the work as upon a quantum meruit, nor could he ask in equity for accounts to be taken, independently of the contract. Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., 5 H. L. Ca. 72.

IV. REMUNERATION.

3. Where excessive prices are charged for work, on account of slow and precarious payment, no interest ought to be allowed, for interest is only allowed to supply the want of prompt payment. Marlborough (Duke) v. Strong, 4 Bro. P. C. 539.

4. The employing of a professional person implies an undertaking to remunerate him, but the inference may be rebutted by circumstances. Manson v. Baillie, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 80.

5. A., a contractor for works on a railway, employed B., as his agent, to get a sub-contractor to do a portion of the works. B., as agent, accordingly entered into a contract with C. An allowance of 5% per cent. was made by C. to B. After the work had been finished, A. filed a bill against B. and C. to recover back the commission:—Held, that the bill could not be sustained as against C., and it was also dismissed against B., without costs on the ground that such an allowance was usual, and that the plaintiff was proved to have acted on it, and must have known what had occurred. Holden v. Webber, 29 Beav. 117.

6. A contractor with a company was by his contract bound, at the option of the company, to accept payment to a certain amount in shares:—Held, that after the company had been ordered to be wound up, the contractor could not be called upon to accept payment in shares, the option not having been exercised till after the winding up. Exp. Sharon, Re Alexandra Park Co., 12 Jur., N. S., 482; 14 W. R. 855.

7. A contractor contracted to do certain works for a railway company, and the price was to be paid on the engineer of the company certifying the due performance of the work. The works were completed, but the engineer refused his certificate at the alleged instigation of the company. The contractor filed his bill, charging collusion between the company and the engineer; praying discovery, relief, and payment against the company; and seeking discovery from their engineer and their secretary. All the defendants demurred, but the demurrers were overruled. McIntosh v. Great Western Railway Co., 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 94; 13 Jur. 92; 2 Macn. & G. 74; 2 H. & Tw. 250; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 374; 14 Jur. 819.

V. ACCOUNT.

8. N. and S. contracted with a railway company jointly and severally to execute railway works according to specifications and prices contained in a former contract between N. and the company. S. was to advance the money necessary for the execution of the works and to receive from the company all moneys accruing due from it in respect of the works, and apply them in the discharge of N.'s liabilities under his contracts. S. became a bankrupt at the completion of the works, and the company, after paying him and his assignees part of the moneys due from it, refused to account with N. for the balance, whereupon he filed a bill for an account against it and S.'s assignees:—Held, that although the case against the company consisted of matters cognizable at law, yet, as there were complicated accounts between it and the other parties respectively, a court of equity was more competent to take them and to dispose of the whole case than a court of law, and the bill was sustained accordingly. Taff Vale Railway Co. v. Nison, 1 H. L. Ca. 111. See Nison v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 7 Hare 136.

1. A builder entered into a contract to build an union workhouse on certain specified terms, but became bankrupt before it was completed, and it was finished by the guardians. A bill by the assignees to have an account taken of what had been done was dismissed with costs, on the ground that it was not a proper subject for a suit in equity. Ambrose v. Dunmow Union, 9 Beav. 508.

2. By the terms of the articles of agreement usually entered into between the postmaster-general and the persons supplying horses for the mail coaches, the postmaster-general cannot exercise the power of nominating a new party to perform neglected duty, for which provision is made in the articles, without notice to all the parties to the agreement who have the option of performing the neglected duty themselves. A bill for an account by a substituted party of whose nomination the postmaster-general had given no notice to one of the defendants, an original contracting party, who was entitled to the option of performing the neglected duty himself, was therefore dismissed at the original hearing; but the decision was reversed upon appeal, upon the ground that although no notice had been given by the postmaster-general, the defendant knew of the nomination of the plaintiff, and that his conduct was equivalent to a waiver of the option. Lovegrove v. Nelson, 3 Myl. & K. 1.

3. A bill will not be entertained for an account and payment of moneys, due for expenses incurred in fitting out and supporting certain troops called the Irish Legion, in the service of the republic of Colombia. Mucnamora v. D'Evereux, 3 L. J., Ch. 156.

4. Bill for an account of certain works constructed by A. for a corporation, the contract providing that if the contractors should fail in performing their contract, or, in the opinion of the engineer, not make due progress, it should be lawful for the corporation to seize the plant; and in case of any dispute, the decision of the engineer should be final at law and in equity. Dismissed with costs, no case of fraud, misconduct, incapacity, or refusal to act being established against the engineer. Scott v. Liverpool (Corporation), 1 Giff. 216. Affirmed 3 De G. & J. 334.

5. The Court will not, in the absence of fraud or special circumstances, investigate an ordinary account between a builder and his employer. Flockton v. Peake, 12 W. R. 562.

6. A railway contractor, on the completion of the works, brought an action against the company to recover the balance. By an order of Court, all matters in difference were referred to arbitration, with full powers; and the Court was empowered to refer back the award from time to time. The award was made in July 1848, and in January 1850 the company filed this bill, alleging fraud in the performance of the works practised in collusion with its engineer, and discovered since the award, and seeking to set aside the award, and have the accounts taken. A general demurrer was allowed, on the ground that the matter was already before another jurisdiction competent to reconsider the matter and decide all questions. Londonderry & Enniskillen Railway Co. v. Leishman, 12 Beav. 423.

7. A railway company filed a bill against surveyors who had brought an action at law against it in respect of surveys made by them for the company, and other matters connected with those surveys, and for moneys expended by them for the company. The bill alleged that, with the discovery thereby asked for, the company could successfully defend the action. The company afterwards, when the action was nearly ready for trial, applied for an injunction, on the ground that the accounts were too complicated to be taken in an action at law. The application was refused. South-Eastern Railway Co. v. Martin, 2 Ph. 758; 1 H. & Tw. 69; 5 Rail. Ca. 484; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 103; 13 Jur. 1. Affirming 5 Rail. Ca. 478; 12 Jur. 1062.

8. The Court will endeavour to assume jurisdiction in matters of account where doing so will promote substantial justice between the parties. Dabbs v. Nugent, 11 Jur., N. S., 943; 14 W. R. 94; 13 L. T., N. S., 396.

On contracts made by a builder to execute works, three actions had been commenced by the builder against his employer for the payment of moneys alleged to be due under the contracts. These actions had been consolidated at the instance of the employer, who then commenced two actions against the builder for breaches of contract. The builder alleged that he was unable to prosecute the actions commenced by him because the inspecting architect had been prevented, by the act of the employer, from giving a conclusive certificate as to the work done. Upon a bill, by the builder, for an injunction to restrain the actions, for an account of what was due, and for payment:—Held, that the case was one in which the Court would exercise its jurisdiction in matters of account, and accounts and inquiries were ordered accordingly. Id.

9. Where a suit had been instituted in this Court to compel a settlement of accounts, and to recover the balance due upon them, and had been pending for nearly eight years:—Held, that this Court ought not, at the hearing of the cause, to renounce the jurisdiction, and leave the plaintiff to his action at law, especially as practical difficulty is experienced in proceeding at law, and as there are the means now under the improved course of procedure in this Court of securing a fair investigation of the items of account, and of ascertaining the true result of the whole; and decree made for an account accordingly. Remarks upon the insertion of special directions in decrees under the present course of practice. McIntosh v.

1. A contractor having executed works for a railway company under two contracts, distinguished respectively as contract No. 1 and contract No. 3, brought an action against the company for the works executed under contract No. 1. The company filed a bill to restrain this action, alleging that the plaintiff's demand depended on the result of complicated accounts, the company being entitled to various items of set-off, and that the account under contract No. 1 was so blended with that under contract No. 3, that what was due to the contractor could not be ascertained without taking both accounts. The contractor, by his answer, denied any complication in the accounts, and that the accounts were blended; he admitted the receipt of various sums in payment of works done under each of the contracts; and also of a large sum which, not being appropriated by the company, he had appropriated partly to one contract, partly to the other: he also showed that the several heads of set-off were free from all uncertainty; he then stated that there was work done, the amount of which had not been ascertained, and other matters in respect of which he had claims on the company:—Held, on appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls granting an injunction, first, that, taking into account the explanations given in the answer, there would be no difficulty in the company proving at law the claims of set-off under contract No. 1, and that no case for equitable interference was established on this ground; secondly, that before the contractor could recover anything under contract No. 1, he would be obliged to prove that he had a demand, exclusive of that contract, which justified his appropriation of that part of the sum received from the company which he had not appropriated to contract No. 1; that thus the accounts under contract No. 3 would have to be taken, and that in this way the accounts of the two contracts were blended; thirdly, that, it being equally possible to take at law, with justice to both parties, the accounts under contract No. 3 as those under contract No. 1, the blending of the two accounts formed no reason for withdrawing the case from the jurisdiction of a court of law; fourthly, that the other claims set up by the contractor in his answer were such as could not be properly decided in the action, and that therefore the injunction granted was proper; fifthly, that the delay of the company in filing their bill was no ground for refusing to interfere in a case where it was clear that the court of law could not possibly deal with the subject-matter. South-Eastern Railway Co. v. Brogden, 3 Macn. & G. 8; 14 Jur. 795.

The authorities show that there are many cases in which a court of equity will entertain jurisdiction in matters of account, where, if the party making the claim had proceeded at law, the Court would not, if applied to for that purpose, withdraw the matter from the legal jurisdiction. Ib.

Besides the claims which were covered by the declaration in the action, and which the Court considered proper subjects of action, the contractor claimed, in the schedule to his answer, divers sums of money for "general expedition in the works," for "losses occasioned by delays," for "loss of profit by reduction of quantities of works," and "for other breaches of and deviations from the contracts." Semble, that these were such claims as a court of law, sitting at nisi prius, could not properly dispose of. Ib.

2. The plaintiff entered into certain contracts with a railway company, whereby it was agreed (inter alia) that the engineer of the company should, every fortnight, ascertain the value of the work done, according to its quantity and relative proportion to the whole works, and that the plaintiff should, on production of the certificate of the engineer, receive 80 per cent. of such value, the remaining 20 per cent. being reserved by the company until such reserve should amount to 4,000*l.*; that, if the engineer should not be satisfied with the works, the company should be enabled after notice given to the contractor, and his default in complying therewith for seven days, to take possession of the works, and thereupon the plant and materials of the contractor, the value of the work done and not paid for, and the reserve fund should become forfeited to the company. In the course of the work, the company advanced several sums of money to the plaintiff, upon the security of an assignment of his plant and machinery. Upon the works comprised in the contracts, and of the reserve fund. The company, having given the required notice, and, at the expiration of the seven days, having taken possession of the works, plant, and machinery, the plaintiff filed his bill, insisting that the engineer had not so estimated the works, as to give to the plaintiff the 80 per cent. to which he was entitled, and that upwards of 30,000*l.* was due to him, under the several contracts for works actually completed; insisting also that no forfeiture had been incurred by him; and praying, that the company might elect to permit the plaintiff to complete the works, or otherwise that the contracts might be considered at an end: and praying in either alternative for the taking of accounts between the plaintiff and the company. The plaintiff amended the original, and filed two supplemental bills, and thereby stated that masonry, and other works of the most expensive kind, had been paid for at the price of inferior masonry and works, and claimed large sums in respect thereof; and also alleged fraud against the company, both in respect to the contracts, and also in respect to the certificates, and prayed relief therefrom, etc.:—Held, that the investigation as to the sufficiency of the payments to the plaintiff must be made in a court of equity, and cannot be made at law: that the evidence in support of an allegation of fraud must be very clear; and that it is not sufficient for the contractor to show that the statements of a company with regard to the nature of the work to be contracted for gave imperfect information; but he must also show, that he could not with reasonable diligence have acquired all necessary information: that clauses contained in contracts conferring on the engineer any power or authority over the contractor will not be considered by the Court as fraudulent or void, on account of the engineer being a shareholder in the company on whose behalf such contracts were entered into; that the engineer can decide as to the quality of work done, but cannot decide as to the quantity and amount of such work: the question of measurement and calculation will be entertained and decided by a court of equity: that where the plaintiff has entered into a subsequent contract with a company, the Court will not direct inquiries as to the amount of unliquidated damages claimed in respect of antecedent grievances, but will consider the new contracts as a condonation, unless, at the time of making them, the plaintiff insisted on his adverse claims,—the parties being at liberty to proceed at law. Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., 3 Rail. Ca. 298. And see 5 H. L. Ca. 72.

The company, by its answer, having stated that the plaintiff was not entitled to a settlement of the accounts until all the works should have been completed.—Held, that the plaintiff, having, at the hearing, asked for a settlement of accounts, was entitled, from the admission in the answer (although the works were completed by the company, and not by the contractor) to have a final account taken. Id.

Held, also, that, under the clause of forfeiture, there was no forfeiture of the sums necessary to make up the deficiency in the payments under the certificates of four-fifths of the value of the work done; and the Court directed an inquiry to ascertain whether they were the full sums or not. Id.

Where the evidence as to the nature of masonry is conflicting, a reference will be directed to the Master to inquire, state, and accurately define the sorts of masonry with respect to which the question arises. Id.

Stipulations as to penalties in contracts for railway works are binding on the contractor. Id.

Where no fraud can be shown, no relief will be granted against a forfeiture provided for by a clause in the contract. Id.

Where it had been agreed that the provisions of a written contract should in all respects, as far as applicable, apply to an unwritten contract:—Held, that stipulations as to forfeiture contained in the written contract should extend to, and form part of, the unwritten contract. Id.

Semble, the Court will draw a distinction between a supplemental bill adducing facts which had happened prior to the filing of the original bill in support of the case made by that bill, and a supplemental bill adducing facts which happened prior to the original bill, but not put in issue by such original bill; but that the objection to such supplemental bill should be taken by demurrer, or by an application to take the bill off the file, and could not be properly taken at the hearing. Id.

I. D. employed an architect to prepare designs for a mansion-house, the architect guaranteeing that the total cost should not exceed 15,000*l.* A builder, forming his estimate partly on certain rough plans prepared by the architect and partly on his verbal explanations, signed a tender to complete the house for 13,690*l.* He afterwards signed a formal contract and specifications, being at the time when he signed it in weak health, and being unaware of the existence of the architect's guarantee as to the cost of the buildings. The contract contained a clause making the architect the arbitrator in case of any dispute, and giving him power to determine whether any work was extra work or not, and what sum should be paid for any extra work. The builder proceeded with the works, the cost of which vastly exceeded the estimate, owing, as he alleged, to the fact that the quantities in the working drawings prepared by the architect exceeded the quantities which he had given to the builder as the basis of his estimate. The architect having refused to certify for anything beyond the contract price, the builder filed a bill praying for a rectification of the contract, and for a declaration, that he was entitled to be paid by measure and value for all quantities of work executed by him in excess of the quantities included in his estimate.—Held, that the account was too complicated to be taken at law, and ought to be taken in chancery. Kimberley v. Dick, 13 L. R., Eq., 1; 41 L. J., Ch., 38; 25 L. T. 476; 20 W. R. 49.

VI. LIEN.

2. A contract for the building of a ship provided that the purchase money was to be paid by instalments, partly in cash and partly by means of bills of exchange, to be paid and given at specified stages of the progress of the construction, the balance being paid on completion by a bill. The ship was from the time of paying or giving the first instalment to be the absolute property of the purchaser to the extent of his advances, subject nevertheless to the builder's lien for any unpaid instalments. Any bills given during construction were to be retired by the purchaser at completion and transfer. As the construction of the ship went on the vendor drew bills upon the purchaser, which he accepted, for the instalments of the purchase money. After these bills had been negotiated, but before any of them became due, the purchaser took proceedings for liquidation, including his liability on the bills among his debts, and his creditors passed a resolution to accept a composition. The bill-holders refused to accept the amount of composition when tendered. The purchaser shortly after the resolution gave notice to the vendor to rescind the contract. Not long after this the vendor became bankrupt, and the ship was completed by his trustee. The bill-holders having claimed a lien on the ship:—Held, that the principle of Exp. Waring (19 Ves. 345) was not applicable, and that the bill-holders had no lien on the ship. Exp. Lambton, Re Lindsay, 10 L. R., Ch., 405; 23 W. R. 662; 32 L. T., N. S., 380; 44 L. J., Bky., 81. Affirming S. C. sub nom. Exp. Greener, Re Lindsay, 32 L. T., N. S., 205.

3. A man who enters into a contract to expend a certain sum of money on land and after spending part of it declines to perform the contract, has no lien on the land for the money which he has expended. Wallis v. Smith, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 243; 47 L. T. 389.

4. By an agreement between A. and B., A. agreed to exert himself to prove that B. was entitled to certain property in India, for which A. was to have half the value of what might be recovered. A. succeeded in recovering a certain amount, which was sent home to the correspondents in London of a firm in Calcutta, who acted for A. in the matter. Upon demurrer to a bill to declare A.'s right to half the amount under the agreement:—Held, that A. had no lien on the fund, and that his right, if any, was purely legal and not equitable. Alexander v. Hammond, 3 W. R. 145.

I. CONSTRUED AS FIRSTBORN.

- I. One has two sons, A. and B., and three daughters, and devises his lands to be sold, to pay his debts, and, as to the moneys arising by sale after debts paid, he gives 200*l.* thereout to his eldest son A., at twenty-one, the residue to his four younger children equally. A., the eldest, died before twenty-one: the 200*l.* shall go to the heir of the testator. Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. W. 19.

1. Bequest to a daughter's "younger children":—Held, to mean the children other than the eldest in age, and therefore to exclude the eldest child, a daughter, and to include her younger brother, though, under his parents' marriage settlement, the family estates stood settled on him. Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Beav. 565; 18 Jur. 1066; 2 W. R. 690.

2. The only son of a marriage cannot succeed to an estate which has been limited to A. and his heirs in tail male, except an eldest son, and does not come in under a proviso giving an estate to A., and "all and every other the son of the body of A., save and except an eldest son." Tuite v. Birmingham, 7 L. R., H. L., 634; 24 W. R. 549.

"Eldest" and "firstborn" are to be treated as synonymous terms. Id.

3. Except in cases of portions or of a specially qualifying context "eldest son" means "firstborn son." A testator, by will dated in 1841, devised lands to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of "the eldest son" of A. for life, with remainder, after the decease of the eldest son of A., to the use of the eldest son of his body and his heirs for ever; but in case of the death of the eldest son of A. without issue male, to the use of the second, third, fourth, and every other son of A. successively in tail male; and the will contained a proviso that the first, second, third, and every other son of A. should, before receiving the rents of the lands, take and use the name and arms of the testator. The firstborn son of A. was living at the date of the will, but died an infant. C., the second born son of A., was his eldest living son at the time of the death of the testator:—Held, that the word "eldest" must be construed as "firstborn;" and that, subject to his father's life estate, C. was tenant in tail under the will. Meredith v. Trefry, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 170; 48 L. J., Ch., 337; 27 W. R. 406.

Held, also, that the eldest son of A. took by implication an estate tail in remainder after the estate tail of his eldest son. Id.

4. The eldest son of a man is his firstborn—the primogenitus; and the words "shall become the eldest son" of a person living at the date of a will cannot, without an explanatory context, be extended beyond the lifetime of that person; they are connected with the heirship of, and right of succession to, a living man. Bathurst v. Errington, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 698; 46 L. J., Ch., 748; 25 W. R. 908; 37 L. T., N. S., 338. Affirming S. C. nom. Harvey-Bathurst v. Errington, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 251; 46 L. J., Ch., 162; 25 W. R. 482; 35 L. T., N. S., 709, which reversed 34 L. T., N. S., 639.

5. A testator gave real estate to A. for life, and afterwards to her eldest son on his taking the name of M.; but should he refuse to take the name, or A. depart this life without a son, then over. A. had no son at the date of the will, but afterwards had four sons, all of whom had the name of M. given to them at their baptism:—Held, that A. took an estate for life, with remainder in fee to her firstborn son. Bennett v. Bennett, 10 Jur., N. S., 1170; 33 L. J., Ch., 34; 13 W. R. 66; 11 L. T., N. S., 362; 2 Dr. & Sm. 266.

II. CONSTRUED AS SON TAKING THE ESTATE.

6. Elder son unprovided for, considered as a younger. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. 198.

7. Elder son provided for by collateral relations considered as a younger. Duke v. Doidge, 2 Ves. 203.n.

8. A father's estate was limited after his death to the eldest son in tail, and the mother's estates were limited after her death to the sons and daughters (other than an eldest son) as tenants in common in tail:—Held, that the rule of construction was the same as to realty and personalty, and that the son of a younger son who had succeeded to the father's estate was excluded from all interest in the mother's estates. Re Bayley, 6 L. R., Ch., 590; 19 W. R. 789; 25 L. T., N. S., 249; 39 L. J., Ch., 388; 9 L. R., Eq., 491; 18 W. R. 481; 21 L. T., N. S., 195.

9. A second born son, who attained twenty-one, and on his father's death succeeded to his title, but died before the period of distribution, was held to be excluded as an "eldest son" from sharing in certain unappointed trust funds. His younger brother, who succeeded him in the title, and was living at the period of the distribution of the funds, was held entitled to share in them. Re Rivers, 40 L. J., Ch., 87; 24 L. T., N. S., 253; 19 W. R. 318.

10. In a settlement where there is a clause excluding the eldest son from the benefit of a fund provided for children other than an eldest son, the time for ascertaining who fills the character of eldest son is the period fixed by the settlement for the distribution of the fund. Collingwood v. Stanhope, 4 L. R., H. L., 43; 38 L. J., Ch., 421; 17 W. R. 537. Affirming S. C. nom. Stanhope v. Collingwood, 36 L. J., Ch., 894; 4 L. R., Eq., 286.

In such a case "eldest" is not solely senior in age, for (as stated by Lord Hardwicke in Duke v. Doidge, 2 Ves. 203.n.), "eldership not carrying the estate along with it is not such an eldership as will exclude." Id.

A. was, under a will, tenant for life of an estate, remainder to his first and other sons in tail. On his marriage a settlement was executed, by which a fund was created and vested in trustees for the husband and wife for life, and after the decease of the survivor for the benefit of the children of the marriage, "other than and except an eldest son entitled under the will to an estate in tail mail in possession, or remainder immediately expectant on the death of A." There was a power of appointment in this husband and wife, and in the survivor of them. There were three children of the marriage, a son and two daughters. No joint appointment was made. The wife died. The son, on attaining twenty-one, joined with his father in barring the entail and re-settling the estate, which was settled on the father for life, on the son for life, and on the sons of the son in tail. The father appointed one moiety of the trust fund to a daughter on her marriage. No appointment was made of the other moiety. On the death of the father the son claimed a share of the fund:—Held, that though the character of eldest son was to be ascertained at the time of distribution of the fund, the son here was to be treated as the "eldest son entitled under the will," and consequently was not entitled to a share of the trust fund, for that his re-settlement of the estate, and his taking under such re-settlement an estate different from that given by the will, had in no way affected the character of "eldest son entitled under the will" which belonged to him when he came of age. Ib.

III. CONSTRUED AS ONLY SON.

1. Hugh Tuite and Sarah his wife had two sons named Hugh Morgan and George Gustavus. In 1826, on the marriage of Hugh Morgan, the paternal estate of Sonna in Westmeath was settled to the father for life, remainder to Hugh Morgan for life, remainder to the first and other sons of Hugh Morgan in tail, remainder to George Gustavus and his issue in tail male. On the marriage of George Gustavus in 1834, the maternal estate of Ballycommon was settled (after life estates to the father and mother) on George Gustavus for life, with successive remainders to his issue in tail male, remainder to Hugh Morgan for life, remainder to the second son of Hugh Morgan and the heirs male of such second son, and in default of such issue male of such second son to the use of the third, fourth, fifth, and of all and every other the son and sons of Hugh Morgan, save and except an eldest son, in remainder one after the other and the heirs male of their bodies, the elder of such son and sons (other than an eldest son as aforesaid) and his said heirs being preferred before the younger and his said heirs, and in default of such issue, in fee to Henry Arabin, a connection of the mother. George Gustavus died without issue. Hugh Morgan afterwards died having had an only son who survived him:—Held, that upon the death of Hugh Morgan Tuite, the heirs of Henry Arabin became entitled to an estate of fee simple in possession in the lands of Ballycommon; the only son of Hugh Morgan being an "eldest son" within the meaning of the settlement of 1834. Tuite v. Birmingham, 24 W. R. 549; 7 L. R., H. L., 634.

IV. RIGHT OF TO PORTION OR PARENTAL PROVISION WHEN NOT TAKING THE ESTATE.

2. By a settlement for the benefit of younger children, money was to be raised, after the death of T., for all the children of E. other than an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to certain estates. The eldest son of E. died in his father's lifetime, and E. died in T.'s lifetime. At T.'s death W. was the eldest living son of E., and entitled to the estates:—Held, that the representatives of the eldest son of E. took a share in the money. Ellison v. Thomas, 8 Jur., N. S., 1139; 6 L. T., N. S., 883; 7 L. T., N. S., 342; 1 De G. & Sm. 18; 1 N. R. 37; 32 L. J., Ch., 32; 11 W. R. 56.

The persons entitled must be ascertained at the time when the money is directed to be raised and divided, and the words of exception attach at that time upon the son who then answers the description, and to exclude him only from the class of persons interested. Ib.

3. By a settlement a gross sum was directed to be raised after the decease of the settlor and his wife (tenants for life) for portions for children other than their eldest or only son, equally to be divided:—Held, that the personal representatives of the eldest son, who attained twenty-one, and died in his father's lifetime, were entitled to one share. Davies v. Huguenin, 1 Hem. & M. 730; 2 N. R. 101; 32 L. J., Ch., 417; 11 W. R. 1040; 8 L. T., N. S., 443.

Held, also, that a daughter who attained twenty-one, and died unmarried in her father's lifetime, was entitled to a share. Ib.

Held, also, that the second son, who, during the father's life and after attaining his majority became the eldest son and succeeded to the settled estate, and the personal representatives of a child who died in infancy, were not entitled. Ib.

The only person who is properly described as an eldest son, so as to be excluded from a share of portions for younger children, is the son who eventually takes possession of the estate. Ib.

4. Grandmother, under a power, creates by deed a term to commence after her death for raising money for younger children, as their father should appoint; if no appointment, equally; if but one besides the eldest, then to that one; if none except the eldest, then to him; if no eldest son, then to her own executors. At the date of the deed there was one grandson and one granddaughter. The father afterwards had another son, and died without appointment. The eldest son having died under age:—Held, that the whole sum belonged to the daughter, and that the younger son, having thus become an eldest son, was excluded. Elder son, unprovided for, considered as a younger. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. 198.

5. By a settlement the estates stood limited to S. for life, and after his death as to part to E., his son, for life, remainder to H., the eldest son of E., for life, and to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to J., the second son of E., for life, and to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over; and as to the remaining part, to trustees for sale and conversion, the proceeds to be held as personal estate in trust for the children of E., "other than or not being an eldest or only son for the time being entitled under the limitations hereinbefore contained to the manors," etc.—the unsold part of the settled estates—"either in possession or in remainder expectant on the decease of the survivor of S. (the grandfather) and E.," the shares to vest in such of them as should attain twenty-one, or, if daughters, marry under that age, and to be paid at such age or days of marriage, or immediately after the decease of the survivor of S. and E., which should last happen. The father died in the lifetime of the grandfather, and J. (having attained twenty-one) died in the lifetime of both his father and grandfather. S., the second son of E., attained twenty-one in the lifetime of H., and became entitled as tenant for life in possession to the unsold part of the settled estates on the death of his grandfather:—Held, that under these circumstances, and notwithstanding the fact that the settlement contained a separate provision for H. by way of rent-charge, his personal representative was, and J., the second son, was not, entitled to share the personal estate with the younger children. Swinburne v. Swinburne, 17 W. R. 47.

V. OTHER CASES.

1. Bequest to younger sons, as tenants in common; and, if any of them should die before the period of distribution, not leaving any wife or children, his share to go to his next eldest brother, and so on to the youngest. The fifth son having died without leaving a wife or child, his share was held to go to the sixth. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 442.

2. Gift to the eldest sons for the time being of testator's four brothers in remainder after a life estate:—Held, a vested interest in them as tenants in common. Harvey v. Towell, 7 Hare 231; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 217; 12 Jur 241.

3. Bequest of 5,000*l.* out of an estate, equally to testator's children, with remainder in the same estate to his first and other sons; the eldest son shall have a share. Incedon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 438.

4. A testator who had been twice married, and had three sons by the first marriage, and a son and a daughter by the second, gave his residuary estate to his five children, share and share alike, the shares of his sons to be payable at twenty-one, and of his daughter at that age or upon marriage, with a gift over in case of death before the shares became payable; and he directed that in case his three children by his first wife should receive any moneys which should become payable to them as the children of their mother, such moneys should be considered as deduction from the shares of such children, it being his desire that all his children should share and share alike. After the eldest child attained twenty-one, but before any of the rest attained that age, the children of the first marriage became entitled to a fund as children of their mother:—Held, that, as the share of this fund coming to the eldest son could not be deducted from his share of the residue, and it was the intention of the testator that the proviso in his will should operate on all the children alike, no deduction could be made from the shares of the other children of the said marriage. Stares v. Penton, 4 L. R., Eq., 40.

5. A. devised to B. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder over, in trust to convey the premises, or any part thereof, to such child or children of testator's daughter, and her then husband, other than and except their eldest son for the time being, and the issue male or female of such child or children (except as before excepted), for such estates and in such shares, and subject in such limitations, as she, by deed or will, should appoint: and for want of appointment by her, or for so much as shall not have been appointed by her, then, as her husband should, by deed or will, appoint: and for want of such appointment, or for so much, etc., then as their eldest son for the time being shall appoint. The husband by his will (his wife having died without appointing) appointed to his younger sons, by name, in tail, with cross-remainders in tail; and if all his said younger sons should die without issue, then to his daughters. He died, leaving his sons, the appointees, still younger sons; afterwards one of them became the only surviving son, the rent being dead, without issue; and then the trust estate vested in possession by the death of B., without issue male. The daughters of the appointor claimed the estate, considering the appointment to their surviving brother as defeated, by his being, as they said, an eldest son for the time being, and so excluded by the will of A., and the other brothers, the appointees, being dead, without issue. But it was decreed by Chancellor Lifford, that the appointment to him continued undisturbed; that "time being" meant the time of the appointment being made; that the appointees were as if named in the will of A.; and that the daughters could only claim under the appointment of their father, who limited it to them in the event of all his sons, the appointees, dying without issue, which did not happen. Jones v. Cope, Vern. & Scriv. 29.

6. A. makes two of his daughters executrices, and directs them to distribute a sum of 400*l.*, and also the residue of his personal estate, among themselves and their brothers and sisters, according to their needs and necessities, as they in their discretion should think fit. The Court restrained the exercise of this power by decreeing a double share to the eldest son and heir, looking upon him as a necessitous person. Warburton v. Warburton, 4 Bro. P. C. 1.

7. K., by will, directed his trustees, on R., the eldest son of K., and failing him the next eldest son, attaining twenty-one, to convey certain real estates to K., but in case any of the children conducted themselves so as not to merit the approbation of the trustees, then such children were to have life estates only. K., by codicil, directed his trustees to postpone the conveyance to R. till he attained twenty-five. R. at twenty-three married, with the approbation of the trustees, though they were not parties to his marriage settlement, which settlement disposed of his interest under his father's will as if it were an estate in fee. When R. attained twenty-five, the trustees, not being satisfied with R.'s conduct, conveyed to him only a life estate in the premises:—Held, first, that the eldest son was included under the term children; secondly, that the trustees were not bound to declare their dissatisfaction until R. attained twenty-five, and that they could not by having assented to R.'s marriage preclude themselves from discharging the duty of reviewing his conduct when he attained twenty-five. Weller v. Ure, 15 L. T., N. S., 97.

8. One gave legacies to each of his younger children, payable at twenty-one, and the residue of his personal estate to his eldest son at twenty-one; and if he die before twenty-one, then to his younger children in succession; and if any of his younger children should die before twenty-one, their respective legacies to go equally to all the survivors; and if all his children should die before twenty-one, then the whole to go to a charity. One of the younger sons died under twenty-one; the other children attained twenty-one:—Held, the eldest son should take his legacy equally with the other younger children. Hiern v. Ley Ambl. 569.

I. CONSTRUED AS SON NOT TAKING THE ESTATE.

1. Elder son provided for by collateral relations considered as younger. Duke v. Doidge, 2 Ves. 203.n.
2. Every one but the heir is a younger child in equity. Younger children are those who do not take the estate. The character of younger children must continue until the time of payment. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 278.
3. Younger child is never considered as an eldest but between parent and children, or one in loco parentis, not in the case of a provision by a stranger. Hall v. Hewer, Ambl. 203.
4. If money is bequeathed to younger children, where there are several daughters and a son, who by birth is the youngest, but heir to a fair inheritance, he shall not be considered as a younger child to take the legacy. Bretton v. Bretton, 3 Ch. Rep. 1. S. P. Mead v. Carr, 1 Ch. Rep. 221.
5. When a real estate is so settled, that it must, on the death of a parent, go to his eldest son, and provision is made by that parent or by any person in loco parentis, whether by settlement in contemplation of marriage or by will for the younger children of such parent, courts of equity have considered the presumption that it was intended to make provision for all the children so strong as to warrant them in holding, that by the word "younger" must have been intended all except the one child who succeeds to the estate. But this does not apply to the case of a will in which the primary intentions of the testator appear to have been to found certain families or to do something beyond merely making a provision for children. And the circumstance that the will is not of an executory nature will make no difference. Scurisbrick v. Shelmersdale (Lord), 4 Y. & Coll. 78.
6. In the will of a grandmother, "younger children" does not necessarily mean children unprovided for. Lyddon v. Ellison, 2 W. R. 690; 19 Beav. 565; 18 Jur. 1066.
7. The rule, that a limitation in favour of younger children will not operate in favour of a younger child who becomes an elder son and succeeds to the estates, is confined to cases where the provision is made by a parent or a person in loco parentis. Sandeman v.

Mackenzie, 1 John. & H. 613; 7 Jur., N. S., 1231; 30 L. J., Ch. 838; 5 L. T., N. S., 175.

Where, in a marriage settlement, a husband covenanted to pay 10,000*l.* for the children of the marriage, and, for want of such children, for the children of the wife by a former marriage (other than A., her eldest son) as the husband should appoint; and in default, for all who should attain twenty-one, equally, or, if only one, then for such one younger child:—Held, that the wife could not be considered as purchasing the provision in such a sense as to make her the settlor, and that the settlement was not by a person in loco parentis. Id.

8. Lands were settled to the use of A. for life, remainder to his eldest son B. for life, remainder to C. (eldest son of B.) for life, with remainder to C's first and other sons successively in tail, remainder to D. (the second son of B.) for life, remainder to D's first and other sons in tail, with remainder over; with a power of limiting portions in favour of the children of B., "not being and besides an eldest or other son, who on the decease of B. and A. shall be entitled to the settled estates;" the portions to vest in the case of sons at twenty-one, but not to be raisable in the lifetime of A. and B. or either of them without consent. B. died first, then C., without issue, but having attained twenty-one; then A.; whereupon D. succeeded to the estates. He attained twenty-one in C's lifetime. No portion had been barred or limited:—Held, that neither D. nor C's representatives had any title under the portion trusts. Gray v. Limerick (Earl), 2 De J. & Sm. 370; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 443; 12 Jur. 817.

II. RIGHT OF TO PORTION OR PARENTAL PROVISION WHEN BECOMING ELDEST.

1. In General, 8130.
2. Where not taking the Estate, 8131.

1. In General.

9. Where there is a sum of money provided for younger children, and one of the younger becomes eldest, he shall have no part of this money but where the money was, by a private Act of Parliament, to be appointed among A., B., and C. (naming them), and A. afterwards becomes eldest, he is capable of an appointment in his favour. Jermyn v. Fellows, Forrest. 93.

10. The rule, that a younger son becoming an elder cannot have the benefit of a provision made for younger children, is applicable only in a case where the settlor is a parent or in loco parentis. Sandeman v. Mackenzie, 1 John. & H. 613; 7 Jur., N. S., 1231; 30 L. J., Ch., 838; 5 L. T., N. S., 175.

11. A., by marriage settlement, is tenant for life, remainder to trustees, to raise 4,000*l.* for younger children's portions, as A. should appoint; remainder to his first and other sons in tail. A. appoints the 4,000*l.* amongst his younger children, and particularly 2,600*l.*

thereof to B., his second son. The eldest son dies six years afterwards, whereby B. became eldest son, and entitled to the whole estate after his father's death; and thereupon A. makes a new appointment of the 2,600*l.* to one of his daughters. Decreed, the last appointment to take place, the first being made to B. upon a tacit or implied condition, that he should not become the eldest son. Chadwick v. Doleman, 2 Vern. 528.

1. Grandmother, under a power, creates by deed a term, to commence after her death, for raising money for younger children, as their father should appoint; if no appointment, equally; if but one besides the eldest, then to that one; if none except the eldest, then to him; if no eldest son, then to her own executors. At the date of the deed there was one grandson and one granddaughter. The father afterwards had another son and died without appointment: the eldest son having died under age—Held, that the whole sum belonged to the daughter, and that the younger son, having thus become an eldest son, was excluded; eldest son unprovided for, considered as a younger. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. 198.

2. Under a power to appoint a sum of money among children; but that the eldest son, or the son possessing the estate, shall have no part of the money; a younger son becoming an eldest is excluded, though mentioned by name in the execution of the power, whilst he was a younger son. Broadmead v. Wood, 1 Bro. C. C. 77.

3. A son who, when he attained twenty-one, was a younger child, but, by the subsequent death of his elder brother, in the lifetime of his parents, becomes an eldest son before the time fixed for the payment of the younger children's portions, is entitled to his share of portions which are directed to vest in the younger sons at twenty-one, though not payable till after the death of the parents; there being enough in the settlements by which the portions were provided, to show that the character of younger child was to be ascertained by reference to the time when the portions vested, and not to the time when they became payable. Windham v. Graham, 1 Russ. 331. And see Loder v. Loder, 2 Ves. 581.

4. A. devised to B., for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder over, in trust to convey the premises, or any part thereof, to such child or children of testator's daughter, and her then husband, other than and except their eldest son for the time being, and the issue male or female of such child or children (except as before excepted), for such estates, and in such shares, and subject to such limitations as she, by deed or will, should appoint; and for want of appointment by her, or for so much as shall not have been appointed by her, then as her husband should, by deed or will, appoint; and for want of such appointment, or for so much, etc., then as their eldest son for the time being shall appoint. The husband, by his will (his wife having died without appointing), appointed to his younger sons, by name, in tail with cross-remainders in tail; and if all his said younger sons should die without issue, then to his daughters. He died, leaving his sons, the appointees, still younger sons; afterwards one of them became the only surviving son, the rest being dead without issue, and then the trust estate vested in possession by the death of B. without issue male. The daughters of the appointor claimed the estate, considering the appointment to their surviving brother as defeated by his being, as they said, an eldest son for the time being, and so excluded by the will of A.; and the other brothers, the appointees, being dead without issue. But it was decreed by Lifford, Ch., that the appointment to him continued undisturbed; that "time being" meant the time of the appointment being made; that the appointees were as if named in the will of A., and that the daughters could only claim under the appointment of their father, who limited it to them in the event of all his sons, the appointees, dying without issue, which did not happen. Jones v. Cope, Vern. & Scriv. 29.

5. Portions by settlements for younger children, living at the death of the survivor of the parents, with a proviso that advancements should be in satisfaction, unless the contrary is declared. The father by will, desiring the settlement may be punctually complied with, made a residuary disposition of real and personal estates among the younger children, directing that what they may have received in his life shall be brought into the account so as to make them all equal; construction upon the whole, that advancement in marriage or otherwise, though not the grammatical construction, is within the proviso; and, equality being the object, an arrangement was made upon that principle. One of the younger children having become the eldest, and therefore owner of the estate, between the death of the parents, after advances received in satisfaction of the portion in the former character, is to be considered a younger child in the account. Leake v. Leake, 10 Ves. 477.

6. A testator bequeathed 20,000*l.* to his son A. for life, with remainder, "in case F., the eldest son of A., shall be living," to F. for life, with remainder to his children, and in default of children to the other sons of A. successively, in strict settlement. He also bequeathed a share of the residue to A. for life, with remainder to "all the children of A., except F." F. died in the lifetime of A., unmarried when B. became the eldest son of A., and, entitled on A.'s death to a life interest in the legacy of 20,000*l.*—Held, that, notwithstanding B. having become the eldest son, he was entitled to a share in the residue, and that the representatives of F. were excluded. Wood v. Wood, 4 L. R., Eq., 48; 15 W. R. 389.

2. Where not taking the Estate.

7. By a settlement executed in 1800, on his first marriage, A. was seised of an estate for life in certain lands, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with power to charge the lands with 2,000*l.* for such purposes as he should think fit, and with 1,000*l.* for his children by any after-taken wife. He also became entitled, by subsequent rents, to two sums of 500*l.* and 1,000*l.* charged on the lands by the same deed. There was no issue of the first marriage By a settlement executed in 1809, on his second marriage, he charged the lands with 2,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* under the powers, and assigned that 2,000*l.*, and 500*l.* and 1,000*l.*, to trustees in trust, if there should be two or more younger children or daughters, to be divided amongst them after the death of their mother, as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment equally; and if there should be no issue of the marriage, or issue only one son, or there should be issue one or more daughter or daughters, or one or more younger children who should die before the time of payment of the portions, then, as to the 2,000*l.*, 1,000*l.*, and 500*l.*, in trust for A., his executors, etc. There was issue of the second marriage two sons and a daughter (B., C., and D.). The eldest son, B., joined A. in suffering a recovery of the estate, and, by a deed of 1834, it was conveyed, subject to a term, to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of B. for life, remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, remainder over. The trusts of the term were to raise, by sale or mortgage, 12,500*l.*; to be disposed of as A. and B., or the survivor, should appoint, which was raised. A. appointed 250*l.* of the sums of 500*l.*, 1,000*l.*, and 2,000*l.* to D., and the residue to C., and afterwards B., the eldest son, died without issue, whereupon C. became entitled, subject to the charge of 12,500*l.*, to a life-estate in part of the lands, the remainder having been sold for payment of incumbrances:—Held, that the appointment of the 500*l.*, 1,000*l.*, and 2,000*l.* did not become void by C. becoming an eldest son, entitled to the lands under the deed of 1834. Tennison v. Moore, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 121.

1. Construction of a clause of accrue "in case of any younger son becoming an eldest or only son." Peacocke v. Pares, 2 Keen 689; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch. 375; 1 Jur. 575.

An estate was limited to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail; and a term was created, for raising portions for younger children, to be interests vested in sons at twenty-one, but payable after the death of A.; and it was provided, that "in case any of the younger sons should become an eldest or only son," his portion should accrue to the other children. A. had two sons, B. and C., and one daughter; B. attained twenty-one, and suffered a recovery, whereby he destroyed C.'s estate in remainder. B. died in 1807, leaving C., an infant, to whom he devised the estate, for his life. A. died in 1833.—Held, that C. was not entitled to participate in the portion. Id.

2. Where estates were limited in a settlement for a term, to raise a certain sum for portions of all the children of the marriage (except an eldest or only son), to be vested and paid at such times as the husband should appoint, and, in default of his appointment, at twenty-one, but not to be paid until after his death, with a proviso, if any son should become an eldest or only son before the time appointed for payment of his portion, that then, and in default of any such appointment, his share should go to the others; the eldest son attained twenty-one, and afterwards, with the father, suffered a recovery, and re-settled the estates to the use of the father for life, remainder to the son in fee; the other children, a son and three daughters all attained twenty-one, and the eldest died intestate and without issue, and the father appointed the sum amongst the surviving son and three daughters, directing that the shares should vest on the execution of the deed, but not to be paid until after his death; and the second son also died before his father:—Held, that the share so appointed to him did not go over to the sisters. Spencer v. Spencer, 8 Sim. 87; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch. 310.

3. A second son, becoming the eldest son in the lifetime of his father, who was tenant for life, with remainder, subject to trusts for younger children's portions, in strict settlement, was prevented from taking an interest in the bulk of the estate by reason of a disentailing deed executed by his father and elder brother:—Held, that he was entitled to a share of the portions provided for younger children, notwithstanding a proviso for accrue, in the event of a younger son becoming an eldest son; the Court being of opinion, that, in being excluded by the disentailing deed, he was in effect excluded by the settlement, of which the disentailing deed was necessarily an incident, and the intention was clear to exclude none from the portions who were excluded by the settlement from taking the bulk of the estate. Macoubrey v. Jones, 2 Kay & J. 684.

The case of Peacocke v. Pares (2 Keen 689) observed upon. It is in conflict with Spencer v. Spencer (8 Sim. 87), and not to be followed as an authority. Id.

Where the bulk of an estate is limited in strict settlement, and by the same settlement portions are provided for younger children, no child taking the bulk of the estate by virtue of the limitations in strict settlement can take any benefit from the portions, whether the settlement does or does not contain an express provision to exclude him from a share in the portions. But where a younger child becomes the eldest without taking any part of the estate, whether or not he is entitled to share in the portions, is a question of intention. Id.

4. A., on his marriage, settled real estates on himself for life, then to parties for a term to raise portions for his younger children, and subject thereto to his first and other sons in tail. The portions were to vest in sons at twenty-one, but to be payable after the death of the husband and wife. G., the second son, attained twenty-one, after which W., the eldest son, having barred the entail, died without issue, and subsequently the portions became payable.—Held, that G., although the eldest at the period of distribution, was entitled to a share of portions for younger children. Adams v. Beck, 25 Beav. 648.

5. A younger child becoming the eldest son, but not living to enter into possession of the estates, remains a younger child for the purpose of receiving a portion. Sing v. Leslie, 4 N. B. 17; 10 Jur., N. S., 794; 32 L. J., Ch., 549; 11 L. T., N. S., 332; 2 Hem. & M. 68.

6. When, under a power in a marriage settlement, uses are revoked and new uses declared, whereby a younger child, who had since become an eldest son, takes through the mere bounty of the donor property which, but for such revocation, he would have taken as eldest son under the settlement, he does not thereby cease to be entitled to the portion of a younger child under the settlement. Wandesforde v. Carrick, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 486.

III. SHIFTING CLAUSES.

1. In construing a will, the words "younger son," used by the testator in a proviso for the shifting, in certain events, of an estate thereby devised, are to be taken in their plain and ordinary sense as meaning "younger in order of birth," unless it satisfactorily appears from other parts of the will that they were used by the testator in another sense. Wilbraham v. Scarisbrick, 1 H. L. Ca. 167.

2. A testator, after directing two estates, A. and B., to be settled upon his children in strict settlement, except that as to estate B. the first limitation was to his second son and his issue, T., the eldest (who was to take under the first limitation as to estate A.), being named last, directed that the settlement should provide that if W. and C. (naming the other children except T.), or any subsequently born sons or daughters, should become entitled to the A. estate, and any "younger son or daughter" of the testator or any issue of such younger son or daughter should be then living, the uses in the estate at B. to the child who, or whose issue, should so become entitled, should cease:—Held, that the words "younger son or daughter," in the shifting clauses, were to be construed distributively, viz., a son younger than a son, or a daughter younger than a daughter, and the estates to shift from sons to sons and from daughters to daughters, and not from sons to daughters according to seniority. Scarisbrick v. Eccleston, 5 Cl. & F. 399, reversing the judgment below.

3. E. devised his estates to R. the second, J. the third, and C. the fourth sons of his brother-in-law Sir T. S. (entirely passing over W., the eldest son), and to their sons successively in tail male. By a name and arms clause he directed that as any one became entitled under the will he should assume the name and arms of E. He then introduced a shifting clause, that in case R., or J., or C. "should become the eldest son" of Sir T. S., the E. estates should go over to the next in remainder under his will. The testator died in 1819. Sir T. S. survived the testator. W., the eldest son, succeeded his father in the S. baronetcy, and in the paternal estates; and disentailed and sold them. On his death without issue R. succeeded to the baronetcy. He had long before complied with the name and arms clause in the testator's will, and was in possession of the E. estates. R. died without male issue, and J., the third son, then claimed the E. estates:—Held, that he was entitled to them, for that under the true construction of the will he had not "become the eldest son" of Sir T. S., and the shifting clause had therefore not taken effect. Bathurst v. Errington, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 698; 46 L. J., Ch., 748; 25 W. R. 908; 37 L. T., N. S., 338. Affirming S. C. nom. Harvey-Bathurst v. Errington, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 261; 46 L. J., Ch., 162; 25 W. R. 482; 35 L. T., N. S., 709, which reversed 34 L. T., N. S., 639.

IV. OTHER CASES.

4. Younger son becoming an eldest, entitled to take eo nomine. Bridgewater v. Egerton, 2 Ves. 122.
VOL. VIII.

5. Construction of an obscure will; first, that the income only, not the capital, was disposed of; secondly, that the disposition was in favour of the younger children, excluding the eldest. Sansbury v. Read, 12 Ves. 75.

6. A. made a voluntary settlement of lands (subject to an annuity of 100% to his youngest son), in trust for his eldest son and his heirs, which settlement did not contain any power of revocation; the eldest son being dead, the father made another voluntary settlement of the same lands to the use of himself for life, remainder to his youngest son for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., remainder to first and other sons of youngest son in tail. The first deeds came into the hands of the eldest son's heir, and the other to the second son, who brought a bill to set aside the first. Both sons having been otherwise provided for, it was held, that though both deeds were voluntary, yet the consideration of being a younger child was not sufficient to set aside the first deed. Clavering v. Clavering, 7 Bro. P. C. 410.

III. Daughters.

7. The eldest daughter, where there is a son or where the estate by a settlement goes all to a remainderman, is a younger child in equity. Beale v. Beale, 1 P. W. 244.

8. A daughter, though eldest, held a younger child, to take a legacy by description. Pierson v. Garnett, 2 Bro. C. C. 38; Pre. Ch. 201. And see S. C. id. 226.

9. An elder daughter, where there is a son, is accounted a younger child in a court of equity. Heneage v. Hunloke, 2 Atk. 456.

Where, by articles before marriage, it was agreed, that principal sum should be paid to trustee for benefit of younger children, and that certain freehold houses should be conveyed, after previous particular estates, to the younger child or children, in tail general; and, by indenture of same date, the houses were settled, to uses of the articles: the husband and wife left a daughter, their eldest child, and a son:—Held, that the daughter was entitled to the principal sum, and the freehold houses; for an elder daughter, where there is a son, is accounted a younger child. In an ejectment the daughter could not have recovered; for, being the eldest, she would not, at law, be construed a younger child; but, in a court of equity, as the articles are executory, they must be carried into execution agreeably to the intention of the parties. Id.

10. A settlement was made on the marriage of I. S., of two shares in the New River water, to I. S. for life, to his wife for life, and after their decease one share was limited to such of the younger children as should not be heir-at-law, or for want of such issue to the sisters of I. S., and their children, as I. S. should appoint; but in the case of no issue of I. S., or if he should make no appointment, the same was limited to the sisters, and the children of one of the sisters, under whom plaintiffs claimed, in such manner as they were entitled to one whole share. If there had been only one child, it would have been excluded by the words, "other than such as shall be heir-at-law;" or if there had been several daughters, as they would have made but one united heir, they would have been excluded; or if both sons and daughters, and reduced to only one child, that child could not have taken. Townsend v. Ashe, 3 Atk. 336, 338.

1. Grandmother, under a power, creates by deed a term to commence after death for raising money for younger children, as their father should appoint; if no appointment, equally; if but one besides the eldest, then to that one; if none except the eldest, then to him; if no eldest son, then to her own executors. At the date of the deed there was one grandson, and one granddaughter. The father afterwards had another son, and died without appointment. The eldest son having died under age, held that the whole sum belonged to the daughter, and that the younger son, having thus become an eldest son, was excluded. Elder son, unprovided for, considered as a younger. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. 198.

2. Testatrix directed that her land at M. should, as the rents became due, be equally divided amongst the youngest of her son's children; the son left four daughters (one of whom was his eldest child) and a son:—Held, that the daughters, including the eldest, took an estate in fee in the land, it appearing, by the context of the will, to be the testatrix's intention to exclude an elder son only. Hall v. Luckup, 4 Sim. 5.

3. Under a gift of the residue, for such child of testator's daughter as should first attain the age of twenty-one years, for his or her absolute use and benefit, the eldest child, a daughter, was held to take, notwithstanding many passages of the will created a doubt as to that being the testator's intention, he having given that daughter a legacy, and, by a codicil, declared that the furniture in a certain house which he had given (subject to a previous life estate) to the eldest son, should, after the death of the tenant for life, be held upon and for the same trusts and purposes as he had declared concerning his residuary personal estate. Shipperdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 441; 6 Jur. 658.

4. Devise in default of issue male of A., to the first daughter living at the death of the testator who should attain twenty-five for life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail male; remainders over, subject to a trust for debts and accumulation of the surplus rents and profits, until a son or daughter should first come to the actual possession of the estates, or receipt of the rents after that period, such person to take the surplus rents; and the surplus of the accumulation, after payment of the debts, to be paid to such person or persons who by the limitation should first come to the actual possession of the estates or receipt of the rents and profits. A daughter living at the death of the testator, and having attained twenty-five, entitled to possession of the estate and to the accumulated fund. Barker v. Barker, 12 Ves. 409.

5. A testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees upon trust for her daughter for life, with remainder to the younger children" of her said daughter, the shares of sons to be paid at twenty-one, and those of daughters at twenty-one or marriage; with a direction to invest the shares of daughters, and pay them the income for their separate use from the time of marriage or upon their attaining twenty-one, so that the capital of each daughter's share should pass to the children of such daughters; with such trusts or remainders, in the event of there being no such issue, as the trustees should think proper:—Held, in the absence of evidence showing an intention on the part of the testatrix to place herself in loco parentis towards her grandchildren, that the eldest child, a daughter, was excluded, and a younger child, a son, who succeeded to the family estates, was entitled to a share. Lyddon v. Ellison, 18 Jur. 1066; 19 Beav. 565; 2 W. R. 690.

6. By marriage settlement, certain lands were conveyed to A. (the intended husband), his heirs and assigns; and in case A. should die, leaving one or more son or sons on the body of his intended wife to be begotten, the elder of such sons, and the heirs male of his body, being always preferred to take place before the younger, with full liberty for A. "to make such reasonable provision as he should think fit for such younger child or children;" and in case A. should die leaving no son, and that there should be one or more daughters, then to such daughter or daughters (if more than one) on their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years, their heirs and assigns, share and share alike. There was issue of the marriage eight children, four sons and four daughters; and A. by his last will and testament, in pursuance of the power contained in the marriage settlement, charged the lands with the sum of 1,500*l.*, to be divided amongst the younger children of the marriage in manner therein mentioned. The first taker having disputed the right to charge in favour of daughters, on a bill filed by one of the daughters to raise her portion of the 1,500*l.*:—Held, that the power was well exercised, and as the intention of the settlement was evidently to provide for all the children, as well daughters as sons, that the Court would effect that intention, and support the appointment, by transposing the clause creating the power, and that containing the limitation to the daughters in the event of there being no son, whereby the words "such younger children" would include both sons and daughters. Fenton v. Fenton, 1 Dr. & Wal. 66.

IV. Gifts to First, Second, or Other Sons.

7. Second born son may take under a limitation "to the first son," he being so at the time. Lomax v. Holmden, 1 Ves. 290.

8. A. devised the whole of his fortune equally to be divided between any second or younger sons of his brother S., and his sister T. The sister has one younger son, but the brother has none:—Held, that the youngest son of the sister was entitled to the whole. Wicker v. Mitford, 3 Bro. P. C. 442.

1. A. devises in trust for his daughter for life, remainder to the second son of her body in tail male, and so to every younger son, with remainders over. There were two sons, B. and C.; B. died, and, after his death, C. was born. C., though an only son, shall take, he being the second son in order of birth, and, as the will is voided, not to be excluded. Trafford v. Ashton, 2 Vern. 660

2. Upon a will devising lands in trust to be conveyed and settled to the use of L., the deviser's eldest son, for his life, remainder to his second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of the body of L., lawfully to be begotten, severally, successively, and in remainder, one after another, as they and every of them should be in seniority of age, and priority of birth, and the heirs male of their bodies respectively.—Held, upon the words and context of the will, making provisions inconsistent with the intention that a first son of L. should be excluded, that such first son took an estate in the lands in tail male. Langston v. Langston, 8 Bl. N. S. 167; 2 Cl. & F. 194. And see Grattan v. Langdale, 11 L. R., Ir., 473.

3. Bequest of the dividends of stock, in trust for the testator's nephew, son of his youngest brother B. for life; unless under will he should become entitled to the testator's real estate in America, devised to B. and his first and other sons in strict settlement, in remainder after similar estates to the testator's next brother A., and his issue male; and in that event, and so from time to time afterwards, or if any future possessor should bar the entail by recovery or other means, as to the capital for such person as shall be heir apparent, or expectant, next to the person then in possession, or if he should have joined in barring the entail, for the persons next in succession to him. After the death of A. the title of his eldest son to the estate being, in consequence of the American Revolution, confiscated in 1779, upon the death of the son of B., the second son of A., his eldest son having no issue, was held entitled to the dividends of the stock, while his elder brother should have no issue male. Penn v. Barclay, 14 Ves. 122.

4. Testator by his will directed that the fourth part of the net annual income of his property, which was personal, should be paid in quarterly payments to the eldest son of E.; and that on his decease the quarterly payment of his annuity should be continued to his heir-at-law; and failing the latter by death, so on in like manner as long as there should be an heir.—Held, that this was an absolute gift of one-fourth of the property to the eldest son of E. Testator by his will directed the income of one-half of his personal estate to be paid in equal shares to the eldest sons of his sisters E. and M. At the date of the will, an eldest born son of M. was living, but he afterwards died in testator's lifetime, leaving a second born son of M. surviving him. After his death, and with knowledge of it, the testator, by a codicil, directed the trustees of his will to divide a certain sum among all the children then living of his sisters E. and M., with the exception of the two provided for in his will.—Held, that the second-born son of

M. took the share given by the will to her eldest son. Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Colly. 388; 8 Jur. 889.

5. A father, after bequeathing his personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and after devising a freehold estate to his eldest son G., and providing for his maintenance during minority out of the rents and profits, directed his trustees to invest the proceeds of the sale of his personal estate, and to apply the income arising therefrom, and the rents and profits of his residuary real estate, towards the maintenance and education of "all his children living at his death or born in due time afterwards;" and directed that when his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one his trustees should "sell all his real estate, except the estate devised to his son G. . . . and divide the proceeds equally between his daughters E., M., F., S., and A., and his sons F. and W., and such other child or children as might be living at his decease, or born in due time afterwards".—Held, that the eldest son G. was entitled to share in the proceeds of sale of the real estate. Tavernor v. Grindley, 32 L. T., N. S., 424.

6. Legacy to the seventh or youngest child of A. A. had six children at the testator's death, and had another, who died at the age of two months; afterwards the plaintiff was born, and was the seventh child living, but the eighth in order of birth; other children were born afterwards. Under these circumstances the youngest child is entitled to the legacy, and not the plaintiff. West v. Lord Primate of Ireland, 2 Cox 258; 3 Bro. C. C. 148.

7. A testator, by codicil, after appointing two persons trustees, as also their heirs and assigns, to his will and codicil, desired that his sister A. should do what she pleased with his remaining property after payment of certain legacies, excepting a tenement at W. and stock, of which she should only receive the interest and rent during her life, and afterwards to his sister's eldest son, on his taking the name of M.; but should he refuse to take the name of M., or his sister depart this life without a son, then the tenement at W. and the stock should go to P. on his taking the name of M., and so on to his heirs, each taking the name of M., none of them being allowed to touch the principal; and no one should after his sister A. inherit the said property or enjoy the interest who did not take or possess the name of M.—Held, that the trustees took an estate in fee by virtue of their appointment, and that A. was entitled to an estate for life in the tenement and stock, with a remainder in fee in the tenement, and an absolute interest in the stock, to the first born of A. vested, in his birth and baptism, by the name of M. Bennett v. Bennett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 266; 10 Jur., N. S., 1170; 33 L. J., Ch., 34; 13 W. R. 66; 11 L. T., N. S., 362.

8. By a marriage settlement lands were limited to the use of the first son of the body of B. on the body of P. (his future wife) lawfully to be begotten, and the heirs male of the body of such son, with remainder to the use of the second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of the body of B. to be begotten severally and successively.

one after another, as they and every of them should be in seniority of age and priority of birth, in tail male:—Held, that the eldest son of B. by his second marriage (there being no issue of his marriage with P.) was entitled to the lands as a tenant in tail in preference to the second son of such marriage. Re Blake, 19 W. R. 765.

1. The only son of a marriage cannot succeed to an estate which had been limited to A. and his heirs in tail male, except an eldest son, and does not come in under a proviso giving an estate to A., and "all and every other the son of the body of A., save and except an eldest son." Tuite v. Bermingham, 7 L. R., H. L., 634.

2. The limitation in remainder in a settlement was to the second son of a person who was living at the date of the settlement.—Held, that the second son living at that date was entitled. Saunders v. Richardson, 18 Jur. 714.

V. Gift to Next Surviving Son.

3. A testator directed his trustees to receive the rents of all his real estate for maintenance of all his children during the minority of H., his youngest child, and on her attaining twenty-one, he gave to five of his sons, whom he named in descending order of birth, estates tail in five several portions of his real estate respectively. And he provided that in case any of these five sons died "during the minority of H. as aforesaid, or in the event of any of them dying without having such lawful issue as aforesaid, and either before or after their or his share should be divisible," then the share of the deceased sharer should accrue to his "next surviving son according to seniority of age and priority of birth:—Held, first, that on the death of one of the five sons during the minority of H., though leaving issue inheritable, the gift over took effect. Eastwood v. Lockwood, 36 L. J., Ch., 573; 3 L. R., Eq., 487; 15 W. R. 611.

Held, secondly, that having regard to the order in which the sons were named, next surviving son meant next in order according to the testator's arrangement. Id.

VI. Youngest construed as Only.

4. Bequest to the youngest child of A., if she should have any child or children within a certain period; if no child or children within that period, over: her eldest child, being the only one within that period, is entitled. Emery v. England, 3 Ves. 232.

VII. Class when Ascertained and Period of Vesting. •

See also preceding Subdivisions.

5. Bequest of 3,000l. to Jane, the wife of C., for the use of her younger children, to be distributed as she should appoint, in default equally to all Jane's children by C., being born at the time of the will and death of the testator. It was held, vested as a present legacy to them, subject to variation as between them, but not to extend to her children by a future marriage. The period of vesting being as above, one who was a younger child at the testator's death, and became an elder afterwards, was held entitled. Coleman v. Seymour, 1 Ves 209.

6. Under a trust for A. for life, "and after her death, to be divided equally between her younger children"—Held, first, that the children took vested interests at their births, and secondly, that the character of youngest child was to be determined at the period of vesting, and not that of distribution. Adams v. Roberts, 25 Beav. 638.

7 Under a will directing the transfer of stock among all the children of the testatrix's daughter, except an eldest son, younger son, having become the eldest living by the death of his elder brother, who survived the testatrix, is not entitled to a share, although an estate limited to his elder brother did not descend to him. Matthews v. Paul, 3 Swan. 328; 2 Wils. 64.

8. Held, that under a bequest to the younger children of A., an only surviving younger child was upon the whole will entitled; and the second having become the eldest was excluded. Lincoln (Lady) v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 166.

9. Legacy of 300l. to E., to be paid at twenty-one or marriage; but if she died before, then to the younger children of F. • E having died unmarried, under twenty-one:—Held, to vest in such of the younger children as were living at that time. Ellison v. Airey, 1 Ves. 111.

10. Devise and bequest to A., and after her decease, leaving any child or children her surviving, who should attain twenty-one, to pay her share "to her eldest child, his executors, administrators, and assigns," with a gift over in default of such child:—Held, that A.'s eldest child, who died in A.'s life, did not take, but that the second child, who survived her mother, was entitled. Stevens v. Pyle, 30 Beav. 284.

11. A testatrix, who died in 1819, bequeathed a legacy to accumulate in trust for the eldest daughter of A. B., to be paid at twenty-one, and if none, to the eldest daughter of C. D., payable in like manner. A. B. never had a daughter, and died in 1851. C. D. had a daughter G., born in 1821, and who died in 1827, and other daughters:—Held, that the representative of G. was entitled to the legacy, and to the accumulations accrued down to 1827, together with simple interest thereon from that time to the day of payment in 1852. Bryan v. Collins, 16 Beav. 14.

12. Where there is a devise of real estate to A. for life, with remainder to his eldest son, and A. has B., his eldest son, at the time of the date of the will, who afterwards dies, and A. leaves another child, C., his eldest son. Quere, as to the construction of such a devise; but semble, that C. would take. Spurrell v. Spurrell, 17 Jur. 755; 22 L. J., Ch., 1076.

1. A limitation by settlement of a fund vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the income to M. for life, and after her death, "to pay or transfer the capital to all her children, (except her eldest or only son), in equal shares, at their respective ages of twenty-one years," confers a vested interest on all the children of M. who attain twenty-one, although they may die before the period of division. Re Theed, 3 Kay & J. 375; 26 L. J., Ch., 514.

A younger son attained twenty-one, and then became the eldest by the death of his elder brother before the period of division:—Held, that as there was no reason shown by the settlement for excluding the eldest son, such as his accession to another estate, the share that was vested in the younger son was not divested by his becoming the eldest. Id.

2. In cases of provisions made by strangers, the time for ascertaining the class of younger children is in general the period of vesting, not the period of distribution, as in settlements by parents. Sandeman v. Mackenzie, 1 John. & H. 613; 7 Jur., N. S., 1231; 30 L. J., Ch., 838; 5 L. T., N. S., 175.

3. The character of eldest son is, in ordinary cases, to be ascertained at the period of vesting, and not of payment. Adams v. Adams, 25 Beav. 652.

Bequests to A. for life, and afterwards in trust for her children who, not being an eldest or only son, should attain twenty-one. In 1854, after G., the second son, had attained twenty-one, the eldest son died, and the second son thereupon became eldest. The tenant for life died in 1857:—Held, that G., though an eldest son at the time the fund became payable to the children, took a share. Id.

4. Construction of will, that under bequest to the children of A., a second son of three at the death of testator, and the tenant for life, who became the eldest before the age of twenty-one, till which it was subject to survivorship, was, upon the whole will, not entitled. Bowles v. Bowles, 10 Ves. 177.

5. A testatrix gave to the eldest son of her daughter Eliza, and of her husband, E. L., who should be living at the time of her own decease, ten guineas, adding, that she left him no larger sum, because he would have a handsome provision from the estates of her late husband and of his own father (who was still alive); and she gave the residue of her property to her executors, upon trust, as to one moiety thereof, to pay and divide the same unto and amongst all the children of her daughter Eliza, who were then in being or should be thereafter born, except her eldest son, or such of her sons as should, by the death of an elder brother, become an eldest son, equally to be divided amongst them, and the survivors or survivor, when the youngest should arrive at the age of twenty-one years. At the death of the testatrix, her daughter Eliza had five children, and the eldest son was provided for from the estates in the will mentioned, and he received the ten guineas, but died without issue before the youngest child attained twenty-one. The second, who then became an eldest son, did not succeed to the provision which had been made for the eldest son:—Held, notwithstanding, that he, being the eldest son at the time the youngest of the children attained twenty-one, was excluded from any share in the moiety of the residue. Livesey v. Livesey, 2 H. L. Ca. 419; 13 Jur. 371. Affirming 13 Sim. 33; 6 Jur. 752; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 357.

6. A testator gave personal property, upon the death of the survivor of several tenants for life, "to be divided equally between the two eldest children born in wedlock of each of his sons and daughters; but if there should be only "one child living" to any of his married sons or daughters, that child to receive only the proportion divided equally according to the number there may be:—Held, that "the two eldest born" meant the two actual eldest living at the date of distribution, and the representatives of a deceased eldest, and a deceased second eldest, were excluded. Madden v. Ihin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 207; 8 Jur., N. S., 1168; 32 L. J., Ch., 3; 11 W. R. 2; 7 L. T., N. S., 264; 1 N. B. 11.

7. Legacy to the "eldest child of A.," who was alive at the date of the will, but died before the testator:—Held, to mean the eldest child living at the testator's decease. Re Harris' Trusts, 2 Eq. Rep. 1110; 2 W. R. 689.

8. A son who, when he attained twenty-one, was a younger child, but by the subsequent death of his elder brother, in the lifetime of his parents, becomes an eldest son before the time fixed for the payment of the younger children's portions, is entitled to his share of portions which are directed to vest in the younger sons at twenty-one, though not payable till after the death of the parents, there being enough, in the settlements by which the portions were provided, to show that the character of younger child was to be ascertained by reference to the time when the portions vested, and not to the time when they became payable. Windham v. Graham, 1 Russ. 331. And see Exp. Smyth, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 487.

9. By a marriage settlement, real estate of the husband's father was limited (subject to life estates to the father and to the husband, and to a jointure to the wife) to the first and other sons of the marriage successively, in tail male. By another deed, in which the settlement was recited, real estate of wife was limited, subject to her life estate, to the use of all and every the son and sons, other than an eldest or only son, and daughter and daughters of the marriage, equally, as tenants in common in tail, and if any such younger son or daughter should die, and there should be failure of issue of his or her body, or in case any such younger son or sons should become an eldest or only son before attaining twenty-one, then the share of such son or daughter, as well original as accruing, should go over to the survivors or survivor or others or other of the younger sons or daughters, to be divided between them (if more than one) equally, as tenants in common in tail, and, if but one such son or daughter, the whole was to go to him or her in tail:—Held, that the period of distribution of the wife's estate was the time at which the class to participate in it was to be ascertained, and that, consequently, a younger son of the marriage, who succeeded to the paternal settled estates after he attained twenty-one, but who died in his mother's lifetime, was not entitled to any share in his mother's settled estate. Re Bayley, 19 W. R. 789; 25 L. T., N. S., 219; 6 L. R., Ch., 590; 9 L. R., Eq., 491; 18 W. R. 481; 21 L. T., N. S., 195; 39 L. J., Ch., 388.

1. A second born son, who attained twenty-one, and on his father's death succeeded to his title, but died before the period of distribution, was held to be excluded as an "eldest son" from sharing in certain unappointed trust funds. His younger brother, who succeeded him to the title, and was living at the period of the distribution of the funds, was held entitled to share in them. Re Rivers, 40 L. J., Ch., 87; 24 L. T., N. S., 253; 19 W. R. 318.

2. Under a marriage settlement, trust funds, in default of appointment, were to go, upon the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, for the children of the marriage, "except an eldest, second, or only son for the time being entitled in tail male in possession or remainder, expectant on the death" of the husband, under a will, to certain estates at D: the shares to be vested in sons at twenty-one. E., the eldest son of the marriage, attained twenty-one, and became entitled to the estates at D. for an estate in tail male in remainder expectant on his father's decease. With the concurrence of his father, he barred the entail and re-settled the estates, giving to his father and himself estates for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail general, and letting in a rent-charge in his own favour. His father survived his mother, and died in E.'s lifetime:—Held, that the period of the distribution of the trust funds, and not the period of vesting, was the time for ascertaining who was to be excluded, and therefore E. was entitled to participate in the unappointed part of the trust funds. Stanhope v. Collingwood, 36 L. J., Ch., 894; 4 L. R., Eq., 256. Affirmed sub nom. Collingwood v. Stanhope, 4 L. R., H. L., 43; 38 L. J., Ch., 421; 17 W. R. 337.

Gifts to a Class when Youngest attains Twenty-one. See WILL, XXXII. II. 5 (c).

VIII. Clauses excluding Child "Entitled," or Eldest Son from a Class of Children.

3. A testator bequeathed a legacy of 2,000*l.* upon trust for a married daughter, F., for life, then for her husband for life, and after the death of the survivor for such persons related by blood to F. as she should appoint; and in default of appointment to transfer the same to such persons as would be the personal representatives of F. in case she had died sole and unmarried. By a codicil, the testator, in reciting the bequest, referred to these trusts as being trusts for the benefit of his daughter's relations and next of kin. F. died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that by the personal representatives of F. were meant the persons who were her statutory next of kin at the testator's death. Re Grylls, 6 L. R., Eq., 589. By the codicil the testator declared that 1,000*l.* part of the 2,000*l.* should be held for the absolute use and benefit of his son H., but if he should be dead when the 1,000*l.* should "descend and come" to him under the trusts therein contained, then that the same should be paid to all the children of H. "except the one entitled to any real property upon his father's decease," share and share alike. Upon the death of H., in 1862, after the testator's death, his eldest son became next tenant for life in remainder of the settled estates, expectant on the death without issue of the then tenant for life in possession, which happened in 1863. The surviving tenant for life of the legacy died in 1867:—Held, that the eldest son of H. was excluded from participation in the 1,000*l.* Id.

4. A testator devised his real estate in trust for his nephew A. for life, with remainder to A.'s first and other sons successively in tail male; and failing such issue in trust for the testator's brothers B. and C. successively for their lives, and their sons successively in tail male; and failing such issue (in the events which happened) in trust for the testator's nephew D. in tail male. The testator bequeathed his residuary personalty equally among his nephews and nieces, except A. or other the person or persons entitled to the testator's real estates by virtue of the limitations thereinbefore contained. A. died unmarried in the testator's lifetime; C. survived the testator, but died unmarried; B. was sixty-eight years old at the time of the proceedings being taken, and had never been married:—Held, that D.'s expectation of a succession to the testator's real estate being contingent only, was not sufficient under the provisions of the will to disentitle D. to a share in the residuary personalty. Umbers v. Jaggard, 18 W. R. 283; 9 L. R., Eq., 200.

5. A testator gave Blackacre to his son F. for life, remainder to his eldest grandson, R., for life, remainder to his (R.'s) first and other sons in tail, and in default of such issue to his second grandson, W., for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and in default of such issue to his third grandson, F., for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainders over. The testator charged Blackacre with legacies of unequal amounts, in favour of his grandsons, W. and F., to be paid as and when they attained twenty-one, with power to the trustees to advance the whole or part of the legacies for their benefit. The will contained a proviso that if either W. or F. should become entitled to an estate for life in Blackacre, then the legacies should not be paid, but should sink into Blackacre. R. died a bachelor, in the lifetime of F., the father, whereupon W. became tenant for life in remainder of Blackacre. He attained twenty-one:—Held, that the words in the proviso, "become entitled," meant "become entitled in possession," and that as at the time when he attained twenty-one his father was living, W. was entitled to have his legacy raised and paid. Chorley v. Loveland, 12 W. R. 187; 33 Beav. 189; 9 L. T., N. S., 596.

6. F. devised real estate in strict settlement, with a proviso that if any person entitled in possession for an estate for life or in tail to the hereditaments so devised should fail to reside for six successive calendar months in every year in the mansion house on the estate, the estate of him and his issue should cease, and the hereditaments immediately thereupon go over to the person next entitled in remainder as if the person so failing to reside were then dead without leaving any issue inheritable under such entail. She bequeathed the residue of her personal estate in trust, in case the tenants for life should be or become at her death beneficially entitled in possession to the hereditaments so devised, other than an eldest son or a daughter beneficially entitled under the limitations aforesaid for an estate tail in remainder immediately expectant on the decease of his or her parent, for such children as the tenant for life should appoint; and in default of such appointment, for "all and every the children or child of such tenant for life, other than and beside an eldest or only son or an eldest daughter entitled as aforesaid." The first tenant for life, under the limitations of the will, incurred the forfeiture consequent on failure to reside for the term prescribed by the will. After the forfeiture he married and left one child:—Held, that this child was entitled to the residuary personal estate, as he was not "an eldest child entitled as aforesaid," his remainder having been destroyed by the forfeiture incurred by his father prior to his birth. Johnson v. Foulds, 37 L. J., Ch., 260; 5 L. R., Eq., 268.

1. By a will made in 1802, a testator gave his residuary personal estate to A., B., and C., successively for life, and after the death of the survivor in trust for all the children of B. who should live to attain twenty-one (other than and except the eldest and second sons if any, and any other child who should by virtue of the limitations thereafter contained, be entitled in possession to his, the said testator's manors, etc., thereafter mentioned, or the rents and profits thereof); and by his will the testator appointed the said manors, etc., in case D. should die without issue, to B. and C. successively for life, with remainder to first and other sons (except an eldest son) of B. successively in tail male, with remainder to the first and other daughters of B. successively, in tail male. In the events which happened, E., a daughter of B., became entitled to the manors, etc., as tenant in tail in remainder expectant on the death of D. and C., and joined them in suffering a recovery in 1823, and in making a re-settlement of the estate, reserving the life interests to D. and C., with remainder to trustees, for the benefit of B. for life, with remainder to her intended husband, with remainders over for the benefit of the issue of the marriage. E. died in the lifetime of C.:—Held, that E.'s personal representative was entitled to a share of the residuary personal estate of the testator.

Wyndham v. Fane, 1 W. R. 467; 11 Hare 287.

2. G. directed that of the rest of his personal property his wife should have the use and interest until their child or children came of age, and then, over and above what was settled upon her, one-third to be hers for life, with reversion, after her decease, to their children; and the other two-thirds to belong to and to be given up to such child or children on their coming to the age of twenty-five years, in certain proportions; provided, that if the eldest son (A.) should thereafter come to the inheritance of his grandfather's or his (G.'s) eldest brother's landed property, in such case his share of the two-thirds to be made over to his brothers and sisters equally. G. subsequently purchased a freehold house, which by a codicil he directed should be vested in his wife for life, and after her death devolve to all his children equally; with the proviso, that in the event of his eldest son A. succeeding to the entailed property in Dorsetshire, his share to devolve to his brothers and sisters. G. and his wife were dead. A. attained twenty-five in 1866, and subsequently presented a petition, praying that he might be declared entitled to have his share of all the trust funds transferred to him absolutely. The petition stated that G.'s eldest brother was in possession of the landed property referred to in the will, partly as tenant for life, partly as tenant in tail, and partly as tenant in fee-simple:—Held, that A. having attained twenty-five, was entitled to the fund, and that the words of the proviso applied only to the event of his succeeding to the property before the time when the fund actually got into his hands. Glyn v. Glyn, 3 Jur., N. S., 179; 26 L. J., Ch., 409; 5 W. R. 241.

3. A settlement was made on the marriage of S., of two shares in the New River water, to S. for life, to his wife for life, and after their decease one share was limited to such of the younger children as should not be heir at law, or for want of such issue to the sisters of S., and their children, as S. should appoint; but in case of no issue of S., or if he should make no appointment, the same was limited to the sisters, and the children of one of the sisters, under whom plaintiffs claimed, in such manner as they were entitled to one whole share. If there had been only one child, it would have been excluded by the words, "other than such as shall be heir at law;" or if there had been several daughters, as they would have made but one united heir, they would have been excluded; or if both sons and daughters, and reduced to only one child, that child could not have taken. Townsend v. Ashe, 3 Atk. 336, 338.

They do not appear in the Reports contemporaneous with the above, or in the annual digests, or in the last edition, or if they do it is on some other point than that which is here digested. The present editor did not discover the omission of these cases until the work was too far advanced to admit of their insertion in the text of the earlier volumes; but in the fifth and succeeding volumes they have been digested with the other matter in their proper places in the body of the work. The Addenda also contains the cases which bring the first volume down to the end of the year 1883, thus completing the scheme of this edition as settled in the advertisement to Volume III.

1. Tenant for life of bank stock held entitled to a dividend of 5 per cent. interest and profits for the half-year. Barclay v. Wainwright, 13 Ves. 66. [28 (10).]

2. In 1832 a testator bequeathed ten Carron shares to his widow for life, with remainder over. She died in 1847, and in 1854 the executor sold the shares for 10,000*l.* to the manager. After this large sum was recovered from the estate of a former manager, and thereout, in 1858, a bonus of 470*l.* per share was declared, whereupon the executor insisted on setting aside the sale, and obtained an additional 8,000*l.* by way of compromise. A bill by the executor of the widow, claiming to be entitled to participate in the 8,000*l.*, was dismissed with costs, the Court holding, first, that the widow's interests (if any) were not comprised in the compromise, and secondly, that the whole bonus belonged to the persons entitled to the shares at the time it was declared. Edmondson v. Crosthwaite, 34 Beav. 30. [28 (10).]

3. A testator bequeathed East and West India Dock stock to life tenants and others in succession. Some time after his death bonuses were declared upon the stock. On the 8th February 1865, by an order made in a suit for the administration of the estate, the bonuses were invested in 3*l.* per cent. annuities, and the dividends directed to be paid to the tenants for life. On the 12th January 1871 that investment order was discharged:—Held, that the bonuses were income, and not capital of the estate, and belonged to the life tenants. Dale v. Hayes, 40 L. J., Ch., 244; 24 L. T., N. S., 12; 19 W. R. 299. [28 (10).]

4. An insurance company, by a deed of settlement, was directed to create a reserve fund, and pay no dividend till a specified amount was realised. This provision was departed from by the consent of a majority of the shareholders, and a bonus was distributed every three years. The company afterwards amalgamated with another company, and it was agreed that 50*l.* per share should be paid upon all shares, and also a proportionate part of the surplus assets. A tenant for life of ten shares in the company, claimed the share of the surplus assets which had been paid over to her trustee as part of her annual income:—Held, that these surplus assets, which must be considered as the reserve fund, were capital, and not income. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 30 L. J., Ch., 617; 9 W. R. 676. [28 (10).]

5. Three bonuses upon certain bank shares having been paid as part of the dividend:—Held, that having been made by way of annual payment, they were interest and not capital. Semble, a bonus is impressed with that character which the mode of payment imparts to it. Hebert v. Bateman, 1 W. R. 191. [28 (10).]

6. By the terms of the deed of settlement in the company, their net profits were to be divided ratably to such an amount as should be declared at their half-yearly meeting, and were to be paid within twenty-one days afterwards; and it was provided, that the shareholder was not to receive any dividend after the period at which he ceased to be a proprietor of shares; but the dividends on such shares were to continue in suspense until some other person should have become proprietor of them. A shareholder died sixty-nine days after the half-yearly meeting, at which a dividend was payable, having, by his will, bequeathed the interest and annual income arising from all his shares to one for life, and then to others:—Held, that the dividend belonged to the legatee for life, and not to the general personal estate of the testator. Clive v. Clive, 1 Kay 600; 23 L. J., Ch., 981; 2 Eq. Rep. 913. [28 (10).]

7. A testator gave all his estates and effects to trustees upon trust, after paying debts and legacies, to employ the residue for the use and behoof of his grandson G. C. and the heirs of the body of G. C., till he or they arrived at majority, when the trustees were to denucle thereof in his or their favours; and failing G. C. or his lawful issue, before either of their attaining to majority, then such residue was to pertain to any posthumous heir male of testator's son T. C. (the father of G. C.), who had just died, at his or the heirs of his body attaining to majority; and failing of him without lawful issue, then to the daughters of T. C. equally. By a codicil he declared that, failing heirs of T. C.'s body, then in place of the residue pertaining to the daughters of T. C. equally it should solely pertain to the eldest heirs female of T. C. and their issue, the eldest heir female through the whole course of succession succeeding always without division, and including heirs-portioners. By another codicil, failing G. C. and the heirs of his body, he gave 4,000*l.* to each of his granddaughters (except the eldest at the time) who should survive him, and the heirs of their bodies. G. C. came of age in 1799, and died unmarried in 1811; and there was no posthumous child of T. C.:—Held, that the accumulations of interest and profits from the death of the testator until G. C. attained majority belonged to G. C.; as did also some bonuses on bank stock, part of the testator's property, which had been declared a few weeks before G. C. attained majority, but were payable at a day subsequent to that date. Cuming v. Boswell, 4 W. R. 752; 2 Jur., N. S., 1005. [28 (10).]

8. A holder of shares in both departments of the Sun Fire and Life Office bequeathed his personal estate to trustees to permit his wife to receive the dividends, interest, and income for her life, remainder over. He died in December 1870. In January 1873 an extraordinary dividend was declared on the life shares for five years previously; and in July 1873 a "special dividend was declared on the fire shares for the half-year previously":—Held, that these dividends were income, and belonged to the tenant for life. Re Hopkins, 18 L. R., Eq., 696; 30 L. T. N. S., 627; 22 W. R. 687; 43 L. J., Ch., 722. [29 (10).]

9. Money lodged in court by plaintiff, afterwards, on the application of the defendant, invested in debentures, defendant entitled to the benefit of a rise on the price, though it exceed the amount of his claim against the plaintiff, the application by defendant amounting to an undertaking to abide the result of a rise or fall of the debentures. Garnett v. Nugent, 2 Ball & B. 434. [30 (4).]

ACCUMULATION.

1. A testator bequeathed his real and personal property to a trustee, in trust, to sell, and after payment of his debts, to invest the produce in bank shares, and to pay certain annuities; and he bequeathed the residue of his property upon trust to pay the interest to A. for life. A decree in a suit to administer the assets directed that the trustee should hold the bank shares (subject to the payment of the annuities), upon trust, from time to time to invest the dividends in the purchase of other bank shares or of government stock, and accumulate the same from time to time in the nature of compound interest, until a fund was created which (with other property specified) would be sufficient for payment of the outstanding liabilities and debts of the testator, and should yield an annual sum sufficient to pay a contingent liability which the assets might be subject to, by reason of a breach of trust committed by the testator; and that the trustee should be possessed of the residue, and such accumulation, upon trust, to pay the annuities, etc., and subject thereto to pay the dividends to A.:—Held, that the decree was erroneous in directing the accumulation of the dividends of the residue. Abraham v. Hamilton, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 51.

[40 (1).]

2. A settlor assigned mortgages and "all interest thereon due and payable, and thereafter to accrue and become due and payable," unto trustees for the equal benefit of his two infant granddaughters. The trusts, as to one moiety, were, that when one of the granddaughters attained twenty-one, the trustees were to pay the rents, interest, and annual produce of such moiety of the principal moneys, interest, and securities to her for life; the moiety after her death to be in trust for her children, if any. There was no express provision for either accumulation or maintenance during the granddaughter's minority; but there was a power of maintenance during the minority of her possible children. In default of children, after her decease the moiety of "the principal sums, securities, and premises" was to go over to M. The trustees accumulated and invested the produce of her moiety during her minority; and after she had attained her majority, they paid her the interest of the invested accumulations, together with that of her moiety of the principal sums until her death. She died without having been married:—Held, that the accumulated sum formed part of the principal of her moiety, and went over to her under the trust in his favour declared in the settlement. Re Manifold, 14 W. R. 729.

[40 (1).]

3. A testatrix, by her will, directed her executors to pay to F. S. G. and G. A. G., both then unmarried women, 5,000*l.* each upon their marriage, with all the accumulations of interest thereon from the time of testatrix's death. The executors set apart sums for the above legacies and accumulated the dividends. F. S. G. remained unmarried for more than twenty-one years after the death of the testatrix:—Held, that the accumulation of interest beyond the twenty-one years, was within the prohibition of the Thellusson Act, and did not come within the exception contained in the 2nd section. Morgan v. Morgan, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 109; 15 Jur. 319.

4. A testator directed the rents of his freehold estates, and the income of his residuary real personal estate, to be accumulated, in order to provide for the younger children of his niece and of E. S., each of whom took an interest under his will; and, in the clauses for the maintenance and advancement of the children, he termed the provision which he had so made for them sometimes "their portions," and sometimes their "portions or shares":—Held, that the provision was not a provision for raising portions within the meaning of the proviso in the 2nd section of the Thellusson Act, and, therefore, was not exempted from the operation of the 1st section. Halford v. Stains, 16 Sim. 488; 13 Jur. 73; 1 H. & Tw. 250.

ADVANCEMENT.

5. Parol evidence is admissible on the part of an advanced son, or his heir, to rebut a claim of trust, though improper against the legal operation of a deed. Redington v. Redington, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 182. S. P. Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 387; Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. W. 111.

[56 (4).]

6. Evidence of declarations, coupled with acts, admitted in a question whether a purchase by a father in his son's name was intended to be advancement or not. Scanlon v. Scanlon, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 65.

[56 (4).]

Parol evidence as to the intentions of a testator by the attorney who made the will also admitted on the same question. Id.

7. In a question of a father's intention in purchasing in the name of a child, his will is not evidence. Sheats v. Sheats, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 9; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 22; 6 Jur. 942.

AGE.

8. Evidence which is sufficient to enable a master to report as to an allowance of a suitable maintenance to an infant out of a contingent legacy may not be sufficient to establish the time of the infant's birth so clearly as to sustain an application for the payment of the legacy. Anon., 1 L. J., Ch., 77.

ANNUITY.

2. Where A. and his sons carried on business as proctors, but A. had never been enrolled as a proctor, and afterwards a deed was executed whereby the sons granted to A. an annuity of 1,000*l.* in consideration of his retiring from the business:—Held, that the annuity was granted, not for an illegal consideration, but for no consideration. Edison
v. Rothery, 4 N. R. 538. [64 (2).

3. Devise of an annuity of 50*l.* to be purchased by executor, who, till the purchase, was to pay annuitant 40*l.* a year; executor, instead of purchasing, paid 50*l.* a year from testator's rents: annuitant held entitled to 40*l.* the first year, and 50*l.* a year afterwards.
Brown v. Spooner, 1 Ves. J. 291. [81 (8).

4. A testator gave to each of his five daughters 400*l.* per annum, for their lives; and after their respective deceases, he gave the same to their children respectively; and in case any of the daughters died without issue, the annuity to cease:—Held, that the children of the daughters took for life only a proportion of the annuity. Hedges v. Harpur, 9 Beav. 479; 10 Jur. 578. [81 (8).

5. Two annuities of equal amount in the same will to the same person, held not accumulative. Holford v. Wood, 4 Ves. 76.
[84 (11).

6. Testator, after devising his real estate to his natural son, T. A., bequeathed as follows: "I give and bequeath to my sister
E., to be paid out of the rents and profits of the aforesaid lands, the sum of 250*l.* per annum, and to live free from rent in the house
I now occupy in H., with the land and buildings I now occupy, containing about nine Lancashire acres, with the use of my household furniture, plate, linen, books, wines, spirits, carriages and horses, cows, hay and farming utensils and stock, for her sole use during her natural life, or so long as she shall remain unmarried; in either event, then to go to T. A.; but should she marry, then my mind and will is, that my executors shall pay her 100*l.* per annum for her own use during her natural life, out of the rents and profits of my said estate." The sister married in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the annuities of 250*l.* per annum and 100*l.* per annum were not cumulative. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Colly.

690. [84 (11).

7. A marriage settlement recited an agreement by the father of the intended wife to grant to the husband, as a marriage portion, certain annuities to be issuing out of distinct lands held upon terminable leases; and witnessed that, in consideration of the marriage, and to grant a marriage portion to the husband, and in order to secure a jointure for the wife in case she should survive, the settlor conveyed the lands to trustees upon trust to permit and suffer the husband, during the life of himself and his wife, to take and receive to his use out of the lands, nominatim, the several annuities mentioned in the recital and after the decease of the husband, to permit and suffer the children of the marriage to take and receive the said several annuities, in such shares as the husband or wife should appoint; and, in default of appointment, equally; and in case the wife should survive the husband, and there should not be any issue of the marriage then living, to permit her, during her life, to receive the said annuities, with power to distrain for same:
provided, that if the wife should survive the husband, and there should be children of the marriage living at his death, then that the trustees should pay her during her life, out of all the lands, or suffer her to receive out of the rents of said several lands, an annuity of 150*l.* in bar of dower; with power to distrain for same:—Held, upon the construction of the whole instrument, that the annuity of 150*l.* was in addition to the annuities granted to the trustees, and mentioned in the recital, and was not payable out of those annuities. Blair
v. Nugent, 3 J. & L. 668. [84 (11).

8. An annuity was given to A. by will; a codicil to the will gave an annuity of the same amount to A., with variation only as to the company from which it was to be purchased:
—Held, that these gifts were not cumulative,
but substitutional. Bourne v. Hartley, 2
W. R. 452; 18 Jur. 532. [84 (11).

The identity of amount and of motive, coupled with the fact that the state of investment or condition of enjoyment is varied in the codicil, are strong circumstances to overrule the prima facie presumption in favour of the legatee taking both gifts. Id.

Direction in a will made in Ireland to trustees to purchase an annuity of 20*l.* a year in an assurance office in Ireland for A. A similar direction in a codicil made in England to purchase an annuity of 20*l.* in an office in England or Ireland for A. S. C. nom. Bourne
v. Hartley, Bourne v. Mahon, 2 Eq. Rep. 910.

9. Testator devised an estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to her husband for life, and charged other estates with the payment of an annuity to his daughter, and, after her death, with the payment of an annuity to her husband. He then made a codicil, which, in effect, revoked the husband's life estate in remainder. By a subsequent codicil, he gave to the husband a life estate in possession in the first estate, and also an annuity in possession to the same amount, and charged upon the same estates as the former annuity.—Held, that the second annuity was substituted for the first. Graves v. Hicks, 6 Sim. 391; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 289.

Testator by his will gave an annuity to his daughter, out of certain estates, for her separate use. By a codicil, he gave her a life estate, for her separate use, in the same estates.—Held, that the daughter was entitled to the life estate only. Id.

1. Bequest of an annuity of 500*l.* to the testator's wife, followed by a bequest among others of an annuity of 200*l.* to the testator's daughter, and subsequent direction in the same instrument, that, at the death of the testator's wife, the daughter was to have 400*l.* a year:—Held, that the annuity of 400*l.*, given to the daughter, was in substitution for, and not in addition to, the prior annuity of 200*l.*, given to the same legatee. Yockney v. Hassard, 3 Hare 620; 8 Jur. 822.

2. Gift of residue to pay income to widow for life, subject to the payment thereof of an annuity of 10*l.* to A. for his life. After the decease of his widow, a disposition was made of the property, and, amongst other gifts, there was one of the dividends of 1,000*l.* stock to A. for life:—Held, that the annuity to A. ceased upon the death of the widow, and that A. then took the dividends on the 1,000*l.* in substitution. Adnam v. Cole, 6 Beav. 353.

[84 (11).]

3. A testatrix devises leaseholds to A., subject to the yearly sum of 12*l.* for the sole use of Mrs. B., to be paid half-yearly; and this annuity was payable on the 27th January and 27th July; many years afterwards, A. devises to R. all his lands (in which these leaseholds were included), paying Mrs. B. 12*l.* per annum, by half-yearly payments, to be made on the 27th January and the 27th July: Mrs. B. is entitled under A.'s will to a second annuity, distinct from and in addition to the annuity given her by the will of the testatrix. Bartlett v. Gillard, 3 Russ. 149; 6 L. J., Ch., 19.

[84 (11).]

4. Upon the construction of testator's will:—Held, that an annuity was charged as a "debt" upon his real estate in exoneration of his personality. Money Penny v. Maseall, 2 Colly. 213.

[86 (2).]

5. An annuity provided by marriage articles to be paid to the wife, if she survived, out of the husband's real estate; if that fund fail, decreed a charge upon his personal property. Griffith v. Anvil, Colles's P. C. 52.

6. A testator by his will directs that with the money arising from the personal estate bequeathed to his trustees (which is to be first applied), and from the sale or mortgage of certain real estates devised to the same trustees for a term of years, the annuities and legacies thereafter given are to be paid; and he afterwards gives, among other things, an annuity secured by powers of distress and entry on the real estates; by a codicil he bequeaths his personality and the residue of his real estate for a term of years to other trustees, upon the trusts in his will and codicil mentioned, and he then gives to A. M. an annuity which he charges on the residue of his real estate, and secures it by a power of distress:—Held, that the personality is the primary fund for the payment of A. M.'s annuity, and that the real estate is charged only as an auxiliary fund. Fitzgerald v. Field, 1 Russ. 428; 4 L. J., Ch., 171.

7. Testatrix devised fee-simple lands, and leaseholds for years to one person and his issue; and other fee-simple lands to H. and her issue; and charged all the lands so devised with the payment of annuities bequeathed by her will. The freeholds and leaseholds are liable to contribute in proportion to their respective values at the decease of the testatrix, to the payment of the annuities; and the leaseholds are not liable in the first instance. Young v. Hassard, 1 J. & L. 466; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 309.

[86 (2).]

8. Annuities bequeathed to the testator's brothers and nephew during their respective lives, payable out of lands held for a term of years, "provided my interest therein shall so long continue," and in case they should die before the expiration of the lease of said lands, to go to the plaintiff.—Held, to be charges on the lands, and on the lease subsisting at testator's death, and on any future renewals obtained by the executors. Stubbs v. Roth, 2 Ball & B. 548.

[86 (2).]

9. Testator, after giving an annuity to his wife, devised his real estates to trustees in trust to pay the annuity thereout, and gave his wife powers of distress and entry on his estates. He then devised his estates in strict settlement, subject expressly to the annuity and to the powers of distress and entry:—Held, nevertheless, taking the whole of the will together, that the testator's personal estate was primarily liable to pay the annuity. Roberts v. Roberts, 13 Sim. 336; 7 Jur. 315.

[86 (2).]

10. A testator gave all his messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and his personal estate, to trustees, to hold to them, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the nature and quality thereof respectively, upon trust to receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and to retain thereout yearly 10*l.* for their trouble in the execution of the will, and then to pay legacies and annuities, with a direction that certain charitable legacies should be paid out of his personal estate:—Held, that the whole of the property, both real and personal, was to be considered as one mass, for the purpose of paying ratably the annuities, except the legacies expressly made payable out of the personal estate. Boughton v. James, 1 Colly. 26; 8 Jur. 329. But this decree was varied in S. C. nom. Boughton v. Boughton, 1 H. L. Ca. 406; where the personal estate was held to be the primary fund.

11. A testator gave to trustees his real and personal estate upon trust to permit his wife to enjoy his dwelling-house durante viduitate, and "out of the rents, issues, and profits, dividends, interest, and income," to raise and pay his widow an annuity; and out of the same rents, etc., to pay another annuity; and he gave "the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate" to his eldest son.

with remainder over:—Held, that the personal estate is the primary fund liable to the payment of the annuities, there being no direction to discharge it or to sell the real estate. L. C. and Turner, L. J. (Knight Bruce, L. J., dubitante), considered this case identical in substance with Boughton v. Boughton (1 H. L. Ca. 406). Tench v. Cheese, 3 W. R. 582; 1 Jur., N. S., 689; 3 Eq. Rep. 971. And see the previous reports of this case, 3 W. R. 42; 19 Beav. 3; 24 L. J., Ch., 49; 18 Jur. 1087; 24 L. T. 151; 3 Eq. Rep. 47. And on appeal, 3 W. R. 500; 1 Jur., N. S., 689. [86 (2).

1. A testator devised to his son, to be disposed of as after mentioned, all his estate in W., and to the survivor, etc., of his sons, and all his estate in P. subject to his proportion of the head rent, and also subject to, and in trust to pay out of the rents thereof an annuity to his daughter, and the remainder of the rents until she should be paid 500*l*. Then followed a bequest of an annuity of 40*l*. charged on parts of W., and there was a residuary devise to the three sons:—Held, that the bequests to the daughter were charged only on P., and not on any part of W. Borough v. Williamson, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 1. [86 (2).

2. D. by his will directed payment of his just debts out of his Irish estate, and exonerated his personalty therefrom. He then devised the Irish estate to trustees to sell, and by sale or mortgage or out of the rents and profits to pay two annuitants, with devises over in strict settlement, and all the residue to E. I. Upon the question, out of what property the annuities and costs were payable:—Held, that they were payable ratably. Barnard v. Roberts, 1 W. R. 222. [86 (2).

3. A. mortgaged an estate in 1774; he left by his will in 1775 an annuity to his widow in lieu of dower. W., the original mortgagee, subsequently mortgaged his interest in this estate to R. & Co. In 1786, R. & Co. filed a bill against W. and the real and personal representatives of A., for the purpose of obtaining a foreclosure. By a decree in this suit in 1791 a declaration was made that the widow, having relinquished her title to dower, became a bona fide purchaser of the annuity, and was entitled to be paid it out of the mortgaged estate. This suit not having been prosecuted, and the widow having died in 1794, her representatives in 1822 filed a bill against the heir of W., and other persons claiming under him, and the heirs and devisees of A., for the payment of the arrears of the annuity during her lifetime, or that the estate should be sold, and the arrears paid out of the proceeds:—Held, on appeal, that the annuity, not having been expressly charged on the real estate of A., was a mere pecuniary legacy, and that the decree of 1791 was erroneous, in declaring that the widow was entitled to be paid it out of the mortgaged estate. White v. Purnther, 1 Knapp 179. [86 (2).

4. In an ante-nuptial settlement, conferring considerable benefit upon the husband in the property of the wife, to which it chiefly related, which settlement contained a recital that it was made by the wife in consideration of the marriage and of the provision therein-after made and provided for her by the husband, he covenanted that whatever estates and property, whether real or personal, and wherever situate or either, or both, should, in the event of his decease, if the wife should survive him, be charged and chargeable with and subject to the payment of an annuity or yearly rent-charge of 250*l*. to be paid and payable to her and her assigns, during so many years as she should live, besides and in addition to the provision hereby made and intended for her. With the exception of a contingent reversionary interest in a policy of assurance for 3,000*l*. on the life of the husband, which policy was subject to a debt of 2,000*l*. and interest thereon at 4 per cent., there was not any provision made out of his property for her beside the annuity of 250*l*. At the period of the marriage he was engaged in trade, and was seised of real estate; subsequently he acquired other real estate, and afterwards became a bankrupt:—Held, that the annuity of 250*l*. was well charged, both upon the real estate of which he was seised at the marriage, and upon the real estate which he subsequently acquired. White v. Anderson, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 419. [86 (2).

5. A testator, by his will, devises all his real estate to his executors, for the purposes therein-after stated; and, after empowering them either to continue his business or to dispose of it, he gives the profits of it in the one case, and the interest of the moneys arising from the sale in the other, and also the interest of the securities on which the rest of his capital should be invested, to his daughter for life, her receipt to be a discharge. He then gives her the rents and profits of all his real estates during her life, and at her decease he devises and bequeathes to her heirs all his estates, real and personal, as tenants in common; if his daughter has but one child, such child is to possess the whole, but if she should die without issue then at her decease he gives certain legacies. He next directs all his goods and effects to be sold, his said legacies to be paid, and a sum invested sufficient to purchase 150*l*. a year, which is to be paid to the husband of the daughter. He then orders his real estates to be sold at the decease of his daughter, or at the decease of his brothers and sisters, according as a particular event may turn out, and he gives over to certain persons all the residue of his personal estate, including the proceeds of the sale of the real estates when sold, and the rents of them until they are sold. The daughter died without having had issue:—Held, that the annuity of 150*l*. was charged both on the real and personal estate. Dunk v. Fenner, 2 Russ. & M. 557. [86 (2).

6. A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees, out of the rent and produce, or by sale or other disposition, to raise an annuity to his wife and certain legacies, and to invest the surplus. He directed a sale of his real estate after the death of his wife, and gave the residue to his children:—Held, that the personal estate was not primarily charged with the annuity, but that the real and personal estate formed one common fund for its payment. Bedford v. Bedford, 25 Beav. 584. [86 (2).

7. A testator gave and bequeathed as follows: "To S. 100*l*. per annum for ever, to F., the child of S., 200*l*. per annum for ever, the above charges to be payable out of my whole property; the remainder I leave, share and share alike, between my sister E. and my nieces;" and after giving several legacies, the testator's will proceeded: "I leave my personal property in L. to the above-named S. I leave all the rest of my personal property to my above-named sister and nieces":—Held, following Taylor v. Martindale (12 Sim. 15), that the annuities were charged on all the testator's real and personal estate, and were perpetual annuities, and that the annuity of 200*l.* was payable after the death of F. to her administrator out of the personal estate. Joynt v. Richards, 11 L. R., L., 278. [86 (2)].

1. P. by his will gave all his property to trustees to the use of certain persons for successive estates tail with a direction that parties becoming first entitled to the rents should allow various specified sums to other parties. Then followed a charge on his realty of all the "annuities" thereinbefore mentioned with a trust to convert and invest. The testator made five codicils, by which he gave various annuities, and directed that an annuity to F. B., and all the pecuniary and specific legacies given by his will, should be payable to the legatees (including a certain contingent annuity, if payable) free of legacy duty. On the question whether annuities as well as legacies were given free of duty:—Held, that they were. Pearse v. Pearse, 2 W. R. 123. [90 (8)].

2. A testator devised real estate to A., subject to the payment of "one clear yearly rent-charge or annuity of 100*l.*" to B.:—Held, that B. took the annuity free of legacy duty. Bailey v. Boulton, 14 Beav. 595; 15 Jur. 1019; 21 L. J., Ch., 277. See also LEGACY, XIV. [90 (8)].

3. A. devises to his nephew 5*l.* per annum (without saying, to his executors or administrators), to be paid him during his (the testator's) wife's life, whom he made executrix, on condition that he demeaned himself civilly to her. By the nephew's death, the 5*l.* per annum is determined. Neal v. Hambury, Pre. Ch. 173. [91 (8)].

4. J. M., by his will, gives to each of his grandchildren by name an annuity of 50*l.* during the life of their mother S. U., such annuities to be paid half-yearly, and as to such as are under age, to be applied for their benefit at the discretion of his trustees, provided that the annuities bequeathed to his granddaughters should be to their separate use, without power of anticipation; and in case his said grandchildren should incur or anticipate such annuities, the same to be void. The mother S. U. is still living, but one of the granddaughters attained twenty-one, married, and died; and the question was, whether her husband, as her representative, was entitled to the annuity:—Held, that he was. Maddy v. Hale, 4 W. R. 769. [91 (8)].

5. Testator, by his will, gave and bequeathed to A. 40*l.* per annum in the long annuities:—Held, that A. was entitled to have a sum of 40*l.* per annum long annuities transferred to her absolutely. Lamer v. Birch, 7 Jur. 810. [91 (8)].

6. A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, to invest the proceeds and pay "the clear yearly sum of 180*l.*, part of the interest, to A., and the clear yearly sum of 180*l.*, further part, etc., to the daughter of A. during the life of the mother, and after her death to pay the sum of 20*l.* further part, etc., in addition to the 180*l.* to the said daughter. The testator then gave certain legacies, and directed the trustees to divide the residue of the interest equally among the daughters of A. during their respective lives; and if all or any of them should die, leaving issue, then in trust to divide his residuary estate among such issue; and if only one should leave issue, then to divide his whole residuary estate among such issue:—Held, that the gift to A. was a gift of a life annuity only. Baynes v. Ridge, 1 Eq. Rep. 157. [91 (8)].

7. A testator by his will gave all his real and personal estates to trustees, upon trust to pay S. an annuity of 400*l.* for her life; and after her death he gave that sum amongst the children of S.; and upon trust to pay H. an annuity with a similar remainder. He also gave an annuity to J., and charged all his freehold and leasehold estates with the payment of these annuities; and as soon as J. attained twenty-four, he directed the trustees to pay J. the rents of his freeholds, etc., and the interest of all his stock, etc.; and upon the death of J. without issue (which happened), he gave to S. all his freehold and leasehold estates, and to H. all his funded property and personal estate not specifically bequeathed:—Held, that the annuities were to be perpetual. Filding v. Preston, 3 W. R. 851; 1 De G. & J. 438. [91 (8)].

8. A bequest of 400*l.* a year for five years to each executor is payable out of income. Scholefield v. Redfern, 1 N. R. 165. See also EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR, VIII. [98 (1)].

9. A testator gave three annuities; the first "free from income or property tax, or any other deduction," the second "free from all deductions," the third "free from deductions":—Held, that all the annuities were free from income tax. Turner v. Mullineux, 1 John. & H. 334. [99 (4)].

10. A testator, by his will, in 1854, directed his trustees to pay to his widow during her life the annual sum of 500*l.*, "free from legacy duty and other deductions":—Held, that the annuity was subject to income tax under the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 34, to be paid out of the annuity itself. Sadler v. Richards, 6 W. R. 532; 4 Kay & J. 302. [99 (4)].

11. Testator declared that his trustees should stand possessed of his residuary estate, and directed them out of the income to pay to his wife "the clear yearly sum of 600*l.*" for life if she should remain his widow, but if she should marry an annuity of 100*l.* in lieu of the annuity of 600*l.*, "the said annuities of 600*l.* and 100*l.*, as the case may be, to be paid free from all deductions and abatements whatsoever." By a codicil an annuity of 1,000*l.* was given in lieu of 600*l.*:—Held, that the annuity was not given free from income tax. Gleadow v. Leetham, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 269; 52 L. J., Ch., 102; 48 L. T. 264; 31 W. R. 269. [99 (4)].

1. Bequest of a weekly sum, the first payment is payable to the legatee at the end of a week from testator's death. Final decree made at the first hearing, the registrar, by consent of the parties, computing the account. Byrne v. Healy, 2 Moll. 94.

2. By will the testator gave to A. B. all he had in the world, he paying to C. D. 50% a year for life, and at her death to pay E. F. 500%., and to G. H. 100%., and I. K. 20% a year for life, and 100% in money twelve months after the testator's death; and L. M. to have 100% paid to him twelve months after the testator's death, and 20% a year for life:—Held, that the annuity of 20% a year to I. K. was to be deferred until the death of C. D. Roebuck v. Habershon, 10 Jur. 279.

[99 (12).

3. A. charged his rents with payment of certain charges and an annuity of 500% to B., the annuity to be increased to 2,000% after the charges should have been liquidated out of the rents:—Held, that B. was entitled to the increased annuity from the day on which the amount of the rents legally due, if paid, would be held sufficient to liquidate the charges. Hemsworth v. Campbell, 1 N. R. 503.

[100 (3).

4. A testatrix, bequeathing legacies and annuities, by her will directed that the first year's rent of certain lands, and, if necessary, the second half-year's rent accruing next after her decease, should be applied in payment of so much of her debts and funeral expenses and of her legacies as her personal estate should be insufficient to pay. She then gave certain annuities, but not to commence till all (i.e., debts and legacies) should be paid. By a codicil, giving certain other annuities and legacies, and devising the lands subject to the annuities, the testatrix directed that all her legacies should be paid out of the rents before any of the annuities should become due, except two annuities to A. and B., which were to become payable immediately after her decease. The lands having been sold, and their proceeds proving insufficient to pay the debts, legacies, and annuities in full:—Held, first, that the direction in the codicil as to the annuities to A. and B. did not alter the priority of the several annuities inter se, but only the time at which these two annuities were to commence; and that, upon payment of the legacies, all the annuities, including those to A. and B., became payable in equal priority, and should therefore abate abatement; secondly, that the annuities, other than those given to A. and B., commenced from the time at which the legacies ought to have been paid, as distinguished from the time of their actual payment. Ingham v. Daly, 9 L. R., Ir., 484.

[100 (6).

5. Annuity by will to a wife otherwise unprovided for, and sums for children's maintenance; on a deficiency of assets:—Held, on the intention of the testator, that they should not abate in proportion with the general legacies. Lewin v. Lewin, 2 Ves. 415.

6. Testator gave legacies to different persons, and an annuity for the personal maintenance and support of his brother, and directed the payment of it to commence on the first half-yearly day after his death, and the legacies to be paid at the expiration of two years after that event, or as much sooner as the circumstances of his estate would permit, but without interest in the meantime. The testator's property was insufficient to pay the legacies and annuity in full:—Held, that the annuity was not entitled to priority over the legacies, but must abate proportionably with them. Ashburnham v. Ashburnham, 16 Sim. 186; 12 Jur. 299.

7. Testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of the residue of his estate, upon trust, in the first place, to pay what might be due under his covenant to J. S., and then upon trust to set apart and invest a sufficient sum to satisfy certain annuities which he bequeathed by his will, and, in the next place, after making such investment as aforesaid, upon trust to pay the several pecuniary legacies bequeathed by his will. The assets were insufficient to pay all the legacies and annuities in full:—Held, that the annuitants had no priority over the legatees in respect of payment. Thwaites v. Foreman, 1 Colly. 409. Affirmed 10 Jur. 483.

8. The testator by his will bequeathed an annuity to his wife for her life, and made it a primary charge in preference to all other legacies on a leasehold estate, which was (together with certain policies of insurance on the life of the testator) subject to two mortgages, and he directed that if the rents and profits of such leasehold estate should be insufficient to pay the wife's annuity, then the same should be paid out of his other personal estate. The mortgagees were paid off by the executors out of the produce of the policies and the general personal estate:—Held, that the wife's annuity, so far as it fell upon the personal estate other than the leasehold estate specially charged, was not entitled to priority over other legacies. Johnson v. Child, 4 Harc 87.

[101 (10).

9. Where a testatrix bequeathed pecuniary legacies, and directed that the residue of the moneys to arise from her real and personal estate should be held in trust for the children of W., and that her trustees should, in the first instance, out of such residue, pay an annuity to A., and the assets were insufficient for all purposes:—Held, that the pecuniary legatees were entitled to be paid in priority to the annuitant, and that she was entitled to her annuity out of the residue. Re Wiltshire, 6 Jur., N. S., 190.

[101 (10).

10. Held, in the circumstances, that rent-charges specifically charged on lands had priority over legacies charged by a residuary clause. Weir v. Chamley, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

[101 (10).

11. A testator is presumed to consider that there will be a sufficiency of assets to provide for annuities and legacies, and prima facie to intend that they should be paid equally. Street v. Street, 2 N. R. 56; 8 L. T., N. S., 806.

[101 (10).

It is not sufficient to rebut this presumption that legacies are given to several persons successively, with reference to successive residues interposed between the gifts, or that the legacies were to be "free from any deduction whatsoever." Id.

Therefore, the ordinary rule must apply, that on a deficiency of assets all annuities and legacies abate ratably. Id.

When there is such a deficiency of assets, annuities will be valued as from the time at which the deficiency began. Id.

1. Testator charged his estates with an annuity in favour of his wife, and subject thereto he devised the estates in strict settlement. Afterwards, by his will and codicils, he charged the estates with several other annuities to his wife and other persons:—Held, that the first-mentioned annuity was the primary charge on the estates. Graves v. Hicks, 6 Sim. 391; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 239.

2. A testator covenanted, upon his marriage, that in case he should die in the lifetime of his wife without issue, his wife should be entitled to one-half of his real and personal property which he should die possessed of. He died without issue in the lifetime of his wife, having by his will devised his real estate, subject to annuities. The widow elected to take against the will. Seemle, the annuitants should abate one-half of their annuities. Jackson v. Hamilton, 3 J. & L. 702; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 430.

3. Foster v. Smith was reversed on appeal. Sec 1 Ph. 629; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183.

4. A testator gives to his wife an annuity of 100*l.* and the sum of 1,000*l.*, which he considers will, with the property which she is entitled to after his death, make up an income of 2,500*l.* a year; in fact, those gifts make up her income only to 1,800*l.* a year; she is entitled to have the deficiency supplied out of his residuary estate. Trevor v. Trevor, 5 Russ. 24; 6 L. J., Ch., 182.

[105 (8).

5. Testator gave the yearly sum of 2,000*l.* sterling to his wife for her life, and after her decease to his trustees, upon the same trusts as after declared concerning the yearly sum of 3,000*l.* He then gave to his trustees the yearly sum of 3,000*l.* sterling to issue out of a sufficient sum of stock in the 5 per cents., to be invested in the names of his trustees for that purpose, in trust for his daughter for life, and after her decease for her children. The trustees invested 100,000*l.* 5 per cents. to answer the two yearly sums. The stock was afterwards converted into 4 per cents., whereby the dividends became insufficient to pay the yearly sums:—Held, that the legatees were not entitled to have the deficiency supplied out of the testator's residuary estate. Kendall v. Russell, 3 Sim. 424; 8 L. J., Ch., 108.

6. The testator desired that A., B., and C. might each enjoy, during life, the interest of 800*l.* sterling, the principal to devolve eventually to his residuary legatees. He directed the residue of his property to be divided into three equal parts, one part to each of his brothers and his sister; and if his brothers and sister should not survive him or have legal issue living at the testator's death, then their shares to devolve in equal proportions to the survivors, as well as the shares that might have been devised to their issue; the testator's estate was not sufficient to pay the legacies in full:—Held, upon the death of one of the tenants for life, that an appropriation of the legacy of 800*l.*, set apart to answer her life interest, fell into the residue, and was not given over to the residuary legatees in their individual character; and that the surviving tenants for life were entitled to have the deficiencies in their annuities satisfied out of the released fund. Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & K. 365; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 79.

7. A testator, by a codicil to his will, directed his executor to pay 15*s.* per week to his widow, so long as two leasehold houses should be let; and if one or both should become vacant, he left it to the discretion of his executor to sell the houses and invest the proceeds for the purpose of paying such weekly allowance, or in proportion according to the amount the said houses might produce; and he revoked a gift in his will of the profits of the said houses to his widow, having considered that the 15*s.* per week was quite sufficient to maintain her and make her comfortable; and his will contained a gift over of his property. The testator's property, including the houses, having been sold and realised, produced a fund insufficient to pay 15*s.* weekly to the widow:—Held, that such allowance could not be made good out of the capital. Harke v. Kemp, 7 Jur. 294.

8. Legacy to an executor held liable to make good his breach of trust by preventing the appropriation of stock to answer a gift to a legatee for his life. Morris v. Lieve, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 350; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 172.

[105 (8).

9. Testator directed the investment of 5,100*l.* in such Government securities as his wife, whom he made his executrix and residuary legatee, should think proper, and gave the income to her for life, and the capital to various parties, to be vested on certain contingencies. He also directed the investment of such sum as would produce an annuity of 125*l.* per annum, which he gave to plaintiff for life, and the capital after her death to his residuary legatee. His wife invested 3,125*l.* in the 4 per cents. to meet this annuity, and gave this capital to one of the defendants subject to the annuity, and her residuary estate to the plaintiff, who thereby became entitled to the testator's residuary estate. The testator first directed that if, before the expiration of the trusts, the funds on which the trust moneys were invested should be paid off or reduced, so that any deficiency or loss arose, the persons interested should ratably bear the loss out of their respective interest, on becoming entitled thereto on the contingencies in the will expressed. The 4 per cents. being reduced:—Held, that the annuitant was not entitled to have the deficiency made good out of the capital sum of 3,125*l.* Bague v. Dumergue, 1 W. R. 197; 10 Hare 462.

[105 (8).

10. Annuity payable out of dividends of 3,000*l.* 3½ per cent. stock. By stat. 7 & 8 Vict., c. 5, the rate of interest on the stock was lowered to 3½ per cent.:—Held, that the trustees might make up any deficiency out of the property directed by the will to be accumulated. Fitzpatrick v. Knaresborough, 13 Ir. Eq. Rep. 338. [105 (8).]

1. A testator directed his trustees, out of the proceeds of the sale of his estate, to appropriate 15,000*l.*, and to invest the same and pay the income to his wife for her life, and after her death he gave the 15,000*l.* in trust for his children equally, and the residue of his estate amongst his children in unequal proportions. The widow and the trustees entered into a written agreement to appropriate railway preference stock and other securities of the value at the time of the appropriation of about 15,000*l.* to represent this fund. At the death of the widow the securities comprised in this agreement had considerably fallen in value:—Held, that the residuary estate must make good the deficiency in the fund thus set apart. Stewart v. Sanderson, 22 L. T., N. S., 10. [105 (8).]

2. A testatrix, by her will, bequeathed pecuniary legacies and annuities; and, subject to the bequests thereinbefore contained, she gave the residue to A. for life, with remainders over. The estate was not sufficient to satisfy the annuities and pay the pecuniary legacies; but if Government annuities were purchased for the annuitants out of the corpus, there would be enough left to pay the pecuniary legacies and leave a small surplus:—Held, as between the tenant for life and the remaindermen, that the tenant for life was not entitled to have Government annuities purchased to satisfy the annuitants; but that the income must be applied, so far as it would extend, in paying the annuities, recourse being had from time to time to the capital to make up the deficiency. Re Grant, Walker v. Martineau, 52 L. J., Ch., 552; 48 L. T. 937; 31 W. R. 703. [105 (8).]

3. A testator directed his trustees to sell his personal estate, and after payment of his debts, etc., to invest the residue, and out of the produce thereof, or if need be by the sale and conversion, from time to time, of a sufficient part of the principal, to pay two annuities; and he directed his trustees, if occasion should be, from time to time to pay out of the rents and profits of his freehold and copyhold estates so much of the annuities as his said personal trust estate should be insufficient for discharging. The personal estate being exhausted, and the annual rents of the real estate being insufficient to keep down the annuities, it was held, that the arrears were to be raised by sale or mortgage. Fentiman v. Fentiman, 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 436. [105 (8).]

4. A testator, by his will, charged a freehold estate with the payment of the yearly sum of 10*l.*, to be paid half-yearly to his daughter A. for her life; and, on her death, he directed such half-yearly payments to be continued for the maintenance of her children until they should attain twenty-one, and then directed his trustees to pay the sum of 120*l.* equally amongst them. The estate was sold under a decree of the Court, and there remained out of the proceeds, after payment of the testator's debts, only the sum of 74*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*:—Held, that the two charges of the yearly sum of 10*l.*, and the sum of 120*l.*, were equally entitled to the benefit of the corpus, which was directed to be invested, and the income paid to the testator's daughter, but without prejudice to any question that might eventually arise as to the right of it. Taylor v. Taylor, 8 Jur. 15. [105 (8).]

5. A testator gives four annuities for life charged upon certain estates specified; and there is a gift of those estates to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for life, and then absolutely to convey certain of the estates to his brother freed from the annuities, but which under the will had either ceased or been otherwise secured; and after the decease of the testator's wife, there were gifts of the estates in certain portions, exempted from the annuities as therein mentioned, with a gift of the residue to the widow. The testator mortgaged his estates, and the personalty being insufficient, the realty was sold. The wife and annuitants being still living, it became necessary to ascertain the effect of the will:—Held, that the aggregate of the estates were charged with the annuities only during the wife's life, and that there was no right at present to come on the corpus. Annuities to be paid out of the income of the fund when ascertained pro rata, with liberty to apply. Maltby v. Grey, 6 W. R. 5. [105 (8).]

6. As a general rule, arrears of an annuity do not carry interest. Exceptions are where the annuitant might, but for the interference of the Court, have obtained payment of interest out of a legal security held by him, or where there has been misconduct by the party bound to pay the annuity. A wife or child being the annuitant is no ground for exception. Newman v. Auling (3 Atk. 579), having been overruled. Arrears of annuities do not bear interest except where the annuitant holds some enforceable security, or the accumulation of arrears has been occasioned by the misconduct of the person bound to pay. Therefore, where there was merely delay, though long and unexplained, interest was refused. Torre v. Brown, 24 L. J., Ch., 757; 5 H. L. Ca. 555. [113 (3).]

7. An annuity, being a legal rent-charge on lands:—Held, to be barred by the Statute of Limitations, no payment in respect thereof having been made for twenty years and upwards. Langton v. Langton, 18 Jur. 928. [115 (1).]

8. Testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of the proceeds of his real estate, and also of his residuary personal estate, upon trust to raise a sum of money, the income of which would produce a clear annual sum of 100*l.*, and to invest it upon Government or real securities, and pay the same to a legatee; and he directed that if at any time the income of the fund so to be raised and invested should from any cause or circumstance whatsoever prove insufficient to answer the annuity, the deficiency should be made good out of the residue. The trustees, of whom the legatee was one, a year and a half after the testator's death invested a sum of 3,500*l.*, part of his estate, on mortgage at 5*l.* per cent., and shortly afterwards the annuitant assigned the annuity to a purchaser, by a deed, reciting that the 3,500*l.* had been appropriated to answer it. The assignor, having been afterwards permitted by his co-trustees to take possession of the mortgage fund, misapplied it:—Held, that the investment of the 3,500*l.* was a sufficient appropriation of a fund to answer the annuity, and that the purchaser thereof had no claim to have it made good out of the residue. Barnett v. Sheffield, 16 Jur. 942; 1 De G. M. & G. 371; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 692. [120 (4).]

Where, according to the terms of a trust, the fund to be provided to secure an annuity may be invested on real security, the security will not be an improper one because it produces annually somewhat more than the annuity requires. Id.

1. If annuitant is entitled to any part of relief prayed, he is entitled to whole relief. French v. Morgan, 1 Moll. 488. [122 (5).]

2. In a suit for the arrears of an annuity secured by a bond given by a deceased person to a trustee for the annuitant, the House of Lords held that as the claim was a legal demand against the assets of the deceased, all a court of equity could do in the first instance was to remove impediments against any action, and accordingly retained the bill for twelve months, giving the plaintiff leave to sue in the name of the trustee. Haworth v. Boston, 9 Cl. & F. 59. Varying 4 Y. & Coll. 1. [122 (5).]

3. An annuitant, whose annuity is charged by his testator upon all his freehold and copyhold estates, has no equity, so long as the annuity is regularly paid, to file his bill against the heir at law or devisee, to compel a discovery of the estates so charged, or the execution of a deed purporting to charge the estates. Bill for that purpose dismissed with costs. Franklin v. Drake, 5 Jur. 1078. [122 (5).]

4. Lands are sold to A., subject to an annuity of 15*l.* a year to the sister of the vendor; the lands are afterwards mortgaged, and otherwise charged by A., and, thus charged, descend to his heir at law. A court of equity will make a personal decree against the heir for the arrears and growing payments of this annuity. Champervorne v. Hillersdon, 4 Bro. P. C. 330. [122 (5).]

5. A man makes a deed poll for payment of an annuity, and after by will subjects his estate to the payment of it; he shall have further security, and not rest on the deed poll. Grenon v. Rawson, Sel. Ch. Ca. 57. [122 (5).]

6. A devisee for life of a rent-charge having granted several annuities thereout, and which were in arrear, assigns it to his creditors. The tenant for life of the estate, with intent to redeem it for the annuitant, gave bonds to the creditors, on condition of giving up their securities to be cancelled. The obligor's executor paid all the bonds. The annuitant is entitled against the executors to the annuity disencumbered, but not to have paid the arrears on the annuities to creditors incurred in the life of the obligor, and as against the tenant of the estate to the arrears since the death of the obligor; but the future payment must be left to agreement. Graham v. Graham, 1 Ves. J. 272. [122 (5).]

7. A testator gave an annuity for life, and an annuity for twenty-one years from his death, both payable by four equal quarterly payments on the usual quarter-days:—Held, that a proportional part only of each annuity was payable on the first quarter-day after his decease. Williams v. Wilson, 5 N. R. 267. [124 (4).]

8. A testator bequeathed stock to his widow for life, with remainder to his son; and died in 1817. The son bequeathed the residue of his personal estate, which included the stock, to his wife for life, with remainder to his children; and he died in 1852. The widow, his mother, died on the 1st January 1865. A dividend accruing due on the stock on the 5th of the same month:—Held, that as between the son's wife and his children, such dividend represented capital of the son's estate, and not income. Roberts v. Roberts, 5 N. R. 423. [125 (7).]

9. Where under orders given in Chambers a sum of stock was sold shortly before a dividend was due:—Held, that the tenant for life of such sum was entitled to receive, out of the proceeds of the sale, a sum equal to the apportioned part of such dividend from the last dividend day up to the day of sale. Bulkeley v. Stephens, 3 N. R. 105, 106. [125 (7).]

[Construction of Statutes. General Principles.] 10 The instrument referred to in the Apportionment Act is not the instrument creating the periodical payments, but that creating a life interest therein. Knight v. Boughton, 12 Beav. 312; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 66. [131 (4).]

11. The stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, requires, in order to exclude apportionment, either an express direction that there shall be none, or language so express in the terms of gift, that apportionment is clearly impossible, consistently with it. Inference from the whole tenor and context of the will is not sufficient to exclude the operation of the statute. Tyrrell v. Clark, 2 Drew. 86; 18 Jur. 323; 23 L. J., Ch., 268; 2 W. R. 152; 2 Eq. Rep. 333. [131 (4).]

ARBITRATION.

1. Arbitration clauses in deeds are not binding on the parties so as to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. Meabourgh (Earl) v. Bower, 7 Beav. 127. [138 (8).

2. Courts of equity have no jurisdiction, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, to order witnesses to attend arbitrators. Hall v. Ellis, 9 Sim. 580; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 158; 3 Jur. 167. [146 (8).

3. The 12th section of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 authorises the Court to appoint an umpire in an arbitration which was commenced before the passing of the Act. The 3rd clause of that section applies to references to arbitration not only made by any "document," but also otherwise, as by Act of Parliament or by parol. Re Lord, 1 Kay & J. 90; 24 L. J., Ch., 145. S. C. nom. Re Lord and the Governor and Company of the Copper Miners, 3 Eq. Rep. 197; 3 W. R. 86. [147 (9).

4. Award or report of arbitrator must be filed before any order can be grounded thereon. Vernon v. Wells, Dick. 452. [151 (16).

5. An award was made upon a submission not under the statute of Will. 3, between two parties in difference, on which one of the parties obtained judgment against the other party in an action at law. The unsuccessful party filed a bill in equity against the successful party and the arbitrator, to set aside the award:—Held, that, whether the award was or was not impeachable on equitable grounds, yet, inasmuch as there was no evidence to raise suspicion that the arbitrator had acted corruptly, partially, or unfairly, he ought not to have been made a party to the suit; and the bill was dismissed as against him with costs, before the Court had come to any opinion for or against his award. Hamilton v. Bankin, 3 De G. & Sm. 782; 15 Jur. 70; 19 L. J., Ch., 307. [158 (2).

Under a submission, not made under the statute of Will. 3, the parties in difference and their arbitrators, who had not agreed, met before the umpire; one of the parties in difference then left, having authorised his arbitrator to act for him in the conduct of the proceedings before the umpire, and the hearing finally terminated, except that it was agreed that one of the parties in difference should, on the following day, go alone to the umpire, and produce a voucher for certain charges; which that party accordingly did; the umpire made his award for a certain sum, which the latter party recovered in an action at law against the other party, thus establishing the legal validity of the award. Upon a bill by the defendant at law to restrain the action, and to set aside the award:—Held, that the arbitrator of the plaintiff in equity had been sufficiently constituted to act in the umpirage for him; and that he had power to, and did sufficiently, waive all objection to the irregularity; and the award, being valid in law, was not set aside. Id.

ARMY AND NAVY.

Off-Reckonings.] 6. A., being colonel of a regiment, contracts with B. for the clothing it by a limited time, and assigns to B. the off-reckonings of the regiment to pay for such clothing. Before the time appointed for the delivery of the clothing expired, A. sold his commission to C. The treaty for this sale, and the king's approbation of it, happened before the contract with B., but C.'s commission was not dated till some months afterwards. Upon a question, whether under these circumstances A. had a right to contract for the clothing of the regiment, it was held that he had; and to do every act as colonel thereof, so long as he continued on the muster-roll, which was till the date of C.'s commission. Harrison v. Dormer, 1 Bro. P. C. 153. [167 (6).

ARTIZANS' DWELLINGS ACT.

7. The effect of s. 20 of the Artizans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act 1875, is that upon the purchase of land by a local authority for the purpose of carrying into effect a scheme under the Act, all easements whatsoever affecting the land become thenceforth extinguished, subject only to this, that compensation is to be paid by the local authority to persons injured in manner provided by the section. Swainston v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 52 L. J., Ch., 235; 48 L. T. 634; 31 W. R. 498. [168 (2).

A local authority, under the powers of the above Act, purchased and took a certain house for the purposes of an improvement scheme. The plaintiffs, the owners of adjoining land, claimed to be entitled to a right to support to a building thereon from the house so purchased, and brought an action to restrain the local authority from removing the house in such a way as to interfere with the plaintiff's right to support. The local authority had taken no proceedings to purchase the alleged easement of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the only right the plaintiffs could have was to receive compensation under the above section, and that their action must therefore fail. Id.

8. When an arbitrator has been appointed under the Artizans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act 1875, to assess compensation for lands proposed to be taken compulsorily under that Act, it is his duty to assess the compensation for such lands upon the footing that the interest in respect of which a claim is made is an existing interest, and it is not his duty to decide whether the interest does or does not exist. Wilkins v. Birmingham.

From the date when the local authority shall have published once in three successive weeks, the particulars mentioned in s. 6 of the schedule to the Artizans' Dwellings Act, the relation of vendor and purchaser is created for the purpose of fixing the subject-matter of compensation, and the effect of the publication of such particulars is analogous to the effect of a notice to treat under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845. S 121 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 is incorporated in the Artizans' Dwellings Act. Id.

ATTACHMENT OF DEBTS.

1. A judgment creditor obtained under the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, s 61, an order attaching all debts owing or accruing from the garnishee to the judgment debtor, and a subsequent order upon the garnishee to pay to the judgment creditor the debt due from him (the garnishee) to the judgment debtor, or so much thereof as might be sufficient to satisfy the judgment debt. Afterwards an order was made by this Court ordering certain payments to be made by the garnishee to the judgment debtor. —Held, that the equitable debt thus constituted, not having been ascertained in amount at the time of the Common Law Orders being made, was not a debt within the meaning of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854; and that therefore this Court would not aid the judgment creditor by restraining the garnishee from making the payments to the judgment debtor in pursuance of the order of this Court. Clark v. Perry, 3 W. R. 366, 387. [169 (1).]

3. An agreement between an author and publisher stipulated, that the work was to be sold to the public at one shilling a number; 2,000 copies were sold to a bookseller at a reduced price, in respect of which the author claimed to be compensated, out of the estate of the publisher, who had become bankrupt: —Held, that this was no breach of the agreement. Re Curry, 12 Ir. BANKER.

Rights of Manager of Bank who is also a Customer. 6. An Indian bank being about to open a branch in London appointed C. the London agent, with permission to carry on his own business as a merchant. C. in his independent character opened an account with the bank, and, in his capacity as a customer, deposited with and obtained an advance from the bank upon bills of which he was possessed. The bills were not indorsed to the bank, and, when they came to maturity, a loss occurred owing to the drawers and acceptors becoming bankrupt:—Held, that such loss must fall upon C. Gwatkin v. Campbell, 1 Jur., N. S., 113. [180 (1).]

7. S. bequeathed her personal estate to trustees upon trust to invest a moiety thereof and pay the dividends thereof to M. for life, and after her death to divide the corpus thereof between J. T., and R. The trustees invested part of the funds in bank shares in the name of M., who died intestate. After M.'s death the executor of S. and the administrator of M. applied to the banking company to transfer the shares to him, and tendered an affidavit under 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 36, showing that M. had no interest in the shares. The company still refusing to transfer them unless the stamp upon the letters of administration of M.'s estate was sufficient to cover the value of these shares—Held, that the banking company was bound to make the transfer, and on a bill filed to compel them, decree made against them with costs. Hennell v. Strong, 25 L. J., Ch., 407. [185 (5).

1. Interest on a banker's note from circumstances, though no evidence of an agreement for it. Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. 265. [198 (4).

BANKRUPTCY.

2. Semble, the Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to marshal assets, as between mortgagees, without the consent of all parties. Exp. Lacey, Youell & Co., Re Colth, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 107. [205 (3).

3. H., having borrowed 120*l.* from P., for the repayment of which sum and interest T. was surety, an agreement was entered into in September 1875, between H. and T., that H. should execute a mortgage of certain premises to P., to secure the repayment of the loan and interest. The agreement contained a proviso that if T. should at any time be called upon and compelled to pay the 120*l.* and interest, or if H. should become bankrupt or file a petition for liquidation, it should be lawful for T. immediately to enter upon the premises so agreed to be mortgaged. T. having been served with a writ, jointly with H., to pay the 120*l.* and interest, paid the money in August 1876, and immediately entered upon the premises agreed to be mortgaged, which were in the occupation of H., and upon which H. had expended considerable sums. In September 1876 H. filed a liquidation petition, and in June 1882 the trustees in the liquidation sought to have the agreement set aside as fraudulent and void, and that T. might be ordered to withdraw from possession upon payment into court by the trustee of 125*l.* in respect of the debt and interest—Held, that the provision for re-entry upon the bankruptcy of H. not having come into operation, the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction to decide the matter. Exp. Hutchinson, Re Holt, 47 L. T. 483. [207 (3).

Semble, the Court of Bankruptcy ought not after the lapse of six years to entertain such an application. Ib.

4. A trader opened with a railway company a credit account for freight, by which it was agreed that the company should have a general lien for all moneys due by him to them on any account on all goods belonging to him in their hands. He afterwards filed a liquidation petition, under which a receiver of his property and manager of his business was appointed.

In order to carry on the business the receiver bought some goods, which he paid for with his own money, and sent them to the company consigned to the trader. The company claimed the benefit of the agreement, and refused to deliver the goods until they were paid the amount which the trader owed them for freight due at the time of the filing of the petition. The receiver, in order to obtain the goods, paid the company 50*l.* under protest, and then applied to the Court of Bankruptcy to order the company to repay him the 50*l.*, and order was made accordingly:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction to make the order Re Northfield Iron and Steel Co. (14 L. T. 695) distinguished. Exp. Great Western Railway Co., Re Bushell, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 470; 52 L. J., Ch., 734; 48 L. T. 196; 31 W. R. 419. [207 (3).

5. Semble, that, in a case where the receipts by the official assignee consisted principally of a large sum transferred into his name upon the declaration of bankruptcy, an allowance at the rate of 1*l.* 4*s.* per cent. upon such sum is just and reasonable. Exp. Glynn, Re Ashlam, 2 W. R. 321. [213 (13).

6. The 160th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, which empowers the commissioners to make an allowance to some person for assisting the bankrupt in the preparation of his balance-sheet, does not authorise an allowance to the official assignee for performing that office. Exp. Russell, Re Minnitt, 2 W. R. 405; 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 230. [213 (13).

7. Where the plaintiff is adjudicated bankrupt after action brought, and his trustee declines to proceed with the action, it may be stayed by an order in chambers, and the defendant need not plead the bankruptcy in bar. Warder v. Saunders, 10 L. R., Q. B. D., 114; 47 L. T. 475. [228 (1).

8. Under r. 5 of the Bankruptcy Rules 1871, the charges of a receiver and manager of a business for disbursements out of pocket (e.g. travelling expenses and salaries of assistants) are liable to taxation. Exp. Izard, Re Bushell, (No. 1), 23 L. R., Ch. D., 75; 52 L. J., Ch., 678; 48 L. T. 751; 31 W. R. 418. [230 (2).

A receiver and manager of a business who desires to advance money of his own for the purposes of the business may, before doing so, apply to the Court for its authority, and the Court will, as a general rule, allow him interest at 5 per cent. on the amount which it authorises him to advance, and will give him a charge on the debtor's assets for the advance and the interest. If the receiver and manager advances money without such a previous authority, he is entitled to an indemnity out of the assets, but he cannot obtain a personal order against the trustee for payment. Ib.

9. An application to enforce an undertaking to be answerable in damages, given by a receiver in bankruptcy on the granting of an injunction to restrain proceedings in relation to property alleged to form part of the bankrupt's estate, ought to be made within a reasonable time after it is ascertained that the injunction has been improperly granted. Exp. Hall, Re Wood, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 644; 52 L. J., Ch., 907; 49 L. T. 275; 32 W. R. 179. [230 (2).

Unexplained and unreasonable delay in making such an application will be a sufficient ground for refusing it, even if the bankruptcy proceedings are still pending and the receiver has not obtained his discharge:—Held, that an unexplained delay of nearly four years in making such an application was a sufficient answer to it, though the applicant had shown a prima facie case. Ib.

1. Any proceeding against a receiver appointed by the Court of Bankruptcy in respect of acts done virtute officii must be taken into that court. Where, therefore, a liquidating debtor had commenced an action in the High Court of Justice against the receiver in the liquidation, claiming damages done to his goods when in the possession of the receiver:—Held, that the debtor will be personally restrained from instituting any proceedings against the receiver elsewhere than in bankruptcy. Exp. Day, Re Potter, 48 L. T. 912. [230 (2)].

2. The bankrupt had opened a lairage for cattle, and had sold hay to the drovers using the lairage with a view to profit, first on his own account, and afterwards in connection with others, as a company, in their endeavours to establish a market, but in which they failed:—Held, to be a trading as a hay dealer within the operation of the bankruptcy laws. Exp. Adams, Re Kirk, Exp. Adams, Re Westbrook, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 127. [234 (6)].

3. Where a farmer takes in horses for friends and trains them, and thereby receives a profit, this is not sufficient to constitute the farmer a trader. Exp. Clater, Exp. Denison, Re Wilkinson, 48 L. T. 648. [234 (6)].

4. Leave given to the committee of the estate of a lunatic trader to consent to an adjudication in bankruptcy against the lunatic. Re Lee, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 216; 48 L. T. 193; 31 W. R. 802. [236 (7)].

5. A surgeon who dispenses his own medicines is a trader within the Bankruptcy Act 1849. Nicholson v. Cooper, 1 L. T., N. S., 184. [237 (2)].

6. Members of Parliament are within the operation of the 72nd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849. Exp. Mostyn, 1 W. R. 375. [237 (1)].

7. A sculptor is not a trader within the meaning of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, but he can be made a bankrupt as a dealer in marble, and as a worker of goods and commodities. Re Bailey, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 65. [237 (17)].

8. An assistant master in a school, at a fixed salary, is within s. 168 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849. Exp. Collinet, Re Winter, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 82. [238 (13)].

9. Definition of a scrivener and of a bill broker. A few money transactions, incidental to some other business, are not within the meaning of the Bankrupt Law. But the number and extent of such transactions, where they are carried on with the intention of gaining a profit in the regular way of business, will not affect the operation of the Bankrupt Laws, where it is contended that such transactions were incidental to some other business not within the scope of the Bankrupt Laws. The intention in carrying them on must be gathered by their extent as compared with that of the other business, and the mode in which they were transacted. Re Lane, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 146. [238 (14)].

10. F., a fisherman, was the owner of twelve fishing smacks, which he used for the purposes of that pursuit, and occasionally, when there was room to spare, he brought home the fish of other persons, and was paid for the conveyance:—Held, that the ownership of the smacks, and the occasional conveyance of fish for a profit, did not constitute a trading within the meaning of the Bankrupt Laws as a ship-owner or a carrier. Re Forge, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 98. [233 (1)].

11. E. and F. being in partnership as wine merchants, F. brought an action in the Chancery Division for a dissolution of the partnership, and an order was made by the Court for a dissolution and the appointment of a receiver, under which a receiver took possession of the partnership effects and carried on the business, F. ceasing to take any part in the business, and having no other occupation than that of book-keeper to a trading company. An action having been commenced against E. and F. upon bills accepted by the firm before the receiver took possession, judgment was signed against F. and his separate property taken in execution for a sum exceeding 50%:—Held, that F. was not at the time of the execution a "trader" within the meaning of s. 87 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, 32 & 33 Vict., c. 71. Dave v. Vergara, 11 L. R., Q. B. D., 241; 49 L. T. 41; 47 J. P. 583. [240 (11)].

12. If a petitioning creditor alleges that the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy which can be committed only by a trader, the onus is on him to prove that the debtor was, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, a trader at the time when the act was committed. Exp. Salaman, Re Taylor, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 391; 47 L. T. 495; 31 W. R. 282.—Per Jessel, M. R. [241 (9)].

13. Bill of sale by a lodging-house keeper of all her household furniture in consideration of a bygone debt, secured by a promissory note:—Held, void as an act of bankruptcy after possession taken and sale prior to the adjudication. Re Smith, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 264. [245 (1)].

14. In order that a deed, assigning the whole of a debtor's property as security for an existing debt, may not be fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy within sub-s. 2 of s. 6 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, on the ground that the assignee agreed to make further advances to the assignor, it is not necessary that the agreement should be technically binding at law or in equity; a bona fide promise is sufficient. Exp. Wilkinson, Re Berry, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 788; 52 L. J., Ch., 637; 48 L. T. 495; 31 W. R. 649. [247 (8)].

The question in all such cases is whether the arrangement was made bona fide with the view of enabling the debtor to continue his business, or whether it was a mere scheme to obtain payment of the existing debt. Exp. Dann or Thorpe, Re Parker (17 L. R., Ch. D., 26; 51 L. J., Ch., 290; 44 L. T. 760; 29 W. R., 771. Affirming 43 L. T. 704), commented on. Ib.

15. A trader in insolvent circumstances executes under pressure a deed of assignment, substantially comprising the whole of his property in trade, to bona fide creditors:—Held, that on his being adjudicated a bankrupt within three days after the execution of the deed of assignment, the deed was in itself an act of bankruptcy, and void as against his assignees. Exp. Bailey, Re Barrell, 1 W. R. 343. [249 (8).

A trader, on the 20th December 1851, assigned to some of his creditors all his debts, bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other securities, and all books of account in which such debts or sums were entered, as a security for their debt; and at the same time, although not personally known by the trader, writs on two judgments, obtained some time previously, were in the hands of the sheriff, who on the 22nd December levied execution on the trader's stock-in-trade and furniture. On the 21th December the trader was adjudged bankrupt, on a petition presented on the 23rd.—Held, that the assignment was void as against the assignees under the bankruptcy. S. C. 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 48.

1. C. assigned all his estate and effects to H., in consideration of H. having previously become surety for him for 100*l.*, and also of a present advance of 55*l.* The deed contained a proviso, permitting C. to retain possession of the property until default by him in paying the 100*l.* when due, and the 55*l.* when required. No default was made up to the time of the bankruptcy of C.; and the property was in the possession of C. at the time of the bankruptcy, and was sold by the assignees by consent of H., he submitting his right to the same to the judgment of the Court.—Held, that the assignment was an act of bankruptcy, and that the proceeds of the sale passed to the assignees of H. Exp. Harvey, Re Collins, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 194. [249 (11).

2. H., by deed, assigned all his shop and dwelling-house, stock-in-trade, etc., and property at W. or elsewhere, in consideration of an old debt and a present advance, subject to a proviso for redemption. The mortgagee ultimately took possession, and proceeded to sell. A few days before possession was taken, H. departed from his house, but left his address behind, and promised to return on a certain day. He did return for a few hours, but disappointed a creditor he had promised to pay.—Held, that the deed and departure were both acts of bankruptcy. Re Holloway, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 241. [249 (11).

3. A lace manufacturer being pressed by a creditor, assigned to him by bill of sale four lace machines to secure the then balance of 465*l.*, and any future balance that might arise. The value of the machines was about two-thirds of his entire property, and the remaining assets were insufficient to meet his unsecured debts.—Held, that the transfer of the machines was not an act of bankruptcy, and that it was good as against creditors. Harris v. Wanklen, 4 W. R. 51. [249 (11).

4. A bill of sale to secure an existing debt and a present advance, which assigns the whole of the grantor's property, including that which he may purchase by means of the advance, is not necessarily void as an act of bankruptcy. Graham v. Chapman (12 C. B. 85) on this point overruled. Exp. Hawtwell, Re Henningway, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 626; 52 L. J., Ch., 737; 48 L. T. 742; 31 W. R. 711. [250 (5).

intent to defeat or delay creditors. Pennell v. Dawson, 18 C. B. 355. [250 (5).

6. A petitioning creditor, who alleges that his debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy, by departing from his dwelling-house with intent to defeat and delay his creditors, is bound to show that the debtor is alive and in some other place. Exp. Giesel, Re Stanger, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 436; 48 L. T. 405; 31 W. R. 264; 53 L. J., Ch., 349. [265 (1).

7. The 87th section of the 6 Will. 4, c. 14 (s. 73 of the English Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16), is retrospective, as to conveyances made before the act. Semble, it is not so as to commissions before the act. Clements v. Eccles, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 229. [269 (1).

8. Where the debt alleged to be due in the summons is founded on a covenant in a deed executed by the intended bankrupt, the affidavit of debt must state all the parties to the deed. Anon., 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 122. [292 (7).

9. By s. 78 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, the affidavit of debt and notice must state "the delivery to the trader personally, or to some adult inmate at his usual or last known place of abode or business, of an account in writing of the particulars of his demand" Where the affidavit did not state where the service was effected, the summons was dismissed, with costs. Anon., 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 115. [292 (7).

10. On a trader debtor summons, the affidavit of debt stated that the claim was for the value of goods deposited with the defendant for the purpose of being worked upon. Affidavit held to be insufficient, and summons dismissed, with costs. Anon., 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 91. [292 (7).

11. A debtor's summons and the proceedings upon it are proceedings in bankruptcy within s. 82 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and therefore will not be invalidated by any mere formal defect or irregularity where no injustice is done thereby. A debtor was served with a debtor's summons, on the face of which the amount of the debt was stated as 24*l.*, but the cause of debt was stated, and the annexed particulars were referred to, which showed the debt to be 74*l.* The creditor took out the summons in person and not by a solicitor, but it was served not by himself but by his clerk;—Held, that as the debtor in the circumstances must have known the amount of the debt and could not have been deceived or misled, the defect in the summons and also that in the mode of service was cured by the 82nd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. Exp. & Re Johnson, 32 W. R. 175; 25 L. R., Ch. D., 112; 53 L. J., Ch., 309; 50 L. T. 157. [293 (10).

12. When a debtor's summons is founded on a judgment debt it is not necessary to state the consideration for the judgment in the summons, and a misstatement of the consideration will not vitiate the summons. Exp. & Re Rizzo, 22 L. R., Ch. D. 529; 52 L. J., Ch., 535; 48 L. T. 376; 31 W. R. 373. [293 (10).

13. A trader debtor summons, under s. 78 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, must be served four days at least before the time for appearance, exclusive of the first, and exclusive of the last day. Anon., 2 Bank. & Ins. 53. [297 (3).

1. In serving a summons issued under s. 78 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, it is not necessary to leave with the person served an original of the summons, but it is sufficient to show him the original, and leave with him a true copy. If the copy so left does not contain the signature of the Commissioner it is not a true copy, and the service is irregular. Exp. Tindal, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 129.

2. Substituted service of summons on a debtor keeping out of the way, directed to be made both at his last-known place of abode and on his solicitor. Debtor ordered to pay the costs. Re —, 3 N. R. 248. [297 (3).]

Rule granted under s. 79 of Bankruptcy Act 1869, and s. 121 of Consolidation Act 1849, against judgment-debtor, to show cause why substituted service of a judgment-debtor summons should not be made. Id. 197.

3. Where a party, summoned to pay a debt under s. 78 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, files an admission as to part of such debt, and makes an affidavit pursuant to s. 82 of the same statute, that he has a good defence upon the merits as to the residue thereof, and the Court dispenses with his entering into the bond referred to in the same section, such party does not commit an act of bankruptcy by not paying, within seven days after the filing of such admission, the portion of the debt so admitted. Re Oldfield, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 1.

4. Where the admission of a debt, under a trader debtor summons, was taken by a solicitor in the country on unstamped paper, and was not stamped until after the day on which the summons was returnable, the Court declined to receive it as an admission under the 84th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849; but, semble, the point will be reserved, if necessary, as an equitable defence to the adjudication. Anon., 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 116.

[298 (9).]

5. The amount of the differences due by a defaulter on the London Stock Exchange (as fixed by the official assignee of that body under its rules) to a Stock Exchange creditor, is a "liquidated sum" within the meaning of s. 6. of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and will support a bankruptcy petition by the creditor against the defaulter. Exp. & Re Ward, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 132; 52 L. J., Ch., 73; 48 L. T. 332; 31 W. R. 112.

[299 (2).]

6. In order to justify the issuing of a debtor's summons under s. 7 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, the alleged debt must be an exigible debt; if the debtor would have any defence, legal or equitable, to an action for the debt, the summons ought to be dismissed. Exp. Foster, or Exp. Heilbert, Re Foster, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 797; 52 L. J., Ch., 577; 48 L. T. 497; 31 W. R. 774. Affirming 47 L. T. 738.

Two partners in trade whose affairs were embarrassed without filing a liquidation petition, summoned a meeting of their creditors. Nineteen out of twenty-seven creditors attended the meeting, their debts amounting to 2,400l. out of a total of 2,628l., and a resolution was passed that a deed of assignment of the debtor's estate and effects should be made to three persons named, as trustees for the benefit of the creditors, with power for them to carry on the business for such time as they should think fit, and to sell the concern as a going concern, or otherwise. One of the debtors was to have his discharge on payment of 200l., or otherwise, as the creditors might direct. The resolution was signed by the chairman of the meeting, but by no one else. The day after the meeting the debtors gave up possession of their assets to the persons named in the resolution as trustees, and those persons carried on the business for a few weeks, and proceeded to collect the book debts. A draft deed of assignment was prepared in accordance with the resolution, but it was never executed, the other creditors not having assented to the arrangement embodied in the resolution.—Held, that, inasmuch as all the creditors did not come in and assent to the arrangement, there was no binding agreement between the debtors and their creditors, and that, consequently, a creditor who was present at the meeting, even if he had assented to the resolution, which appeared to be doubtful, was entitled to issue a debtor's summons for his debt. Id.

7. The sufficiency of the affidavit of debt may be disputed at the time of showing cause against the adjudication, although no objection to it was taken at the return of the summons. Anon., 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 192.

8. Under a trader debtor summons under the Bankruptcy Act 1849, the commissioners can inquire whether the person summoned is a "trader" subject to bankruptcy. Anon., 1 Fonb. N. R. 251.

A coal-owner is not such a trader. Id.

9. Proceedings on a debtor's summons, pending the trial of an action for the debt, will not necessarily be stayed without security, though the alleged debtor is solvent, and there is a bona fide dispute as to the debt. The probability of success in the action is one element to be considered. Exp. Sewell (13 L. R., Ch. D., 266; 49 L. J., Bky., 15; 28 W. R. 286) explained. Exp. Jacobson, Re Pineoffs, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 312; 52 L. J., Ch., 561; 48 L. T. 197; 31 W. R. 554.

[303 (8).]

10. Where the proceedings under a debtor's summons are stayed pending an action to try the validity of an alleged debt, and in the opinion of the Court there is more than a reasonable probability that the alleged debtor has a good defence to the action, the Court will not require the debtor to give security. Exp. & Re Smith, 48 L. T. 320.

[303 (8).]

11. A trader who, on being served with a trader debtor summons, has appeared and admitted the debt, cannot, within the seven days limited by the 81st section of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, defeat the creditor's proceedings by obtaining an order for protection from process under the arrangement clauses. The creditor, however, must prosecute his proceedings with due diligence; and, semble, an unexplained delay of eighteen days from the expiration of the seven days to the filing the petition for adjudication, would be a bar to his proceeding to adjudication. Exp. Walker, Re Haywood, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 145.

12. A trader debtor summons, taken out previously to the registration of a deed of composition, executed under s. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, allowed, notwithstanding that it is made returnable after the registration of such deed. Re —, 2 N. R. 17.

1. Where the bankrupt was described, in the petition for adjudication, as of two places, in neither of which he carried on the business alleged, and the place where he did carry on business was not adverted to, and it did not appear that any one had been misled, or that the misdescription was made with any fraudulent intent:—Held, a sufficient description within the 89th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1849. Exp. Adams, Re Westbrook, Exp. Adams, Re Kirk, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 127.

[305 (6).

2. The Court will require some evidence as to where debts were contracted, before making an order to allow a debtor to file his petition in London under the provisions of s. 94 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. Re Walker, 1 N. R. 355.

[309 (15).

3. Where, on the ex parte application of a creditor, an order for the transfer of a petition for adjudication, and the proceedings thereunder, from a country District Court to the London District Court, was made by one of the Registrars as deputy for one of the London Commissioners during the absence of such Commissioner, and also of the Senior Commissioner; quære, whether in the absence of circumstances showing urgency, such an order would be sustained if questioned without delay, and before any steps are taken under it. Exp. Bilson, Re Steele, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 113.

[311 (1).

4. The Court will order the transfer of a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy, and the proceedings thereunder, to a district Court, where there are grounds for believing that the proceedings were instituted by the bankrupt in the London Court, with an intent to elude his creditors. Re Barnard, 1 N. R. 231.

[311 (4).

5. The Court will not order the transfer of proceedings in bankruptcy to a district Court merely on the ground that such a transfer might be for the convenience of, and is desired by, a large majority in number and value of creditors. Any such application ought to be made by petition, on the part of the creditors. Re Pizey, 1 N. R. 355.

[311 (4).

6. Section 94 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, is not a general, but a special provision, applicable to the case of the debtor petitioning against himself. Exp. Harrison, 1 N. R. 442.

[312 (3).

7. Action for maliciously procuring evidence against the plaintiff whereby he was imprisoned for sixteen months by order of Commissioner of Insolvent Court:—Held, that such order is the act of the Court, and therefore the plaintiff cannot maintain his action six years after the date of such order for imprisonment. Violet v. Simpson, 6 W. R. 12; 27 L. J., Q. B., 138; 21 Jur. 1217; 30 L. T. 114.

[313 (2).

8. A. sued B., a trader, on a bill of exchange, and also took out a summons in bankruptcy against him in respect of the same debt. On application a judge at chambers stayed proceedings on B.'s paying the debt and costs. B. refused to pay the costs of the summons in bankruptcy, and obtained an order of a judge at chambers on A. to deliver up the bill of exchange:—Held, that the order was right. Corns v. Taylor, 3 W. R. 14; 10 Exch. 441; 18 Jur. 963.

9. A petitioning creditor did not proceed with the adjudication within three days. Another creditor sought to proceed with the adjudication, and proved his debt, etc., but did not attend the Court, having obtained an order, under rule 12, dispensing with his personal attendance. The original petitioner subsequently filed an affidavit of debt, but did not attend the Court, or obtain an order under rule 12. His affidavit was ordered to be taken off the file. Quære, can a petitioning creditor proceed with the adjudication after three days, not having obtained an extension of time. Re Bridges, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 85.

[314 (10).

10. A second petition against an uncertificated bankrupt is not absolutely void at law. Exp. & Re Parkes, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 113.

[320 (8).

Prior Scotch Sequestration—Jurisdiction to make Adjudication.] 11. Though the Court has jurisdiction to adjudge bankrupt a debtor against whom there is existing a prior unclosed Scotch sequestration in which he has not obtained a discharge, the Court has a discretion in the matter, and it will decline to make an adjudication if it does not appear that the debtor has any assets in England, or any debts contracted since the commencement of the sequestration. Exp. & Re Robinson, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 816; 48 L. T. 501; 31 W. R. 553.

Per Jessel, M. R.:—Prima facie the existence of a Scotch sequestration is a reason for declining to make an injunction. Ib.

12. Where the notice to show cause against the adjudication on the part of the bankrupt was served within the seven days allowed by the 104th section of the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act, and on the day appointed for the hearing the case went off upon a technical objection to the form of the notice:—Held, on the authority of Exp. Castelli (1 De G. M. & G. 437; 21 L. J., N. S., Dky., 5) that the bankrupt was in time within the meaning of this section; and, on application, the time for showing cause was enlarged, to allow the bankrupt to amend his notice. Exp. & Re Harding, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 151.

13. The notice to dispute an adjudication must specify distinctly the grounds upon which it is intended to proceed; and it is not sufficient in such notice to state generally the bankrupt's intention to show cause, etc., notwithstanding he intends to dispute the adjudication on every point. Exp. & Re Harding, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 151.

[322 (4).

14. Practice as to staying publication of the adjudication of bankruptcy in the Gazette, where question pending before Court of Common Law. Exp. & Re Mostyn, 1 W. R. 375; 17 Jur. 655.

15. The Court will remove the proceedings under a country fiat to London, if it is for the general benefit of the creditors. Exp. Sham, 1 W. R. 205.

[329 (6).

16. Order necessary to enable same party to issue a new fiat, where, from mistake in former, it had not been prosecuted in time. Re Edwards, 1 Dea. & Ch. 531. [330 (9)]

1. A trustee took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act:—Held, that this was a good ground for his removal. Harris v. Harris, 29 Beav. 107; 7 Jur., N. S., 955; 9 W. R. 444. [334 (3)]

2. A devisee in trust of real estate having become bankrupt, and having absconded, and the will creating the trust containing no power for the appointment of a new trustee, on a petition presented in a suit which had been instituted for the administration of the testator's estate, and entitled in the suit, and in the matter of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, and the Trustee Act 1850, a new trustee appointed in the place of the bankrupt, and the assignees directed to convey to him. Breed v. Caffall, 3 W. R. 258.

See also p. 928, par. (1), et seqq.

3. Where all the creditors who have proved under the bankruptcy except one, on whose behalf, the creditor being since dead, there is no one able to give a sufficient legal discharge, have been paid in full, and have signed the petition to supersede the fiat, the petition will be superseded accordingly, notwithstanding the bankrupt is an outlaw for not surrendering at his last examination, on payment of the debt due to the deceased creditor into court. Exp. & Re Barley, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 117. [334 (3)]

4. Application to annul bankruptcy before advertisement must be made strictly in accordance with s. 110 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861. Anon., 2 N. R. 389. [340 (22)]

5. Where a person who has been adjudicated bankrupt does not show cause against the validity of the adjudication before the Commissioner within the period prescribed by s. 104 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, "or commence an action, suit, or other proceeding to dispute or annul the fiat," etc., within the period prescribed by s. 233 of the same statute, the Court will not annul the adjudication on a petition of the bankrupt, notwithstanding it appears that at the time of such adjudication the bankrupt was a minor under twenty years of age. Exp. & Re West, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 20, 58. [341 (7)]

Where a person who has been adjudicated bankrupt does not show cause against the validity of the adjudication before the Commissioner within the period prescribed by s. 104, a petition to annul such adjudication may be presented within the period prescribed by s. 233; but such last-mentioned petition should be presented to the Lord Chancellor, and not to the Commissioner. Ib.

6. Semble, the Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to annul with consent of creditors, save under ss. 130, 131 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849. Exp. Harris, 1 F. N. R. 262. [344 (2)]

Where the bankrupt may have to be prosecuted for offences under the Bankrupt Law, the Court will not so annul, even if there be jurisdiction. Ib.

7. Whether a trader under sentence of outlawry, and whose property is therefore forfeited to the Crown, has available assets sufficient to support an adjudication of bankruptcy on his own petition under the 20th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1849. Quære. Exp. Adams, Re Hawkes, 6 W. R. 694; 1 L. T., N. S., 243. [351 (3)]

8. The 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 18, is applicable to a case not only of deficiency in the amount, but to any original defect in the nature of the petitioning creditor's debt. Exp. Hall, Mont. & M. 39. S. P. Exp. Robinson, 7 L. J., Ch., 75. [352 (7)]

9. Fraud, if clearly proved, is a sufficient ground for annulling an adjudication in bankruptcy; but mere conceal is insufficient since the passing of the Bankruptcy Act of 1849. Exp. Adams, Re Westbrook, Exp. Adams, Re Kirk, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 127. [357 (19)]

So also, absence of assets is not per se sufficient. Ib.

10. A substantially correct description of the trade carried on by a bankrupt, in the adjudication of bankruptcy, is sufficient. Exp. Hennett, 1 W. R. 278; 1 Eq. Rep. 182. [363 (14)]

11. Petition for adjudication by a bankrupt, who in such petition had described himself as of a different place from that of which he was described in a bill of sale executed by him shortly before his bankruptcy, dismissed. Re Sanders, 3 N. R. 196. [361 (6)]

12. Adjudication of bankruptcy made on a judgment, valid at the time of commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, will not be annulled without payment by bankrupt of costs in bankruptcy, although such judgment has in the meantime been satisfied. Anon., 2 N. R. 516. [370 (8)]

13. Where, in a petition to annul, fraud and collusion are charged, and the charge is wholly unsupported by affidavit, and not substantiated by the evidence, and the adjudication is upheld, the petitioner will be ordered to pay the costs. Exp. Adams, Re Westbrook, Exp. Adams, Re Kirk, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 127. [371 (12)]

14. A mortgagee of chattels belonging to a bankrupt, which had been sold by the assignees as being in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt, applied to annul the adjudication, the time having elapsed after which the bankrupt himself could not apply for that purpose, and the Commissioner granted the application, on the ground that the bankrupt was not a trader within the meaning of the Bankrupt Laws. The Court of Appeal, being satisfied on the evidence that the application to annul was made at the instigation and for the benefit of the bankrupt, reversed the decision of the Commissioner, and restored the adjudication, without deciding whether the bankrupt was or was not a trader. Exp. Emery, Re Bradbury, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 265. [373 (2)]

15. The Court will not, unless under very special circumstances, appoint a female to the office of creditor's assignee. Re Kent, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 77. [374 (11)]

16. The Commissioner will not interfere with the choice of the major part in value of the creditors, unless they choose an improper person; but a trustee who has to account to the bankrupt's estate is not a proper person to be appointed assignee, and if objected to, such appointment will not be sanctioned by the Commissioner. Exp. Bates, Re Meadows, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 285.

[374 (11).]

1. On a petition to remove an assignee for entering into an agreement with the bankrupt to compromise his debt, it being shown by the respondent that he acted under a bond fide belief that all the other creditors were to be equally compounded with, the petition was dismissed, with costs. Exp. Davison, Re Beresford, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 89.

[380 (2).]

2. The trustee of an estate in bankruptcy had a large claim against an insolvent estate. Before the claim was admitted he joined in the purchase of assets of the latter estate:—Held, that the sale must be set aside. Doswell v. Coaks, 27 L. R., Ch. D., 424; 51 L. T. 242. Reversing 23 L. 4. The Court will order the apprehension of an assignee, who, having been summoned by the Court to answer matters touching a bankrupt's estate, fails to appear. Exp. Haynes, Re Brown, 1 N. R. 308. [387 (1).]

5. The 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 104, directing payment of 20 per cent. by assignees retaining part of the estate in their hands, means 20 per cent. per annum. Exp. Cunliffe, 1 De G. 408. [388 (14).]

6. Where assignees in bankruptcy die before accounting, and leave only real estate, the creditors of bankrupt have a lien on it. Primrose v. Bromley, 1 Atk. 59. [388 (8).]

7. The costs of managers unnecessarily employed by assignees in bankruptcy will not be allowed. Exp. Roberts, Re Holden, 3 N. R. 230. [391 (12).]

8. An official assignee under the Court of Bankruptcy received certain sums of money on account of bankrupt's estates, and paid them into a general account standing in his own name at the banker's, where they were mixed with his own moneys:—Held, in a suit for the administration of his estate, that the balance at the banker's was not "camarked" for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate, but they must come in pari passu with the other creditors. Pennell v. Deffell, 1 W. R. 239; 1 Eq. Rep. 579; 4 De G. M. & G. 372; 18 Jur. 273; 23 L. J., Ch., 115. [395 (11).]

9. Assignees in bankruptcy are entitled to all such fixtures, set up for purposes of trade, as come within the principle of Hellawell v. Eastwood (6 Exch. Rep. 295), and which the trader might remove. Stock-in-trade in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy passes to the assignees. Exp. Humphreys, Re Gibbs, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 68. 10. Mortgage for a term of years of a brewery, tap, malt lofts, and premises, together with plant, fixtures, and machinery, and assignment to mortgagee of plant, goods, utensils, implements, and things on or about the premises. Proviso for redemption on payment of the mortgage debt on a day certain, or at such earlier day as the mortgagee should appoint; and that until default, the mortgagor should retain possession of the premises, etc. The mortgagor remained in possession of the premises, etc., up to his bankruptcy:—Held (on submission to the jurisdiction), that certain plant and fixtures enumerated below of a movable nature passed to the assignees. Exp. Langton, Re Clarkson, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 241. [417 (10).]

11. Where consignors claim cargo in the possession of the assignees of the consignee (who became bankrupt during the voyage) in respect of an alleged stoppage in transitu, the time and manner of the stoppage must be shown. A statement in the petition that the stoppage took place, verified by an affidavit in general terms that the contents of the petition are true, is not sufficient. Exp. Anderson, Re Manico, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 66. [421 (2).]

12. L., being entitled to a reversionary interest, dies, leaving a husband surviving, who cannot reduce it into possession, it being reversionary. The husband becomes bankrupt and dies, and administration is taken out to husband and wife, and the reversionary interest falls in. Upon bill filed by assignee of husband against administrator of husband and wife:—Held, that the husband was entitled to the chose in action as if he had bought a reversionary interest of a stranger. The assignees, therefore, were absolutely entitled. That the 12th and 13th Vict. was not retrospective, and a notice of the bankruptcy, being disputed, could only be effectual where there was a right to dispute, a proper notice conferring no right. The plaintiffs were therefore entitled to a decree. Drew v. Long, 1 W. R. 207, 318; 17 Jur. 173; 1 Eq. Rep. 58. [423 (3).]

13. A testator gave the residue of his property to his children, sons and daughters, in a specified manner; and his widow left all her property to her four daughters as tenants in common, and died. One daughter married, her husband became bankrupt, and she died; and another daughter died unmarried, whereby those two shares became undisposed of, and formed part of the testator's estate; and the bankruptcy intervening between the death of the widow and the death of the daughter, wife of the bankrupt, upon the question whether such share belonged to the bankrupt or to the assignees:—Held, it belonged to the assignees. Gompertz v. Hollander, 2 W. R. 695; 2 Eq. Rep. 1280. [423 (3).]

14. A landlord who has levied a distress for rent prior to any act of bankruptcy on the part of the tenant, is entitled to retain six years' unpaid rent out of the proceeds of the sale of the goods distrained, although the tenant was adjudicated a bankrupt before the sale. *Exp. 15. An eleemosynary allowance made by the bankrupt's family, and paid into the hands of his wife, does not come within the terms of rule 3 of the 159th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861. Anon., 1 N. R. 181. [441 (2).]

16. An undischarged bankrupt died intestate within three years after the close of his bankruptcy, having in the interval acquired fresh property and contracted fresh debts. Only a small dividend had been paid in the bankruptcy, and the bankrupt had not, after the close of the bankruptcy, made any further payments to the creditors who had proved. An action was brought by one of the new creditors to administer the bankrupt's estate. The estate was sufficient to pay the costs of the action, to pay the new creditors in full, and to leave a surplus. This surplus was claimed by the old creditors:—Held, that the administratrix was entitled to the surplus, and that the old creditors had no right to it. Re Smith, Green v. Smith (No. 2), 24 L. R., Ch. D., 672; 52 L. J., Ch., 921; 49 L. T. 297.

The creditors of an undischarged bankrupt, under the Act of 1869, have no rights against property acquired by him after the close of the bankruptcy, except such rights as are given to them by s. 54, and those rights cannot be enforced after the death of the bankrupt. Section 12 applies to property acquired by an undischarged bankrupt after the close of the bankruptcy, as well as to property divisible among the creditors in the bankruptcy. Exp. Kelly, Re Simmons (7 L. R., Ch. D., 161), explained. Ib.

1. Where an uncertificated bankrupt has been suffered to trade without interruption or claim on the part of the assignees of the first bankruptcy, they are not entitled to any after-acquired property in the bankrupt's possession at the time of the second bankruptcy, as against the assignees under that bankruptcy. Exp. & Re Parkes, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 113.

And, semble, the ignorance of such trading on the part of the assignees of the first bankruptcy, without evidence of diligence or activity on their parts to enforce their rights, will not alter the case. Ib.

2. Traders executed an assignment of all their effects in trust for their creditors, and afterwards sued out a fiat against themselves, but did not apply for adjudication. Two creditors who could have sued out a fiat against the bankrupts, and who could, under it, have impeached the deed, applied for and obtained an adjudication:—Held, that the assignees could successfully impeach the deed. Exp. Jackson, 1 De G. 609; 12 Jur. 770; 17 L. J., Bky., 19.

3. Whether or not the assignees of a bankrupt can set aside a deed of assignment of his estate and effects as fraudulent and void against creditors without showing that there continues to exist a debt provable in the bankruptcy which existed at the time of the execution of the deed. Quære. Exp. & Re Taylor, 5 De G. M. & G. 392.

[454 (2).]

4. An agent, who, in obedience to the previous direction of his principal, pays away money of the principal which is in his hands, knowing before he makes the payment (though he did not know when he received the money) that the payment will, when completed, constitute an act of bankruptcy on the part of the principal, is not liable to the trustee in the subsequent bankruptcy of the principal for the money so paid away. The trustee could recover the money from the agent only on the ground that he had paid away the money of the trustee, and in such a case the money would become the trustee's money only on the completion of the act of bank-

5. The Court will not take a trust deed out of the possession of the bankrupt's trustees. Exp. Holder, 3 Dea. & Ch. 276; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 64.

[454 (7).]

6. Lord Mannors would not on petition make a person, who had taken from bankrupt an assignment, which he admitted before the commissioners was in his possession, and that at the time of taking it he knew their situation, produce it to the assignees to take advantage of it. No costs. Re Usher, 2 Moll. 444.

[455 (3).]

7. Application for an order to deliver papers, etc., under the 65th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, must be made within a reasonable time, and it is in the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse such application. Re Woodley, 2 N. R. 17.

[455 (3).]

8. Where legal interest in copyhold is in one, and equitable interest is in another, Court can order, in bankruptcy, trustee to surrender without consent of the cestui que trust. Exp. Butler, 1 Atk. 215.

[455 (6).]

9. The lessee of certain premises having agreed prior to the filing of a liquidation petition to assign the lease to a third party, the trustee in the liquidation will not be permitted to execute a disclaimer of the lease except upon the terms of executing such assignment, but upon executing the assignment he will be entitled to an indemnity against any liability which he may incur thereby. Exp. Edmunds, Re Tipping, 48 L. T. 77.

[460 (3).]

10. The assignee of a lease became bankrupt, and his trustee disclaimed under the 23rd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. In an action brought by the lessor against the original lessee upon the covenant in his lease, for rent accrued since the commencement of the bankruptcy.—Held, that the disclaimer by the trustee of the assignee did not affect the rights and liabilities of the lessor and the original lessee, and that the lessee was still liable under his covenant. East & West India Dock Co. v. Hill, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 14; 52 L. J., Ch., 44; 47 L. T. 270; 31 W. R. 55.

[464 (3).]

11. Although a trustee in bankruptcy, who has taken actual possession of leasehold property of the bankrupt, receives notice from the landlord to disclaim the lease under the Bankruptcy Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict., c. 71), but does not disclaim, he may nevertheless relieve himself of liability to the landlord by assigning the lease, even without having previously offered to surrender it, and the mere fact that the trustee knows the assignee to be a pauper will not invalidate such assignment. Hopkinson v. Loeving, 11 L. R., Q. B. D., 92; 52 L. J., Q. B., 391.

12. The trustee in a bankruptcy may disclaim a lease of the bankrupt even though the lease has been determined by effluxion of time or by forfeiture between the appointment of the trustee and the execution of the disclaimer. And in such a case the effect of the disclaimer, when executed, is that neither the lessor nor the trustee can claim the benefit of any provisions contained in the lease which were to come into operation at the expiration or sooner determination of the term. Exp. Paterson, Re Throckmorton (11 L. R., Ch. D., 908) followed and approved. Exp. Dyke, Re Morrish, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 410; 52 L. J., Ch., 570; 48 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 278. Affirming 47 L. T. 26; 30 W. R. 952. [468 (7)].

Semble, that the trustee may also disclaim a lease which has been determined before his appointment. Ib.

1. On giving leave, under r. 28 of the Bankruptcy Rules 1871, to the trustee in a bankruptcy to disclaim a leasehold interest of the bankrupt, the Court will not order the trustee to pay the landlord any compensation for his use and occupation of the demised property, except under special circumstances, one instance being where the trustee's occupation has been beneficial to the bankrupt's estate. Exp. Isherwood, Re Knight, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 384; 52 L. J., Ch., 370; 48 L. T. 398; 31 W. R. 442. [468 (9)].

Rule 28 does not mean that in every case in which leave to disclaim a lease is given, the lessor is to be placed in the same position as regards the interval before execution of the disclaimer as if there had been no disclaimer. Exp. Ladbury, Re Turner (17 L. R., Ch. D., 532; 50 L. J., Ch., 838; 45 L. T. 5), explained and distinguished. Ib.

Notwithstanding the insertion of an attornment clause in a mortgage deed, the real relation between the parties is that, not of landlord and tenant, but of mortgagee and mortgagor, and this fact, as well as the nature of the rent reserved by the clause, must be taken into account in considering whether, on giving leave to the trustee in the bankruptcy of the mortgagor to disclaim the tenancy created by the attornment clause, any terms should be imposed for the benefit of the mortgagee. Ib.

2. When the trustee in a bankruptcy applies for leave to disclaim a lease of the bankrupt, the Court will not order any compensation to be paid to the landlord unless the trustee has kept him out of possession of the property, and his occupation has resulted in a benefit to the bankrupt's estate. Exp. Izard, Re Bushell (No. 2), 23 L. R., Ch. D., 115; 48 L. T. 502. [468 (9)].

The principle on which the Court exercises its discretion under r. 28 is that the trustee ought not to be allowed to increase the bankrupt's estate at the expense of the landlord. Exp. Isherwood, Re Knight (22 L. R., Ch. D., 384) explained. Ib.

3. In determining whether, on giving leave to the trustee in a bankruptcy to disclaim a lease of the bankrupt, the trustee should be ordered to pay compensation to the landlord in respect of his occupation of the leasehold premises, the Court will have regard not merely to the question whether the occupation has actually produced a profit to the bankrupt's estate, but also to the question whether the possession was retained by the trustee with a view to obtaining such a profit. Exp. Arnal, Re Witton, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 26; 49 L. T. 221; 53 L. J., Ch., 134. [468 (9)].

The rule as laid down by Cotton, L. J., in Exp. Isherwood, Re Knight (22 L. R., Ch. D., 484), adopted in preference to that expressed by Jessel, M. R., in Exp. Izard, Re Bushell (23 L. R., Ch. D., 115). Ib.

The Court ordered compensation to be paid by the trustee in a bankruptcy as a condition of giving him leave to disclaim the lease of the bankrupt's place of business, although during part of the time during which the trustee had been in occupation a bailiff had been in possession of the bankrupt's goods under a distress for rent, and the landlord had been allowed to place bills on the premises stating that they were to be let, and that application for that purpose was to be made to him. Ib.

The imposing of conditions on the trustee is a matter of judicial discretion, and the Court of Appeal will not readily interfere with the exercise of discretion by the judge of first instance. Ib.

4. The discretion of the county court judge in giving leave to disclaim is not properly the subject of appeal. Exp. Edmonds, Re Tipping, 48 L. T. 77. [469 (2)].

5. Though debts, in general, were within the 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, s. 11, mortgages of real estate, whether original or by assignment, and though also secured by bond or covenant, were not. Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 407. [471 (8)].

6. When a trader is in possession at his place of business of articles not in their nature connected with his business, and the trustee in his bankruptcy claims the articles on the ground that the bankrupt was the reputed owner of them, much stronger evidence will be required to prove the reputed ownership than in the case of articles connected with the business, the inference from the nature of the articles being that they are not connected with the business. Exp. Lovering, Re Murrell, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 31; 52 L. J., Ch., 951; 49 L. T. 242; 32 W. R. 217. [475 (4)].

7. Where goods are in the order and disposition of a bankrupt at the time of the act of bankruptcy, but after that time come into the owner's possession, the person in possession may maintain trover against another converting the goods to his own use, relying upon a valid sale of the goods to him before the act of bankruptcy, and such person cannot by way of defence set up the title of the assignees under whom he does not claim. Jefferies v. South Western Railway Co., 4 W. R. 201; 25 L. J., Q. B., 107; 2 Jur., N. S., 230; 26 L. T. 214. [475 (9)].

8. M., in consideration of money lent and advanced to W., by deed covenanted with W., that if default were made by him in payment, W. should be at liberty to enter and take possession of the premises and effects of M., and to sell the same, and apply the purchase money in payment of expenses, and of the debt due to him, and account to M. for the surplus. M. made default in payment; and W., by his agent, entered on and took possession of the premises and effects, but did not sell. A few days after W. had taken possession, etc., M. was adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the premises and effects passed to the assignees. Exp. Wayman, Re Mellor, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 213. [476 (4)].

9. Semble, this Court ought not to make an order for sale under the 125th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, upon an ex parte application; and that the Court should not entertain an ex parte application for the order. Exp. & Re Plimmer, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 83. [478 (9)].

1. The order for sale by the Court of Bankruptcy of goods in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, with the consent of the true owner, need not state who the true owner was. Freshney v. Wells, 1 H. & N. 653; 26 L. J., Exch. 129. [478 (9)].

2. Where an assignee of furniture, etc., under a bill of sale allowed the goods to remain in the possession of the bankrupt, until after a petition for adjudication had been filed in this Court:—Held, the assignees were entitled to an order to sell the same for the benefit of the creditors under s. 125 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, as being "in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, with the consent and permission of the true owner." Exp. & Re Brock, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 102. [479 (6)].

3. Goods assigned by a trader, with a condition for redemption on payment of a debt on demand and a stipulation that he shall retain possession of them until default, are in his order and disposition, with the consent of the true owner, within the meaning of the bankrupt laws. And where the goods before such assignment had been assigned to another party, the assignees in bankruptcy, in an action by the party claiming under the second assignment, may set up that the goods were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the first assignee. Freshney v. Wells, 1 H. & N. 653; 26 L. J., Exch. 129. [480 (6)].

4. A trustee for sale of a testator's estates sold part of them, and paid the proceeds into court. A party entitled to a share of the testator's property assigned his interest to S. by way of mortgage, and S. gave notice of the assignment to the trustee, but did not obtain a stop order. The remainder of the estates was afterwards sold, and the proceeds paid into court under the decree in the suit. Subsequently the assignor took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act:—Held, that the notice given to the trustee was sufficient to take the assigned share out of the order and disposition of the assignor. Matthews v. Gabb, 15 Sim. 51; 9 Jur. 619. [485 (9)].

5. The fact that it is the custom of furniture dealers to let out furniture on a three years' hiring and purchase agreement does not disentitle the general public to assume that an ordinary householder is the real owner of the furniture which is in his house. Exp. Brooks, or Exp. Pickering, Re Fowler, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 261; 48 L. T. 453; 31 W. R. 833. Affirming 48 L. T. 32. [501 (5)].

The furniture in the dwelling-house of a trader having been seized under an execution, a friend of his bought it from the sheriff at a valuation, and then verbally agreed that the debtor should continue in possession of it and use it as before, paying, by way of rent, interest at 5 per cent. per annum on the purchase money, until he should be able to repurchase it at the price given for it. This arrangement was carried out, and the debtor remained in possession of the furniture as before, until he filed a liquidation petition.

He had not repurchased it. The trustee in the liquidation claimed it under the reputed ownership clause. It was admitted that there is a custom for furniture dealers to let out furniture on a three years' hiring and purchase agreement, but there was no other evidence as to the existence of any custom of hiring furniture:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to the furniture. Id.

6. On the 7th October 1874 B. mortgaged a policy effected on his own life with the L. Company to P., who on the 9th October 1874 gave notice of the mortgage to the insurance company. P., being indebted to the M. Bank on foot of a promissory note in which he joined for the accommodation of B., deposited the policy and mortgage deed with the bank on the 21st February 1878, but notice of the deposit was not given to the insurance company until July 1880. B. filed a petition for arrangement on the 12th September 1877, and under a resolution of the 12th March 1878, all his estates and effects were vested in the official assignees and a trustee, for the benefit of his creditors. P. also filed a petition for arrangement on the 13th June 1879, and under a resolution all his estates and effects were vested in the official assignees and a trustee, in trust for his creditors. On the 19th November 1879, P. and C., who were partners, were adjudicated bankrupts on a creditors' petition:—Held, that the policy of insurance was, at the date of the adjudication, in the order and disposition of P. with the consent of the true owners. Re Power, 11 L. R., Ir., 93. [501 (10)].

7. Notice to an assurance office of a deposit of a life policy need not be in writing: a verbal notice is sufficient. The taking possession by the equitable mortgagee may be at any time before actual bankruptcy. Exp. Tanner, Re Brock, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 136. [503 (10)].

8. C. and S. carried on business in partnership under the style of C. & Co. C. afterwards retired from the firm with the knowledge of the joint creditors; the dissolution was advertised, and S. continued the business in his own name. He was afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the partnership property was in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and belonged to his separate estate. The petition of joint creditors to be at liberty to prove against the partnership property dismissed. Exp. Fisher, Re Stewart, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 87. [508 (7)].

9. Contract for the purchase of fifty shares in a mining company. Purchaser accepted bills of exchange for the amount of the purchase money. It ultimately turned out that the vendor only possessed nineteen shares. On the purchaser producing the transfer for fifty shares, the officer of the company refused to register on account of the discrepancy between the number of shares named in the transfer and the number standing in the company's books in the name of the vendor. The contract remained uncompleted at the time of the bankruptcy of the vendor. The purchaser satisfied the bills of exchange at maturity:—Held, that the nineteen shares were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt. Exp. Rayner, Re Hommersham, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 256. [510 (11)].

10. The bankrupt, being the assignee of the reversion of a sum of stock, in 1846 assigned to A., but no notice was given to the trustee of such assignment: the tenant for life died subsequent to the bankruptcy, which took place in March 1853:—Held, that the stock was goods and chattels within the meaning of sec. 125 of the Act of 1849, and that, at the time of the bankruptcy, it was in the order and disposition of the bankrupt as reputed owner thereof, with the consent of the true owner, and consequently passed to his assignees. Exp. & Re Plimmer, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 83. [511 (6).

1. Messrs. S. & Co., auctioneers, having overdrawn their account at their bankers, Messrs. C. & Co., a short time before their bankruptcy, came to a parol understanding with them that the old account should be closed, and that a new account should be opened, which was to be kept sacred against the claims of C. & Co. for the balance due to them. S. & Co. were in the habit of drawing on the new account for general disbursements, and having received considerable sums from the proceeds of sales made on behalf of the petitioner and other customers, paid portions thereof into the new account:—Held, that the moneys included in the new account passed to the assignees. A sum received by S. & Co. after the bankruptcy, in respect of a sale for a customer, and paid to the official assignee, was ordered to be repaid to the customer. Exp. Parsons, Re Shuttleworth, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 4. [521 (12).

2. A., some years ago, purchased an estate at an auction, upon conditions, and paid a deposit, but being dissatisfied with the title, he abandoned the contract. The auctioneer retained the deposit:—Held, on the bankruptcy of the vendor, that A.'s right to recover was against the auctioneer, and not against the assignees. Semble, the auctioneer was not justified in setting off the deposit received from A. as against a debt due to him from the bankrupt. Exp. Bradshaw, Re Graves, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 180. [521 (12).

3. W. having secretly realised the greater part of his available property and effects, absconded with the proceeds. W. was subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt, and on the 4th October 1882 the plaintiff was appointed a trustee of the estate. On the 10th October W. entered into an agreement in an assumed name with F. for the purchase of certain house property, and paid to the defendant, as stakeholder under the agreement, a certain sum by way of deposit, which it was admitted formed part of the proceeds of the secret realisation. The agreement provided, inter alia, that the deposit money should be forfeited to the vendor if the purchaser neglected or failed to complete the purchase. W. was shortly afterwards arrested and convicted as an absconding bankrupt, and the purchase of the property was consequently never completed. It was admitted that both the defendant and F. had acted throughout bonâ fide in the ordinary course of business, and that the non-completion of the agreement was not caused by any default on the part of F. The plaintiff having claimed to have the deposit money paid over for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate:—Held, that, inasmuch as it was of the essence of the contract that the deposit money should be forfeited if the purchase was not completed, such money belonged to F., and could not be followed by the trustee of the bankrupt's estate. Collins v. Stimson, 11 L. R., Q. B. D., 142; 52 L. J., Q. B., 440; 48 L. T. 828. [521 (12).

4. T. holds shares in a trading company in trust for W., who, by his will, appoints T. his residuary legatee. T. continues in possession of the shares, and becomes bankrupt. The shares are not within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act, 11 & 12 Geo. 3, c. 8, s. 9, inasmuch as T. is himself the "true owner and proprietor thereof," subject, however, to the debts and legacies of W. T. Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 328. And see, as to this case, 3 Bli. N. S. 111. [522 (1).

5. An assignment by a trader of the future receipts of his business, even if made for value, is, as regards receipts accruing after the commencement of his subsequent bankruptcy, inoperative as against the title of the trustee in the bankruptcy. Brice v. Bannister (3 L. R., Q. B. D., 569) distinguished. Exp. Nichols, Re Jones, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 782; 52 L. J., Ch. 635; 48 L. T. 492; 31 W. R. 661. [528 (2).

6. An assignment with notice of an act of bankruptcy, is not protected under the old statutes after the lapse of five years. Mountford v. Ponten, Mont. 79; 7 L. J., Ch. 156. [529 (8).

P. 531, after par. (1), add references 52 L. J., Ch., 204; 47 L. T. 721; 31 W. R. 185.

7. A conveyance or payment made to a creditor by a person in insolvent circumstances, upon such person's own motion, without any pressure or threat on the part of the creditor, or made colourably with a view to divert the property from other creditors, or made with a view to give a preference to a particular creditor, within three months before the imprisonment of the insolvent, is a voluntary conveyance or payment within the meaning of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 37, s. 32. Stuckey v. Drevie, 2 Myl. & K. 190. [532 (10).

8. Act of bankruptcy by conveyance (by way of assignment for benefit of creditors) of all the trader's estate on the 8th March; adjudication on the 10th; between the 8th and 10th Messrs. D., creditors of the bankrupt, obtained goods, which they applied in part payment of their debt. On the application of the assignees (who were also trustees under the assignment) to have the value of the goods repaid to the estate by Messrs. D.:—Held, that at the time of the delivery of the goods to Messrs. D. the bankrupt was the agent of the trustees, and that the transaction between Messrs. D. and the bankrupt was bonâ fide, and protected under the Bankruptcy Act 1849, s. 133. Exp. & Re Quick, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 277. [537 (10).

9. Previous to the adjudication, W. proceeded against T. for the recovery of a debt both at law and in bankruptcy by trader debtor summons, simultaneously, and was requested by T. to withdraw the proceedings in bankruptcy, T. promising to give security for payment of the debt out of the surplus which he expected would come to him out of certain property belonging to him, which he had mortgaged, and which was about to be sold. Arrangements were made for carrying this proposition into effect, but before they could be concluded, the time for paying and compounding under the Bankruptcy Act 1849, s. 80, had elapsed, and T. filed a declaration of insolvency under s. 70, on which he was adjudicated a bankrupt. W. claimed a lien on the mortgaged property in respect of the agreement:—Held, that W. had notice that T. had committed an act of bankruptcy in respect of the trader debtor summons, and that the lien could not be sustained. Exp. Weston, Re Taylor, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 240. [542 (1).]

1 M., a sculptor, made designs and casts, which he desired to be executed in gutta-percha, prior to having them coated with metal. For that purpose he delivered them to T., who found the materials and labour. The work was carried on in a portion of the bankrupt's premises, divided from that used by himself. The figures were cast in gutta-percha, and were worked on by men employed by T. and by M. at the same time:—Held, that T. had a lien on those which were unfinished at the time of the bankruptcy. Exp. Thorne, Re Monti, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 54. [542 (1).]

2. W. had a lien on a chattel belonging to A. for an amount exceeding the value of the chattel. A. became bankrupt, and his assignees in bankruptcy claimed the property in the chattel:—Held, that the property must be secured to W., the assignees refusing to redeem the lien. Exp. Watts, Re Attwater, 1 N. R. 170. [542 (1).]

3. Section 87 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, (32 & 33 Vict., c. 71), enacts that, where the goods of any trader have been taken in execution in respect of a judgment for a sum exceeding 50*l.*, and sold, the sheriff shall retain the proceeds of such sale in his hands for a period of fourteen days, and upon notice being served on him within that period of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against such trader (followed by an adjudication), shall hold the proceeds of such sale, after deducting expenses, on trust to pay the same to the trustees. On the 29th December 1882 an execution was issued at the suit of the plaintiff against the defendants, traders, upon a judgment for 87*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* debt and costs, and lodged with the sheriff, who on the same day seized certain goods of the defendants and sold them on the 10th January 1883, realising by that sale 41*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.* On the 12th January other goods of the defendants which were upon other premises occupied by them were sold under the f. fa., and realised 74*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* On the 24th January 1883, a petition in bankruptcy was presented against the defendants, under which they were adjudicated bankrupts on the 19th February. The sheriff had notice of the petition on the 25th January:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to the whole proceeds, as the "sale" contemplated by s. 87 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 was not completed until the 12th January, within fourteen days from the receipt by the sheriff of notice of the filing of the petition. Jones v. Parcell, 11 L. R., Q. B. D., 480; 52 L. J., Q. B., 672; 49 L. T. 197. [543 (4).]

4. A warrant of attorney to secure an antecedent debt, given bond fide within two months of the bankruptcy, and at a time when the bankrupt was unable to meet his engagements, and executed by levy and sale previous to the bankruptcy, is void, notwithstanding s. 133 of the Bankruptcy Act 1849. Exp. Bentall, Re May, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 82. [558 (7).]

5. A trader is not justified in providing by a judge's order for payment of a creditor, whose debt is not yet due, whereby his whole estate is liable to be swept away from his other creditors; notwithstanding the judge's order is dated several months before his bankruptcy. Re Barnett, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 118. [560 (3).]

6. The sheriff is not entitled, by virtue of 24 & 25 Vict., c. 134 (Bankruptcy Act 1861), to deduct from the amount produced by the levy the money he has expended in advertising a sale of the execution debtor's effects. Brathwaite v. Marriott, 1 N. R. 105. [560 (4).]

7. A mortgagee is entitled, as against the assignees of a bankrupt, to the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged premises, into the possession of which he has entered several days prior to the bankruptcy. Exp. Allum, Re Kerslake, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 47. [562 (6).]

8. In order that a payment of money or a transfer of property made by a debtor in favour of one of his creditors should be void as a fraudulent preference under s. 92 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, it is sufficient that the preferring the creditor should have been the substantial, effectual, or dominant view with which the debtor made it; it is not necessary that it should have been his sole view. Exp. Hill, Re Bird, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 695; 52 L. J., Ch., 903; 49 L. T. 278; 32 W. R. 177. [573 (3).]

9. A judgment creditor, who had issued execution upon the property of his insolvent debtor, agreed to make him a substantial advance for the alleged purpose of enabling him to carry on his business, upon the understanding come to at a meeting at which all the parties to the transaction were present, that the advance should be applied in paying the bankers of the debtor, who had pressed for payment of a debt of 2,000*l.*, and threatened to make the debtor a bankrupt if they were not paid, and also in paying off two other debts due to solicitors employed in the transaction. A bill of sale over substantially the whole of the debtor's property was given by the debtor to the execution creditor, on the 9th September 1882, to secure the execution debt and the fresh advance. The fresh advance was applied in payment of the debts to the bankers and the solicitors. On the 11th September possession under the bill of sale was taken by the grantee. On the 13th September the debtor filed a liquidation petition, and the trustees impeached the bill of sale and the above-mentioned payments:—Held, that the effect of the granting of the bill of sale being to prevent the debtor from carrying on his business, the bill of sale, and also the payments to the solicitors were fraudulent and void; but that the payment to the bankers, who had acted bond fide, was protected by the saving clause of s. 92 of the Act. Exp. Clater, Re Demison, Re Wilkinson, 48 L. T. 648. [581 (3).]

10. The effect of bankruptcy upon a fraudulent preference, is not to put the goods in the same situation as if they were actually the goods of the bankrupt, so as to vest them at once by the bankruptcy in the assignees, independently of any election on their part, other than their acceptance of the office of assignee, but by transfer which is a fraudulent preference, the property vests in the transferee, subject to be divested by the assignees at their election, and the title of the transferee is perfect, except so far as it is avoided by the assignee. Newnham v. Stevenson, 10 C. B. 713. [583 (4).

The commencement of an action of trover, which may be abandoned at any time, and which assumes that the goods came into the possession of the defendant lawfully, cannot, without more, be taken to an election on the part of the assignees to avoid the transfer. Ib.

Where, therefore, goods had been transferred by a trader before his bankruptcy, by an instrument which the jury found to be a fraudulent preference, and the transferee had, after the bankruptcy, and after the appointment of assignees, brought an action for an illegal and excessive distress upon the goods which were the subject of the conveyance:—Held, that the assignees, having not otherwise asserted their right to the goods than by commencing an action of trover to recover them, it was not competent to the defendants to set up their title under "not trespassed." Ib.

Statutory Definition—Value of Old Decisions.

1. In determining whether a transaction amounts to a fraudulent preference the Court ought now to have regard simply to the statutory definition contained in s. 92 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. The decisions on the subject before the Act may be useful as guides, but the standards laid down in them must not be substituted for that which is laid down in the Act. Exp. Griffith, Re Wilcoxon, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 69; 52 L. J., Ch., 717; 48 L. T. 450; 31 W. R. 878. [583 (7).

2. A deed which was executed more than twelve months before the date of fiat and act of bankruptcy, and whereby the bankrupt assigned certain annuities and policies of assurance for the benefit of his mother and infant daughter, set aside in favour of the bankrupt's creditors. Penhall v. Elwin, 1 W. R. 273. [585 (7).

3. At a meeting of creditors to decide on referring disputes to arbitration, and commencing suits in equity, a creditor may consent by proxy, under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 88. Exp. Belcher, 3 Dea. 98; 3 Mont. & A. 448. [589 (7).

4. A bankrupt has power to submit to arbitration matters which prima facie have passed to his assignees; and at all events, if he do so professedly on their behalf and his own on an express agreement that they shall not take advantage of the bankruptcy, and they take part in the reference and proceedings under it, he cannot object to the award on the ground of his bankruptcy, especially if it do not appear that they object. Milnes v. Robertson, 3 C. L. R. 232. [591 (10).

5. Money, the sum being small, ordered to be paid to assignees of a bankrupt on the bankrupt's petition without a supplemental bill. Setcole v. Healey, 2 Bro. C. C. 322. [595 (18).

6. One of several co-plaintiffs mortgaged his interest, and became insolvent pending the suit; a supplemental bill was filed by the other plaintiffs against the mortgagee and provisional assignees alone:—Held, that the defendants in the original suit, who were accounting parties, ought to have been made parties to the supplemental suit. Feary v. Stephenson, 1 Beav. 42. [595 (18).

7. An order for dissolving an injunction nisi will be made absolute, notwithstanding the plaintiff is bankrupt, unless he shows cause. Anon., 1 Atk. 263. But see Waugh v. Austin, 3 T. R. 437. Monke v. Morris, 1 Mod. 93. [595 (18).

8. By the bankruptcy of the plaintiff, the suit becomes defective if not abated by analogy to law; the assignees ordered to be made parties in a limited time, or the bill to be dismissed; whether with costs, quære. Randall v. Mumford, 18 Ves. 424; 1 Rose 196. [595 (18).

Upon the bankruptcy of the plaintiff in an injunction bill, the assignees to be made parties, or the injunction dissolved. Ib.

Practice of the Court of Exchequer holding the bankruptcy of the plaintiff no abatement, and therefore dismissing the bill with costs for want of prosecution. Ib. 426.

9 The devisee having taken the benefit of an insolvent Act, and made the assignee a party to the suit, who, by his answer, disclaimed all knowledge of the assignment, and refused to undertake the trust for the creditors, he cannot be compelled to act, and the suit remains imperfect until another assignee is appointed and made a party; a decree made in such a state of the cause is erroneous. Rylands v. Latouche, 2 Bligh 567. [595 (18).

10. Petition to supersede presented in the lifetime of the bankrupt, ordered to stand over, on his death, until his personal representatives, or those entitled to take out administration, were served. Exp. Lemorthy, Re Roberts, Mont. 54. [595 (18).

11. Each of two original suits to recover the same sum of money became defective by the insolvency of a party who was plaintiff in the first of the causes and a defendant in the second; the plaintiff in the second suit not being a party to the first suit:—Held, that the defect in the first suit was not remedied by a supplemental bill in the second suit, before a decree was obtained in that suit. Cattell v. Corral, 1 Hare 216. [595 (18).

12. Bill for a partnership account and injunction. Order, on motion by consent, to take the accounts. One of plaintiffs afterwards became bankrupt, and the defendant filed a supplemental bill, bringing his assignees before the Court, and moved that the proceedings under the order might be prosecuted against the new as well as against the original defendants. The Court, with the consent of the assignees, but without the consent of the insolvent plaintiffs in the original suit, made the order. Hitchcock v. Copling, 4 Hare 161. [595 (18).

13. B. being insolvent, a vesting order was made, founded on a judgment in outlawry, which was afterwards reversed. B. then filed a bill to redeem a mortgage, but, pending the suit, again became insolvent. The provisional assignee was made a defendant by supplemental order. The Court discharged the supplemental order as irregular, and directed the cause to stand over for a month, with liberty to the provisional assignee to carry on the suit; and in default, the bill to be dismissed without costs. Bradberry v. Brooke, 5 W. R. 95; 26 L. J., Ch., 74. See S. C. 4 W. R. 658, 699. [595 (18).]

1. Order, in the nature of a supplemental decree, for a creditor who had proved his debt to carry on a creditor's suit, where the original plaintiff had become bankrupt. English v. Hayman, 9 Hare (App.) lxxxviii. [595 (18).]

2. After decree a plaintiff became bankrupt; it was ordered that he and his assignees should elect either to file a supplemental bill, or that all proceedings should be stayed. Clarke v. Tipping, 16 Beav. 12; 16 Jur. 442. [595 (18).]

3. A cause was ordered to stand over to make the assignees of a bankrupt defendant parties. They were made parties by amendment. An objection raised by the co-defendants, that they ought to have been made parties to a supplemental bill, was overruled. London Gas Light Co. v. Spottiswoode, 14 Beav. 264. [595 (18).]

4. Motion to discharge the usual order to revive, under the 52nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, obtained by an assignee of a sole plaintiff, who had become bankrupt before answer put in, was refused with costs. Jackson v. Riga Railway Co., 6 Jur., N. S. 336; 20 L. J., Ch., 571; 25 Beav. 75. [595 (18).]

5. In an administration suit, where the plaintiff, who was an executor and a residuary legatee, had become a bankrupt, the Court, at the application of the plaintiff as executor, ordered the suit to be revived against his trustee in bankruptcy, as representing his beneficial interest. Laidler v. Laidler, 21 W. R. 822. [595 (18).]

6. On abatement by bankruptcy of defendant, an executor, after decree to account, supplemental bill in nature of revivor is necessary. Russell v. Sharp, 1 Ves. & B. 500. [597 (8).]

7. Upon the bankruptcy of a defendant in a co-partnership suit, the Court declined to make an order that a supplemental bill should be filed within a given time against the assignees, or the bill stand dismissed. Manson v. Burton, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 626. [597 (8).]

8. A bill was filed by shareholders in a company, against the directors for an account. One of the directors having become bankrupt, a supplemental bill was filed against the defendant, alleging that the plaintiffs had discovered, since the filing of the original bill, that the said director, before his bankruptcy, had paid or secured to the defendant the amount for which he was liable to the company. Held, upon demurrer, that as the case existed prior to the filing of the original bill, and as the plaintiff would have been entitled to that relief, if entitled at all, prior to the bankruptcy, the mode of obtaining it was not by a supplemental bill. Demurrer allowed. Starks v. Walker, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch. 274. [597 (8).]

9. A supplemental bill is necessary to bring before the Court the assignee of an insolvent defendant. Heath v. Leeds, 2 W. R. 452. [597 (8).]

10. Order for the carrying on of the proceedings against the assignees of a defendant becoming bankrupt after answer, but before decree, made under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52, without supplemental bill. Cochrane v. Phillips, 3 W. R. 461. [597 (8).]

11. A supplemental order against assignees of a defendant who had become bankrupt after appearance and before answer was made with adding thereto "without prejudice to the assignees putting in an answer." Kitchin v. Hibble, 8 Jur., N. S., 588; 10 W. R. 686; 6 L. T., N. S., 748. [597 (8).]

12. Order made under the 52nd section of the Act (15 & 16 Vict., c. 86), for the prosecution of a suit against the assignees of a defendant become bankrupt after appearance, but before answer, with liberty for the assignees to answer, if they should be so advised. Lash v. Miller, 4 De G. M. & G. 841; 1 Jur., N. S., 437. S. C. nom. Lersh v. Miller. 3 W. R. 397; 3 Eq. Rep. 577. [597 (8).]

13. When one of two defendants becomes bankrupt, and an application by the plaintiff (who has been appointed his sole assignee) at the Rolls for the common order to revive is refused, the Court will give leave to set down the cause without such order to revive. Ashman v. James, 17 L. T., N. S., 559. [597 (8).]

14. The registered owner of a trade mark having, since notice of an application to strike the trade mark off the register, gone into liquidation, leave was given, under Order L. r 4, to serve notice of the application on the trustees in liquidation. The term "action" in Ord. L. does not confine the operation of that order to proceedings in actions. Re Rome's Trade Mark, 48 L. T. 388. [597 (8).]

15. The provisional assignee of the Insolvent Debtors' Court was made a party defendant to the suit, and afterwards died. Held, that the new provisional assignee might be made a party to the suit by bill of revivor merely. McCollum v. Cranford, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 217. [598 (10).]

16. A newly-appointed provisional assignee of the Insolvent Court is properly brought before the Court by revivor only. O'Brien v. Mahon, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 601. [598 (10).]

17. On the death of an official assignee (a defendant), a supplemental order, substituting his successor, must be obtained as of course, and on a simple allegation unsupported by affidavit. Gordon v. Jesson, 16 Beav. 440; 22 L. J., Ch., 328. [598 (10).]

18. Where a suit had been instituted by a plaintiff in the character of assignee of an insolvent debtor, and his title to sue in that character is not disputed by the defendant, an assignee of the insolvent subsequently appointed will be taken conclusively, for the purposes of the suit, to be a "new assignee" within the 53rd section of the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and may, upon suggestion of his appointment, be substituted as plaintiff in the place of the former plaintiff under that section, although it may appear that the original plaintiff was never properly appointed assignee. Sladden v. De Lusaum, Collins v. De Lusaum, 3 W. R. 443; 49. [598 (10).]

19. Where, after the institution of a suit, the interest of a defendant has been transmitted to a person whose title cannot be disputed in the suit, an order can be made under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 52. Accordingly, where a suit had been instituted against assignees in bankruptcy, and the bankruptcy had been annulled before decree.—Held, that such an order could be made. Mostyn v. Emmanuel, 5 N. R. 464. [598 (10).]

1. After issue joined in an action plaintiff became insolvent, and the assignees having refused to interfere, defendant pleaded the insolvency instead of his former pleas, whereupon plaintiff confessed the plea and gave notice to tax his costs:—Held, that plaintiff was entitled to his costs under Rule 23 of New Pleading Rules, but that defendant might withdraw the plea and go on with the action on the old pleas. Plummer v. Hedge, 24 L. J., Q. B., 24. [601 (11).]

2. Where the attorney of a defendant in an action omitted to plead his client's bankruptcy, and the verdict was for the plaintiff, the Court refused to set aside the verdict, to enable the defendant to plead his bankruptcy. Aston v. Lawley, 1 N. R. 102. [603 (8).]

3. In an action for rent the defendant pleaded the bankruptcy of plaintiff, to which plaintiff replied that he let the premises to defendant as trustee for J. S., and had no beneficial interest therein, and was suing as such trustee:—Held, that his being trustee was not material, as he had shown by parol evidence that he had no beneficial interest. Houghton v. Boenig, 18 C. B. 235. [603 (8).]

4. Quære, whether a certificate under the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 70, requires confirmation, or whether a plea setting up such a certificate need show that the debt is not of the excepted classes mentioned in s. 2. Temple v. Sleight, 9 C. B. 548. [604 (14).]

5. A creditor sought, by bill in equity, to establish a title by equitable assignment, as was contended, to moneys belonging to the bankrupt in the hands of a third party. The bill was dismissed without costs; but the costs of the assignees, who were made defendants, were ordered to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate. He afterwards proved for the debt:—Held, that the costs of the assignees should, on a deficiency of assets in their hands, be deducted out of the dividend coming to the creditor in the first instance. Exp. National Provincial Bank of England, Re Burton, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 81. [606 (3).]

P. 607, after par. (4), add references—Affirmed 52 L. J., Ch., 543; 48 L. T. 545; 31 W. R. 536.

6. Proof on a bill of exchange accepted by bankrupt's wife rejected. Re —, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 70. [612 (2).]

7. A written engagement to warrant the payment of a bill of exchange, although good to other purposes, is not within the statute of 7 Geo. 1, c. 31 (6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 51), which applies only to what arises on the face of the instrument. Exp. Harrison, 2 Cox 172; 2 Bro. C. C. 614. [619 (1).]

8. K. & Co. became bankrupt in July 1812; B. & Co. in the following August, when there was a cash balance due from them to the estate of K. & Co. K. & Co. were liable to a very large amount upon bills not arrived at maturity, which had been accepted by them for the accommodation of B. & Co. Bills to a large amount had been deposited with K. & Co., and, according to the usual course of business between the firms, the amounts from time to time received on the deposited bills were credited to B. & Co. in a cash account:—Held, that K. & Co.'s assignees were entitled to prove on the cash balance, and appropriate the amounts received on the deposited bills to the discharge of their liabilities to the billholders. Exp. Johnson, Re Bulmer, 1 W. R. 341. [624 (8).]

The billholders, having proved against both estates, were paid in full, as to 10s. in the pound out of B. & Co.'s estate, and afterwards as to the remaining 10s. in the pound out of K. & Co.'s estate.—Held, that the assignees of K. & Co. were entitled to the benefit of the proof made by the billholders against B. & Co.'s estate until they should be satisfied the excess paid by their estate to the billholders over the sums realised from the deposited bills. Ib.

9. An indorsee for value of an accommodation bill without notice was allowed to prove under the bankruptcy of the acceptors, notwithstanding his having released the drawer after notice of its being an accommodation bill. Exp. Graham, Re Black, 5 De G. M. & G. 356. [625 (4).]

10. F, the holder of an accommodation bill of exchange drawn by W., and accepted by B. with the knowledge of his partner C., and endorsed by W. over to F. for value. F. accepts a composition from W. in respect of this bill. B. and C. become bankrupt:—Held, the bill was not fraudulent as regarded C.:—Held, also, that F. was entitled to prove against the joint estate of B. and C. for the amount, less the composition. Exp. Frem, Re Black and Cope, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 157. [626 (6).]

11. Certain bills of exchange, purporting to be drawn at Stettin, were addressed to and accepted by H., a member of, and on account of, the firm of M. & Co., and endorsed by the bankrupt, also a member of the firm, to S., for value. On the bankruptcy of H., S. proved against his estate in respect of these bills:—Held, he was not entitled to prove upon the same bills as against the bankrupt's estate, notwithstanding he had no notice that the bankrupt was a member of the firm of M. & Co. Exp. Royal British Bank of Scotland, Re O'Kell, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 160. [630 (5).]

12. The sums to be recovered by intending emigrants against shippers or agents failing to provide them with passages according to contract, provable in bankruptcy. Exp. Newcombe, Re Griffiths, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 282. [636 (1).]

A bankrupt cannot be arrested and committed to prison for breach of contract in failing to provide passages after he has obtained protection. Ib.

13. An unmarried woman, having a power of appointing a sum of money by will, made a will, appointing it to a mortgagee, and covenanted not to revoke the will. She afterwards became bankrupt, and obtained her discharge. After her discharge she revoked her will, and made another appointing the sum of money to another person:—Held, that the contingent liability under the covenant was incapable of proof under the bankruptcy, that the covenant was not released by the bankruptcy, and that an action would lie for damages for a breach of the covenant committed after the bankruptcy. Robinson v. Ommanney, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 285; 52 L. J., Ch., 440; 49 L. T. 19; 31 W. R. 525. Affirming 21 L. R., Ch. D., 780; 51 L. J., Ch., 894; 47 L. T. 78; 30 W. R. 939. Affirmed 52 L. J., Ch., 543; 48 L. T. 545; 31 W. R. 536.

2. The trustee under an assignment for benefit of creditors, which assignment is declared to be an act of bankruptcy, is not a creditor holding security, and may prove his debt under the bankruptcy, notwithstanding the assignment. Exp. Bates, Re Meadows, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 285.

[642 (10)].

3. The bankrupt, besides his trading, was employed by A. B. to collect and pay moneys. On the death of A. B. his executors discovered that the bankrupt was in default; and, after pointing out to the bankrupt that he had made himself liable to a prosecution, they induced him to convey to them his stock-in-trade, etc., as a security for the default. The security, when realized, was insufficient to pay the whole default, and on a proof being tendered for the residue, the Court would not presume that a felony had been committed, and the proof was admitted. Exp. Milner, Re Webb, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 57.

[644 (1)].

4. Executor had a balance in that character with bankers, who with the executors' consent invested part of it on a security unauthorized by the will. On the face of the will the executors were absolutely entitled as residuary legatees, though they were in reality trustees:—Held, that there was no such breach of trust on the part of the trustees as to entitle the cestuis que trustent to prove against their separate estates. Exp. Barnwell, Re Biddulph, Front's Executors Case, 6 De G. M. & G. 801.

[665 (6)].

5. W., the continuing partner, on the faith of a statement made by P., the retiring partner, and really believed by P. at the time, viz., that A. owed 2,500*l.* to the firm, covenanted to pay to P. 2,000*l.* for the purchase of his interest in the partnership property. It afterwards appeared that, instead of A. being the debtor, the firm was indebted to him in about 700*l.*, and also in a sum of 1,319*l.* to P.:—Held, on the bankruptcy of W., not such a misrepresentation as should induce the Court to reject the proof of P. for the whole amount. Held, also, that a solvent partner may prove against the separate estate of his co-partner, a bankrupt, in the event of a surplus. Exp. Price, Re Williams and Marchant, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 170.

[666 (10)].

6. Words in a guarantee, "In consideration of, etc., I guarantee the payment by A. of any loss which may possibly accrue to you on your share of this transaction":—Held, that the liability of the party giving the guarantee terminated upon the sale of the goods at a profit, so as not to include a loss occasioned by the misappropriation by A. of the proceeds of the sale. Proof exchanged. Exp. De Souza, Re Lacy, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 30.

[674 (11)].

7. Bills of exchange were discounted for B. by A. upon the collateral security of a judgment for 2,000*l.* entered up on a warrant of attorney from B. A. deposited these bills with C., a creditor, for 1,200*l.* as a security for that sum, a letter by way of memorandum accompanying the deposit. Up to his bankruptcy in 1855 A. had regularly paid C. interest at 12½ per cent upon the 1,200*l.* B.'s real estate had been sold, and upwards of 2,000*l.* was received (after litigation) by A.'s assignees in respect of the judgment:—Held, that the memorandum being silent as to interest, a contract for a rate of interest contrary to law would not be implied, and that it must be taken to refer to the principal sum of 1,200*l.* only, to which extent C. was entitled as against A.'s estate. Exp. Hodge, Re Lane, 26 L. J., Bky., 77.

8. A mortgagee agreed to accept a composition in respect of his mortgage debt, upon condition that if any instalment should be unpaid for ten days after it had become due the mortgagee should be remitted to his original rights and remedies. He proved under the bankruptcy for the amount remaining due upon the composition, no instalment being then in arrear:—Held, he had made his election to come in under the bankruptcy, and could not take advantage of the condition to increase his proof upon default subsequent to such proof. Exp. Smith, Re Collier, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 61.

[693 (2)].

9. If a creditor be brought before the Court to have his debt expunged, and no good grounds are shown why it should be done, as a general rule he is entitled to his costs. But where the assignees had a fair cause of bringing him before the Court, and the affidavit he made on his proof was calculated to mislead, the Court refused him his costs. Exp. Hustler, Buck, 171, 177.

[699 (10)].

10. A petition of annuity creditors, by praying in the alternative to be admitted for the value of the annuities as for the money paid for them, ordered to stand over to be amended by stating the time when the act of bankruptcy happened, in order to see whether or not the bond was then forfeited at law. Exp. Barrow, 1 Bro. C. C. 268.

11. Petition to prove for money lent to a trader on the eve of bankruptcy on the security of an assignment, which was declared by the Court of Common Pleas to be void as an act of bankruptcy, and for payment in full of sums expended on the premises assigned, dismissed with costs. Exp. Furber, Re Barugh, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 262.

[702 (13)].

12. The right of set-off exists under the arrangement clauses of the Bankruptcy Act of 1849, as in bankruptcy. Re C. and G., 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 81.

[707 (3)].

13. When a bankrupt has not obtained an order of discharge, a creditor who has proved in the bankruptcy, and who is being sued by the bankrupt, or by his executor, after his death, for a debt due to the bankrupt on a contract entered into after the commencement of the bankruptcy, cannot, during the period of three years from the close of the bankruptcy, set off the unpaid balance of his proved debt against the sum claimed in the action. Re Smith, Green v. Smith, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 586; 52 L. J., Ch., 411; 48 L. T. 254; 31 W. R. 413.

The scope of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 is that, during the period of three years after the close of the bankruptcy, none of the creditors who could prove in the bankruptcy shall be able to obtain a preference over the others, and that after the expiration of the three years, the unpaid balances of the proved debts shall be enforced against the property of the debtor only under the direction of the Court of Bankruptcy, so that any sums which may be thus recovered may be distributed among the creditors who have proved pari passu. Ib.

In respect of breaches of covenant committed by the tenant during his occupation, the only remedy of the landlord is to prove for damages in the liquidation, and the landlord has no right of set-off as against moneys due by him to the trustee for severed crops. Exp. Dyke, Re Morrish, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 410; 52 L. J., Ch., 570; 48 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 278. Affirming 47 L. T. 26; 30 W. R. 952.

1. A debtor, who was tenant from year to year of a farm upon the terms that, at the expiration of the tenancy, he should be paid by the landlord allowances for tillages and cultivation according to the custom of the country, filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and a trustee was appointed, who did not disclaim the tenancy, but carried on the business of the farm for the benefit of the creditors until the tenancy was determined by notice to quit. The debtor's estate was sufficient to indemnify the trustee against any personal liability in respect of the tenancy. In an action to recover the value of tillages and cultivation by the trustee during his tenancy, according to the custom:—Held, that the landlord was not entitled to set off rent, accrued due from the debtor before the liquidation proceedings, against the trustee's claim. Alloway v. Steere, 10 L. R., Q. B. D., 22; 52 L. J., Q. B., 38; 47 L. T. 333; 31 W. R. 290.

2. The value of forfeited shares in a banking company is to be estimated at their market price at the time of forfeiture, or at that at which they were re-issued, and not by the amount actually paid upon them in the company's books. Exp. Commercial Bank of England, Re Lucy, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 10.

3. A firm, consisting of two partners, entered into a joint and several covenant for the payment of the balance of their current account with a bank, and one of the partners deposited with the bank, as a collateral security for the account, a sum of 8,750*l.* arising from the sale of part of his separate estate. That amount was deposited upon condition that it should not be applied in payment of the current account of the firm with the bank until after the expiration of twelve months' notice of demand for payment, and subject thereto it was to remain the separate property of the depositor. The firm became bankrupt upon the 18th April 1882, and the bank gave notice of demand on the 19th May. Upon the 19th October the bank tendered a proof for 17,093*l.* 19*s.*, the total amount due from the firm upon their current account, without deducting the sum of 8,750*l.* deposited with them.—Held, that there was no such mutual dealing between the bank and the depositor as to give rise to any right of set-off under the 39th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and that consequently the bank were entitled to prove against the joint estate, and for the full amount due upon the current account. Exp. Caldicott, Re Hart, 48 L. T. 910. Affirmed 25 L. R., Ch. D., 716; 53 L. J., Ch., 618; 50 L. T. 651; 32 W. R. 396.

4. A deposit of old title deeds, in which the name of the depositor is not mentioned in any way, for the purpose of giving a lien upon the estates comprised in such deeds, confers a good title, by way of equitable mortgage, as against the general creditors of the bankrupt. Exp. Lacon, You'll & Co, Re Colk, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 107.

[726 (7).

5. The seventh General Order in bankruptcy applies to equitable mortgages. Re McCullagh, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 466.

[736 (7).

6. A creditor advancing money at 6 per cent. on bills of exchange to a trader (who afterwards becomes a bankrupt) with collateral real security, is entitled to prove on the estate of the bankrupt as an unsecured creditor, on giving up all his real securities. Exp. Harrington, Re Leake, 1 W. R. 261; 22 L. J., Ch., 33; 17 Jur. 430.

[743 (16).

7. A party will not be allowed to prove against the estate and retain his securities. He must waive all right in respect of the latter or abandon his proof. Exp. Price, Re Williams and Marchant, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 74.

[743 (16).

8. The official assignee may file a bill against the personal representatives of a deceased assignee for an account, etc., of unclaimed dividends, possessed by the deceased assignee. The non-claiming creditors need not be parties to the suit. Quare, whether s. 110 of 6 Geo. 4. c. 16 be retrospective. Green v. Weston, 3 Mont. & A. 414; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 67; 1 Jur. 955.

[754 (9).

9. Where an alleged creditor has, without any good reason, neglected to come in under the bankruptcy for eighteen months, and until the estate has been nearly wound up, he will not be allowed to enter a claim, with a view of staying a dividend. Exp. Price, Re Williams and Marchant, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 73.

[755 (4).

10. In the case of a surplus remaining after the creditors have received 20*s.* in the pound, they are entitled to be paid interest upon their several debts, as against a secret partner of the bankrupt, who has proved, but received no dividend under the bankruptcy. Exp. & Re Holland, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 153.

[758 (7).

11. A trader, who, by absconding, had committed an act of bankruptcy, upon which he was adjudged bankrupt, several days prior to the adjudication, sailed for Australia; but, being pursued, was brought back, and committed to Newgate for not surrendering under s. 251 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation

Act 1849:—Held, that, pending the criminal proceedings, this Court would not interfere by allowing him now to surrender, the time for so doing having expired. Exp. Spriggs, Re Ashton, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 42. [760 (4)].

1. On the examination of a bankrupt, briefs which have been used at a trial, and returned to the client, are privileged as to the matters therein. Exp. Columbine, Re Allen, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 43. [763 (14)].

2. A bankrupt is asked by the Commissioner, in his examination, "What were his intentions in going to S.?"—Held, the question might be put, considered in reference to the previous part of his examination. Re Legge, 1 C. L. R. 42. [764 (13)].

3. Where the public examination of a bankrupt has been adjourned to a day fixed, with liberty to apply for an earlier day upon payment of a sum named, and the bankrupt applies for and has an earlier day appointed upon which to pass his public examination, the notices required by the 111th Rule must be given to each creditor. Exp. Heavey, Re Woodhouse, 48 L. T. 912. [766 (3)].

4. The Court has jurisdiction to rescind the order allowing a bankrupt to pass his last examination. Re Townshend, 1 N. R. 166. [766 (15)].

5. The Court has jurisdiction, under a petition for arrangement, to compel a witness to be examined upon oath, if such examination involve the inquiry whether the petitioning debtor has made a full and true disclosure of his debts and effects, as required by s. 223. In determining upon the jurisdiction to examine a party summoned, the form of the summons is immaterial, when the witness is in fact before the Court ready to be examined. Re —, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 1. [767 (10)].

6. The trustee in a liquidation sought to impeach a transaction entered into by the liquidating debtor with F., on the ground that it was a fraud upon the creditors, and issued a summons for the examination of F. under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had jurisdiction to order the examination for the purpose of discovery, irrespective of any consideration as to whether the Court of Bankruptcy would entertain subsequent proceedings arising out of such examination. Exp. Eekersley, Re Lortas, 48 L. T. 832. [767 (13)].

7. Section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, does not apply to composition proceedings; and when resolutions for a composition have been registered there is no jurisdiction to examine any one under that section. Exp. Willey, Re Wright, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 118; 52 L. J., Ch., 546; 48 L. T. 880; 31 W. R. 553. Reversing 48 L. T. 79; 31 W. R. 383. [767 (13)].

8. A person summoned as a witness, and as suspected of having property of the bankrupt in his possession, is entitled to his expenses in the first instance, where it appears he is only the servant or agent of the party suspected. Exp. & Re Bell, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 138. [767 (13)].

9. Scoble, that where a person supposed to have property belonging to the bankrupt in his possession is summoned to be examined touching such property, the object for which he is to be examined ought to appear on the face of the summons. The costs of a witness summoned as above must abide the result of any proceedings relative to the property in question. Re Cole, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 115. [767 (15)].

10. The bankrupt's estate being sufficient to pay 20s. in the pound, he is entitled to an allowance of 10% per cent. under the 195th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act. Exp. & Re Marriott, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 155. [769 (11)].

11. A debtor residing out of the metropolitan district ought to apply for his release from custody to the Court of the district in which he was resident at the time of arrest, and not to the London Court of Bankruptcy. Re Littlejohns, 1 N. R. 168. [771 (5)].

12. This Court will not interfere, or order the discharge out of custody, of a bankrupt, who, being a prisoner for debt, has incurred a contempt of the Insolvent Debtors' Court, for neglecting to file his schedule in that Court, on the ground that his remaining in custody is entirely of his own seeking. Exp. & Re Oliver, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 164. [772 (9)].

13. The Court will not discharge a bankrupt from custody (for debt) until he has surrendered; but the Court will order the gaoler to bring up the bankrupt to surrender, and will then order the discharge. Re Fisher and Bassy, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 29. [772 (9)].

14. A banking company sought to prove against the estate of a bankrupt who had not surrendered a debt on a banking account, which was rejected, on the ground that the company was not a legal trading company. Afterwards the company sued the bankrupt on the same debt, and had him arrested on a Judge's order to hold to bail. On an application for his release, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 6:—Held, that the rejection of the debt in bankruptcy was no bar, and that it was for the applicant to show there was no debt, and no intention to leave this country. Stuart v. Waugh, 3 N. R. 486. [773 (1)].

15. The Court has jurisdiction to discharge from custody a bankrupt detained on a capias utlagatum founded on a judgment in an action on bills of exchange. Exp. Metcalf, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 3. [773 (13)].

16. The Court of Bankruptcy has no power to discharge from custody a bankrupt committed to prison by the City Small Debts Court for nonpayment of a judgment debt, although the bankrupt had obtained protection previous to the committal. Re Austin, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 22. [777 (18)].

17. Quære, whether the Court of Bankruptcy has in any case authority to order the release from custody of a bankrupt detained on mesne process. Re Waugh, 3 N. R. 150, 227. [775 (3)].

18. Whether the Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to order the discharge of a debtor who, having executed a deed of arrangement and obtained the Registrar's certificate, is arrested at the suit of a creditor bound by the deed, quære. In any case, if the debtor after arrest applies to the Court out of which the writ issues, he cannot subsequently make a similar application to the Court of Bankruptcy. Exp. s. Re Smith, 4 N. R. 307. [777 (9).

1. The Act 8 & 9 Vict., c. 127, s. 3, providing for the discharge of a debtor who has been committed, on payment of the debt and costs remaining due at the time of the order of imprisonment, and "all subsequent costs," means by the last expression the costs incurred by reason of default in payment of the instalments at the times ordered by the commissioner. An order of commitment under the above Act ought not to be made ex parte. Exp. Shuckhard, 1 De G. 454; 16 L. J., N. S., Bk., 5; 11 Jur. 660. [778 (10).

2. The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to release from custody a bankrupt who has been taken in execution under the Bankruptcy Act 1849, s. 257, after he has remained in prison for twelve months. Re Barnshaw, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 88. [783 (1).

3. Where a bankrupt's certificate was suspended for two years without protection, with liberty, after he should have been in custody for three months at the suit of any creditor, to apply for his discharge and for protection, and the bankrupt, pending the two years, was taken in execution, and remained in prison for three months at the suit of a creditor, who had not proved under the estate:—Held, that the bankrupt was entitled to his discharge and protection under s. 112 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849. Exp. s. Re Fell, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 23. [783 (1).

4. Where, on a suspension of the certificate, protection has been refused to the bankrupt for six months, and he has kept out of the way to avoid an arrest, the Court will take this into consideration, and not discharge him at the expiration of the time limited. Exp. s. Re Miles, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 111. [783 (1).

5. Where a bankrupt's certificate is suspended, the commissioners have no such jurisdiction as to grant him protection from fresh debts. Grave v. Bishop, 11 Exch. 424; 25 L. J., Exch., 58. [783 (1).

6. Where a bankrupt defends an action, but ultimately allows judgment to go against him by default, the Court will not necessarily refuse to grant him an order of discharge. Re Score, 1 N. R. 181. [792 (6).

7. Where a trader is pressed to buy goods, and credit is given him on reference, which the seller accepts as satisfactory, the latter cannot oppose his discharge on the ground that he has incurred a debt without reasonable expectations of payment. Re Suter, 1 N. R. 231. [794 (11).

8. Ship and insurance brokers and emigration agents traded without capital, by purchasing ships and mortgaging them to the vendors and others, in expectation of being able to pay for them out of the profits of the voyages, and continued to do so after they had dishonoured bills of exchange. They also received passage money from emigrants, but were unable to dispatch the ships for want of stores and provisions. Certificate suspended for three years, six months to be without protection; the certificate to be of the third class. Re Griffiths & Newcombe, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 116. [799 (8).

9. A trader adjudged bankrupt upon his own petition. It appearing that his estate was insufficient to pay 5s. in the pound after payment of all expenses, a condition was annexed to the certificate, charging all future acquired estate with the deficit. No proceedings to be taken in regard to such estate without leave of the Court. Re Boys, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 76. [799 (11).

10. The assignees of a bankrupt are at liberty to oppose the granting of the certificate without giving notice, although their opposition is in respect of a complaint peculiar to themselves as individual creditors. Re Rowley, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 3. [801 (6).

11. Certificate meeting adjourned for further consideration to a day certain:—Held, that a creditor who had proved his debt might, upon good cause shown, be let in to oppose at the adjourned meeting, notwithstanding he had not given the requisite notice of opposition until after the adjournment. Exp. Ferris, Re Morton, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 45. [801 (6).

12. And see Exp. Enderby, 5 Madd. 76; Exp. Bryant, 1 G. & J. 206. [806 (1).

13. Semble, no creditor of a certificated bankrupt can apply for the bankrupt certificate to be recalled under the 203rd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, unless the creditor has proved his debt. Re Evans, Re Cooke, 1 W. R. 458. [806 (13).

A creditor applying, under the 203rd and 207th sections of the Act, that the certificate of a bankrupt may be recalled, must show, in support of the application, not only an improper suppression of evidence or fact, but that if the evidence or fact had been known to the commissioner, the certificate would have been refused. Ib.

14. An order, that a bankrupt, whose order of discharge has been refused, may appeal in forma pauperis, is irregular. Re Johnson, 3 N. R. 655. [807 (10).

15. A certificate under the Debtors' Arrangement Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, s. 13) must certify the filing of the petition, and not merely that a resolution or agreement was duly asserted, etc., and approved and filed by the commissioner. Temple v. Sleight, 9 C. B. 348. [807 (13).

16. The creditors of A. having issued a fiat in bankruptcy against him, and having at the close of the proceedings under the fiat received notice by means of the examination of the bankrupt and others, that A. was only the agent of B. & Co., proceeded, nevertheless, to sign A.'s certificate:—Held, that this was not an election by the creditors to treat A. as their sole debtor. Taylor v. Shepherd, 1 Y. & Coll. 271. [809 (15).

17. The 49th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict., c. 71), which enacts that "an order of discharge shall not release the bankrupt from any debt or liability incurred by means of any fraud or breach of trust, is not confined to a fraud or breach of trust committed by the bankrupt personally. Therefore, where a debt has been incurred by one of several partners for which the partnership is liable, and the partnership goes into liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, a partner who has received his order of discharge is not thereby released from such debt if it was incurred by fraud, though he himself was innocent of such fraud. Cooper v. Pritchard, 11 L. R. Q. B. D., 351; 52 L. J., B., 526; 48 L. T. 848; 31 W. R. 834.

2. In 1836 C. petitioned this Court under Geo. 4, c. 57, and was discharged. In 1854 he was adjudicated a bankrupt, and obtained a certificate:—Held, that the certificate in bankruptcy did not discharge and satisfy the debts owing under the insolvency. Re Clagett, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 101.

5. Service of a petition on debtor residing abroad must be either personal, or the Court must be satisfied of the attempts made to serve it, according to the fourth part of the 70th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. It must also be proved by affidavit. A memorandum endorsed, though purporting to be signed by the debtor, of its receipt, will not be sufficient. Re Vaughan, 3 N. R. 293.

10. An application for leave to appeal from the decision of the Lords Justices in matters of bankruptcy cannot be made ex parte. Exp. Griffith, Re Mostyn, 1 W. R. 236.

11. The power given to the Court of Appeal to give leave to appeal to the House of Lords should be exercised in proper cases. Where a trustee in bankruptcy wants to appeal at the cost of the estate, and thereby the division of the estate is delayed, an appeal should not be encouraged unless there is a very difficult question of general law which it is desirable that the House of Lords should settle. *Exp. [867 (2).]

12. I have often said that the jurisdiction to give leave to appeal is given to be exercised. Leave is to be given if the case is one of such difficulty that the Court think it proper that it should be carried to the House of Lords. We ought to protect the House of Lords from appeals on the construction of an Act of Parliament, where the construction of the Act of Parliament is tolerably plain. Medley v. Medley, 51 L. 14. In a proper case an adjudication of bankruptcy may be annulled upon an application made after the expiration of the time limited for appealing from it. Section 10 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 has no application to an appeal from an adjudication, or to an application to annul it. Exp. Brown, Re Jeavons (9 L. R., Ch., 304; 22 W. R. 602; 30 L. T., N. [869 (2).]

15. Though as a general rule a re-hearing of a bankruptcy matter ought not to be allowed after the expiration of the time limited for appealing from the order, yet, there being no time fixed by the Act or the rules for applying for a re-hearing, the Court will on special grounds allow a re-hearing when it is applied for after the expiration of the time for appealing, even when the application is to re-hear a bankruptcy petition which has been dismissed. Exp. & Re Ritso, 22 L. 1. Where the county court had refused to approve of resolutions for a scheme of settlement under s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and the trustee appealed to the chief judge who reversed the order, and the Court of Appeal finally restored the order of the county court judge, the trustee was allowed the costs of his application to the county court judge out of the assets, if any, but was ordered to pay the costs of the appeals to the chief judge and to the Court of Appeal. *Exp. 2. The solicitors of the assignees of a bankrupt had their bills of costs taxed in March 1861 by the Registrar of the District Court of Bankruptcy at Birmingham. The taxation was made ex parte, without notice to the assignees. In April 1853 the assignees and several of the creditors applied to the District Court for a re-taxation of the bills which had not been paid:—Held (reversing the decision of the Commission) that such re-taxation ought to be ordered. Whether the Registrar of the District Court had jurisdiction to tax the bills, quære. Exp. Bateman, Re Burbury, 1 Bky. & Ins. R. 235.

3. On the examination of a bankrupt, he is bound to answer as to matters necessary within his knowledge, and which must, more or less, be in his recollection; as, for instance, the disposal of his money, and the drawing of bills, notes, or cheques. And it is not sufficient for him to answer as to such matters, that he does not recollect, if he gives no reason for his want of recollection, nor any information by which the Court can pursue the investigation, and this applies as to questions upon minute points, or even to matters of intention or motive, if they are necessary to the investigation. And an answer may be direct and full, which is not satisfactory because not reasonable. Re Bradbury, 2 C. L. R. 555.

[891 (8).

On an application by a bankrupt who has been committed for not answering fully, the Court will look to the whole of the examination set out in the warrant; and the proper course is, therefore, to set out therein as much only as is necessary to show the relevancy and materiality of the questions, for not answering which he is committed, especially if they are such as, per se, might appear unimportant. And if, on looking to the whole of what is set out, the Court see that the question was material, and the answer was a mere denial of all recollection, without any reason or explanation, it will not be deemed full and satisfactory. Id.

The answer on which the bankrupt was committed being that he could not recollect how he came to draw a certain cheque in a certain name; and the Court, from the whole examination as set out in the warrant, perceiving that the substance of the inquiry was how he had disposed of the money, and that the name inserted in the cheque, and the object of inserting it, were material on that point:—Held, the committal valid. Id.

4. A petition in bankruptcy having been presented against the prisoner in the D. County Court, the Court made an order that the publication of a notice of the petition in the London Gazette should be deemed service of the petition on the prisoner. The prisoner did not appear according to this notice, and there was no evidence that it had come to his knowledge. The prisoner was adjudicated bankrupt in his absence, and divers proceedings in the bankruptcy took place. Subsequently thereto the prisoner was arrested, and afterwards examined in court touching his affairs by the trustee in the bankruptcy, and the result was that he was indicted and convicted for various offences under the Bankruptcy Act. On the trial, in proof of the publication of the order of the county court in the Gazette, the file of the proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court was produced, containing a cutting from the Gazette of the advertisement of the order of the county court and notice to appear:—Held, that this cutting from the Gazette was improperly received as evidence of the publication of the notice in the London Gazette, and that the conviction could not be sustained. Reg. v. Lowe, 52 L. J. M. C., 122; 48 L. T. 768; 47 J. P. 535; 15 Cox C. C. 286.

5. The Court has no jurisdiction after a prosecution of the bankrupt to order the costs of the prosecution to be paid out of the Chief Registrar's account, even though the bankrupt is convicted. The leave of the Court must be obtained for the prosecution before it is undertaken, or the 223rd section of the Act of 1861 does not take effect. Exp. Davis, Re Hirschman, 2 N. R. 561.

[908 (12).

6. Under the 223rd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, the costs of a prosecution sanctioned by the Commissioner were allowed to the assignees out of the Chief Registrar's account. Exp. Smythe, Re Tear, 5 N. R. 498.

[908 (12).

7. The adjudication under the Scotch Bankrupt Act, 54 Geo. 3, c. 137, operates as diligence for the creditors of the ancestor, so that it is unnecessary for them to take any proceeding under the stat. of 1661, to give them a preference over the creditors of the bankrupt heir. Bennet v. McLachlin, 4 Bli. N. S. 529.

[909 (6).

8. The Court will not annul an adjudication, or order the advertisement in the Gazette to be stayed on the mere ground of an arrangement having been entered into with the creditors, subsequent to such adjudication. Re James, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 154.

9. The plaintiffs were creditors of the defendant on three bills of exchange, and, on his petitioning the Court of Bankruptcy for protection under the arrangement clauses of the Bankruptcy Act 1849, proved their debt. The defendant was afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt on the plaintiffs' petition, and the proceedings were adjourned into open court: but the Lords Justices, on appeal, reversed the order and remitted the case to the Commissioner, who thereupon ordered a fresh adjournment of the first sitting under the petition, at which a proposal of the defendant was accepted by the statutory majority of his creditors, and a certificate of conformity granted under s. 221. Subsequently to proving their debt as above mentioned, the plaintiffs sued on the bills, and, after the granting of the above-mentioned certificate, recovered judgments, on which they brought this action:—Held, that the certificate was as much a bar to an action on the judgments as it would be to an action on the debts for which the judgments were recovered. The proposal, as accepted, stipulated that an instalment of the composition should be paid in cash by a day certain, and the rest by notes secured by a bond. Some of the creditors, however, were paid in full in cash: some were paid the first instalment after the proper day; and the bond was not simply to secure the notes, but was conditional to be void if proceedings in bankruptcy were taken. The composition was tendered to the plaintiffs in exact accordance with the proposal; and all the other creditors received it in full. No proceedings in bankruptcy could have been taken so as to avoid the bond:—Held, that the arrangement had been carried out in conformity with the proposal, and that the informality in the bond did not affect the certificate. Naylor v. Mortimore, 5 N. R. 186. [917 (4).]

Joint Liabilities] 1. A father and son executed a joint and several promissory note, to secure a debt due from the son. Subsequently, the son assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors, and obtained from them a release, but the deed contained no reservation on the part of the creditor of his right to recover from the father, what the son's estate should be insufficient to pay. Held, that the creditor having released the son unconditionally, the father was released also. Exp. Harvey, Re Blakely, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 65. [925 (6).]

2 A statutory majority of the creditors of a debtor arranging under the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, obtained by including creditors who, unknown to the debtor, have received from a third person additional payments on account of their debts in order to induce them to assent, is not such a majority as will bind a dissentient minority under that section: and the execution of a deed of arrangement, under such circumstances, raises no defence to an action for his debt brought by a dissentient creditor. Hemming v. Pugh, 1 N. R. 239. [930 (17).]

3 The 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict., c. 131), directs that a composition deed must be signed by "three-fourths in value of the creditors." Proceedings in outlawry being taken against a defendant, he moved to set them aside on the ground that he was protected by a deed under this section. The question in dispute was whether the "three-fourths" included secured as well as unsecured debts. The Court, without deciding either way, made the rule absolute to stay the proceedings in outlawry, leaving the parties to contest the validity of the deed as they thought proper. King v. Randall, 2 N. R. 325. [931 (9).]

4 A deed of composition by debtor with scheduled creditors, being merely an agreement to pay a certain sum in the pound at a future time, but passing no property, is not a deed within the 192nd section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. Re Tregellas, 2 N. R. 61. [938 (4).]

5 Defendant, a bankrupt, with a view to getting the proceedings in bankruptcy annulled, arranged to pay a composition of 5s. in the pound to all his creditors, but promised an additional composition of 5s. in the pound to two of them, the plaintiff and another. For the purpose of securing that additional composition a bill was accepted by the defendant's brother, and given to the plaintiff. That bill became overdue, and the plaintiff was about to sue thereon, when the defendant mortgaged to him his policy of assurance, and covenanted to pay the premiums that became due on the policy. The first premium not having been paid the plaintiff declared for the amount, when the defendant pleaded that the mortgage was given to the plaintiff in fraud of the other creditors:—Held, on demurrer, that the plea was an answer to the declaration, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Geere v. Mare, 2 N. R. 284. [939 (1).]

6 Where a composition deed contains a covenant by a debtor to pay a composition to his creditors by instalments, the non-performance of such covenant, of itself, invalidates the deed, although it be otherwise good under s. 198 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. Re Llewellyn, 1 N. R. 230. [942 (1).]

7 Deed of composition under the Bankruptcy Act 1861, s. 192, executed by the statutory majority in number and value of creditors, and made between the debtor of the one part, and "the several persons whose names and seals are hereunto respectively subscribed and set," etc., of the other part. Covenant by the debtor with the "said several persons parties hereto of the other part respectively, their respective executors," etc., for payment of a composition of 5s. in the pound. Several of the creditors,—the plaintiff amongst the number,—were non-assenting creditors:—Held (affirming the Court of Exchequer), that the deed was bad under s. 192, for that the non-assenting creditors, who were neither themselves, nor by trustees in their behalf, parties to the deed, were unable to sue: wherefore the deed was not, upon the face of it, for the equal benefit of all the creditors of the debtor:—Held, also, that, for the purpose of curing the inequality, it was an untenable proposition that the assenting creditors might be taken to be trustees covenanting with the debtor for the whole body of his creditors. Benham v. Broadhurst, 5 N. R. 251. [947 (5).]

8 A deed of assignment, under s. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, executed prior to the adjudication of bankruptcy, but registered subsequently, is a sufficient ground for dismissing the petition, though adjudication be already made upon it. Re Clarke, 2 N. R. 418. [952 (3).]

9 The mere production of the registrar's certificate of the registration of a deed of assignment, with an affidavit of the bankrupt that the conditions of s. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861 have been complied with, is not necessarily sufficient evidence to justify the Court in dismissing a petition for adjudication. Re Church, 1 N. R. 86. [952 (7).

1. An execution having been levied by seizure and sale, and afterwards a deed of composition entered into between the debtor and a trustee for his creditors, and registered, a judge's order barring the trustee from bringing an action against the parties levying the execution was set aside, and an action ordered to be brought. Nicholl v. Hallett, 1 N. R. 369. [954 (2).

2. Where a bankrupt, who has made a valid deed of arrangement with his creditors, is arrested before he has obtained the certificate of registration of the deed, a superior Court will, after such registration, make an order for his release, where he is in custody under their process. Penhall v. Littlejohns, 1 N. R. 292. [956 (3).

3. Trustees of a composition deed under the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, refusing to pay a suspicious claim on the debtor's estate, ordered to pay it, but allowed their costs out of the dividend due to the claimant. Re Wheeler, 2 N. R. 158. [961 (7).

4. A deed, executed at 10 A.M. on December 3rd, in pursuance of a resolution passed at a meeting of creditors on November 25th, whereby a debtor assigns all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, "being such persons as would have been entitled to rank as creditors in bankruptcy if he had been adjudicated bankrupt on a petition filed November 25th," passes the property to the trustees, as against a judgment creditor, who signs judgment and issues execution at 11 30 A.M. on December 3rd, and is not void for fraud under 13 Eliz., c. 5. Evans v. Jones, 5 N. R. 95. [967 (3).

5. A deed of trust, in the form prescribed by schedule D. of the Act, is a valid deed within the meaning of s. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861. Anon., 1 N. R. 309. [978 (13).

The certificate of registration is sufficient prima facie evidence that the terms of the Act have been complied with. Ib.

6. The power given to the Court by s. 125, sub-s. 12, of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, to adjudge a debtor who has filed a liquidation petition a bankrupt, may be exercised even though no liquidation or composition resolutions have been passed by the creditors. Exp. Walker, Re M'Henry, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 813; 52 L. J., Ch., 653; 48 L. T. 291; 31 W. R. 419. [981 (4).

7. A debtor filed a liquidation petition in August 1879. A receiver of his property was at once appointed, and injunctions were granted to restrain some of the creditors from proceeding against him for their debts. The first meeting of the creditors was held on the 20th October 1879, when it was resolved to adjourn to the 15th December 1879. Similar resolutions for adjournment were passed again and again, the meeting being ultimately, on the 15th November 1882, adjourned to the 28th March 1883. No resolutions for liquidation by arrangement or composition were passed. In January 1883 two of the creditors applied to the Court of Bankruptcy by motion, under sub-s. 12 of s. 125 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, for an adjudication of bankruptcy against the debtor. At the adjourned meeting on the 28th March 1883, the creditors resolved that it was inexpedient in the interests of the creditors that any further proceedings should be taken under the petition, and that application should be made to the Court to discharge the receiver, and dismiss the petition, or stay all further proceedings under it. The registrar, on the 3rd May, made an adjudication. The debtor appealed, and on the hearing of the appeal an offer was made by a friend of his to pay the debts of the two creditors in full and to provide for their costs of the application, the payment to be made by the friend out of his own moneys, and an undertaking being given by him that neither directly nor indirectly should the payment be made out of the debtor's assets:—Held, that, notwithstanding the resolution of the 28th March, and having regard to the fact that the receiver had not been discharged, the liquidation proceedings were still pending, and that if the adjudication order was discharged, no other creditor would be injured, for that the Court would have jurisdiction to adjudicate the debtor a bankrupt on the application of any other creditor. The adjudication was accordingly discharged on the terms of payment proposed, and on the undertaking of the debtor to apply to the Court of Bankruptcy for leave to summon a fresh first meeting of the creditors. Exp. & Re M'Henry, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 35; 48 L. T. 921; 31 W. R. 873; 53 L. J., Ch., 191. [981 (4).

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to order a fresh first meeting of the creditors under the petition. Ib.

8. In a statement of affairs produced by a debtor, he described some of his assets as the lease of a house No. 15, Motcombe Street, Belgrave Square, but in his petition described himself as of 165, Ferndale Road, in the county of Surrey, and on being examined admitted that he occasionally slept at Motcombe Street:—Held, that the description of the debtor was insufficient. Exp. Pulbrook, Re Lloyd, 48 L. T. 128. [983 (6).

9. There is no absolute rule that a debtor who has no assets cannot file a liquidation petition. Exp. Hudson, Re Walton, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 773; 52 L. J., Ch., 584; 47 L. T. 674; 31 W. R. 372. [983 (7).

10. In a debtor's statement of his affairs presented to the first meeting of his creditors under a liquidation petition under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, he is bound only to show the state of his affairs at the date of the filing of the petition, and is not, therefore, bound to calculate interest on interest-bearing debts beyond that date. Exp. Fewings, Re Sneyd, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 338; 53 L. J., Ch., 545; 50 L. T. 109; 32 W. R. 352. Reversing S. C. nom. Exp. Oxford (Bishop), Re Sneyd, 52 L. J., Ch., 724; 48 L. T. 616; 31 W. R. 675. [987 (9).

By a mortgage deed of an advowson, the mortgagor covenanted to pay the sum of 2,200*l.*, part of the purchase money remaining on mortgage, at a specified date, with interest at 5 per cent. if the same should remain unpaid at that date. The interest being in arrear, the mortgagee, on the 17th July 1882, issued a writ for the amount claimed under the mortgage deed, and upon the 29th July signed judgment for 2,285*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for debt, interest, and costs. Upon the 14th November the mortgagor filed a liquidation petition under which composition resolutions were passed, and registered on the 6th January 1883. In the statement of affairs the mortgagee was entered as a fully-secured creditor for 2,317*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, for debt and interest at 4 per cent., upon the judgment to the date of the petition. A writ of sequestration was issued at the instance of the mortgagee on the 27th January 1883, and on the 15th March following, the bishop was absolutely restrained from taking any further proceedings thereunder:—Held, that the debt was sufficiently set forth. Id.

1. A liquidating debtor, in his statement of affairs, by mistake inserted the amount of the debt due by him to one of his creditors as 17*l.*, the amount being really 17*l.* 15*s.*:—Held, that the creditor was not bound by composition resolutions which were passed by the statutory majority, but to which he did not assent. Exp. & Re Engelhardt, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 706; 52 L. J., Ch., 748; 49 L. T. 281; 31 W. R. 802.

2. The statement of affairs produced by a debtor, who had filed a liquidation petition, showed that his debts amounted to 2,500*l.*, and his assets to 70*l.* The creditors at the first meeting resolved to accept a composition of 6*d.* in the pound, to be paid within one month after the registration of the resolutions, but without any security. These resolutions were subsequently confirmed. A judgment creditor having opposed the registration:—Held, that the proceedings were irregular, and that the resolutions not having been bona fide in the interest of the creditors, ought not to be registered. Exp. Pulbrook, Re Lloyd, 48 L. T. 128.

3. Where there is a small amount of assets, and it is doubtful whether the composition resolutions are not an abuse of process of Court, the question to be decided is whether the creditors, in accepting the composition offered, have acted bona fide, i.e., in the interest of the creditors, and not merely with a view to benefit the debtor. Exp. Hudson, Re Walton, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 773; 52 L. J., Ch., 584; 47 L. T. 674; 31 W. R. 372.

There is no hard and fast line as to the amount of composition which may be accepted, except that the sum must not be so small that no reasonable man would accept it, for in such a case the amount would in itself be evidence of want of bona fides. Id.

4. The creditors of a debtor whose debts amounted to 304*l.* 18*s.*, and whose assets were only 8*l.* 13*s.*, resolved to accept a composition of 3*d.* in the pound, the payment of which was to be secured by one of the creditors. The registration of the resolutions was opposed by a dissentient creditor:—Held, that, having regard to the small amount of the composition, the resolutions must have been passed solely in the interest of the debtor; that they were an abuse of the process of the Court, and that they ought not to be registered. Exp. Russell.

Held, that resolutions accepting a composition of 1*s.* in the pound ought to be registered, the debtor having no assets, but the payment of the composition being secured by a third person. Id.

5. Upon the hearing of an application to register liquidation resolutions, no one has a locus standi to be heard in opposition but a creditor who has previously proved a debt in the mode prescribed by the rules. A person who claims to be a creditor, and in that character to oppose the registration, cannot prove his debt when he comes before the registrar to oppose. If he has not previously proved a debt he cannot be heard. Exp. & Re Bagster, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 477; 49 L. T. 272; 32 W. R. 215; 53 L. J., Ch., 124.

The last clause of sub-s. 7 of s. 125 relates only to the effect of the appointment of a trustee under a liquidation after he has been appointed, and does not impose on the making of the appointment any limitation similar to that which by s. 6 is imposed on the making of an adjudication of bankruptcy, viz., that the act of bankruptcy on which the adjudication is founded must have occurred within six months before the presentation of the petition for adjudication. Id.

7. The effect of Rule 272 of the General Rules 1870, read together with s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict., c. 71), is that in composition proceedings under s. 126 a secured creditor, who proves for the balancing of his debt after deducting the assessed value of his security, and afterwards realises the security, must pay to the debtor any surplus realised above the assessed value, after allowing interest upon the assessed value from the assessment until the realisation. Société Générale de Paris v. Gren, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 606; 32 W. R. 97; 49 L. T. 570; 53 L. J., Ch., 153.

8. A mortgage to a building society provided that the loan, with a premium and interest on the advance, should be paid in equal monthly instalments during a term of twelve years, and that each monthly instalment, when paid, should be applied (1) in payment of the interest due at the time of payment; (2) in payment of the premium till the whole should be discharged; and (3) in payment of the principal. Two years after the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagor filed a liquidation petition, and the society claimed to prove in the liquidation for the total amount of the monthly instalments which remained due under the deed, less the amount at which they valued their security:—Held, that as to so much of the sum claimed as represented interest payable subsequently to the filing of the liquidation petition, the proof must be rejected. Exp. Bath, Re

1. In 1868 G. fraudulently obtained money from R. for investment, and appropriated it to his own use. In 1870 he gave R. promissory notes for the amount, upon which he paid interest from 1870 till 1879. In 1879 he filed a liquidation petition, and a trustee was appointed. Pending the liquidation proceedings, R. brought an action to recover the money:—Held, that the acceptance of the promissory notes and the interest had not changed the original character of the debt or substituted for it a simple contract debt. Ross v. Gutteridge, 52 L. J., Ch., 280; 48 L. T. 117.

A creditor is entitled to take proceedings and recover judgment against a liquidating debtor for a debt incurred by means of fraud while the liquidation proceedings are pending, although the judgment cannot be enforced until the debtor obtains his discharge. Id.

2. The creditors of a bankrupt, at a meeting held pursuant to s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, passed resolutions for the payment of the costs incurred in the bankruptcy proceedings; for the acceptance of a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound; and for the annulment of the bankruptcy upon such payments being made. The bankrupt's father was the principal creditor. There were no assets. The confirmation of the resolutions was opposed, and the County Court judge refused to sign them, considering that they had been passed out of sympathy with the debtor, and not bonâ fide in the interests of the creditors:—Held, upon appeal, that the motive of acceptance was a legitimate one, provided it did not injure any one else, and as there was no probability of the creditors getting more than 2s. 6d. in the pound out of the estate, the resolutions ought to be confirmed and registered. Exp. Hickman, Re Tamlyn, 48 L. T. 913. [1006 (2).]

3. In giving its approval to resolutions for a scheme of settlement under s. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, the Court will consider not only the pecuniary interests of the creditors, but the whole of the circumstances, and if there are any grounds for suspecting that any discreditable transactions have taken place, though there is no proof of fraud, the Court will not approve resolutions which would have the effect of preventing a full investigation. The functions of the Court in this respect are different under s. 28 from those under ss. 125, 126. Exp. Strambridge, Re Hickman, 32 W. R. 173; 25 L. R., Ch. D., 266; 53 L. J., Ch., 323; 49 L. T. 638. [1006 (2).]

The notice of meeting for the purpose of approving of a scheme under s. 28 should state clearly and fairly the nature of the proposals to be brought forward. Id.

4. When a bankruptcy has been annulled under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, s. 28, and a scheme of arrangement of the bankrupt's affairs has been approved of by the Court, the bankrupt is discharged from his debts, and no action is maintainable against him in respect of any debt provable under the bankruptcy. Gilbey v. Jeffries, 11 L. R., Q. B. D., 559; 52 L. J., Q. B., 601; 48 L. T. 699. Affirming 52 L. J., Q. B., 116; 31 W. R. 381. [1006 (6).]

Where an insolvent has been heard before the judge of a County Court, and discharged by him under s. 10 of stat. 10 & 11 Vict., c. 102, the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors has no jurisdiction to make an order for the re-hearing of the case, under s. 96 of stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. Re Clabburn, 16 Jur. 859; 21 L. 6. Dowling*, 1 C. L. R. 539. [1009 (5).]

7. Under 10 & 11 Vict., c. 102, s. 10, the Insolvent Court in London has authority to make an order of reference to a County Court in the matter of an insolvent, where the proceedings in insolvency have originated in a creditor's petition as well as where they have originated in a petition by the insolvent. Reg. v. Judge of the County Court of York, Exp. Greenwood, 6 W. R. 102; 27 L. J., Q. B., 28; 22 Jur. 12. [1009 (5).]

8. Motion by an assignee for a mandamus to the Insolvent Debtors Court in London, to examine an insolvent, under stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 98. The insolvency had taken place, and the petition exhibited, in 1839, more than twenty miles from London, and within the district subsequently assigned to the Somerset County Court. The original adjudication had been made by a Commissioner on circuit; and stat. 10 & 11 Vict., c. 102, had since passed, which abolishes the circuit, and prospectively gives jurisdiction to the County Courts in cases arising within their respective districts at the distance of more than twenty miles from London:—Held, that the Insolvent Debtors Court in London was the proper jurisdiction. Re Wilcox, 13 Q. 9. T. assigned certain life policies to W., and covenanted to pay the premiums. Shortly afterwards he was adjudicated a bankrupt, and obtained his certificate. He then ceased to trade. Subsequently two premiums became due, and were paid by W., who sued T. for the amount, and obtained judgment. T. then petitioned this Court under the Protection Statutes as a non-trader. Semble, the contract to pay being entered into during the trading of T., the debt arising upon the contract constituted him a trader. Re Tucker, 2 Bank. & Ins. 11. Where an insolvent is out of custody on bail, until the day of hearing, and a discharge is lodged at the prison, in the interval, by the detaining creditor, the Court has no power to make an adjudication. Re Smith, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 209. [1009 (10).]

12. Where an insolvent has been discharged out of custody by his detaining creditor, the Court has no power to adjudicate. Re Jeffries, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 191. [1009 (10).]

1. An insolvent who is in custody for damages recovered in an action brought against himself and wife for slander committed by the wife is in custody within the meaning of the 78th section of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and the plaintiff in such action is entitled to an adverse adjudication thereunder against such insolvent. Re Bucknill, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 270. [1009 (10).]

2. Where a petitioner for discharge, whose hearing was fixed for the 23rd January, was discharged by his detaining creditor on the 21st of the same month:—Held, that the Court had no power to adjudicate. Semble, the Court will adjudicate where the period between the lodging of a discharge and the time appointed for the hearing does not exceed twenty-four hours. Re Urban 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 32. [1009 (10).]

3. Where an insolvent, who has obtained his final order, contracts fresh debts:—Held, that he cannot afterwards file a second petition, under the Protection Statutes. Re Shaw, Re Leaver, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 126. [1009 (10).]

4. The petition of A., a prisoner, purported to be subscribed by him in the prison in which he was confined, and attested there by his attorney. It was proved the petition was subscribed by the insolvent before the arrest was effected, and that his attorney was not then present:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction, and the petition was dismissed. Re Abrey, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 136. [1009 (10).]

5. T., who had filed a petition under the Protection Statutes, applied for its dismissal, and supported the application by producing a consent in writing, signed by each of his creditors:—Held, that there must be a release, and the application refused. Re Tarlton, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 78. [1009 (10).]

6. D. being in custody upon an attachment for contempt for the non-performance of a particular act in a suit between himself and L., the latter lodged a distinct detainer and attachment for costs:—Held, that the costs being a debt, the lodging of a detainer distinct from the attachment for contempt gave to this Court jurisdiction to hear the case, and adjudicate thereon so far as the debts were concerned. Secondly, a case of fraud having been made against the insolvent, he having received 100% as to the consideration for granting a lease, and having afterwards refused to execute the same, and the costs in question having arisen on a claim in Chancery for specific performance, and the attachment in question being for non-performance of the decree, this Court would not adjudicate until it saw what became of such attachment, and adjourned the case generally. Re Dann, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 60. [1009 (10).]

[Amendment of Adjudication.] 7. A Commissioner in insolvency adjudicated that a prisoner should be discharged forthwith, except as to a debt of 5l. 5s., being damages recovered in an action for a libel: and as to that he should be so discharged after he should have been in custody for six months. 5l. 5s. was the amount awarded by the jury for damages, without the costs:—Held, that the Commissioner had jurisdiction to alter the adjudication by inserting the true amount of damages, being the aggregate of that sum and the plaintiff's costs in the action. Semble, that the original adjudication was void. Re Helier, 4 W. R. 567. [1009 (10).]

[Description of Insolvent.] 8. Where an insolvent had disposed of his business shortly before petitioning the Court, but omitted to erase his name from the premises, and the business was carried on as usual by the purchaser:—Held, that the description as "lately of that place" was sufficient. Re Mower, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 38. [1009 (10).]

9. Where an insolvent fails to describe himself of all the places where he has resided during the six months next immediately preceding the date of his petition, the petition will be dismissed. Re Bennett, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 95. [1009 (10).]

10. The insolvent had described himself in his petition and schedule as Christian Ditfort, his real name being Christian Ditfort, in which he had signed the said documents:—Held, that the Court could not entertain the petition. Re Ditfort, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 95. [1009 (10).]

11. Where an insolvent, a director of an abortive gold mining company, had been described in the prospectus, by mistake, as of "Sydenham," his real residence being Lacey Terrace, Newington, and where the offices of a friend had been used as an address for business and other letters:—Held, that he must describe himself as of both places, and must re-advertise. Re Dunbar, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 100. [1009 (10).]

12. A., a petitioner for protection, had accepted bills, which were directed to him at 19, Newman Street. He had never resided there, and the place was not mentioned in his description. One of the bills became due within six months of the date of his petition:—Held, that the description in the petition was sufficient. Secondly, that the description in the schedule was defective, and the insolvent was ordered to re-advertise. Re Acret, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 135. [1009 (10).]

13. Where an insolvent petitions the Court as a trader, but omits to describe himself as such in his petition, it will be dismissed. Re Wray, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 189. [1009 (10).]

14. Where an insolvent petitions the Court in a fictitious name, giving his real name as an alias, his petition will be dismissed. Re Jaques, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 251. [1009 (10).]

15. Where an insolvent fails to describe himself according to his business occupation the Court will dismiss the petition. Re Forge, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 98, 244. [1009 (10).]

16. Where an insolvent had described himself in an agreement with his opposing creditor as a "surveyor," and it appeared in evidence that beyond one transaction for a relation he had never been engaged in that capacity, and had never held himself out to the world as such:—Held, that his description as an "auctioneer and appraiser" was sufficient. Re Myers, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 284. [1009 (10).]

17. An insolvent must describe himself as of all places where he has resided during the time when his debts were contracted. Re Cash, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 212. [1009 (10).]

1 The insolvent described himself as a manager to an insurance company. He had been engaged in that capacity by two insurance companies, but he had not described himself specifically of either:—Held, the description was insufficient, and petition dismissed. Re Bevan, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 76.

[1009 (10).

2. Where an insolvent fails to describe himself as of all the places where he has resided during the six months immediately preceding the filing of his petition, the petition will be dismissed. Re Pearce, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 17.

[1009 (10).

3. Where an insolvent fails to describe himself as of all the businesses he has followed during his six months' residence within the jurisdiction of the Court, the petition will be dismissed. Re Green, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 155.

[1009 (10).

4. The insolvent had described himself as a gasfitter, and as a gasfitter to the Italian Opera, he had acted in the same capacity to the Sadler's Wells Theatre:—Held, that his description which omitted his engagements with the theatre was sufficient. He had let lodgings upon one occasion to one person, and a debt was owing to the estate on that account:—Held, that he was not a lodging-house keeper. He had petitioned as John Drake Palmer the younger, but his signature at the foot of the petition omitted the words "the Younger":—Held, that the signature was sufficient. Re Palmer, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 92.

[1009 (10).

Residence.] 5. Section 6 of 10 & 11 Vict., c. 102, gives to the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors jurisdiction in all cases in which the insolvent shall have resided for six calendar months next immediately preceding the time of filing his petition, within any parish, the distance whereof, as measured by the nearest highway from the General Post Office in London to the parish church of such parish, shall not exceed the distance of twenty miles. W., a butler to a gentleman who had establishments both within and without the jurisdiction, had resided at each during the six months:—Held, insufficient to constitute a residence under the provisions of the Act, and the petition was dismissed. Re Whittingham, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 44.

6. M., who had been travelling on the continent for a period of eighteen months, returned to England, and, five weeks afterwards, applied for leave to file a petition under s. 8 of 10 & 11 Vict., c. 102:—Held, that he was not entitled to petition under that section, and the application was refused. Re Michael, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 111.

[1009 (10).

7. W., who occupied lodgings without the jurisdiction of this Court, having left them for a fortnight during the six months immediately preceding the date of his petition to visit a daughter, who resided within the jurisdiction, petitioned, under s. 8 of 10 & 11 Vict., c. 102, as a non-resident:—Held, that the visit to the daughter constituted no interruption of residence, and petition dismissed. Re Williams, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 148.

[1009 (10).

8. Where an insolvent resides within a parish the distance whereof, as measured by the nearest highway from the General Post Office in London to the parish church of such parish, exceeds twenty miles, this Court has no jurisdiction. Re Holden, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 216.

[1009 (10)

Amount of Debts.] 9. In estimating the amount of a trader's debts, upon an application for protection, those owing under a former insolvency must be included. Re Taft, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 6.

[1009 (10)

10. Where an insolvent has been discharged under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and subsequently petitions under the Protection Statutes as a trader owing less than 300*l.*, in estimating the amount of his debts, those owing under the first insolvency will not be taken into consideration. Re Harrod, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 71.

[1009 (10).

11. In estimating the amount of a trader's debts under the Protection Statutes, debts owing to mortgage creditors must be included. Re Cockle, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 93.

[1009 (10).

12. In estimating the amount of a trader's debts, those due to mortgage creditors must be included. Re Harmer, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 40.

[1009 (10).

13. Where a petitioner for protection is an uncertificated bankrupt, in estimating the amount of his debts, those owing under the bankruptcy must be included. Re Newcomb, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 6.

[1009 (10).

14. B., whose petition under the Protection Act had been adjourned sive dic. contracted fresh debts, and was arrested in consequence:—Held, that he was not entitled to insert in his new petition, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, the debts he had scheduled under his former application. Re Blyth, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 253.

[1009 (10).

15. In estimating the amount of a trader's debts under the protection statutes, debts owing in former insolvencies, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, will not be taken into consideration. Re Archer, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 20.

[1009 (10).

16. Where an insolvent is a certificated bankrupt, in estimating the amount of his debts under the protection statutes, those owing at the time of the bankruptcy will not be included. Re Whitfield, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 190.

[1009 (10).

17. Where an insolvent petitions the Court under the protection statutes, and no final order is granted, the Court will not permit him to insert the debts in a subsequent petition under the prison statutes. Re Holmes, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 252.

[1009 (10).

18. Where, in order to give jurisdiction to the County Courts, a portion of a debt has been abandoned, under s. 63 of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, in estimating the amount of a petitioner's debts under the Protection Statutes, the residue only will be taken into consideration. Re Richardson, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 12.

[1009 (10).

19. The acceptance of a smaller sum, in satisfaction of a greater sum, constitutes no legal discharge of a debt; therefore, in estimating the amount of an insolvent's liabilities, the difference will be taken into consideration. Re Strange, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 184.

[1009 (10).

20. Where several of the creditors of an insolvent had accepted a composition in satisfaction of their debts, and had signed receipts and an agreement accordingly:—Held, as no release under seal had been executed, the difference between the composition paid and the amount of the debts originally owing must be taken into consideration in estimating the insolvent's liabilities, and, as the whole exceeded 300%, the petition was dismissed. Re Chance, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 17.

[1009 (10).]

1. A. petitioned the County Court for protection from process under the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 116, as a trader owing debts amounting in the whole to less than 300%. It appeared that he had previously presented a similar petition, and obtained a final order for protection, and that the debts specified in the schedule to the former petition were still unpaid. The whole amount of the debts stated in both the schedules exceeded 300%. The judge decided that he was entitled to protection as a trader owing debts amounting in the whole to less than 300%.—Held, that (assuming the decision to be erroneous), a prohibition could not be granted, as this was a question which the judge had jurisdiction to determine. Re Bowen, 21 L. J., Q. B., 10.

Quære, whether the decision was erroneous. Id.

Who may Oppose. 2. Where a creditor endeavours to make terms for himself, and threatens an opposition unless those terms are complied with, the Court will not permit him to oppose. Re Broad, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 13. S. P. Re Penfold, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 220.

[1009 (10).]

3. Where a creditor threatens an insolvent with an opposition unless his debt be renewed the Court will not permit such creditor to be heard. Re Batty, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 17.

[1009 (10).]

4. H., a creditor, having visited the insolvent in prison in order to effect a settlement of his debt, and having threatened to oppose unless his terms were complied with, it was objected at the hearing that H. ought not to be permitted to oppose:—Held, that this Court had no right to refuse his evidence, and he having made out a case against the insolvent, the Court ordered a remand at his suit. Re Watt, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 113.

[1009 (10).]

5. The insolvent, in conjunction with two others, established a loan society, and afterwards received from his partners various sums to advance to borrowers, which he appropriated to his own use. The fraud being discovered, and his partners fearing to be unable to recover outstanding loans without his assistance, an arrangement was come to by which his interest in the funds of the society was to be retained by his partners, and the sum appropriated repaid by instalments. The insolvent was afterwards employed by the society, and paid three instalments, in pursuance of the agreement. Subsequently, some new misconduct being discovered, he was discharged, and the instalments being in arrears, arrested. Having petitioned this Court, and being opposed by his late partners on the ground of fraud:—Held, that the creditors had not waived their right to complain of the fraud by entering into the arrangement with the insolvent, and that a good debt existed upon which to rest the opposition. Re Ulph, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 156.

6. A., who had obtained a judgment against the insolvent for 40%, assigned it to B., empowering him in the name of A. to issue execution, proceed to outlawry, or otherwise, as should be necessary for the recovery of the debt. Subsequently A. was declared a bankrupt:—Held, that B. was entitled, in the name of A., to oppose the insolvent. Re Sorrell, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 182.

[1009 (10).]

7. General instructions to an attorney to defend an action, and to proceed against the plaintiff as far as the law will allow, do not authorise him, without further communication with his client, to oppose the plaintiff on his hearing under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. Re Lidbetter, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 283.

[1009 (10).]

8. The Court will not require a creditor to prove his debt for the purposes of an opposition, where the same is admitted in the schedule, and judgment obtained against the insolvent. Re Hinds, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 8.

[1009 (10).]

9. Where a creditor fails to give notice of his opposition, according to the rules of court, he will not be admitted to oppose. Re Giddings, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 281.

[1009 (10).]

10. Where an insolvent had inserted a society in his schedule as debtors who appeared to deny and to complain of such insertion:—Held, that creditors only could be heard, and opposition disallowed. Re Wear, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 13.

[1009 (10).]

11. In 1853 the insolvent was discharged by the County Court at Maidstone under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, upon which occasion M. acted as his attorney, and agreed to take him through the court for a specific sum. In 1855 the insolvent filed a petition under the Protection Statutes, and inserted M. in his schedule as a creditor for a portion of the sum before referred to. Upon the occasion of the first examination M. appeared to oppose, when his opposition was objected to, inter alia, that he had not complied with Rule III. of the Court respecting the taxation, etc., of his bill of costs:—Held, that inasmuch as the debt of M. arose out of a non-observance of one of the rules of court, the Court would not permit him to oppose. Re Standish, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 94.

[1009 (10).]

12. Where an insolvent had inserted in her schedule as creditors the several persons whose names appeared to a bill of exchange of which she was the acceptor:—Held, that the holder only was entitled to oppose. Held, also, that his right to appear did not extend to a day appointed for the adjourned consideration of the final order, he not having appeared before. Re Cann, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 217.

[1009 (10).]

Grounds of Opposition. 13. Where an insolvent comes before the Court upon an application for protection under s. 28 of 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, the Court will take into consideration all the circumstances of the insolvency, the conduct of the petitioner, as well before as after the insolvency, and adjudicate accordingly. Re Miller, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 36. [1009 (10).]

1. Where an insolvent comes before the Court on a friendly arrest, and there are no assets to be divided amongst creditors, the petition will be dismissed. Re Calt, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 37. S. P. Re Bain, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 64. Re Stafford, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 249. [1009 (10).]

2. It is not an inflexible rule that the petition of an insolvent will be dismissed, where the arrest is friendly, and there are no assets to be divided amongst the creditors. Re Jones, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 3. [1009 (10).]

3. Where an insolvent is in an evident condition of embarrassment, and no case is proved against him, the Court will not dismiss the petition, although the arrest is friendly, and there are no assets to be divided amongst the creditors. Re Fisher, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 279. [1009 (10).]

4. Where it appears to the Court that the allegations of the petition are untrue, it will be dismissed. Re Hutchinson, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 181. [1009 (10).]

5. Where a bankrupt, not having surrendered, was afterwards arrested for the costs of the adjudication, and then petitioned the County Court under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110:—Held, under s. 72, that the judge might adjourn the hearing to some future day, of which notice should be given:—Held, also, that if the petition was presented in order to frustrate the control of the judge in bankruptcy, it might be sufficient ground for dismissal, if the judge thinks fit. Re Monro, 6 W. R. 332; 4 Jur., N. S., 259. [1009 (10).]

6. The insolvent having contracted debts with two opposing creditors by means of fraud and false representations, the petition was dismissed. Re King, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 31. [1009 (10).]

7. C., a petitioner for protection, having made false entries in his special balance sheet respecting the receipt and payment of a sum of money, the petition was dismissed. Re Coombes, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 79. [1009 (10).]

8. E., a petitioner for protection, having placed a phanton in the possession of a sister shortly before the filing of his petition, accounted for the fact by stating he had sold the same to her husband two years since. The Court, believing such statement to be a stratagem to defraud the creditors of their just rights, dismissed the petition. Re Edwards, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 74. [1009 (10).]

9. Where a petitioner for protection parts with or charges property, except for the necessary support of himself and family, and the necessary expenses of his petition, or in the ordinary course of trade, within three months of the date of filing his petition, the petition will be dismissed. Re Hall, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 73. [1009 (10).]

10. Where an insolvent disposes of his estate to one creditor, and subsequently applies to the Court for protection against the rest, his case will be adjourned sine die. Re Cremmens, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 15. [1009 (10).]

11. Where an insolvent distributes his property, and shortly afterwards applies for protection, the Court will adjourn his case sine die. Re Soame, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 14. [1009 (10).]

12. An insolvent who disposes of property within three months of the filing of his petition, has no locus standi under the protection statutes. Re Thorne, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 185. [1009 (10).]

13. An insolvent who parts with property within three months of filing his petition, otherwise than for the necessary support of himself and family, and the necessary expenses of his petition, or in the ordinary course of trade, has no locus standi under the Protection Statutes. Re Tame, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 41. [1009 (10).]

14. Where an insolvent becomes security for other persons at a period when he is unable to pay his own debts, the Court will refuse an immediate protection. Re Rolfe, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 16. [1009 (10).]

15. K. having borrowed 60*l.* for the purposes of his business, repaid the loan within three months of the date of his petition:—Held, the payment was within the meaning of the words, "in the ordinary course of trade." Re King, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 96. [1009 (10).]

16. The Court will not dismiss an insolvent's petition where an omission appears which is supplied by the schedule, unless fraud or collusion be intended. Re Smith, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 219. [1009 (10).]

17. Where an insolvent wilfully omits a debt from his schedule, the Court will dismiss the petition, although the creditor omitted does not desire to oppose. Re Pain, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 250. [1009 (10).]

18. Where, in the statements set opposite to the debts in a schedule, an insolvent swears to facts which are manifestly untrue, and it appears that the object in doing so was to mislead, the Court will either dismiss the petition or adjourn the case sine die. Re Carr, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 210. [1009 (10).]

19. Where an insolvent had omitted to insert the holder of a negotiable instrument, given in respect of a debt in the schedule, on a rule obtained after the first examination and before the final order to show cause why, the schedule should not be amended by inserting the name of the holder:—Held, that the Court had power to allow the amendment at any time before the making of the final order. Re Innes, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 207. [1009 (10).]

20. J. S., one of the partners in a firm, before leaving England for America, placed in the care of the insolvent, the foreman in the business, his share of the partnership property, and agreed, in the event of his dying out of this country, or not being heard of, that the same should be given over to the insolvent. Upon these facts coming to the knowledge of T. S., the other partner, he stated to the insolvent that J. S. had no right thus to dispose of the partnership property, and directed him not to allow anything to be removed from the premises, which direction he promised to observe. On the following day, during the absence of T. S., he sold, as he alleged, two lathes which had been brought into the firm by J. S., for 7*l.* 10*s.*, which sum he subsequently paid over to T. S. On an action being brought by the firm for the value of the lathes, the jury gave 20*l.*, in addition to the 7*l.* 10*s.* already paid:—Held, the debt was contracted by a breach of trust, and the petition of the insolvent was adjourned. Re Stanley, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 62. [1009 (10).]

1. Where there has been a contest before a jury, and a motion afterwards to the Court on a legal point, the Court is disinclined to pronounce a defence vexatious; but where the plaintiff, by such defence, has been put to a considerable expense, and it appears that the plea was founded in falsehood, the Court will adjudge the defence vexatious. Re Couchman, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 248. [1009 (10).]

2. Where an insolvent had vexatiously defended an action which had been brought against him by his opposing creditor:—Held, to be no ground of complaint under the Protection Statutes. Re Long, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 75. [1009 (10).]

3. A vexatious defence to an action is a ground of opposition to an insolvent under the protection statutes. Re John, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 199. Re Liddlelow, 1 Bank. [1009 (10).]

4. Where an insolvent is opposed on the ground of a breach of promise of marriage, this Court will not re-hear the case, but will estimate the length of the remand by considering the situation in life of the parties to the action, and the amount of damages recovered. Re Mole, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 72. [1009 (10).]

5. Where an insolvent is indebted for costs in consequence of having brought an unsuccessful action, and it appears to the Court that the claim made was known by him to be unfounded, he will be held to have contracted a debt by means of false pretences, within the meaning of s. 78 of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. Re Dunn, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 119. [1009 (10).]

6. Where an insolvent had sold to his opposing creditor the lease of premises, concealing from him the fact that an action of ejectment was then pending against him by the lessor, and the opposing creditor was subsequently ejected from the premises in consequence, on action brought by the opposing creditor to recover damages for the fraud, judgment was allowed to go by default, and damages were assessed at 130*l.*, which constituted the opposing creditor's debt.—Held, that the debt was within the meaning of the 78th section of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, as a debt contracted by fraud and false pretences, and the insolvent was remanded accordingly. Re Turner, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 287. [1009 (10).]

[Practice on Opposition.] 7. Although an insolvent fails to appear on the day appointed for his examination, the creditors are entitled to prove their cases, and to call witnesses. Re Scholey, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 273. [1009 (10).]

8. This Court has no power to receive affidavits in opposition to a petitioner under the Protection Statutes. Re Wright, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 97. [1009 (10).]

9. A creditor having been plaintiff in an action to recover money received on his account, the defendant pleaded by way of set-off payments made in Australia, on account of the plaintiff, and applied for a commission to examine witnesses, whereupon the plaintiff, under a judge's order, admitted such payments to have been made, and went to the jury on the question only whether they could be charged against the plaintiff, under the agreement between the parties. A judgment being recovered for the plaintiff, and the defendant becoming an insolvent:—Held, that the plaintiff, as an opposing creditor, was not, by his admission in the action, precluded from inquiring under the insolvency whether the payments so admitted had been in truth made by the insolvent, as, if not, assets may exist applicable to a dividend. Re Myers, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 8. [1009 (10).]

10. C., who had given a judge's order in 1847, for the payment of a sum of money, was arrested in 1853 for a balance then owing upon the same. In 1847 the detaining creditor's attorney was T., but in 1853 L. acted for him, and obtained a vested order against C. T. was inserted in the schedule as the attorney to the detaining creditor, and served with a copy of the order for hearing. The detaining creditor claimed notice for L.:—Held, the notice on T. was sufficient. Re Carter, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 58. [1009 (10).]

11. B., at the desire of his opposing creditor, accepted a bill, "J. E. Baker & Son." The son had no interest in the business, and the transaction was a solitary one:—Held, that the description which omitted J. E. Baker & Son was sufficient. Re Baker, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 273. [1009 (10).]

[Bail.] 12. Where on any application on sureties the record in an action between the insolvent and his opposing creditor shows a clear case for remand, a discharge on bail will be refused; but where the record simply proves the existence of a debt, and other evidence is necessary to bring the case within the penal provisions of the Act, the Court will not go into further evidence, but will grant an insolvent the privilege of bail. Re Weston, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 281. [1009 (10).]

13. Where an insolvent omits to file his books, the Court will refuse a discharge on bail, under s. 38 of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. Re Parry, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 254. [1009 (10).]

14. Where on an application for a discharge on sureties no ground for a remand appears on the face of the proceedings, the Court will not receive evidence of an alleged offence, but will grant the indulgence of a discharge on bail. Re Brown, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 21. [1009 (10).]

15. Where an insolvent applies to be discharged on bail until his adjourned hearing, the detaining creditor is entitled to oppose the application, although he did not appear on the occasion of the original hearing. Re Ruffell, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 275. [1009 (10).]

16. Where an insolvent makes over his property to a particular creditor to secure his debt, this Court will not accept such creditor as a surety for the insolvent under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 38. Re Hudson, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 155. [1009 (10).]

17. Where an insolvent is indebted in damages recovered against him in an action for trespass and false imprisonment, and the declaration shows a clear case for remand, the Court will refuse an application to admit to bail until the day of hearing. Re Lindsay, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 150. [1009 (10).]

1. A discharge on bail being clearly given by s. 38 of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, the Court will rather enlarge than curtail the privilege. Where, therefore, matters were shown in evidence against L., which the Court intimated would be taken into consideration in giving judgment, on application the bail was enlarged, and the insolvent discharged until his adjourned hearing. Re Lyons, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 268. [1009 (10).

2. M., having applied to be discharged on bail under s. 38 of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, was unable to appear through illness on the day appointed for considering the application:—Held, that the Court could proceed in his absence, and the sureties being approved of, the application was granted. Re Marquham, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 160. [1009 (10).

3. Where an insolvent had been discharged from custody on finding two sufficient sureties, who had entered into a recognisance to the provisional assignee for his appearance according to the order for hearing. On a rule to show cause why the recognisance should not be estreated, the insolvent not having appeared:—Held, that his illness was a good answer to the rule. Re Simons, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 21. And see S. C. id. 4. [1009 (10).

Semble, the Court has no power to enforce such a rule after the insolvent has been discharged out of custody by his detaining creditor. Id.

Allowance. 4. A prisoner for debt who is entitled to be discharged under the Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors is not entitled by remaining in prison to allowances under 53 Geo. 3, c. 113. Conill v. Hudson, 6 W. R. 37; 27 L. J., Q. B., 8; 21 Jur. 1237. [1009 (10).

5. Semble, where a clear case of fraud is made against an insolvent, and he is remanded in consequence, the Court will refuse a rule nisi on the detaining creditors for an allowance under s. 86 of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. Re Luke, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 216. [1009 (10).

6. Where an application is made to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors to appoint an assignee in a case which has been heard in a County Court, it must be accompanied by a certificate from the judge that no similar application has been made to him by the person nominated, and been refused. Re Davis, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 36. [1010 (2).

7. Where an insolvent gives an attorney a general authority to act for him, and he, without communicating with the insolvent, pleads to an action which has been brought against him, the Court will hold the insolvent responsible for the consequences. Re Child, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 101. [1011 (6).

8. R., in consideration of past and future advances, by bill of sale, dated the 28th November 1850, assigned all his household goods, growing crops, etc., to W., with a proviso of defeasance if he should repay W. the sums advanced, and to be advanced, in all not exceeding 700*l.* and interest thereon, on the 1st January 1851; but it was provided, that if default was made in payment on that day, W. should have possession of all the goods, etc., at his discretion should sell them, and should retain the proceeds in trust to pay himself the sums so due, and to pay the surplus, if any, to R. Default was made on the 1st January 1851, and on the 4th February W. took possession of the goods, etc. On the 25th February R. filed his petition under the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, and the plaintiffs were appointed assignees. On the 4th March W. sold the property included in the bill of sale:—Held, in an action brought by the assignees of R., that by this sale W. did not avail himself of the bill of sale within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, s. 21, and that the assignees were not entitled to recover the goods. Simpson v. Wood, 7 Exch. 349; 21 L. J., Exch., 152. [1014 (2).

9. A tenant being indebted to his landlord for rent, and being in insolvent circumstances, proposed to and executed to the defendant, in April 1850, a bill of sale of his farming stock and furniture; and in June 1851 petitioned the Insolvent Court for protection from process. The 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, s. 19, after making void certain voluntary conveyances by parties in insolvent circumstances, provides that no such conveyance shall be deemed void if made prior to three months before filing the petition, and not with the view or intention by the party so conveying of petitioning the Insolvent Court for protection at any time when he might apprehend proceedings would be or were taken against him:—Held, that this was a misdirection; the question being, not whether the insolvent had a general intention at some future time of petitioning the Insolvent Court, but whether he had the present intention of so doing. Thoyts v. Hobbs, 21 L. J., Exch., 340. [1014 (2).

10. The plaintiff having seized and taken possession of certain growing crops under a bill of sale, the sheriff seized and sold the crops under a writ of execution on a judgment of defendant against the vendor, and paid the proceeds to the defendant. The debtor having petitioned the Insolvent Debtors Court for protection, his assignees withdrew from contesting the right of the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the proceeds of the crops as against the defendant, and that it would have made no difference if the assignees had not withdrawn. Congreve v. Evetts, 2 C. L. R. 1253; 18 Jur. 655. [1015 (2).

11. An insolvent, after an adjudication that he was to be finally discharged on the expiration of a certain period of imprisonment, which is still running, gave a warrant of attorney and paid a sum of money to procure his release from custody. The Court ordered the warrant of attorney to be set aside and the money to be refunded, but without costs. Exp. Smith, 1 W. R. 167. [1016 (4).

12. The jurisdiction of the Court to administer the assets acquired after the discharge of a deceased insolvent is taken away by the Insolvent Act, 3 & 4 Vict., c. 107, therefore a suit for the administration of such assets may not be maintained by a scheduled creditor of the insolvent, or by his personal representative. Thomas v. Pinnell (15 Beav. 148) and Re Moylan (16 Beav. 220) approved of and followed. Dunlevie v. Hort, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 99. Reversing id. 82. [1016 (8).

13. Section 9 of 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, enacts, inter alia, "that the wearing apparel, bedding, and other necessities of the petitioner and his family, and the working tools and implements of the petitioner, not exceeding in the whole the value of 20*l.*, may be excepted by the petitioner from the operation of the Act." A publican having petitioned was allowed by the broker to the Court under this section a beer-engine, counter, and other fixtures, which the auctioneer to the Court subsequently removed for the benefit of creditors:—Held, that the auctioneer was justified in so doing, the articles not being within the meaning of the above section. Re Castle, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 18.

1. In order to comply with the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, s. 9, the petitioner must specify in his schedule each article he claims to except, with its value. An insolvent debtor, on petitioning the Court, claimed to except certain articles under the following description in his schedule: "On the 23rd day of October I deposited with Mr. Roberts sundry articles of furniture worth in my opinion 16*l.*"—Held, that that statute was not complied with, and that the articles were not excepted. Taylor v. Roberts, 4 W. R. 560.

[1017 (8).]

2. Semble, the wearing apparel, bedding, and tools of an insolvent debtor not exceeding the value of 20*l.*, which are excepted by him in his petition, and are, by the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, s. 9, excluded from the operation of the Insolvency Acts, are protected from execution by the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 116, s. 1. Rideal v. Fort, 4 W. R. 302; 25 L. J., Exch., 201.

[1017 (8).]

3. An agreement to furnish existing documents and information to enable a person to recover property of his right to which he is not aware, in consideration of receiving a share of the property to be recovered, is not illegal if no suit be depending, and no stipulation be made for the commencement of any suit. But it is illegal to agree for such a consideration to supply documents and information sufficient to enable a person to recover property, in case of its being necessary to resort to legal proceedings for its recovery. Where a person, after agreeing to supply evidence for the recovery of property in consideration of receiving a share, petitions the Insolvent Debtors Court, and a vesting order is made, his right to sue on the agreement vests in the assignee, and the insolvent is not entitled to sue in the event of the assignee not interfering. Sprye v. Porter, 5 W. R. 81; 26 L. J., Q. B., 64; 1 Jur., N. S., 330.

[1017 (10).]

4. N., who had described himself in his schedule as the lay impropriator of the tithes of the village of Lindfield, being insolvent and in prison, S., by the license of the bishop, undertook the duties of curate, which he continued to perform for nine years. On a claim being made by S. against the estate of N. for remuneration for his services for four years, part of the nine, at the rate of 30*l.* per annum:—Held, that as N. was the lay impropriator of the tithes, his estate was liable to S. for the amount claimed. Re Nainby, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 24.

[1021 (7).]

5. Where a prisoner remains in custody for twenty-one days, without making satisfaction to his detaining creditor for the debt and costs for which he is detained, and the detaining creditor applies for an order vesting the estate and effects of such prisoner in the provisional assignee, under s. 56 of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, the Court has no power to interfere to stay the issuing of the vesting order. Re Hutchinson, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 63.

6. The Court has no power to make an order on the provisional assignee to join in making a conveyance or assignment under s. 68 of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, until after the day gazetted for the bringing up of the insolvent. Re Carter, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 212.

[1029 (10).]

Setting aside Income for Creditors. 7. R., having voluntarily surrendered to the provisional assignee 418*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.*, to which he had become entitled as next of kin, twenty years after his insolvency, it was ordered, on application, that the sum of 30*l.* which had been deducted from his pension, annually, for the benefit of his creditors should be discontinued. Re Ray, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 5.

[1029 (10).]

8. Where an insolvent proposes to set aside a portion of his income for the benefit of creditors, the Court, in considering the sufficiency of the proposal, will have regard to the circumstances in which he is placed, his condition in life, and the duties imposed upon him. Re Mawey, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 180.

[1029 (10).]

9. W. having made a proposal of 80*l.* per annum, payable by quarterly instalments of 20*l.* for the benefit of creditors, which was embodied in his final order:—Held, that the non-payment of such instalments, pursuant to the terms of the final order, is a contempt of Court, for which the insolvent may be committed. Held, also, that any creditor of an insolvent is entitled to make the application for the attachment. Held, lastly, that it is not a necessary preliminary to the granting of the attachment, that there should be a personal service on the insolvent, and a demand made to perform the act for which it is sought to commit him. Re Weymouth, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 7.

[1029 (10).]

Surplus 10. In an application for a revesting order under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, where the insolvent had wantonly created legal expenses by proceedings against the assignee and otherwise:—Held, that those expenses being caused to the assignee involuntarily, he was entitled to charge them against the trust estate, and that the insolvent was not entitled to a revesting order until the assignee's account of the same had been obtained and taxed, and the balance liquidated. Re Perkins, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 137.

Discharge from Custody. When Granted 11. Section 28 of 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, enacts "That if no day be named for making the final order, or if the consideration of such final order be adjourned sine die, or if the final order be refused, the Commissioner shall have the power after the expiration of such time, etc., to make an order to protect such petitioner from being taken or detained under any process whatever," etc. Section 29 provides, "That if such petitioner shall be taken or detained under any process whatever for any debt or claim in respect of which he is protected from process by such order as last aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the Commissioner to order any officer who shall have such petitioner so in custody, to discharge such petitioner therefrom." C., who had obtained his final order, being sued for a debt which was set out in his schedule, allowed judgment to go by default, and was taken in execution on a ca. sa.—Held, that the provisions of the latter section are applicable to a final order as well as an order for protection. Secondly, that a ca. sa. is process within the meaning of the section, from which the Court can order a discharge. Thirdly, that the insolvent's right to a discharge was not prejudiced by his failing to appear and plead the adjudication on being sued, and that he was therefore entitled to be discharged from custody. Re Coppins, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 54. [1031 (1).

1. A. having been committed pursuant to an order of a county court judge, for the nonpayment of a debt set forth in his schedule, from which he was protected from process by an interim order of protection. It was ordered, on application, that he should be discharged. Re Minnett, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 11. [1031 (1).

2. Where an insolvent has been discharged under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and is subsequently committed to prison by the order of a County Court Judge for the nonpayment of a debt which is set out in the schedule, this Court has no power to order a discharge. Re Howe, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 274. [1031 (1).

3. Where an insolvent carries on a business which is capable of being sold, the Court will withhold the discharge until he has placed the assignee in a position to dispose of it for the benefit of creditors. Exp. Patterson, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 39. [1031 (1).

4. Where an insolvent is arrested between the hour of filing his petition and that in which he obtains the protection, signed by the Commissioner, this Court will order a discharge. Re Rimell, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 59. [1031 (1).

5. R., having dealt with his opposing creditors for many months, and paid them a large sum of money, increased the balance owing to them towards the end of the dealings, and two days before his arrest on the 30th June, received from them goods to the amount of 13*l*. On the 1st of the same month he had disposed of his horses and cart by which the business was carried on, and appropriated most of the proceeds in paying a loan to a friend:—Held, that these facts disentitled him to a discharge forthwith, and he was remanded for fourteen weeks under the discretionary clause. Re Roberts, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 159. S. P. Re Marshall, Id. 78; Re Butler, Id. 150. [1031 (1).

6. C., having been arrested on a capias, was discharged on bail. Subsequently the action was tried against him, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, upon which the defendant filed his petition under the Protection Statutes, and subsequently surrendered to prison in discharge of his bail. Upon an application to this Court for his discharge ad interim:—Held, that this Court had no power to interfere. C. afterwards obtained his final order:—Held, that this Court had power to order a discharge, having granted the final order:—Held, also, by Mr. Baron Alderson, at chambers, that the final order protected the insolvent, and a discharge ordered. Re Chabert, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 133. [1031 (1).

7. Where an insolvent had been ordered to be discharged except as to a debt of 5*l*. 5*s*. damages in an action of slander, and upon his tendering this money it was discovered that the taxed costs had been accidentally omitted in the order, whereupon the Commissioner amended it, the Court refused to discharge the insolvent out of custody. Re Helier, 4 W. R. 567. [1031 (1).

8. After a judgment against a defendant in a County Court, he was discharged by the Insolvent Court, under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and the debt recovered in the County Court was duly inserted in the schedule. After this he was committed under 9 & 10 Vict., c. 95, ss. 98, 99:—Held, that the commitment by the County Court judge was not merely an execution, but savoured also of contempt, and the Court refused a rule calling upon the judge of the County Court, and the plaintiff there, to show cause why the defendant there should not be discharged from the custody to which he had been committed by the County Court judge. Exp. Summers, 2 W. R. 487; 3 C. L. R. 851. [1031 (1).

9. Where an insolvent has been discharged under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and is subsequently committed on a judgment for the nonpayment of a debt which is set out in the schedule, this Court has no power to grant a discharge. Re Christy, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 70. [1031 (1).

10. Where an insolvent is committed to prison by the order of a County Court for the nonpayment of a debt which is set out in the schedule, and the order for committal is subsequent to the date of the final order, this Court will grant a discharge. Re Hobbs, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 7. [1031 (1).

11. Where an insolvent is arrested by a creditor (whose debt is inserted in the schedule) after the filing of his petition and schedule, and the issue of the interim order, but before it reaches him, this Court will order a discharge. Re Lee, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 19. [1031 (1).

12. Where an insolvent is committed to prison by the order of a County Court upon a judgment summons, between the dates of his interim order and final order, for the nonpayment of a debt which is inserted in the schedule, and in respect to which he is protected from process, this Court will grant a discharge. Re Messenden, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 71. [1031 (1).

13. An insolvent, who has been adjourned sine die, without protection, until after twelve months from the date of such adjournment, is entitled to his protection after the twelve months have expired under 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, s. 28; and to his discharge under s. 29. Exp. & Re Swain, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 61. [1031 (1).

14. Where an insolvent is an uncertificated bankrupt, and applies to the Insolvent Debtors Court for a discharge from debts subsequently contracted, this Court, before proceeding with the case, will require a certificate from the proper officer of that Court, certifying what had been done there on the insolvent's last appearance. Re Schottlander, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 77. [1031 (1).

15. On the 16th May, J., being protected from this process by an order of Court, appeared at a County Court in obedience to a judgment summons, which had been issued against him at the suit of a creditor whose debt was set out in the schedule. He then exhibited his protection to the judge, who, notwithstanding, ordered him to be committed for thirty-five days. On this order J. was subsequently arrested. The warrant set out "that he was personally served with a summons but did not attend, whereupon he was ordered to be committed for thirty-five days." J. having moved this Court for a discharge, and denied by affidavit the truth of this statement, the Court granted a rule to show cause, and the judgment creditors presenting no facts in answer to the affidavit, the Court ordered a discharge. Re Jecks, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 151.

1. Where an insolvent is committed to prison for the nonpayment of a debt, in respect to which he is protected from process by his interim order, and the order for committal is subsequent in date to the interim order, this Court will grant a discharge. Re Addis, 2 Bank. & Ins. R. 60.

[1031 (1).]

2. A debtor who has been arrested in the country, and who has applied to the Insolvent Debtors Court there for his discharge, may be removed to the Queen's Bench prison by writ of habeas corpus. Gurney v. Hallen, 1 H. & N. 142; 25 L. J., Exch., 277.

[1031 (1).]

3. An insolvent, against whom a verdict for damages, in an action of tort, has been returned, but judgment not entered at the time of the filing of his petition under the Insolvent Acts, 5 & 6 Vict., c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, is not protected by his final order under those statutes from being taken in execution under "process in respect" of such verdict. Baron v. Walker, 16 Jur. 547; 21 L. J., C. P., 161.

[1033 (9).]

4. The power of commitment by a County Court judge under 9 & 10 Vict., c. 95, s. 99, is taken away by the discharge of the defendant under the Insolvent Court. Where C. sued R. in the County Court, and judgment was obtained against R., and subsequently an order for his discharge was granted by the Insolvent Court:—Held, that the judgment debt against R. being inserted in his schedule, the County Court judge had no power to commit R. under 9 & 10 Vict., c. 95; s. 102 being repealed by 19 & 20 Vict., c. 108, s. 2. Cookman v. Rose, 5 W. R. 576.

[1033 (12).]

5. Where a debtor, outlawed upon final process, has afterwards obtained his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act, this Court will reverse the outlawry, the debtor entering into an agreement to make what assignment may be necessary to the assignees, and upon paying costs of the reversal of the outlawry. Quare, whether such discharge under the Insolvent Act enables the debtor to reverse the outlawry as a matter of right. Baskerville v. Spry, 4 W. R. 529; 2 Jur., N. S., 589.

[1036 (3).]

6. Judgment for damages and costs being signed by a plaintiff suing in forma pauperis, a judge on summons ordered satisfaction to be entered, on the defendants acknowledging satisfaction for costs to a like amount, taxed for him against the same plaintiff in a former action. The plaintiff had been taken in execution in the former suit, and discharged under stat. 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, s. 1, after a twelvemonth's imprisonment:—Held, no objection to the judge's order, the plaintiff's estate being still liable under the judgment in that suit. O'Hare v. Reeves, 13 Q. B. 659.

[1036 (3).]

Interim Order for Protection. 7. A trustee who had been ordered to pay a sum of money into court in a suit in Chancery filed a petition in the County Court under the Insolvent Debtors Act, and obtained an interim order for protection. Afterwards a writ of attachment was issued against him out of Chancery, to which the sheriff returned that the debtor was protected:—Held, that the interim order was a valid protection against the process of contempt, and that the return was good. Wyllie v. Green, 5 W. R. 775.

[1036 (3).]

8. Such property only as would pass to the assignees of an insolvent under 5 & 6 Vict., c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, is protected from process by an interim order under those Acts. Therefore, a writ of sequestrari facias, inasmuch as it does not affect such property, may be properly issued to have effect on the surplus of the proceeds of the benefice of a defendant who has obtained such interim order. Parry v. Jones, 5 W. R. 121; 1 C. B., N. S., 339; 26 L. J., C. P. 36; 2 Jur. N. S., 1190.

[1036 (3).]

9. A discharge of the principal under the Insolvent Debtors Act, 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, does not exonerate him from the claim of a surety on a bond in respect of payments subsequently made under it by the latter. Emery v. Clark, 2 C. B., N. S., 542.

[1036 (11).]

10. If a debt be omitted from the schedule of an insolvent debtor who petitions for protection under the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, with the consent and by the procurement of the creditor, the creditor cannot, after the making of a final order, sue for the debt; and a plea setting up the facts is a good plea in bar, without an allegation of fraud, as the omission of the debt from the schedule is in a fraud of the Insolvency Court and the other creditors, and is in contemplation of law a fraud. Wilkin v. Manning, 2 W. R. 304; 9 Exch. 575; 23 L. J., Exch., 174; 18 Jur. 44, 271; 2 C. L. R. 563.

[1038 (10).]

11. In an action by an indorsee of a promissory note, made payable to John J. L. against the maker, the defendant pleaded his discharge under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. The description in the schedule was inaccurate, "John J. L." being described as "James J. L." and instead of being described as a note, the instrument was described as a bond, and the plaintiff's name, to whom the note was indorsed before due, was mentioned. It appeared that the defendant did at one time know that the plaintiff was the holder:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to his discharge as to the note, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover on it. Tenny v. Brownlow Cecil (Lord), 5 W. R. 19; 1 C. B., N. S., 117; 26 L. J., C. P., 53.

12. The defendant having become insolvent, described the plaintiffs to whom he was indebted, in his schedule, as bankers, 32,

Clement's Lane, City, their proper address being 32, Abchurch Lane, City, and notice of the hearing of the petition was addressed to the former but served at the latter place, but plaintiffs denied having received it:—Held, that the description was sufficient. Brown, Janson, and others v. Thompson, 17 C. B. 245; 25 L. J., C. P., 55. [1038 (10).

1. Where to an action on a bill of exchange the defendant pleaded discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act, and it was proved that the bill on which the action was brought was not set out in the schedule, nor the name and address properly inserted therein, and the jury found for the plaintiff. The Court refused to disturb the verdict. Hodgson v. Harrison, 3 W. R. 104. [1038 (10).

2. Where a trader, having given a warrant of attorney for 100l., under which a sum of 35l. 8s. 6d. had been levied, obtained afterwards a protecting order under 5 & 6 Vict., c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, but inserted in his schedule the plaintiff's debt as 20l. only, explaining in the margin that the consideration for the warrant was 70l. only, and that goods to the value of 50l. were seized under it:—Held, that a second f. fa. on the judgment signed upon the warrant of attorney was wrong, as the protecting order could only be impeached in the Bankruptcy Court, and as, if there were any mistake in the schedule, it might be amended, unless made by fraud or culpable negligence; and, therefore, that the defendant was discharged as to the plaintiff's debt. Brook v. Chaplin, 3 W. R. 372; 24 L. J., Q. B., 188; 19 Jur. 590. [1038 (10).

3. An insolvent petitioner, who owed to W. & Co. for varnish the amount due on a bill of exchange for 26l. 7s. 6d., drawn by them and accepted by him as a renewal of a former bill, inserted the amount of the debt in his schedule as 30l., and stated the nature of the debt to be "For varnish: these creditors hold a bill of exchange drawn by self and partner, and afterwards renewed by self." He meant honestly to give an account in his schedule of all his debts and creditors, and did not know that the bill was in the hands of indorsees, who, however, knew that he was passing through the Insolvent Court:—Held, that the bill was not properly described in the schedule, and therefore that the final order under 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, s. 22 did not protect the petitioner from the claim of the indorsees. Kemp v. Hurry, 3 C. L. R. 1042; 3 W. R. 420; 24 L. J., Exch., 220. [1038 (10).

4. A., having consented to a judge's order to pay a certain debt to B. by certain instalments, petitioned the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and inserted in his schedule the debt of B., together with a memorandum of the terms of the Judge's order. B. opposed A., and his examination was adjourned sine die, whereupon B. arrested him on a judgment signed under the judge's order; and on an application for his discharge, on the ground that he was privileged from arrest, a second judge's order was made for the payment of the debt by instalments different from those in the first; whereupon he was discharged. Subsequently, A. obtained an order for protection from the Commissioner in respect of the debts in his schedule; and after that he made default in the instalments in the second order, when he was arrested at the suit of B. under a ca. sa. issued on the judgment signed under the second judge's order:—Held, that A. was entitled to be discharged, as the debt in the second order was identical with that in the schedule, and that the application for his discharge was properly made to this Court. Hookpayton v. Bussell, 2 C. L. R. 510. S. C. nom. Hookpayton v. Bussell, 9 Exch. 279; 23 L. J., Exch., 87. [1038 (10).

Costs. Other Cases. 5. The Court has power, under s. 10 of 7 & 8 Vict., c. 96, to make an order for the payment of the costs of petitioning out of an insolvent's estate. Re James, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 270. [1041 (11).

6. Although the Court is not empowered under the protection statutes to give costs eo nomine, yet they will be allowed, under the head of expenses of getting in the estate, to creditors, whose opposition results in bringing money into court. Re Booth, 1 Bank. & Ins. R. 272. [1041 (11).

7. Where a bill of sale, given by a debtor under pressure by his creditors, passed all the debtor's effects, etc., in his house, and then added, "which are more particularly described in the schedule hereto":—Held, that the large words in the body of the deed were not limited by the schedule, which only described a part of the goods in the house at the time. Baker v. Richardson, 6 W. R. 663. [1092 (5)].

2. As to practice on settling scheme for a charity, see Att.-Gen. v. Attwood, 1 W. R. 64, 91; 9 Hare (App) x. [1151 (8).

3. Petition for a scheme under Sir Samuel Romilly's Act ordered to stand over, and the judge in chambers to be attended with the scheme, serving the attorney-general with the summons. Re Hanson's Trust, 9 Hare (App) x. and liv. [1151 (8).

4. If an intended application to the Court be for a new disposition of charity funds, there must be the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioners. Therefore, where an application had for its object the erection of a new schoolhouse out of the charity funds:—Held, that it must have such previous sanction, though it might be otherwise if the object were merely the addition of new rooms to an existing schoolhouse. Re Ford's Charity, 3 Drew. 324. 6. Where trustees have an option to apply funds to purposes which, though liberal or benevolent, are not such as are in this court understood to be charitable, the trust cannot be executed here. Thus, the Court cannot execute a trust for private charity. Nash v. Morley, 5 Beav. 177; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 336; 6 Jur. 520. [1163 (8).

7. See also Pettingall v. Pettingall, p. 2808 [1165 (6).

8. A bequest of a prize for an essay on the subject of emigration to the United States:—Held, under the circumstances, void for uncertainty. Briggs v. Hartley, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 416; 14 Jur. 683. [1165 (7).

9. Trust by will to pay the income to the testator's wife for life, enjoining her to co-operate with his trustees in carrying his wishes into execution, and directing her, with the advice and assistance of his trustees, to lay out one moiety in promoting charitable purposes, as well of a public as a private nature, and more especially in relieving such distressed persons, either the widow or children of poor clergymen or otherwise, as his wife shall judge most worthy and deserving objects, giving a preference always to poor relations. The object is, charity in general with a preference, but not confined to poor relations; the distribution to be at the discretion of the wife, with the advice and assistance, not subject to the control of the trustees. Waldo v. Caley, 16 Ves. 206. [1169 (5).

10. A direction to build a suitable durable and handsome monument:—Held, not void for uncertainty in the amount that might be required for the purpose. Quare, whether a direction to bury testator in a monument to be erected in unconsecrated ground is void.

Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Ph. 185; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 40. [1172 (8).

11. A bequest of stock to trustees of a charity to pay for painting and repairing a gravestone for a certain day yearly, and to pay the balance for the purpose of the charity, is a valid bequest, subject to a precatory trust. Hunter v. Bullock, 41 L. J., Ch., 637; 20 W. R. 460. [1173 (5).

12. A deed purporting to be an immediate gift for a charitable purpose, and in the execution of which any benefit is reserved even tacitly to the grantor, is void by the Statute of Mortmain. Howard v. Fingall (Earl), 1 W. R. 515. [1179 (2).

13. Part of an accumulated fund, left originally by will to a company, is proposed by a scheme settled by the Master to be laid out in the purchase of freehold land to build almshouses thereon:—Held, that notwithstanding the provisions of the Statute of Mortmain, the Court would sanction such a scheme. Re Honnor's Trust, 3 W. R. 429. [1188 (11).

14. A bequest of a legacy to be applied towards establishing a school at A., provided a further sum could be raised in aid thereof, if necessary:—Held, to import an intended outlay of the sum in building a schoolhouse at the place referred to, and therefore to be a void bequest within the Statute of Mortmain. Att.-Gen. v. Hull, 9 Hare 647. [1188 (11).

15. Testator gave 2,000*l.* to pay a master and mistress of a school which he wished to have established after his death, for children of the Established Church, and stated that he intended to have left a house for the purpose of being converted into a schoolroom, but was prevented by the law of Mortmain; he therefore gave the house to the patron of the living, in the hope that he would convert it into a daily school:—Held, following Att.-Gen. v. Williams (2 Cox 387), that the bequest was good. Hull v. Jones, 2 W. R. 657. [1188 (11).

16. A testator who gave a legacy for charitable purposes, to be executed in a foreign country, named, as one of the trustees of the charity, an officer created by Act of Parliament, describing him by his office, and not by his name. The Act of Parliament having been repealed, and the office abolished, the Court referred it to the Master to approve of a proper person to be a trustee in his stead. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 3 Myl. & K. 347. [1223 (8).

17. The founder of a charity having named as trustees the occupiers of certain annual offices, other trustees appointed by the Court to hold the funds, the selection of the objects being left to those appointed by the founder. Exp. Blackburne, 1 Jac. & Walk. 297. [1223 (8).

18. Prospective order for an application to obtain the appointments of new trustees of a charity, when the number becomes reduced. Re Town Lands of East Bergholt, 2 W. R. 4; 2 Eq. Rep. 90. [1223 (8).

19. The provisions of 13 & 14 Vict., c. 28 (Peto's Act), are not applicable to the appointment of new trustees by the congregation of a Wesleyan chapel. The Commissioners under the Charitable Trusts Act having issued their certificate, new trustees were appointed and a vesting order granted in chambers. Re Hoghton Chapel, 2 W. R. 631. [1223 (8).

1. In a college of royal foundation, a practice having, for many years, prevailed of electing two fellows of a county, for which the statutes allowed only one, a dispensation from the Crown authorising that practice was presumed. Queen's College case, Jac. 1. [1229 (6).

2. In settling the salaries of a grammar school, the Court will consider exhibitions for scholars of secondary importance to the salary of the master. Att.-Gen. v. York (Archbishop), 2 W. R. 7. [1235 (3).

3. An appointment of a person as residuary legatee, with a desire that the testator's residuary estate be afterwards left in the residuary legatee's and his own name to charitable purposes, is not sufficient to create a charitable trust, and to cut down the beneficial interest of the legatee. McCulloch v. McCulloch, 1 N. R. 535. [1197 (7).

4. Where a trustee of a charitable fund kept it secretly in his possession for twelve years, he was charged with 5% per cent. interest on it with annual rests, though he had invested it in 3½ per cents, upon an ex parte application under the Trustee Act, in the name of the Accountant-General. Att.-Gen. v. Alford, 2 W. R. 580; 18 Jur. 592. [1209 (1).

5. A collegiate body compellable to execute a trust as a private person, and though the bill not brought recently. Green v. Rutherford, 1 Ves. 468. [1209 (1).

6. Scindle, that proof of general, though not universal, approbation of parish, is sufficient to justify bona fide conduct of trustees of parish charity, where they have a discretionary power. Re Chertsey Market, 6 Price 261. [1209 (1).

7. A testator gave the rents of real estates to trustees in trust to pay the same to such sufficient, able, and orthodox minister as should be from time to time settled in the cure of S., by and with the consent and approbation of the trustees, and declared that, if any should be placed there without the consent or approbation of the trustees, they should apply the rents in another way. On the occasion of a vacancy in the cure, the patron announced to the trustees his intention of nominating C. to the cure. In reply to this the trustees stated their wish that a residence should be built in the parish for the incumbent, and that arrangements should be made with charging the rents with it. Some negotiations were entered into respecting this matter, but the scheme failed. The trustees having declined to make any payment to C., an information was filed against them at the relation of C. for payment of the rents to C., or for a new scheme. The information was dismissed. Att.-Gen. v. Mosely, 2 De G. & Sm. 398; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 446; 12 Jur. 889. [1209 (1).

8. A royal charter of incorporation does not of itself make a school a public one, so as to deprive the trustees of any discretionary power of removing the schoolmaster, which the rules of the establishment may give them, but which in a public foundation a similar mode of appointment would not give them. Gibson v. Ross, 7 Cl. & F. 241. [1232 (5).

9. A bequest to the president and trustees of a school, to be applied in instructing youth in specified subjects:—Held, not to fail by reason of the school having been closed before the testator's death, or the date of his will. Marsh v. Att.-Gen., 2 John. & H. 61; 7 Jur., N. S., 184; 30 L. J., Ch., 233; 9 W. R. 179; 3 L. T., N. S., 615. [1254 (6).

10. A testator bequeathed 500% to the church-building fund for native churches in India, and made other bequest to other charities for particular purposes, and declared that where the specific purposes should fail the funds should be applied for the general purposes of the society. No society being found having for its exclusive purpose the building of native churches in India:—Held, that the legacies must be divided pro rata amongst the other societies. Re Hyde, 22 W. R. 69. [1254 (6).

COLONIES AND COLONIAL LAW.

11. In any case where a jury is summoned and sworn to award the amount of compensation, it requires express words or an amount of implication of absolute necessity to take away the claimant's rights to have his witnesses sworn and examined. This right is not taken away by the Act of the local Legislature of Lower Canada, 14 & 15 Vict., c. 128. Justices competent to swear a jury are competent to swear witnesses. Mere respectful acquiescence or submission to the ruling of a Court does not amount to acquiescence or waiver of a right to complain of an illegal decision. To prove acquiescence, or waiver, it ought to be shown that something was said or done to give the Court a jurisdiction which it did not possess. As the above Act does not direct any judgment to be given, or make the proceedings final and conclusive, any manifest failure of observing the fundamental forms and principles of justice would vitiate and render null and void the proceedings under the Act before the justices. Beaudry v. Montreal (Mayor), 6 W. R. 346; 1 L. T., N. S., 18; 11 Moo. P. C. 399. [1279 (5).

1. An adopted son, according to the Hindoo law, is entitled to succeed to his collateral as well as his direct relations by adoption. Chowdry v. Dibeih, 3 Knapp, 55. [1301 (6).

2. The tie that bound an undivided family together is dissolved by the conversion of a member to Christianity, so far as regards such member. A convert may renounce the old law with his former religion, or abide by the old law notwithstanding his changes of faith. Ler loci does not apply to parties who have ceased to be Hindoo in religion. Customs and usages not enjoined may be as voluntarily changed as they were voluntarily adopted. Abraham v. Abraham, 2 N. R. 431. [1301 (6).

3. In a suit for the division of the property of an undivided Hindoo family, the whole of the property of each individual is presumed to belong to the common stock, and it lies upon the party who wishes to except any of it from the division, to prove that it comes within one of the exceptions recognised by the Hindoo law. Sadasen v. Bajee, 2 Knapp, 60. [1301 (6).

4. The Statutes of Wills, et de donis conditionalibus, do not extend to the Isle of Man. That island made unalienable by a private Act of Parliament against heirs general on failure of issue male. Sodor and Man (Bishop) v. Derby (Earl), 2 Ves. 337; 5182 (17). [1309 (1).

5. Non-user for twenty-one years does not deprive the tenants or farmers of the Isle of Man of the right to dig for and raise limestone and other stones in the quarry of a tenant, provided the stones, etc., are for the use of the party obtaining them, or to be employed by him for the improvement of his own or neighbour's estate. By the supplemental Act of Settlement (6th June 1704), a discretionary power is vested in the governor to allow the exercise of this right. Christian v. Gibson, 3 Moo. P. C. 351. [1308 (6).

6. Quare, whether the governor of the colony of New Zealand has, under his general authority as such governor, vested in him so much of the prerogative of the Crown as relates to the making of grants of waste lands within the colony. Re Clarke, 7 Moo. P. C. 77. [1315 (2).

A grant of lands made by the governor to a land claimant, founded upon the recommendation contained in the report of a Commissioner, such grant embracing a quantity of land exceeding the amount prescribed by Ordinance Sess. 1, No. 2, of 1841:—Held, in soire facius, void, and judgment given for the Crown. Ib.

7. A consignee over an estate of infants cannot be appointed without giving security. Cobham v. Cobham, 5 Jur. 931. [1322 (7).

8. The principle of the droit de retrait (as formerly existing in Jersey) is to place the person exercising the right in the same situation as the vendee; but, by the law of Jersey, the heir is not bound to perform the stipulations of an original contract where it is personal; where, therefore, a contract was of a mixed nature, the price of the purchase being to be paid partly in money and partly in services, the Judicial Committee held, affirming the judgment of the Royal Court of Jersey, that such contract could not be enforced against the vendor's heir, so as to give him a right to the redemption of the estate. Touzel v. Filleul, 3 Moo. P. C. 484. [1306 (2).

9. Where every member of an inchoate association executes an instrument, whereby it is declared that the majority of a committee of management shall bind all parties, costs incurred under the authority of such committee are a debt due from the assets of the company in winding up. Re Warwick & Worcester Railway Co., 6 W. R. 433; 1 L. T., N. S., 145. [1341 (5).

10. A contract to take shares in a company cannot be set aside because it was founded on a prospectus which contains exaggerated views of the advantages of the company, but does not contain any material misstatement of fact. Denton v. Macneill, 2 L. R., Eq., 352; 14 W. R. 813; 14 L. T., N. S., 721; 35 Beav. 652. [1361 (5).

Where a person joined with other persons in promoting, and took shares in, a company for the working of a patent, expended divers sums of money in the concern, with respect to which, however, no company was ever in fact formed, and afterwards filed a bill for an account and contribution against some only of the parties with whom he was jointly liable, alleging (but not establishing), as his equity to the relief he sought, fraud and misrepresentation in the prospectuses of the projected company, by virtue of and through faith in which he had been induced originally to take shares in the concern:—Held, that he was not entitled to the relief he prayed by his bill, and that it must be dismissed accordingly. Ib.

11. At one time I was much struck with the observation, that in the pleading there is an averment that proper accounts had not been taken; consequently it was said that something had been done that was in violation of the Act of Parliament, and therefore ultra vires. That, in my opinion, is a misapplication of the principle of ultra vires. The meaning of ultra vires is, if a corporation, having been constituted for a particular object, appropriates its funds to something else than that object, it is doing something that impliedly it is forbidden to do by the Act of Parliament. That is ultra vires. But to say that it is ultra of the company, that the accounts have not been accurately kept, seems to me to be confounding together two grounds of complaint which are altogether distinct. The very object of the suit for calling the directors to account is, to have corrected any irregularities which there may be in the accounts that have been rendered. Per Lord Cranworth, in Orr v. Glasgow, Airdrie, & Monklands Junction Railway Co., 6 Jur., N. S., 877.

1. Parliament having created a company, the power rests in Parliament to vary its constitution, or to control or to annihilate it; and it is not the function of a court of equity to decide on the propriety of an application to Parliament to vary the original object contemplated by the Act. Such an application is not illegal if it be pursued by legal means; but, it appearing in a suit by certain shareholders that a company had resolved to use its funds, and to pledge its credit, and to make contracts for the purpose of such an application to Parliament:—Held, that such appropriation of funds, and pledges, and contracts, were illegal; and, at the instance of the shareholders, an injunction was granted restraining the appropriation of funds, the pledging of the company's credit, and the entering into contracts in support of such an application to Parliament; but the Court declined to restrain the company from introducing or soliciting such bill, or using the name and seal of the company for such purposes. Great Western Railway Co. v. Rushout, 5 De G. & Sm. 290; 16 Jur. 238.

Certain of the directors of a railway company, acting on the nomination of another railway company, which was interested in certain shares in it, and which nominated those directors by virtue of the Act constituting the company, were excluded, by a resolution of the board of directors, from the meetings of the directors, and the majority delegated all the powers of the board to a managing committee:—Held, that, although in such a body the majority binds the minority, yet, that it is essential in the validity of their acts that the voice of the minority should have been heard; and such exclusion of directors was restrained. Id.

2. All the original shares of a company, which was constituted under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 47, had not been issued. A meeting was held under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 89, s. 50, to give the directors power to issue preferential shares:—Held, that such alteration was not within the power of a meeting. Hutton v. Berry, 6 N. R. 376.

3. Whether a foreigner dealing with a joint stock company may be bound to take notice of the provisions of 7 & 8 Vict., c. 100, quære. Meredith's and Conner's Claim, Re State Fire Insurance Co., 1 N. R. 510.

4. A shareholder in an incorporated company, on his own behalf alone, filed a bill against the company and the directors, but not making in any other manner, by representation or otherwise, any other member of the corporation a party, the object of the suit being to prevent the company from making only a part of the line, and from applying to Parliament for authority so to do.—Held, that the suit was defective for want of parties, the case being analogous to that of a suit by a cestui que trust against a trustee complaining of a breach of trust, and not making other cestuis que trustent parties; and a demurrer ore tenus on this ground was allowed, without costs. *Cooper v. 6. Where the directors of a company with limited liability were made defendants in a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, the bill charging that they had personally interfered and infringed the patent, and praying that the defendants might pay the costs:—Held, that the directors were personally liable. *Betts v. 8. A company was formed for purchasing certain salt-works and manufacturing and selling salt and other minerals thereupon. The deed of purchase recited that part of the amount arising from the paid-up shares had been paid as purchase money for the saltworks. That sum, however, had been applied for other purposes of the company. M., a director, and the banker of the company, subsequently advanced money to complete the purchase, and for other purposes of the company. By a memorandum signed by five directors out of the six (the number fixed by the provisional agreement), it was agreed on behalf of the company that the advances made by M. should be repaid, and the title deeds deposited as an additional security:—Held, that M. had a lien upon the estate of the company and its proceeds, and that the shareholders could not claim the benefit of the property without having paid for it; that the memorandum signed by the five directors could not be treated as not binding upon the company, as the company had so far adopted the proceedings of the five managing directors as to render it impossible for them, while taking the benefit of the proceedings, at the same time to repudiate the burdens. Ex p. Morrell, Re Imperial Salt and Alkali Co., 2 W. R. 122.

9. The directors of an unregistered banking company, formed by deed giving them large discretionary powers in addition to powers to conduct the usual business of bankers, raised a large sum of money upon debentures or notes with coupons attached, payable after a long interval of time, they having themselves subscribed for a very great proportion of the shares of the company, without paying up the calls due on them, or any considerable portion of these calls; nor did they make calls upon the other shareholders beyond 15l. on every 50l. share. The money thus raised was sent out to one of themselves in Australia, who employed it, not in the regular business of banking, but in an exceedingly speculative manner. The company was now being wound up before the Master, who allowed two claims in respect of these debentures as against the company. On a motion to discharge or vary his certificate:—Held, that upon the construction of the deed the directors had power to bind the company; that the promissory notes signed by the directors in the form—

"We, directors of the Royal Bank of Australia, for ourselves and the other shareholders of the said company, jointly and severally promise to pay to G. H. Wray or bearer, on the first of August 1851, at the Union Bank of London, the sum of 200l., for value received on account of the company.

Foreign Company Commencing Business in the United Kingdom. Payment out of Deposit. Accumulation Fund in Foreign Country.] 1. In the case of a petition presented under the Life Insurance Companies Acts 1870 and 1872, and the Board of Trade rules made in pursuance of these acts, praying for payment out "to the depositors of the 20,000l. required to be deposited in court by a foreign life assurance company before commencing business in this country," the Court will make the order prayed for, notwithstanding that the Life Assurance Companies Act 1870, s. 3, enacts that the deposit shall be returned to the company. The life assurance fund of 40,000l. required by the section to have been accumulated prior to the return of the deposit may consist of accumulations already existing abroad, and arising from the original business of the company. Re Colonial Mutual Life Assurance Society, 21 L. 2. L. & S. being partners, S., on the faith of statements made to him, tells L. that the liability in a company is limited, and they take shares, S. alone executing the deed in the name of the firm. Calls are paid and dividends received by the firm, and L. & S. dissolve partnership. The shares are transferred to L. by S. The company fails, and a winding-up order is made, and L. is put on the list of contributories in the first degree, and S. in the second. On the question whether they were rightly so placed in the list:—Held, that they were. Semble, a person taking

3. A director of a joint stock banking company assigned to another director a number of shares at a price far above the market price of the shares, which were unsalable. The price was paid, but the transfer was not made with the formalities required by the partnership:—Held, that it was invalid, and that the transferor was rightly placed on the list of contributories in respect of his shares. Exp. Kennedy, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 121. [1529 (5).

4. An agent of a company, who had accepted shares on which he paid nothing, afterwards begged to relinquish his agency, and to be allowed to give up the shares. 6. E., an allottee of shares after complete registration, went abroad without having executed the company's deed of settlement. Messrs. N., brokers, by his direction sold his shares, and the transfers were executed by the allottee's brother for him under a power of attorney, and by the purchasers. The company, however, declined to register the transfers, on the ground that E., not being a registered shareholder, was not entitled to transfer the shares under the 26th section of the above Act. He afterwards became bankrupt, and the brokers, who had been compelled to purchase other shares for the purchasers, presented a petition praying that the assignees might be directed to complete the transfers:—Held, that such dealing with shares before registration was prohibited by the Act; and the petition was accordingly dismissed with costs. *Exp. 3. A testator devised an estate to A., with an injunction that he was not to sell it out of the family; but if sold at all, it must be to one of his brothers:—Held, that the restraint was void. Attwater v. Attwater, 2 W. R. 81; 18 Jur. 50. [1729 (4).]

4. Estate of tenant for life liable to forfeiture on his mortgaging it. He mortgaged it to A. unknown to the parties taking under the forfeiture:—Held, that A. was liable to account to them for the rents, at all events, from the filing of the bill, and beyond that from the time he had notice of the trusts creating the forfeiture. Hennessey v. Bray, 33 Beav. 96. [1739 (5).]

5. On construction of will, legacy, with prohibition to executor not to advance it unless "in case of an establishment or acquisition which may to executors seen advantageous":—Held, a conditional legacy. Pink v. De Thwaisey, 2 Madd. 157. [1746 (1).]

6. Testator devised estates to F. S. and M. his wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, he assuming the name and arms of testator; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, and after the decease of F. S. and M., unto all the children of F. S. and M. then already or thereafter to be born of their bodies, male or female, for and during their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them; but all the sons to take the name and arms of the testator in addition to their own; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, in trust nevertheless to permit all the said children to receive the rents of the property in equal shares during their lives, and from and after their several deceases unto and equally between all their issue, male and female, and for want of such issue over:—Held, that the name and arms clause was a condition subsequent to the vesting of the estates in the sons, and was satisfied by their assuming the name and arms of the testator subsequently to the disentailing deed. Woodhouse v. Herrick, 3 W. R. 303; 1 Kay & J. 332; 3 Eq. Rep. 817; 24 L. J., Ch., 649. [1763 (3).]

7. Where a legacy was given to A. in the event of B. dying unmarried, but upon the express condition that A. should, within three years of testator's death, pay to the executors all moneys due from him to the testator, the Court observing that the legacy might have become payable before the end of the three years, by the death of B. within that period, and that this was a condition for the payment of money:—Held, that the condition was substantially performed by payment after the three years, and that legacy was payable. Paine v. Hyde, 4 Beav. 468. [1771 (8).]

8. A devise to a man and his heirs, or in tail; but in case he commits treason within such term, it shall go over; this is a void clause. A man may by will substitute another executor, if the first should, by treason, forfeit during the life of the testator; but if he means to extend it beyond the term of his own life, it could not take effect, as it would be an evasion of Acts concerning treason. Carte v. Carte, 3 Atk. 180. [1771 (7).]

9. A testatrix by will, dated in 1845, limited to a daughter an exclusive power of appointment by will amongst her children. The daughter, by her will, dated in 1874, in exercise of the power, appointed the fund amongst the objects of the power in certain shares, giving to two of her daughters life interests only, and declared that if either during her life or after her death any son or daughter of hers should marry a person who did not profess the Jewish religion, or was not born a Jew though converted to Judaism, or should forsake the Jewish and adopt the Christian or any other religion, then such son or daughter should forfeit all share in the fund, and in case of forfeiture the forfeited share was to accrue and go over to the other or others of the children living at the time of the forfeiture. Julius, a son of the appointor, married a Christian in his mother's lifetime, but without her consent. The plaintiff, one of the two daughters of the appointor, to whom a life interest only was appointed, became a Christian after the mother's death. Both Julius and the plaintiff were born after the death of the creator of the power:—Held, first, the forfeiture clause was not void as against public policy; secondly, that it was effectual as to the shares of children marrying;

Christians or becoming Christians during the lifetime of the appointor, and therefore that the share of Julius was forfeited. thirdly, that the forfeiture clause must be read in conjunction with the gift over, and therefore that so far as it affected, after the death of the appointor, the share of a child born after the death of the creator of the power, it was void for remoteness, whether such share was appointed for life only or absolutely, and consequently that the plaintiff had not forfeited her share. Hodgson v. Halford, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 959; 48 L. J., Ch., 545; 27 W. R. 545. [1771 (7)].

1. A will contained a proviso, that in case any of the testator's sons should intermarry or illegally cohabit with any of their cousins, the share of such son was to go over to the persons who would have taken if he had died under twenty-one; and the testator declared that it should not be lawful for his trustees to transfer any share in the personalty, or permit him to enter upon the realty, until such son should execute a bond to the said trustees in 20,000*l.* to observe this direction:—Held, that one of the sons, who had arrived at twenty-one, could require payment of his one-fourth without entering into such bond. Poole v. Bott, 17 Jur. 688; 22 L. J., Ch., 1042; 11 Hare 33; 1 W. R. 276; 1 Eq. Rep. 21. [1771 (7)].

Semble, that a condition to give such a bond is not to be enforced. Ib.

Semble, that the gift over in the principal case did not exactly fit the condition of forfeiture, and therefore that the condition itself would have no result. Ib.

2. A bequest was made by a testator to his debtor, on condition of his paying his debt before, or to his (the testator's) executors immediately after, his death; the testator afterwards accepted a composition, and the remainder of the debt continued unpaid.—Held, that the legatee was nevertheless entitled to the legacy. Gath v. Burton, 1 Beav. 478; 3 Jur. 817. [1773 (8)].

3. No notice is requisite where a condition is annexed to a devise of real or personal estate, and the devisee is bound to perform it before he can be entitled, or incur a forfeiture, under a devise over. Chauncy v. Graydon, 2 Atk. 620. [1774 (10)].

4. Notice must be given to the heir-at-law of a condition to work a forfeiture. Burleton v. Humphrey, Amb. 259. [1774 (10)].

5. Blackacre is devised to J., with a proviso that, if he be evicted, he shall have Whiteacre. J. is evicted of a moiety of Blackacre; he shall only have a satisfaction pro tanto out of Whiteacre. Tyte v. Tyte, 1 Vern. 270. [1774 (14)].

[Apportionment of Conditions.] 6. A testator directed that a specific sum of 10,000*l.*, to which he was entitled, should be applied in paying off a charge on his B. estate, if established; and that in case it should be so applied, then a charge of 13,000*l.*, to which his D. estate was liable, should not be raised thereon, but out of his B. estate. After his death, the charge on the B. estate having been established, the sum of 10,000*l.* was applied in paying it off. Subsequently, his other personal estate having proved insufficient for payment of his debts, a decree was made for refunding the 10,000*l.* out of the B. estate; but it was disputed whether the whole of it was wanted for payment of debts:—Held, that the disposition in favour of the D. estate was upon a condition which was not apportionable; and that, unless the B. estate got the full benefit of the 10,000*l.*, the owners of the D. estate had no title to throw any part of the 13,000*l.* on the B. estate. Caldwell v. Cresswell, 6 L. R., Ch., 278; 24 L. T. 564. See also VESTED CONTINGENT AND FUTURE INTERESTS, XII. I. [1774 (15)].

7. B., a married woman living separate from her husband, entered the service of C. as his housekeeper, and formed an illicit connection with him, during which period C. struck her a violent blow, which compelled her to have medical advice. On her threatening legal proceedings, C. promised compensation, and an agreement was drawn up by which, after reciting that they had lived together, but agreed thenceforth to separate, C. agreed to pay certain sums to B. for her separate use, and it was mutually agreed that each should live separate and apart from, and in no manner molest or annoy, the other. The illicit connection thereupon ceased. B. filed her bill for specific performance of this agreement.—Held, on demurrer, that there was no sufficient consideration in the agreement to entitle B. to recover upon it. *Lancaster v. 8. A lessee wrote to his lessor offering to surrender his lease and to take a fresh lease for twenty-one years to a nominee, or to a company which he intended to form, at an increased rent, but otherwise on the same terms as the existing lease; and by a subsequent letter offered to instruct his solicitor to prepare a draft lease. The lessor telegraphed to him in reply to get the lease prepared. Afterwards correspondence took place between the solicitors as to the form of the lease, and the lessee's solicitor prepared a formal agreement. Differences having arisen, the lessor refused to grant the lease, and the lessee brought an action for specific performance of the agreement to grant a lease and for damages. No company had been formed and no nominee appointed by the plaintiff before the trial of the action:—Held, that assuming there was a binding agreement for a lease, the formation of a company or appointment of a nominee was a condition precedent, and that the plaintiff could not maintain an action for specific performance of the contract, as he had not performed the condition. Williams v. Briscoe, 32 L. R., Ch. D., 441; 48 L. T. 198; 31 W. R. 907. [1793 (4).]

On her death, intermediate limitations having failed, her heir at law, to whom the ultimate remainder was limited, petitioned the Court that the stock might be paid out to him:—Held, that the stock continued real estate, and the money was ordered to be paid to him. Re Horner's Estate, 5 De G. & S. 483; 16 Jur. 1063; 22 L. J., Ch., 369. [1799 (6).]

6. A mortgaged real estate to B., and gave B. a power of sale, and the trusts of the surplus purchase moneys were declared to be for A., his executors, administrators, and assigns. A. died. After A.'s death the estate was sold under the power of sale:—Held, that A.'s real, and not his personal representatives, were entitled to the surplus purchase money. Re Clarke's Trusts, 22 L. J., Ch., 230. [1800 (4).]

7. Where a testator, having contracted to purchase an estate, and taken a transfer of a mortgage on it, specifically devised it:—Held, that the devisee was not entitled to the interest on the mortgage between the testator's death and the completion of the purchase. Pualey v. Pualey, 1 N. R. 509; 8 L. T., N. S., 570. [1800 (4).]

8. An estate was appointed by will subject to a charge for raising a sum of money to be applied upon certain trusts. The money was duly raised in the lifetime of the appointee. After his death the trusts failed, and the charge sank for the benefit of the estate:—Held, that the money belonged to the legal personal representatives of the appointee. Re Newbery, 46 L. J., Ch., 612; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 746; 25 W. R. 747. [1800 (4).]

9. Lands purchased by guardian for infant, during his minority, considered as personality. Gibson v. Scudamore, Dick. 45. [1801 (10).]

10. A testator directed his trustees to sell his real estates, reserving to them a discretion by the clause "and as and when if they should, from time to time or at any time, think fit, to sell and dispose of his said real and personal estate as they should think proper," one-sixth part or share of the testator's real and personal estate, or the produce thereof, was to be paid, transferred, and assigned to each of his children. No conversion had taken place:—Held, that the share in the realty of one of the children who had died intestate descended upon his heir-at-law in its unconverted state. A conversion qualified by a discretion not the same as an absolute conversion. Harding v. Trotter, 1 W. R. 502. [1807 (7).]

11. A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to permit his wife to have the enjoyment of the rents, issues, and profits thereof for her life, or otherwise, with her consent and approbation in writing, to sell the real and personal estate, and invest the moneys to arise from the sale of his real and personal estate on Government or real security, and pay the interest to her for life; and after her decease to pay two legacies of 50% each, and divide the residue of the moneys to arise from his real and personal estate between his nephews and nieces living at the death of his wife. The real estate was not sold during the life of the widow:—Held, that the nephews and nieces were entitled to the produce of the real estate. Waddington v. Yates, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 223; 10 Jur. 241. [1809 (1).]

12. Testator devised his real estates to trustees, in trust to sell as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, and as to the proceeds, together with the intermediate rents, after payment of the testator's funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, to pay one moiety to his nephew, and to invest the other moiety in the funds, in trust for his nephew for life, and after his death for his children. The real estates were not sold until some years after the testator's death:—Held, that rents accrued in the meantime ought not to be invested for the benefit of his nephew and his children, but that the nephew was entitled to them. Vigor v. Harwood, 12 Sim. 172. [1815 (13).]

Rights of Tenant for Life where Conversion is Postponed. See LIFE. ESTATE FOR, VI. [1815 (13).]

1. A testator directed the proceeds of the sale of his estate to be invested for the benefit of his three daughters, and the interest thereof to be paid to each of his said daughters during their respective natural lives; and after the decease of each of them, he directed that one-half of the fund or share, the income of which was thereby directed to be paid to the parent respectively for life as aforesaid, should be paid to the children of each of his said daughters:—Held, that the daughters did not take absolute interests, and that the testator's heir was entitled to the undisposed-of portion of the real estate, whether converted or not. Whitehead v. Bennett, 1 W. R. 406; 1 Eq. Rep. 561; 18 Jur. 140; 22 L. J., Ch., 1020. [1822 (11).]

2. Testator gave, devised, and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to sell, and pay and apply the proceeds of such real and personal estates, and also all the rents, interest, and profits thereof until sale, in such manner as therein after mentioned; and, after making a provision for his wife for her life out of the said proceeds, he directed that the residue of the said fund should be divided into fifty equal shares, which he bequeathed amongst various legatees, giving a certain number to each, and directing that, in case either of such legatees should die before his shares should become vested, such shares were to sink into the residue:—Held, upon the construction of the will, that certain portions of the residue (which was wholly made up of proceeds of realty) which had lapsed by the death of the legatees thereof in the lifetime of the testator belonged to the heir at law, and not to the next of kin of the testator. Fairbairn v. Rothwell, 9 Jur. 787. [1825 (8).]

3. A testator directed a part of his personal estate to be converted into realty and settled on certain trusts. These being exhausted, and no investment having been made:—Held, that the residuary legatee was entitled to the fund, and took it in the character of personalty. Hereford v. Ravenhill, 5 Beav. 51; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 6 Jur. 228. [1832 (4).]

4. Where land has been devised on trust to convert, the acts of the cestuis que trustent must be clear and unequivocal, and by all of them, in order to show their election to enjoy the property unconverted. Vincent v. Kane, 1 W. R. 264. [1837 (9).]

5. Where real estate conveyed to trustees on trust to sell, has been used by the devisee of the settlor to all intents and purposes as realty, and is afterwards sold by the trustees, the trust fund, the produce of the sale, is to be taken as real and not as personal estate. Re Gardner's Trusts, 1 Eq. Rep. 57. [1837 (9).]

6. If the person absolutely entitled to the money and arising from a compulsory conversion have a right to elect to take it as personalty, a mere acquiescence in its remaining invested in consols during his life, and his will, by which he bequeaths personal estate only, and does not devise realty, are not such proof of election as to prevent the fund descending on his death to his heir. Re Stewart's Trusts, Ex p. Cramer, 16 Jur. 1063; 1 Sm. & G. 32; 1 W. R. 17; 22 L. J., Ch., 369. [1837 (9).]

7. The defendant in ejectment for land in Ireland proved letters patent from the Crown, 2 Car. 1, granting to H., his heirs and assigns, certain lands, with power to create manors thereof. He also proved a commission of grace, 12 Car. 1, for remedying defective titles, and letters patent, 13 Car. 1, re-granting such lands unto H., his heirs and assigns, and declaring that certain of such lands, including the lands of B., should be the manor of D., with power to H. to grant the demesne lands in fee to be held of such manor. He traced the devolution of the manor to 1721 (when the then owner made a fee farm grant of the lands of B. to L., paying rent and doing service at the Court of D.), and down to his testator. He proved the devolution of the lands of B.; that manor courts had been held at D. by the successors in title of H. as far back as living memory would go; and that the occupiers of B. attended habitually as suitors and jurors. He proved the court books from 1771 down to the present time, also a lease of B. in 1781, wherein the lessee covenanted with the lessor to attend the manor courts of D., and another fee farm grant to R. doing suit at the Court of D., and yielding rent, and the payment of such rent up to the present time:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury that there was in 1721 a manor of D., comprising the lands of B. as part of the demesne thereof. Whether the effect of the deed of 1721 was to vest the lands of B. in L. to be holden of the manor of D., quære. Delacherois v. Delacherois, 4 N. R. 501. [1843 (4).

3. Equitable tenant for life of copyholds under a will, which contained no special provision for the payment of expenses on admission, died without having paid the fines and fees incurred on the admission of a trustee in her lifetime. By her will she bequeathed her personal estate to her daughter for life for her separate use, and after her decease to her children. The daughter and her husband and children took estates in remainder in the copyholds:—Held, that having regard to the frame of the will, under which the tenant for life was entitled, and to the interest which the parties entitled to the copyhold estates took in the personal estate of the tenant for life, one-third of the fees was properly payable out of the corpus of his personal estate, the husband of the daughter consenting to pay the residue. Bull v. Birkbeck, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 447. [1859 (8).

4. B., tenant in common of copyholds, joins in deposit of deeds on an equitable mortgage, and a foreclosure bill is dismissed as against him. Upon the question of costs of admission:—Held, that a surrender of copyholds stands on the same footing as conveyance of freeholds, and a decree cannot be varied as to costs of admission. Pryce v. Bury, 2 W. R. 87; 2 Drew. 41; 17 Jur. 1173; 2 Eq. Rep. 8. [1859 (8).

5. Covenant by A. B., a husband, with trustees that he will at his proper costs and charges surrender to the lord of the manor, according to the custom, the copyhold hereditaments to which his wife was entitled to the use of the trustees, to the intent that they might, at the costs and charges of A. B., be admitted tenants upon trust to pay the rents to the wife for separate use:—Held, that the act of admittance was complete before the fine became payable, and that B. was not bound to provide for the fine under the words "costs and charges." Barrow v. Barrow, 3 W. R. 587. [1859 (8).

6. The descent of the interest possessed by a person entitled under an executory devise of customary lands is regulated by the common law and not by the custom. Mattinson v. Siddle, 39 L. J., Ch., 426; 18 W. R. 569. [1861 (3).

A testator devised customary lands of inheritance to his brother, his heirs and assigns, but in case his brother should die without issue, he directed that the whole should be divided amongst his five sisters or their lawful representatives. The brother survived the testator, but died without issue. A person entitled under the gift over to a share in the lands, died intestate in the lifetime of the brother:—Held, that the share of the intestate descended to her common law heirs and not to her customary heir. Id.

COVENANT TO STAND SEISED.

1. Where a party, in consideration of love and affection, by release conveyed a specific freehold house, and assigned a particular leasehold, and "all other the property, real or personal, to which he might be then entitled," upon trust for his sisters, he being at the time seised of a share in another freehold house, of which no mention was made in the release:—Held, that the general words being, from the tenor of the deed, only applicable to leasehold and personal estate, the latter freehold did not pass by them, and that the release did not operate as a covenant to stand seised. Doungsworth v. Blair, 1 Keen 795; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 263; 1 Jur. 620.

2. Feme covenants to stand seised to the use of herself in tail, remainder to such uses as she, by writing under her hand, should appoint, for want of such appointment, to the use of the plaintiff, her kinsman in fee. CREDITORS' TRUST DEEDS.

4. One of the trustees of a composition deed consented that one of the other creditors (who was a banker) should retain a policy of insurance, which he held as a security for his debt, in part discharge of such debt. This was not communicated to the other creditors; but the trustees subsequently bought up the interests of all the creditors, and paid them a composition:—Held, in a suit between the trustees and the banker, that the banker was entitled to the moneys recovered on the policy for his absolute use. Osborn v. Milford, 1 W. R. 137.

5. A man indebted by several mortgages, judgments, bonds, and simple contracts, settles his estates for payment of his debts; the real securities shall be first paid, and then bond and simple contract debts in average. Child v. Stephens, 1 Vern. 101.

6. The appointment of a trustee by creditors to receive rents for the payment of debts, discharges the estates from any loss arising from the failure of the trustee. Hutchinson v. Massarene, 2 Ball & B. 49.

7. Where a deed of arrangement with creditors contained a trust to pay the expenses attending the execution of a certain indenture of mortgage, or in any way relating thereto, and all costs, charges, and expenses, which the trustees might be put to in or about the execution of the trusts, or in relation thereto:—Held, that the trustee was justified in defending actions against the debtor, and providing abstracts of the mortgage property. Maw v. Pearson, 3 N. R. 99.

[1927 (4).]

Other Matters.] 8. Where a trust for the benefit of creditors was created in India, but subsequent events made it more convenient that it should be administered in England, the Court refused to allow a portion of the trust fund in its hands to be transferred to the trustees for the purpose of distribution in India, and overruled a demurrer to a suit for its administration. Hartwell v. Colvil, 2 Jur. 984.

[1928 (2).]

9. An application by creditors whose debts, secured by a trust deed, had been established by decree of the Court of Chancery in England, to appoint a receiver over the trust estates in possession of defendant the debtor, refused; it being doubtful as the record was framed, whether, at the hearing of the cause, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a decree. For the record to carry the English decree into execution was so imperfectly framed, that the defendant, by joining issue on the original record, would be at liberty to impeach the securities so established, which he could not do on a bill filed solely and exclusively to aid the execution of the English decree. Houlditch v. Donegal (Lord), Beat. 146.

CURTESY.

10. S. being entitled under a will to real and personal estate marries twice, having issue by both husbands, and concurs with her second husband in mortgaging property belonging to them both, levying three fines. The second husband becomes insolvent, and a deed of arrangement is executed to which the husband and wife, assignee and mortgagee, are parties, whereby it is agreed, that in consideration of a small sum, to be paid in part liquidation of the mortgage, the mortgagee shall give up certain property of the husband's to the assignee, for the creditors, the joint property of the husband and wife being charged with the remainder of the mortgage, reserving the power of sale, and subject thereto in trust for S. for her separate use; so that she might dispose of her property by deed or will attested by three witnesses as a feme sole, with a proviso that her intestacy, entire or partial, should not prejudice her husband's right as administrator. The deed was acknowledged, and S. died intestate, her husband administered to her estate, and her eldest son claimed to have the mortgage paid off, to receive back whatever the mortgagee had received since S.'s death, and subject to the mortgage, claimed the freeholds free from the right of the husband to curtesy.—Held, that the husband was entitled to curtesy, that there was no right to exonerate S.'s estate, and that the husband being her representative made no difference. Whealey v. Garfield, 4 W. R. 700.

1. Testator being possessed of a mill, etc., which had been granted to him and heirs for three lives, devised his property to trustees and their heirs upon trust to let and to pay one-fifth of the profits to his wife for life, and the other four parts he directed to be applied for the maintenance, education, and bringing up of his four children until they severally attain twenty-five, at which time, as they should severally attain that age, he gave, devised, and bequeathed unto such of his children as should attain that age, one-fifth of the property, to hold to them and their heirs. The testator then provided that, if any of his children should die under twenty-five and leave no lawful issue, then he gave, etc., the part of him, her, or them so dying unto the survivors or survivor of his said children, to be equally divided amongst them, their heirs, etc., with a like proviso if any of such children should happen to die under twenty-one; and after the death of his wife he gave the other fifth part to his children subject to the same trusts, provisos, and conditions. The testator left all his four children, E., M., J., and Joseph, him surviving. E. attained twenty-five and married S.; M. married P. and died under twenty-five; J. attained twenty-five, married G., and had one child who died an infant, and afterwards J. died. Joseph died under twenty-five unmarried. On bill filed by E. and her husband against the children of M. and G., the husband of J., in order to ascertain the rights of the parties to the mill:—Held, that the children of the testator did not take vested interests until they severally attained twenty-five. That the words "survivors or survivor" could not be read "others or other;" that the husband of J. was not entitled to the share of J. during his life as tenant by the curtesy. Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50.

2. Where, on a motion to take the bill off the file, on the ground that the plaintiff was not alive in 1839, when the suit was instituted, the affidavit in support thereof stated that the plaintiff went to America in 1824, and had not since been heard of by the defendant. No direct evidence was produced by the other side that the plaintiff was living, nor the date of any letter from him since 1827:—Held, that the circumstances afforded sufficient ground of suspicion to direct a reference to the Master as to that fact. Hove v. Maclean, 9 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 1.

3. A sum of money was set apart, in 1815, to answer an annuity to a woman then supposed to be resident in India, but who was never afterwards heard of. In 1837, the Master having certified, upon presumption, that she was dead, but without finding when she died, the Court ordered payment of the principal money to the party entitled to it, subject to the annuity. In 1842, the Master having certified, upon presumption, that she had died in 1822, and that no personal representative had been heard of, the Court ordered immediate payment to the same party of the accumulations since that time. And in 1847 it ordered payment of the rest of the fund to the same party though resident abroad, upon his giving his personal security to refund in case the annuitant or her personal representative should ever establish a claim. *Cuthbert v. 7. 8. In determining whether a transaction amounts to a fraudulent preference, the Court ought now to have regard simply to the statutory definition contained in s. 92 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. the Act. Exp. Griffith, Re Wilcoxon, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 69; 52 L. J., Ch., 717; 48 L. T. 450; 31 W. R. 878. [1958 (7).

When the decision of one Court is cited to another of co-ordinate authority, the latter has a right to regard it in a critical and even sceptical spirit; and while accepting the decision, to decline the reason of deciding, if a better one can be assigned. But I confess I think that, when an inferior Court (I mean inferior in the sense of curial precedence) has before it the decision of its non-appellate tribunal, it is its duty to conform itself frankly and loyally to the reason of the decision, and not merely to its letter. The intermediate deed was on paper. The dates of the other deeds were filled in, and the last deed was much interlined, the wife being by such interlineations made a party subsequently to the engrossment of the deeds. —Held, that the three deeds formed one transaction, and therefore that the last deed was not voluntary. *Whitbread v. 10. G., one of the churchwardens of a parish, instituted a suit for church-rate in the names of himself and F., the other churchwarden. A proxy was first filed for G. only, and it was declared that F. proceeded no further with the suit. A subsequent proxy was filed, purporting to be for both churchwardens, but signed by G. only. The defendant appeared all along under protest, on account of the non-joinder of F., who in fact had nothing to do with the suit:—Held, that one churchwarden cannot sue alone. He has no implied authority to give a proxy for the other, or to join him in a suit. Nor can the Court compel or dispense with the joinder of the unwilling churchwarden. Greeta v. Treasure, 5 N. R. 383. [2074 (2).]

1. A proposal for the making over to the burial board of a place, of a piece of land belonging to the parish to be used as a cemetery, will not be sanctioned by the Court without the previous approbation of the application by the Charity Commissioners. Exp. Watford Burial Board, 2 Jur., N. S., 1045. [2078 (5).]

2. A burial board duly constituted under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 85, and the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 134, agree to purchase parish lands on the terms of paying an annual sum, the principal to be secured either on the land or as a charge on the church-rate or poor-rate. On petition to carry out this agreement:—Held, that the money must be paid into court in a gross sum, the dividends to be paid to the vendors until invested in land, and the costs to be paid by the burial board. Semble, the Court will not sanction a perpetual charge. Re Barron, 3 W. R. 635. [2078 (5).]

3. A., holding meadow and pasture lands, under a lease of lives renewable for ever, demised a part of the premises to B. for a similar term, with a covenant to keep and deliver up the premises in tenantable order, etc., and with a power of surrender at the end of every three years. The assignees of B.'s interest being about to convert the premises into a public cemetery, the representatives of A. obtained an injunction to prevent them. Semble, the proposed alteration of the property would amount to waste at common law. Hunt v. Brown, Sau. & Sc. 179. [2078 (5).]

ELECTION.

4. Devise of Whiteacre to A. for life upon condition that A. suffer a recovery of Blackacre and settle it; and if he does not, then after the decease of A. Whiteacre to go to B. A. took Whiteacre but did not settle Blackacre. The heir of A. is not bound to convey pursuant to the condition, nor are A.'s assets liable to make good the breach of the condition, for it is a conditional limitation, and not a case of bare condition or of election. Treke v. Barrington, 3 Bro. C. C. 274. [2087 (3).]

5. Election by appointees under powers of appointment. See Row v. Charlton, 10 W. R. 506; 6 L. T., N. S., 743. [2096 (6).]

6. R. F., being entitled to one-third share of real and personal estates, settled such share upon her marriage, with power of appointment to herself (in events that happened) over one-third part thereof, by deed or will, and over the other two-third parts by will, subject to the husband's life interest therein, and in default of issue of the marriage. R. P. becoming entitled to a moiety of another third share of the same estates, settled it to such uses as she should appoint, subject to the husband's life interest. There was one child of the marriage. R. P. by her will devised, bequeathed, and appointed "all that one-third part of her real and personal estates, over which she had a disposing power," upon trust, immediately after her death to raise a sum of 500*l*; and "as to the residue of the said one-third part, and the remaining two-third parts," she gave the same to her husband for life, remainder to her infant son and his heirs; but in case he should die under twenty-one, without issue, she directed the residue of the said one-third part to be sold, for payment of an annuity and legacies given by her will, the annuity to be payable upon the son's death, and the legacies as soon as the said one-third part could be sold; and as to the remaining two-third parts, subject to her husband's life interest, she gave and appointed them to her sister absolutely. The son survived the testatrix, and died under twenty-one without issue:—Held, that the appointment of the "one-third part" for payment of the annuity and legacies, extended only to one-ninth of R. P.'s original third share, and to one-third of her moiety of the other third share, and that the will did not affect the husband's rights under the settlement, and no case of election was raised against him. Saward v. McDonnell, 2 H. L. Ca. 88; 12 Jur. 685. Affirming 3 Jur. 682. [2094 (5).]

7. P. 2095, after par. (5), add references 5 W. R. 540. S. C. in Court below nom. Stephens v. Stone, 5 W. R. 416.

8. Lord Colville gave all he should leave in the world to trustees to pay his debts and legacies, among which was the sum of 1,000*l*. to his brother and heir, and as to the residue in trust for natural children. The testator had a real estate in Nova Scotia, but, as there was no witness to his will, it descended to the heir at law:—Held, that, supposing the words of the will would have passed real estate if attested in due form (which was doubted), the brother was entitled to his legacy, and also to the real estate. Farquharson v. Colville (Lord), Romilly's Notes of Cases, 129. [2100 (7).]

9. So, also, where a copyhold was expressed to be devised, but was not surrendered, and the heir had a legacy and an interest in other estates devised to him. Jeffreys v. Duhamel Romilly's Notes of Cases 129. [2100 (7).]

10. E. having a life estate and a contingent reversionary interest in a farm, C., by his will, charged his farms R. and C. with the payments of debts and legacies, and devised all his real estates (subject as to R. and C. to the charge) to H. for life, with remainders over, and with a contingent executory devise to M. for life. Under a settlement made in E.'s lifetime, the farm C. was settled (subject to E.'s life estate) upon M. for life, with remainder to her children (of whom H. was one) in fee, subject to be divested, in the event of their dying without leaving issue:—Held, that the testator did not intend to devise more than his own interest in the C. farm, and that M. and H. were not put to their election. Evans v. Evans, 2 N. R. 409. [2107 (5)].

1. A testator, having a life interest with an executory devise over, as right heir of his father, in certain property, subject to the interests for life and in tail of M. D., H. D., and two other persons therein, devises that property inter alia to M. D. and H. D., subject to a charge for the payment of debts, annuities, and legacies. On the question whether M. D. and H. D. were put to their election:—Held, that they were not, inasmuch as the property in question was not the only thing given, and the contingent interest might have fallen into possession. Evans v. Evans, 3 W. R. 614. [2108 (1)].

2. A widow electing to take against a post-nuptial settlement of her future personal property:—Held, that her life interest in the funds which had come under the settlement was to be retained by the trustees for the benefit of the children, and that she must account for what she had received in respect of it. Anderson v. Abbot, 5 W. R. 381. [2108 (1)].

3. M., a widow with one child, a son, by a marriage contract with L., exercises a power vested in her to charge Scotch estates in favour of younger children of the marriage to the extent of 30,000*l.* This power binds her successive heirs in tail according to the Scotch law; and there being one child of the second marriage, he, on her death, becomes entitled to the charge, which is a personal bond. The heir of entail, the son by the first marriage, then substitutes a heritable bond for the personal security, and pays off portions; the son of the second marriage releasing the land pro tanto, and by his will bequeathing his property real and personal to trustees (the obligor in the second bond being one), upon certain trusts for the benefit of his wife and children, and specifically bequeathing estates of which he was a mortgagee; upon trust to re-convey on payment, and by a codicil referring to mortgages on Scotch estates. Upon the questions, whether the personal security under the marriage contract was merged in the heritable bond or jus nobilius, and became real estate; whether it was still personalty, and if so, whether it passed by the will, and whether the heir was put to his election:—Held, that prima facie there was no conversion into realty; although that was not certain, and was a question of Scotch law, and was not moreover necessary to decide, inasmuch as it was clear that the heir was put to his election, and that there was an intention to pass by the will the money secured by the bond. Lamb v. Lamb, 5 W. R. 720. [2102 (5)].

4. An infant heir at law may elect, with the sanction of the Court, without a reference to chambers. Lamb v. Lamb, 5 W. R. 772. [2112 (3)].

5. Compensation claimed by the person disappointed by the devise of his interest in the property agreed to be settled in consideration of marriage, the settlement not having been made according to the terms of the agreement, refused; but they ordered a competent part of the fund in court to be retained, and set apart to answer the eventual claim of the parties. Roper v. Bartholomew, 12 Price 833. [2113 (10)].

ESTOPPEL.

P. 2144, col. 1, in line 50, add
PRACTICE (TRANSFERS AND CONSOLIDATION).

6. A decree in a suit by A. against B., claiming as widow to succeed to her husband's estate, in preference to B., his nephew, on the ground of the family being divided, does not operate as res judicata, or as capable of being pleaded in bar to a suit by C., a daughter, claiming to succeed to her father's estate on A.'s death, on the ground that the property was self-acquired by her father. Such judgment determines only an issue raised concerning a particular person, and is not a judgment in rem, but simply a judgment inter partes. Katama Natchiar v. Shivagunga (Rajah), 9 Moo. Ind. App. 539, 540. [2154 (4)].

7. Several incumbrancers' suits having been consolidated, a decree was made in them all, directing certain incumbrances to be kept down, and the several plaintiffs' costs to be added to the debts:—Held, that a party to one of the suits was estopped by the decree from disputing the validity of one of the incumbrances directed to be kept down. Ford v. Tynte, 3 N. R. 559. [2154 (4)].

EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR.

8. A testator empowered the executors or executor acting under his will to carry on his business, if they should see fit. The executors renounced probate. It was:—Held, that the administratrix could not carry on the business under the power. Lambert v. Rendle, 3 N. R. 247. [2183 (2)].

9. A. owed C. a large sum of money upon two promissory notes. C. appointed A. and B. executors of her will, who upon her death proceeded to obtain probate of the same. Before it was obtained, A. died: having previously, however, investigated the private papers of the testatrix, and obtained, in his character of executor, from B. her book of accounts:—Held, that such acts were sufficient to show that A. had accepted the office of executor, although he died before probate; and that where a question arose in chambers as to whether he was, under such circumstances, indebted to the testatrix, the proper course is to adjourn it into court under the 20th Order 16th October 1852. Clarke v. Phillips; Baylis v. Phillips, 2 W. R. 331. [2189 (1)].

10. A man makes his brother executor, and gives him all his real and personal estate; and afterwards marrying, by a codicil makes his wife executrix; she shall have the personal estate, and not the brother. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 1 Vern. 23. [2198 (3)].

11. A testatrix, by her will, gave to A., B., and C. distinct legacies, and appointed A. and

B. executors, and gave "to her executors A. and B." her residuary estate. By a codicil she appointed C. executor and trustee of her will, "as if his name had been inserted therein as a trustee and executor," and a legacy for his trouble in addition to the benefit he derived under her will," and she declared that her trust estate should vest in A., and B. and C., and confirmed her will in all other respects. C. claimed one-third of the residue, but the Court held that it was divisible between A. and B. Hillerson v. Grove, 21 Beav. 518. [2198 (3).]

1. A testator bequeathed all his residuary estate to his executrix, upon trust to pay thereout certain legacies which did not exhaust the personal estate:—Held, on construction of the will, that the executrix took the surplus personal estate beneficially, and that she did not hold such surplus in trust for the next of kin. Williams v. Roberts, 6 W. R. 93; 27 L. J., Ch., 177; 4 Jur., N. S., 18. [2204 (1).]

2. Circumstances under which, from distance of time and the necessity of presuming that what has been done has been honestly done, executors have been exonerated from the consequences of a breach of trust in not taking steps to recover a fund which has been misapplied by the trustees. Taylor v. Millington, 4 Jur., N. S., 204. [2228 (13).]

3. Real estate being devised in trust to sell at such times or time after testator's death as should seem most advisable, either together or in separate parcels, by auction or private contract, the trustees to stand possessed of the produce of such sale, and the rents and profits accruing in the meantime upon the trusts of the devise:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to receive their respective portions of accruing rents, etc., from the end of the year after testator's death. Noel v. Henley, 7 Price 242. [2233 (6).]

4. R., a surviving executor, entitled as next of kin and personal representative of W., a deceased co-executor, deposits a lease belonging to his testator with creditors for a private debt of his own. W. is an appointee under a power created by the will of the testator. In an administration suit R. is found to be a defaulting executor; and a bill being filed to recover the lease by parties interested under the testator's will:—Held, that R.'s interest, as personal representative and next of kin of W., is not liable for R.'s default; that the lease must be brought into court, with an inquiry as to what was due from the estate of the deceased executor, W. Wilson v. Leslie, 5 W. R. 815. [2241 (1).]

5. Executors having left money lying at a banker's, who paid $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for it, ordered to pay interest themselves on the balances from time to time at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. Williams v. Williams, 1 W. R. 237. [2250 (7).]

6. At death of testatrix, her executor, a banker, has funds belonging to her in his hands, it does not appear upon what terms. The executor dies three months after his testatrix; there was no evidence that he had committed any breach of trust, or made any use or profit of the money in his business:—Held, that his estate could only be charged

4 per cent. on the money. Penny v. Avison, 3 Jur., N. S., 62. [2250 (7).]

7. Bill by a married woman for an account against an executor and trustee, charging him with wilful default, her husband and a solicitor acting for all the legatees having been present at, and consented to, what was practically, though not formally, a settlement of the account, and certain items which were objected to appearing to the Court to be fair and reasonable, dismissed with costs, to be paid by her next friend. Ibberson v. Warth, 3 W. R. 230; 11 Jur., N. S., 440. [2257 (3).]

8. A. devises to B. rent out of a lease for years, determinable on lives, to be paid half-yearly if the cestuis que vient lived so long. B. dies during their lifetime. Decreed, the rent was not determined, but should be paid to the executors of B. during the term. Gifford v. Goldsey, 2 Vern. 35. [2260 (8).]

9. A. devised real estate upon trust for B. for life, and after B.'s death specifically devised part, and gave the residue to B. in fee:—Held, that B.'s life estate in the residue was applicable in payment of the testator's debts, in preference to the specifically devised estate. Hibon v. Hibon, 1 N. R. 532. [2280 (11).]

10. A landlord who does not distrain the goods of his deceased tenant, of whose estate a receiver has been appointed, is not entitled to have his rent paid out of the proceeds of the sale of such goods in priority to other creditors. Re Sutton's Estate, Sutton v. Rees, 1 N. R. 464. [2291 (4).]

11. There being a gift of leasehold property, with growing crops, etc., charged with 1,000*l.* to C. P. J., the executor pays the apportioned rent due at the testator's death out of the estate, and that sum is disallowed by the chief clerk in chambers. Upon application to vary the chief clerk's certificate:—Held, that the payment must be allowed, but the question as between the executor and legatees not decided. Tomson v. Judge, 5 W. R. 396. [2293 (5).]

12. A testator was the original lessee of certain leasehold property. In a suit to administer the estate the usual advertisement for creditors was made, but the landlord made no claim in respect of any breaches of the covenants. Subsequently he gave notice to the executors of such claim. The Court refused to distribute the estate without an inquiry in reference thereto, and making a provision for the indemnity of the executors. Hughes v. Young, 4 N. R. 17. [2293 (5).]

13. A testator gave the residue of his real and personal property to trustees in trust to sell the realty and invest the produce with the personalty, and to pay 5,000*l.* to his daughter, the plaintiff, on her attaining twenty-one, or day of marriage, and he appointed H. and R. and his widow executors, and H. and his widow guardians of the plaintiff. The trustees did not act. More than 5,000*l.* was paid into the hands of H., who paid the plaintiff's maintenance during minority. The plaintiff, on coming of age, filed a bill against H. and R. to recover the principal, and got a decree for an account. R. then came to a settlement with X., the residuary devisee and legatee, and, having ascertained what would be coming to him, gave a mortgage for as much as was deficient of the personal estate, and X. went into possession of the real estate, R. and X. joining in securing under the mortgage pecuniary legacies to some other legatees:—Held, that he was bound to refund, and that the mortgage, if given in lieu of assets, should be treated as so much assets for the benefit of the plaintiff and unpaid legatees. Held, also, that the payment to her guardian H. did not bind the plaintiff. O'Neill v. Hamill, Beat. 618. [2310 (3)].

1. E. N. bequeaths leaseholds to trustees for sale, to pay the proceeds to his widow for life, and after in trust for the children; one executor proves; and his co-executor, the solicitor of the testator, finding himself involved in intricate transactions in respect of the leaseholds, proves also, and institutes a suit, and claims indemnity against liabilities in respect of the trust:—Held, that under the circumstances he was justified in filing the bill, and was entitled to indemnity and costs of the suit. Semble, that the assent of one executor to specific bequests does not take away the right of the other to indemnity. Turner v. Nicholls, 1 W. R. 157. [2313 (10)].

2. A testator directs his trustees to apply his personalty in paying debts and legacies, contemplating that there may be a surplus, and he directs the application of the rents of the realty on payment of such of his debts (except his mortgage debts) and legacies as his personalty should be insufficient to pay. A suit is instituted to administer his estate, and the personalty being insufficient to pay the debts and legacies, mortgage debts created by the testator remain unpaid, and no direction is given in the suit respecting them. The two first tenants for life and a remainderman concur in a petition for a sale of such part of the realty as shall be sufficient to pay off the mortgages and for an account:—Held, that there ought to be an inquiry what part of the real estate it will be fit and proper to sell to pay off the mortgages and for an account, the Court having power after decree to direct a sale. Cooke v. Cholmondeley, 5 W. R. 835. [2334 (5)].

3. Sale declared to be made subject to the trusts of the testator's will, where, under a decree that his real estate (which was devised in strict settlement, subject to debts) should be sold, the sale had been effected by collusion between the creditors and tenants for life. Mamaton v. Molesworth, 1 Eden 18. [2338 (2)].

4. On the application of executors, a sum of money was appropriated to answer the liability of the testator's estate in respect of shares in a joint stock company which was being wound up; the official manager not having gone in before the Master, but appearing on the motion. Re Hawkins, 1 W. R. 446. [2344 (9)].

5. A deed of release is executed to the executors of a will, reciting that a certain sum has been paid to S. P. for the purposes and upon the trusts declared in the will, and witnessing that in consideration of this payment, which is thereby acknowledged by S. P., he S. P. holds this sum upon the trusts of the will:—Held, that this acknowledgment by

S. P. under seal did not constitute a debt by specialty against his assets in favour of the cestui que trust under the will. Brene v. Cox, 3 W. R. 276. [2352 (3)].

6. Where a man gives a bond for himself "and his heirs," the obligee is entitled to priority, in respect of the real estate, over creditors by specialty, in which the "heirs" are not bound. Jenkins v. Roberts, 1 Eq. Rep. 123; 1 W. R. 298. [2353 (5)].

7. Under the circumstances of the case a medical man was held not entitled to enforce against the assets his claim in respect of medical attendance upon the deceased. Packman v. Vivian, 24 Beav. 290. [2358 (1)].

8. Since the passing of the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 42, the Court of Chancery is bound to decide on the claims of creditors coming in under an administration decree, and cannot leave them to their remedies in an action at law. Re Hooper's Estate, Baylis v. Watkins, 1 N. R. 115. [2365 (13)].

9. The equity of redemption of an estate in mortgage, subject to the usual proviso for redemption, for securing 3,000*l.*, devolved, by devise and conveyance, on several persons as tenants in common, in unequal shares. The mortgagee having required his money, an indenture was made between the mortgagee of the first part, the tenants in common of the equity of redemption of the second part, and new mortgagees of the third part, whereby, in consideration of 2,000*l.* to the old mortgagee paid by the new mortgagees, at the request of one of the tenants in common, and of 1,000*l.* in like manner paid at the request of two other of the tenants in common, in equal moieties, making 3,000*l.*, the mortgaged hereditaments were conveyed to the new mortgagees, subject to new distinct provisos for redemption at the end of six months on payment of the 2,000*l.*, for re-conveyance of two-third parts to one tenant in common, and on payment of 1,000*l.* for re-conveyance to the two others, the tenants in common of the one-third part in equal moieties as between themselves; the tenants in common covenanted to pay their respective proportions, with interest, at the end of the six months. They, at the same time, executed a mortgage-bond with a condition avoiding the same on payment of the 3,000*l.* and interest, as stipulated for by the proviso for redemption, and according to their covenants:—Held, that neither the form of the new proviso for redemption, nor the new covenant to pay, showed an intention to change the nature of the mortgage-debt; and that the personal estate of one of the tenants in common was not liable, in exoneration of the mortgaged estate, to pay the proportion of the mortgage-debt. Hedges v. Hedges, 5 De G. & Sm. 330; 16 Jur. 634; 21 L. J., Ch., 858. [2397 (5)].

10. A testator had, before his marriage, limited lands to trustees for a term, to secure a debt, and subject thereto to other trustees for another term, to secure an annuity of 100*l.* per annum to his intended wife for life, with a proviso for determining the latter term, on his investing a sufficient amount to secure an equal annuity. He died without having made such an investment, having by his will directed payment out of his personal estate of his debts, including what might be charged upon the settled lands; and he bequeathed his residuary estate to his widow. Before his death, he had paid off the debt secured by the first of the above-mentioned terms, which had consequently determined, and the annuity was the only charge upon the estates:—Held, that the tenant of the estates was not entitled to have them exonerated as against the widow out of the residue. Reeve v. Reeve, 3 De G. & Sm. 714; 14 Jur. 264. [2399 (3).]

1. Testator, after bequeathing his personal estate, gave his real estate upon trust to raise, in exclusion of his personal estate, sufficient to satisfy his just debts (except debts secured by mortgage) and legacies and expenses of the trust:—Held, that the personal estate was the primary fund to pay the mortgage debts, which exceeded in amount the whole personalty. Briggs v. Davies, 4 W. R. 696. [2400 (9).]

2. 1. A. B. by his will directed that his son should repay to his executors by instalments a mortgage debt borrowed for the use of the son upon a leasehold house of the testator. The instalments were to be invested, and to sink into the residuary estate, to a share of which the son would be entitled. The testator by an indenture settled upon his wife this leasehold house subject to the mortgage, and directed that as between himself and the leasehold premises they were to be the "primary security and ultimate fund" for the payment of the debt:—Held, as between the widow and the son, that the leasehold house was only liable to pay the debt in case the son's share in the residuary estate were insufficient. 2. The testator, after giving one moiety of his stock in trade to his widow, absolutely gave her the use of the remaining moiety for carrying on his business:—Held, that the widow's estate was not liable to make good any deficiency in the remaining moiety. Quartermaine v. Cuff, 1 W. R. 176. [2400 (9).]

3. When an order for an account of debts and liabilities is necessary under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 35, s. 19. Such order may be mentioned to the Court; and semble, it should be by motion and not by petition. Re Brown, 6 W. R. 5. [2426 (7).]

4. A., the executor of the surviving executrix of the testator, obtains probate to her estate; this is challenged by her next of kin and recalled, and pending that recall a suit is instituted for the administration of the estate of the original testator; and upon the question whether a decree for account could be taken, treating A. as the legal personal representative of the original testator and his testatrix:—Held, that it could not, although, if the litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court was prolonged, means might be found to prosecute the suit. Way v. Way, 2 W. R. 395. [2429 (6).]

5. A legal mortgagee may maintain a creditor's suit. Groves v. Lane, 16 Jur. 854. [2435 (14).]

6. Where a creditor of a testator obtained judgment against the executor de bonis testatoris, and a decree was immediately afterwards made in a creditor's suit:—Held, that the executor was not entitled to an injunction to stay execution on the judgment. Vincent v. Godson, 3 De G. & Sm. 717. [2440 (5).]

7. The Court by consent made an immediate decree in a cause not in the paper for the administration of the real and personal estate of a testator at the suit of a creditor, after a summons in chambers for the administration of the real and personal estate had been taken out by another creditor, which was returnable before the first day on which the cause could be heard as a short cause. White v. Lyons, 4 N. R. 221. [2446 (11).]

8. Where plaintiffs claim as a class, the regular practice at the hearing is to direct an inquiry, whether the plaintiffs are the parties entitled. Brown v. Clark, 1 Jur. 838. [2451 (1).]

9. Under a direction, in a decree or order, to inquire who is the heir at law of a deceased person, it is not the practice to inquire who is the customary heir, although it appears that the deceased was entitled to land of copyhold tenure. Freeman v. Roberts, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 315. [2451 (3).]

10. Where a bill was filed by parties claiming as next of kin of a testator, a native of France, resident in England, to set aside a deed by which they had been fraudulently induced to give up a portion of the testator's estate in favour of the executor, a preliminary inquiry was directed as to the domicile of the testator, and whether plaintiffs were next of kin, etc. Chameaux v. Riley, 2 Jur. 1081. [2452 (13).]

11. In a suit to administer the estate of a testator, a devisee infant being incapable of managing his affairs, a motion made for a decree under the 16th section of 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, for a reference to chambers to inquire into the devisee's state of mind:—Motion refused, and no order made. Costs reserved. Adams v. Smyth, 1 W. R. 475. [2452 (13).]

12. In an administration suit a child of the testator, and a party to the suit, was a debtor to the estate. In such a case the proper course is to order him to pay the debt into court immediately. If he were a stranger to the record, an inquiry would be directed. Walker v. Simpson, 1 Jur., N. S., 675. [2453 (4).]

13. Where an administration suit was instituted by one of two trustees, the other being one of the defendants, and after the hearing on further consideration the trustees were permitted by the Court to retire from the trust, and new trustees were appointed; it was held, that under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 52, the suit might be revived at the instance of the new trustees, and that accounts directed against the old trustees might be continued against the new. Williams v. Jeffreys, 3 N. R. 458. [2459 (9).]

14. One of two creditors, plaintiffs in a creditor's suit upon an abatement by the death of an executor of the testator, obtained administration de bonis non to the estate of the testator, and leave was given to the other creditor to file a supplemental claim against him and the executors of the deceased executor, the case not being within the 52nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, which gives to an order on motion the effect of a supplemental decree. Tate v. Leithead, 9 Hare (App.) li.; 16 Jur. 964. [2459 (9).]

15. Where in an administration suit a co-plaintiff died, who, it was alleged, had no interest in the estate, leave was given to revive the suit, without making her representatives parties thereto. Leycester v. Leycester, 5 N. R. 183. [2459 (9).]

1. Order on motion ex parte by the plaintiff to revive and carry on proceedings in an administration suit commenced by claim upon abatement by the death of the executor, under the 52nd section of the Act 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, upon allegation (without proof) of the facts constituting the abatement. Martin v. Hadlow, 9 Hare (App.) li.; 16 Jur. 961. Like circumstances in a case where the suit was by bill: like order. Cox v. Taylor, 9 Hare (App.) li. n. [2459 (9).]

2. Where a decree was made in an administration suit, containing a declaration which bound the heir at law of a testator, and it was found that at the date of the decree the heir was dead, an order of revivor was made against the representative of the heir. Fenton v. Hawkins, 4 N. R. 54. [2459 (9).]

3. An administration suit—which had abated after decree by the death, intestate as to trust estates, of the sole plaintiff, the executor and devisee in trust of the testator in the cause—was revived on the application of the deceased plaintiff's executors, and two of his co-heiresses, the other co-heiress being already a party to the suit. Fane v. Richards, 1 N. R. 563. [2459 (9).]

4. In an administration suit by two residuary legatees, as co-plaintiffs, if one die before replication, the proper course is to mark him as dead, and when the cause comes into chambers, to serve his representatives with the decree. Hinde v. Morton, 5 N. R. 362. [2459 (9).]

5. Where the plaintiff in a next of kin suit has been found to have no interest, the suit cannot be made perfect by a supplemental order under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 52. Lawrence v. Maule, 3 N. R. 239. [2459 (9).]

6. A claim filed for the administration of personal estate dismissed with costs, on the ground that there was no personal representative of the testator before the Court, and that the claim erroneously stated that the defendant was the executor of the executrix of the testator, and sought relief against him in that capacity. Boulding v. Boulding, 1 W. R. 49; 16 Jur. 1154. [2469 (10).]

7. After a decree to account in a suit against B. and C. (the executors of A., in a suit for the administration of A.'s assets), B. died. It appeared that B. had received part of the assets of A., and it was alleged but not proved that he died insolvent:—Held, that the cause could not proceed until the representative of B. was brought before the Court. M'Mahon v. O'Kelly, 5 Ir. Ch. R. 288. [2472 (7).]

8. An executrix charged with the payment of an annuity to the testator's daughter's separate use, issuing out of real and personal estate, deposits the title deeds of a descended estate of which she and the executrix were co-heiresses, and a mortgage deed, with bankers for moneys advanced partly for the testator's estate and partly for herself, and joins in a promissory note to secure the sum borrowed. Upon her death, and an administration suit to administer both estates by an incumbrancer on the annuity, the executrix of the executrix files a bill for delivery up of the deeds. Four questions arose:—First, whether she could sue; secondly, if so, whether as to realty; thirdly, whether creditors could follow the deeds of a descended estate; and fourthly, what part of the borrowed money was recoverable from the testatrix's estate:—Held, that under the new practice no bill being dismissible for misjoinder, and this case not extending to that point under the new practice, the plaintiff could sue, and also, as to real estate, in her representative character, and to carry out a decree. That the doctrine as to alienees of real estate did not apply to a deposit only; and an inquiry directed as to the money borrowed. Declaration for delivery up of the deeds of the descended estate without prejudice to the right to the money. Carter v. Saunders, 2 W. R. 325; 2 Drew. 248. [2472 (7).]

9. When a fund has been brought into court in an administration suit, the next of kin are properly represented after decree by the personal representative until the fund has been distributed. Mackethwait v. Winstanley, 5 N. R. 204. [2480 (4).]

10. Upon motion for injunction to stay a creditor's action on ground of notice of decree in administration suit:—Motion granted, and creditor's costs taxed up to the time of notice. McMullen v. Acres, 1 W. R. 77. [2493 (8).]

11. A judgment creditor prosecuting an action upon his judgment against the executors of his debtor after notice of decree in administration suit will be restrained, and must pay the costs of the executors, of proceedings in the action taken after such notice (which costs will be set off against his judgment debt when proved), and also the costs of the application to restrain his proceedings at law. Boston v. Richardson, 3 W. R. 432. [2493 (8).]

12. Pending an action by a creditor against an executor, a decree is made in chambers in a creditor's suit, and notice of the decree given to the creditor. On the question of costs in the action, on motion:—Held, on the authority of certain of the registrars as to the practice, that the creditor is entitled to both sets of costs out of assets if admitted, but otherwise must add them to his debt; but quære by V.-Ch. Kindersley. White v. Leatherdale, 1 W. R. 403. [2493 (8).]

13. As to costs of executor where account formerly rendered is found to be correct. Hubbard v. Child, 14 Jur. 544. [2495 (18).]

14. An executor finds certain promissory notes in his testator's handwriting, and demands payment, but is met with a receipt in writing, signed by the testator. The notes are made the subject of bequest in the will to the maker, and the executor upon the advice of counsel brings an action and files a bill:—Held, that he was entitled to retain the costs of such action and suit out of the estate. Foster v. Danber, 6 W. R. 47. [2495 (18).]

15. In an administration suit the Master, pursuant to ss. 7 & 8 of the Masters in Chancery Abolition Act, had, for the purpose of finally settling the suit, made his report directing the costs of plaintiff and defendant to be paid ratably out of the fund in court, the defendant to be relieved from all further liability to account. The fund was insufficient; and the defendant, the testator's executor and trustee, claimed his costs in priority:—Held, that under the Act the Master had full discretion as to the whole matters in the suit, and that his decision as to the costs could not be disturbed. Gilbert v. Challenor, 1 W. R. 209. [2501 (14).

1. A suit was instituted by husband and wife against the personal representative of the executor of a testator, for the wife's share of a specific legacy bequeathed to four persons. The personal representative of the executor died, and thereby the suit became abated. This suit was abandoned, and another against other parties was instituted. The costs of the representative of the executor of this abandoned suit were allowed in the accounts as against the original testator's general personal estate. Trail v. Bull, 1 Eq. Rep. 9. [2502 (9).

2. An executrix charged with breach of trust by investing in her own name dies, and her executor puts in an answer denying any residue, and scheduling certain documents. Inquiries are directed, and, after some contention, it appears upon those documents that there is a residue. The executor of the executrix is then sought to be charged personally with the costs of the inquiries, inasmuch as it appeared from the scheduled documents that there was a residue:—Held, that he was not liable for such costs. Lilley v. Medlicott, 5 W. R. 412. [2502 (9).

3. An executor is not justified upon a claim of interest by the legatee in imposing terms as to the payment of the legacy for the purpose of obtaining an abandonment of the claim for interest. Semble, that if a legatee has not exhausted every possible means of obtaining his legacy short of a suit, he will not receive costs upon a suit instituted by him for that purpose. Alymer v. Winterbottom, 4 Jur., N. S. 19. [2505 (6).

4. Costs, the difficulty having been caused by the testator, directed to come out of the estate. Murton v. Markby, 18 Beav. 196. [2509 (20).

5. The costs of a bill filed to determine the rights of the plaintiff under a will of difficult construction, and to which a demurrer was allowed, given out of the testator's estate. Evans v. Rosser, 3 N. R. 685. [2509 (20).

6. In an administration suit by one of a class interested in a specific devise, the only disputed question being among those interested in this devise, the costs, so far as they related to the real estate, were thrown upon the heir, who was made a defendant in respect of a void charitable devise of other specified land which had descended on him. Saunders v. Miller, 6 W. R. 454. [2512 (6).

7. T., by will, in 1856, after bequeathing a small legacy, gave all her personal estate to trustees, in trust, after payment of debts, as to so much thereof as she could lawfully give to charitable uses, for the Lincoln Penitent Female Home. The personal estate consisted of two classes, viz., pure personalty, and that which savoured of realty, and the latter was undisposed of. An administration summons was taken out by the legatee, which was subsequently adjourned into court:—Held, that, as between the charity and the next of kin, the costs of the suit ought to be paid wholly out of the personal estate which savoured of realty. Taylor v. Bogg, 5 Jur., N. S., 137. [2514 (3).

8. T. directed "all his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid by his executors out of such part of his estate as could not by law be bequeathed for charitable purposes," and then devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate which he could not bequeath for charitable purposes to legatees, and bequeathed all that could be lawfully bequeathed for charitable purposes to a charity:—Held, that the charity was not relieved from the costs of a suit in which a question was raised as to whether a certain part of the property, from its nature, was bequeathable to the charity or not, and that the costs must be apportioned between the two funds. Taylor v. Linley, 5 Jur., N. S., 701. [2514 (3).

9. A claim being filed by A, as next of kin, for the administration of an estate in which infants were interested, another claim was filed by the mother of the infants for the same purpose; on reference to the Master to inquire which should proceed, he reported in favour of the mother:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to costs of filing the original claim, and no costs subsequent to the filing of second claim. Oppenheim v. Henry, 1 W. R. 126. [2515 (9).

10. A. filed a bill against the executors of B. for the purpose of establishing a claim under an agreement entered into by B.; afterwards several suits were instituted by persons interested in B.'s estate, for the purpose of administering it. A. then filed a supplemental bill praying that he might have the benefit of such administration suits, the conduct of which was afterwards given to him:—Held, that he was entitled to the payment of the debt found due to him under his claim, and of his costs in all the suits in priority to the executor's costs. Lodge v. Pritchard, 1 N. R. 534. [2515 (9).

11. In a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court a party intervenes and fails, but the decree of Court gives him his costs. An administration suit is then instituted; and upon the question at the hearing whether the costs of the intervener in the Ecclesiastical Court ought to be paid in priority to those of the administration suit:—Held, that they ought not, being in effect a charge on the estate. Major v. Major, 2 W. R. 382; 2 Eq. Rep. 155; 2 Drew. 251. [2518 (8).

12. Where a testator charges his estate with a specific bequest in favour of a particular class, e.g., "the grandchildren of A.," the money will be raised at the cost of the general estate; but the costs incurred by persons claiming to compose such class, in substantiating their claim, must come out of the fund specifically bequeathed. Boycott v. Newman, 4 W. R. 707; 2 Jur., N. S., 702. [2519 (14).

13. Costs of parties originally brought before the Court by the executor, but declared by the decree to be unnecessary parties, but who, nevertheless, remained before the Court and attended the inquiries:—Ordered to be paid out of the parties' own share. Girdleston v. Creed, 1 W. R. 228. [2520 (8).

14. A testator left his property to his wife for life, his business to be carried on for the support of her and his children, charged with debts. There was no personality, the trustees disclaimed, and a bill was filed by one child, a legatee, for the administration of the estate, alleging an improper carrying on of the business, and asking an account and receiver. On the question of costs:—Held, that this Court being put in the place of trustees, the inquiry as to the business was necessary, and no costs could be reserved, but must be paid as usual. Cooper v. Cooper, 1 W. R. 501. [2520 (8).]

1. Mere liberty to attend the proceedings under an administration judgment does not entitle the parties having the liberty to the costs of their attendance in chambers as a matter of course. In order to entitle such parties to such costs, the order giving the liberty to attend should expressly provide that they are to be entitled thereto. Day v. Batty, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 830. [2520 (8).]

2. The plaintiff in an administration suit, one of the executors and residuary legatees, being insolvent, his assignees in insolvency had been made defendants to the suit:—Held, that the plaintiff and the assignees were entitled to separate costs. Chilwell v. Hocknell, 2 W. R. 630; 2 Eq. Rep. 1106. [2520 (12).]

3. Where shares of parties beneficially interested under a will have been incumbered, one set of costs is allowed in respect of each share, but without deducting the additional expense incurred by reason of the incumbrances. Greedy v. Lavender (11 Beav. 417), not followed. Coates v. Coates, 3 N. R. 355. [2520 (12).]

4. The costs of proceedings to administer two separate estates which have been dealt with as one fund, must be borne by the two estates in equal shares, notwithstanding the estates are unequal. Dean v. Morris, 5 W. R. 315. [2521 (8).]

5. Proof for calls. Petitioners entitled to their costs. Wentworth v. Chertell, 5 W. R. 743. [2522 (12).]

6. Persons interested under a will and unnecessarily made parties to a suit for the administration of the estate, ordered to bear their own costs, they not having objected to their being parties in their answers or at the hearing. Williams v. Williams, 1 W. R. 237; 17 Jur. 434. [2525 (6).]

FAMILY ARRANGEMENTS.

7. E. S. by will gives to trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, all his messuages, etc. for his term and interest unexpired therein upon trust for his son J. S. for so long a time as should run out during his life, with a power of appointment and remainder to his children; and in default to his son W. S. in the same terms, with a gift of the residue to his son E. S. J. S. dies without issue, and W. S. by his will gives all his property to his wife, and she by her will gives all her property to her daughter E. There are five children of W. S., four sons and the daughter E., who, upon the representation of her eldest brother that the property is freehold and therefore descended to him, and did not pass by her mother's will, executes a deed of compromise under which a fifth is to be paid to each. One brother sells his fifth to a purchaser for value without notice, and a bill is filed by E. to set aside the deed of compromise on the ground of fraudulent representation and ignorance of E. of her rights. Decree made setting aside the deed, but without costs. Semble, a deed of compromise is only binding where every party is aware of his rights equally, and the nature of the question clearly appears on the deed. Davis v. Chanter, 3 W. R. 321. [2538 (4).]

8. Sir J. S. directed his trustees, during the term of twenty-one years from his decease, to accumulate all the residue of his personal estate, and the rents and profits of his real estate, and the accumulations arising from sums invested in consols during the minorities of his grandchildren, and to stand seised and possessed of all the property, in trust, at the expiration of the term of twenty-one years, to convey, assign, and transfer the same unto all and every his great-grandchildren, the sons and daughters of his grandchildren J. S., M. S., and H. S., as should live to attain twenty-one, equally; and in trust in the meantime to pay the whole income of the trust premises unto the respective parents, his grandchildren J. S., M. S., equally; and in the event of there being no such great-grandchildren, then the testator gave the whole of his estate to F. absolutely. Sir J. S. died in 1837, and his grandson J. S. died in 1848, without having had any issue. M. S. and H. S. both married, but neither had any issue. The twenty-one years expired in January 1858, and in March following an agreement was entered into by F., M. S., and H. S., and their husbands, and other parties representing the testator, for a division of the property on the terms therein mentioned:—Held, that the agreement was fit and proper, and for the benefit of the married ladies, and ought to be carried into effect. Conduitt v. Soane, Conduitt v. Preston, Conduitt v. Foxhall, 6 W. R. 667; 4 Jur., N. S., 502. [2541 (6).]

FOREIGNER AND FOREIGN LAW!

9. A testator was domiciled in a province of India, by the law of which the rules applicable to wills depended on status determined mainly by religion, and in default of specific regulations were to be the rules of justice, equity, and good conscience. The testator was of no distinct religion, and had no special status. He bequeathed certain property to his sons and their children. An illegitimate child born to one of the testator's sons some years after the testator's death claimed to share with a legitimate child the bequest, as included in the term children:—Held, that the rule of English law by which the claimant would have been excluded as illegitimate was not to be followed; that effect was to be given to the bequest according to the actual meaning with which the testator used the word children, and, under the circumstances of the case, the testator intended to include in the class "children" of his sons, illegitimate children of his sons, whenever acknowledged by their putative father, and that the claimant was entitled. Barlow v. Orde, 18 W. R. 737; 3 L. R., P. C., 164; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 437.

1. Gift by the will of a Jew domiciled in England, of a share of residuary real and personal estate in trust for the "children" of his son. At the date of the will the son had had three children by a lady, whom he subsequently married in Holland (she having been first converted to Judaism), pursuant to the ceremonies of the Jewish religion, and thus had made the three children legitimate according to Jewish law. He afterwards had other children:—Held, that the term "children" in the will must be construed according to the law of England; and that, as there were, at the date of the will, legitimate children to answer the description, the three children born before marriage took no interest. Levy v. Solomon, 37 L. T., N. S., 263.

[2611 (1).

2. With reference to a Dutch contract upon which a construction had been judicially put in Holland, the Court refused to make a declaration which would be opposed to that construction. Sudlow v. Dutch Rhenish Railway Co., 21 Beav. 43.

[2622 (2).

3. A testamentary instrument, duly executed according to English law by a British subject, whose legal domicile was at Paris both at the time of the execution of the instrument in question and at the time of her death, cannot be admitted to probate if the party propounding the alleged will fails to prove that the law of the domicile was such as to authorise a will in that form. Bremer v. Freeman and Bremer, 5 W. R. 618.

FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

4. A conveyed certain property to trustees in 1842, upon trust for charitable purposes, with the intention, and in the belief, from the representations made to her, that the charity would not take effect till after her death, and that during her lifetime the enjoyment of the property would be preserved to her. The deed was enrolled within six months, and retained in the possession of A., who continued to receive the rents of the property till 1850. In that year, believing herself to be dying, she was persuaded to add certain other property to what was already comprised in the deed of 1842. Deeds were executed declaring the trusts, and reciting that A. had received the rents from 1842 as the agent of the trustees, and that she was desirous of providing for the payment to them of all sums owing in respect thereof. The plaintiff stated that these recitals were untrue, and introduced without her knowledge. Before executing these deeds, in August 1850, she stipulated with the trustees for the receipt of the rent up to the Christmas following:—Held, that A. was entitled to have the deeds set aside, on the ground of the misrepresentation made as to the effect, and her want of knowledge with reference to the deed of 1842, and from the untrue recital and tacit reservation of benefit upon the deeds of 1850. Howard v. Fingall (Earl), 1 W. R. 515.

5. Liability of a party to make good the result of his misrepresentations. Ocebury v. Teale, 1 W. R. 27.

[2641 (3).

6. If a person seeks to set aside a sale of various kinds of property, on the ground of fraud, the contract must be rescinded in toto or not at all; and if the plaintiff is unable to restore any one of the kinds of property included in the contract, relief cannot be given. Secus, if the property be all of the same sort. Semble, where the property is of a perishable nature, the plaintiff is not bound to keep it in a state of preservation after bill filed. Maturin v. Tredinnick, 4 N. R. 15.

[2664 (5).

7. A deed was fraudulently obtained, whereby certain real estates and some policies of assurance effected for the purpose were mortgaged to secure an alleged debt largely in excess of the actual advance, and the debtor covenanted to keep up the policies. The premiums were paid by the creditor, and some of the policies were afterwards dropped, and others sold by him under a power in the deed:—Held, that the term of setting aside the deed ought to be the repayment of the advance alone, and that the creditor had no right to be reimbursed the excess of the premiums he had paid over the proceeds of the sales. Pennell v. Millar, 5 W. R. 215.

8. The Court will not allow a security to be enforced against the person from whom it was taken, where it had been taken from that person when just of age and living in the house and under the influence of another person who stood in anything like the relation of a guardian or trustee, or in loco parentis to the party from whom the security was taken, unless the security was given freely and without the exercise of any influence either by the party to whom it was given or the party who procured it to be given; and on mere allegations of such undue influence, and that the rate of interest on the security given was not fully stated, an injunction to stay execution was granted until the hearing. Espy v. Lake, 1 W. R. 59; 22 L. J., Ch., 386; 16 Jur. 1106; 10 Hare 260.

9. Persons paying money to one standing in loco parentis, by the direction of persons of tender years, though of full age, are bound to see that such persons thoroughly understand the transaction, and have had access to independent advice. A sum of money advanced by a bank on the joint and several note of two young ladies, aged twenty-two and twenty-one, was, at the suggestion of the manager of the bank, made to the ladies, and without fraudulent intention, carried over to the sole credit of their uncle, who stood in loco parentis to them, on a trust account: subsequently the latter drew out and applied the greater part of the same to his own purposes:—Held, that the note was invalid as against the young ladies, except as to sums actually received by them. Dettmar v. Metropolitan and Provincial Bank, 3 N. R. 364. [2673 (2).]

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

1. A bill of sale by way of security, but containing no proviso for possession until default:—Held, under the circumstances, valid against creditors, notwithstanding continued possession of the party executing such bill of sale. Cook v. Walker, 3 W. R. 357.

2. A settlement made on the wife by the husband, in consideration of her joining in a mortgage of her freehold and leasehold property, the money so raised being applied in payment of the husband's debts, and the settlement being made with the intervention of third parties on behalf of the wife—not considered fraudulent. Carter v. Hind, 2 W. R. 27. [2723 (9).]

Remedy of Creditor. 3. If the evidence raises a prima facie case that the effect of a voluntary settlement will be injurious to settlor's creditors, a creditor may file a bill and have an inquiry into the state of settlor's property and debts at the date of the execution of the settlement. Crabbe v. Mowey, 1 W. R. 226. [2731 (8).]

4. A mortgaged his own estate for 5,000*l.* for the benefit of B., and B. (pursuant to an agreement to that effect with A.) conveyed his estate, not only as an indemnity to A., but also to uses for the benefit of his own (B.'s) children and their issue:—Held, that there was a sufficient valuable consideration as between A. and B. to support the limitations to B.'s children, as against subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration from B. Held, also, that this Court would have specifically enforced the whole agreement at the suit of A. Ford v. Stuart, 15 Beav. 493; 21 L. J., Ch., 514. [2736 (2).]

FRIENDLY SOCIETY.

5. The defendant was the surviving trustee of an association for the relief of orphans and widows. A schism took place among the members, and a portion of them caused the society to be registered under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 115. The defendant was removed from the office of trustee by a meeting acting in compliance with the regulations prescribed by the rules, and new trustees appointed. The bill was filed by the plaintiffs, on behalf of themselves and all other persons interested in the trust fund, to compel the defendant to transfer stock standing in his name to the new trustees; and he resisted the application on the ground, amongst others, that he was a trustee not only for the members of the registered society, but also for those subscribers of the old association who had been excluded from the new society. The Court, looking at the original rules, and the rules which had been certified:—Held, that the societies were identical, and that no persons claiming to be cestuis que trustent, could object to the frame of the suit; the object of placing the fund in the hands of the proper trustee being common to all; that the power given to meetings, by the Friendly Societies Act and rules, of appointing new trustees, from time to time, included the power of removing trustees; that the Friendly Societies Act did not oust the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery; that where a society has been registered under the Act, Clough v. Ratcliffe (1 De G. & Sm. 164) does not apply; that the Court would be unwilling to consider a society for the benefit of widows and orphans illegal under the 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, but would take the registrar's certificate to be conclusive as to the society being in conformity with, and therefore entitled to, the benefit of the 21st section of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 115. Hodges v. Vale, 2 W. R. 65. [2742 (1).]

6. Powers of the Court of Chancery under the Act 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, to compel two members of a friendly society to restore money belonging to the society which had been received by them. Re Briton Friendly Society, 1 W. R. 50. [2742 (6).]

7. The committee of a benefit club, which was not registered, advanced some of the club money on the security of a deposit of a lease. Afterwards the surviving members of the club formed a new society, under a different name, which succeeded to the funds of the old club. The new society was duly registered under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56:—Held, that the equitable mortgage would not vest in the public officer of the new society without a legal transfer. Davies v. Griffiths, 1 W. R. 402. [2742 (3).]

GAME.

P. 2746, col. 1, line 2, add POACHING.

8. A farm was let by a writing not under seal, and rights of sporting reserved to the landlord, with a right of re-entry for non-observance of covenants. The tenants having trapped rabbits, which were said to abound, the landlord considering this an interference with his game, brought an action of ejectment, and on bill filed by the tenants for an injunction he was restrained. But quære see the report. Marsh v. Mills, 24 L. T. 169. [2747 (1).]

GAMING AND WAGERING.

9. The Court will not assist a plaintiff seeking to have a contract set aside on the ground of fraud, if the contract be in its nature one of gambling or wagering. Where a person having only thirty shares in a company, in the course of a fortnight entered into contracts for the sale of between seven hundred and eight hundred shares, to be delivered on a future day, and was unable to deliver them in consequence of the shares of the company being under the control of the persons to whom he had agreed to sell, the Court refused to assist him on an interlocutory application, though the fraud was not denied by the defendants. Rees v. Fernie, 4 N. R. 539. [2750 (3).

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

1. Uncle and aunt appointed guardians of the person of an infant on petition without suit or reference, no allowance being asked. Re Neale, 15 Beav. 250. [2774 (16).

2. A mother and her co-executor appointed guardians of her own children and those by a previous wife. Anderton v. Yates, 5 De G. & Sm. 202. [2774 (16).

3. Petition that a guardian may be assigned to consent to a marriage (unless to carry on a suit to protect an interest), must be pursuant to that stat. 26 Geo. 2, c. 33. Exp. Beecher, 1 Bro. C. C. 556. [2777 (4).

4. The Court will allow a guardian to expend the whole income of his ward's estate upon improvements, if such course of improvement has resulted in the accession of good and moneyed tenants to the property, and placed the land in an improving state, although no additional rent is obtained by the ward upon his coming into possession. A ward upon attaining his majority was induced by his guardian to create a mortgage for the purpose of paying off a debt of 5,000*l.* incurred by the guardian in improving the estate during a minority of seventeen years, in addition to an expenditure of the income of the property for the same purpose:—Held, that the ward was not entitled to have this mortgage set aside as against his guardian, without giving credit to his guardian for, and deducting the outlay upon, those improvements which have produced a permanent return in the shape of increased rental. Dacre v. Strachan, 4 W. R. 401. [2779 (17).

HARBOURS, DOCKS, AND PIERS.

5. An ancient pier and quay built by the lord of a manor is made the subject of a deed of trust, to which the lord for the time being is a party, and subsequently is from time to time regulated by statutes, local, but so far public, by which certain dues are imposed. In the deed and in the statutes there are recitals that the pier and quay are built on waste ground of the manor. An Act is obtained to make a railway on the pier coming from a distant range of hills containing iron ore, which is intended to be shipped from the pier, and the tenant for life and devisees in trust of the last lord assent to such Act. The railway company endeavour to obtain a lease of the pier, there being a power in their Act for the devisees in trust of the last lord to grant such lease with the sanction of the Court of Chancery, which however the company fail to do, the Court on a reference and motion considering it not beneficial that such lease shall be granted. The company purchase land of the devisees down to the foot of the pier, and then, without notice to them or any other proceedings taken as to compensation or otherwise, enter on the pier, and are proceeding to make a railway thereon. A bill is filed, and an injunction moved for to restrain such works, on the ground that the company had no more right to enter upon the pier than upon the ground of any ordinary person without proceeding regularly under the Lands Clauses and Railway Clauses Acts; and that the effect would be to prevent the pier being made use of, as theretofore, for the mooring of vessels, etc. This motion is opposed by the company, who contend that the pier, being supported by public money, both by subscription and by the dues levied upon vessels, was thus dedicated to the public, and that thenceforward the lords of the manor ceased to be the owners of the soil, which was vested either in the Crown, in the Lords of the Admiralty, or in the lord as trustee for the public; that it was a highway, as it appeared that it had been used by the public on foot, in carts, etc., without toll being paid; and that under these circumstances the railway company had a right to do what they were doing:—Held, that, first, there was sufficient evidence, in ancient documents, by recital and otherwise, to show that the pier was built upon waste ground of the manor; secondly, that nothing had been done to divest the rights of the lord, and that his devisees were owners of the soil; thirdly, that it was not a highway, not being vested in any person or body of persons to regulate and keep it in repair; and that if it was a highway as between the lord and the public, yet as between the lord and the company they would be liable to an action for trespass, if they interfered with the use of the pier, which their works, if prosecuted, it clearly appeared would do. Injunction granted to restrain the company from entering without taking the necessary legal steps by notices and making compensation, but refused to restrain the laying down rails in a particular manner, there being nothing to show that they intended to proceed irregularly. Semble, a power to grant a lease prima facie implies ownership; and a dedication of land by the owner of the soil to public purposes does not prevent an encroaching stranger being liable to an action of trespass or ejectment. Thompson v. West Somerset Mineral Railway Co., 5 W. R. 296. [2783 (2).

HEIRS EXPECTANTS AND REVERSIONERS.

6. Before instituting a suit to set aside the sale of a reversion, the plaintiff offered very nearly the same terms, that were afterwards imposed by the decree:—Held, that the defendants, who had refused these terms, must pay the costs properly incurred up to the hearing. Nesbitt v. Berridge, 1 N. R. 345. [2796 (9)].

HONG KONG.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. When a marriage has been solemnised in a registrar's office in the presence of the registrar and deputy registrar, the presumption of law is that the requisites of the Statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85, s. 21, have been complied with. If it appeared from the evidence that such a marriage took place with closed doors, it would not on that account be held to be invalid, so as to disentitle the husband after the wife's death to have administration granted to him of her effects, a marriage so celebrated not being specified in the 42nd section of the statute as one that is null and void. Campbell v. Corley, 4 W. R. 675. [2813 (4)].

2. The testatrix gave the residue of her real and personal estate equally between her brother, her sister, and her "nephew W., and E. his wife" (E. being the niece of the testatrix)—Held, that the husband and wife took one share each, and not merely one share between them. Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare 54; 6 Jur. 872. [2842 (7)].

3. Bequest to A., his wife and children. There were three children:—Held (inter alia), that A. and his wife together were only entitled to one-fourth share. Acheson v. Acheson, 11 Beav. 483. See Dias v. De Livera, 5 L. R., App. C, 135, 136. [2842 (7)].

4. A married woman, entitled for her separate use, mortgaged her renewable leasehold estate as surety for her husband. The husband covenanted with the mortgagee to pay the money, and also gave him a judgment. The husband renewed the lease, and paid the fine. The lease was granted to the husband and wife, their executors, administrators, and assigns. The wife survived. The executor of the husband paid off the mortgage debt, and took an assignment of the mortgage. There were other creditors, and the estate was insolvent. In a creditor's suit against the executor of the husband, the wife made a claim to have her estate re-assigned to her, discharged of the mortgage debt and the renewal fine:—Held, that the husband's estate was solely liable for the mortgage debt; that the creditors of the husband had no right to marshal the assets, or to compel the mortgagee to resort to the wife's leaseholds; that the fine was not an advancement by the husband for the benefit of the wife; that the executor was an incumbrancer on the wife's leaseholds for the amount of the fine; and, subject to the payment of the fine, the wife's claim must be allowed. Eyton v. Broughton, 1 Eq. Rep. 164. [2858 (2)].

5. A married woman entitled to a reversionary interest in a fund had assigned her interest absolutely, and was resident abroad. Upon the fund coming into possession:—Held, that the assignee was entitled to payment, though the assignor was not before the Court. Hall v. Lys, 2 Eq. Rep. 42. [2872 (8)].

6. A small fund, the produce of a married woman's real estate, paid out of court without her appearance and consent. Re Clark's Estate, 5 N. R. 32. [2879 (5)].

7. A sum of money liable to be invested in land ordered to be paid out of court on the petition of the tenant for life, entitled for her separate use, and of the reversioner, a married woman. Re Edmeades, 1 N. R. 43. [2879 (5)].

8. A married woman, being entitled to a fund on attaining twenty-one, petitions for payment out to herself and her husband, a minor, for setting up a shop. The trustee of the will objects that it is a chose in action to be used in trade, and that the petition is entitled in the cause to which the infant husband is not a party:—Held, that with the consent of the wife, and through the instrumentality of the trustee, the order might, upon a special application for the purpose, be made. Banks v. Davies, 3 W. R. 47, 189; 3 Eq. Rep. 366. [2879 (5)].

9. On petition by a married woman, living separate from her husband (upon which service of the petition could not be effected), that a sum of stock to which she was entitled under a residuary bequest, and standing by order of the Court to the account of her husband and herself, might be paid to her:—Ordered that the stock be sold and the proceeds paid to the petitioner upon her separate receipt. Whitlow v. Dilworth, 2 W. R. 150; 2 Sm. & G. 35; 18 Jur. 415. [2879 (5)].

10. On application for payment of a sum belonging to a married woman, the affidavit in support of the application must either deny any settlement whatever, or, if it states a settlement purporting not to embrace the sum in question, such settlement must be produced in court for examination. Anon., 4 Jur. 5. [2881 (9)].

11. When an application is made to draw money out of court, which has been made the subject of a settlement, the settlement itself must be produced in court. Batt v. Cuthbertson, 3 Dr. & War. 58. [2881 (9)].

12. The affidavit, that there is no settlement affecting money in court, the property of the wife, must state that there is no settlement whatever of the money; and it is not sufficient to say, that there is no settlement, nor agreement for a settlement, upon the wife affecting the money in question. Lawrence v. Johnson, 7 Jur. 1122. [2881 (9)].

13. The Court will not settle the reversionary interest of a married woman in personal estate, but leave a supplemental bill to be filed if necessary. Adams v. Bennett, 2 W. R. 535. [2883 (12)].

14. An agreement to settle lands of such a value on wife, must be made up so much, and value proper to be settled by Master. Hodges v. Boerard, 1 Eq. Abr. 18. [2884 (17)].

1. A married woman, whose husband had been insolvent, became entitled to a sum of 200*l.*, and to the income of 400*l.* which was divisible after her death amongst her nine children. The Court settled the whole 200*l.* upon her, without giving any portion of it to her husband's assignee in insolvency. Re Hooper's Trusts, 6 W. R. 824. [2887 (6).]

2. An obligation to make a settlement on the wife and the issue, includes an obligation to make a settlement on the issue after the death of the wife. Prebble v. Boughurst, 1 Swan. 319; 1 Wils. 161. [2889 (10).]

3. By a post-nuptial settlement, a legacy of 600*l.*, belonging to the wife, was settled by husband and wife on the wife for life, for her separate use, with remainder to her children. At the time of the settlement the husband was insolvent:—Held, that the husband was entitled to one moiety of the legacy, and the other moiety was ordered to be paid to the trustees of the settlement. Re Wray's Trusts, 16 Jur. 1126. [2891 (8).]

4. Upon the petition of a married woman for a settlement of the whole of a small fund in court, including dower to which she was entitled in certain lands belonging to her husband, and sold under an order in his bankruptcy:—Held, that she was entitled to the whole fund in court, the only thing with which the Court could deal, paying the assignee's costs, who appeared. Bray v. Laycock, 2 W. R. 324; 2 Eq. Rep. 385. [2892 (11).]

5. Where there is a fund of 920*l.* in court belonging to a married woman, and her husband is already possessed of 1,500*l.* in her right, and has become insolvent, and swears that he does not make 50*l.* a year, the whole 920*l.* may be settled on the wife and children. Morgan v. Morgan, 2 W. R. 667; 2 Eq. Rep. 1270. [2892 (11).]

6. Out of 5,000*l.*, the property of a married woman, 2,500*l.* clear of all costs and expenses was directed to be settled upon her as against the assignees of the husband, who was an uncertificated bankrupt in prison and totally unable to provide for the support of his wife and four children. Lea v. Church, 3 W. R. 603. [2892 (11).]

7. A married woman joins her husband in assigning a sum of 465*l.* to which she was entitled in expectancy, for the benefit of his creditors. The husband, who had assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors, had no other means of support beyond his salary as shopman, and there were seven children of the marriage:—Held, that the creditors were entitled to 150*l.* of the 465*l.* free of costs, the remainder to be settled upon the wife. Gross v. Errington, 3 W. R. 382. [2892 (11).]

8. The whole of a fund of 1,000*l.* railway stock assigned to trustees upon trust to pay the dividends to a married woman for her life, for her absolute use and benefit, allowed to be retained against the assignee in insolvency of her husband. Koehn v. Sturgis, 4 W. R. 696. [2892 (11).]

9. Where a husband had deserted his wife, but maintained his children, the Court, in settling the wife's property, reserved liberty to him to apply after her death for payment of any part of the income to him during his life. Kernick v. Kernick, 4 N. R. 533.

10. The wife of a lunatic entitled to a share of residue of an intestate's personal estate, filed a bill against her husband, praying a settlement of the fund on herself and children. After inquiries in the lunacy, the committee was authorised to assent to a settlement of one-half of the fund; and, by an order made in the cause, it was referred to the Master to approve of a settlement. The Master accordingly approved of a settlement, by writing at the foot of the draft, and no further proceedings were had when the lunatic died. The wife subsequently died, having by will disposed of the entire fund:—Held, that the proposals in the Master's office had not been proceeded with to such a stage at the time of the lunatic's death as to preclude his wife from retiring from the proposed settlement; and the Court ordered the whole amount of the fund to be paid to the representatives of the wife. Baldwin v. Baldwin, 5 De G. & Sm. 319. [2895 (9).]

11. Where a lady who had separate property married, and an agreement was made that out of her income certain domestic expenses should be defrayed, and the agreement was acted upon until her lunacy, and the husband continued the same expenses out of her property till his death; and where the lady was under a moral obligation to give her nephew 500*l.*, part of which she gave, and a further part her husband, after her lunacy, paid out of her property; the Court allowed the executors of the husband to deduct all the money paid for keeping up the establishment after the lunacy till his death, and also the money paid by him to the nephew, before paying over the separate income of the wife to her committees. Re Hewson, 21 L. J., Ch., 825. [2898 (7).]

12. Residuary bequests to the "sole use and benefit" of a married woman:—Held, that she was entitled to receive the bequest to her separate use. Barnes v. Forsyth, 1 W. R. 142. [2899 (10).]

13. A testator gave certain property to trustees upon trust for his wife for life for her separate use, and after her death for her children. After the testator's death the widow married again. The trustees opened an account in their name at a banker's, to which they paid the produce of the trust property. The widow paid certain sums to this account from time to time out of her income. She died in the lifetime of her second husband, who claimed the sums paid in by his wife as her administrator:—Held, in the absence of express evidence of her intention, that the money was held by the trustees in trust for the children. Metcalf v. Fisher, 2 W. R. 326. [2906 (3).]

14. By an ante-nuptial settlement an annuity was assigned to trustees in trust to the lady for her sole and separate use for her life, with a provision that all savings arising from her income should be held by the trustees subject to her appointment, and in default of appointment, in trust for her next of kin. The lady died in May 1847, without having made any appointment, and the last payment to her, in respect of the annuity, had been made in the December preceding her death:—Held, that the portion of the annuity remaining in the hands of the trustees between the last payment to and the death of the lady constituted "savings out of income" within the meaning of the settlement, and that her administrator was not entitled to it as against the next of kin. Re Rosenthal's Settlement, 6 W. R. 139.

1. By settlement in 1831, upon the marriage of N. with F., an annuity previously secured by D. to N., together with all arrears thereon, was settled for the sole and separate use of N., the receipts of her, her appointees, and assigns alone to be good and effectual discharges for the annuity, and all arrears and all future and growing payments thereof. After the death of N., in trust to pay all arrears of the annuity unpaid or undisposed of at her death as she should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, upon trust to pay the same to three children of N. (who were named) as tenants in common. In 1847 the arrears of the annuity amounted to 3,000*l.* F. and N., and the trustee of the settlement, released D. from the annuity, and all arrears and future payments thereof, certain hereditaments being assigned by D. upon trust out of the proceeds, after satisfying a mortgage debt thereon, to pay to N., her executors or administrators, 3,000*l.* N. died intestate:—Held, that the 3,000*l.* arising from the proceeds of the hereditaments assigned by D. did not pass to N.'s children as arrears of the annuity undisposed of at her death under the settlement of 1831, but went to her husband. Calvert v. Johnston, 3 Kay & J. 556.

[2909 (11).]

2. A married woman having personal property under a will for life and absolutely, a settlement is made of it to her separate use without power of anticipation, with a power of appointment by deed. Without adverting to the clause against anticipation, and in alleged ignorance of its existence, she and her husband grant an annuity in consideration of 215*l.*, and an order is made for payment of the dividends of her separate property to the grantee to secure the annuity, and he receives the dividends and hands over the surplus from time to time. The clause against anticipation is then discovered, and the wife petitions for discharge of the order for payment of the dividends to the grantee of the annuity, for restitution of the money received, and for costs against the grantee and his solicitor:—Held, that the order must be discharged, and, the restitution not being pressed for, no order made upon that part of the petition, but costs given against the grantee, his solicitor, and her husband. Forty v. Reay, 3 W. R. 317.

[2922 (4).]

3. Where a married woman had property settled to her separate use for life, with a power of appointment over it, which she exercised by her will:—Held, that the appointment did not make the property appointed liable to her debts. Becher v. Major, 6 N. R. 351.

[2930 (3).]

4. By marriage settlement a fund was settled in trust as husband and wife should jointly appoint, but not so as to deprive themselves of the benefit thereof by charge or otherwise by way of anticipation. The fund was appointed to trustees to pay and divide the dividends equally between the husband and wife during their joint lives:—Held, that the appointment was valid and effectual, the husband and wife not having thereby deprived themselves of the benefit of the fund. Re Linzee's Settlement, 23 Beav. 241.

5. A fund was settled in trust for a married woman for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and she had a power of appointment by deed or will over the reversion. Her consent in writing was required to any change of the investments. Part of the fund was at her request improperly advanced upon a security which proved deficient. She concurred in the mortgage deed, and her execution of it was attested as required by the power:—Held, that she could maintain a suit to have the deficiency in the fund made good, and that the trustees had no claim to be indemnified out of the reversion subject to the power of appointment. In a suit to realise the deficient security, a fund was paid into court and invested, and then sold out at a profit:—Held, that the trustees were answerable only for the deficiency, after taking into account this profit. Fletcher v. Green, 3 N. R. 626.

INFANT.

6. Where a ward of court married without consent, and subsequently became entitled to property in the hands of the Court, the Court will order it to be carried to a separate account, and, with a view to save expense, may direct it to be inserted in the order that the fund shall be settled on the wife for her separate use. Thorp v. Owen, 2 W. R. 208; 2 Sm. & Gif. 90; 23 L. J., Ch., 286; 18 Jur. 641; 2 Eq. Rep. 392.

[2956 (5).]

7. The Court will give no direction as to dividends of separate property to which a ward of court is entitled, who is under age and has married without consent, until the husband has executed the settlement. Cator v. Mason, 2 W. R. 667.

[2960 (3).]

8. On the proposed marriage of the infant daughter of one who was non compos mentis, a petition was presented to the Lord Chancellor, under the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 17, for his consent, in order to obtain a license. The petition was referred to the Master; and the intended husband, by affidavit, stated that he had agreed to make a certain settlement. The Master reported in favour of the marriage, and the report was confirmed. The parties did not avail themselves of the consent of the Lord Chancellor, but shortly afterwards married, under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, without license:—Held, that the proposal laid before the Master amounted to a consent, which the Court would enforce. Cook v. Fryer, 1 Hare 498; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 284; 6 Jur. 479.

[2973 (2).]

9. By a marriage settlement, made whilst the intended wife was an infant, the husband covenanted to assign to trustees certain property to which she was entitled to her separate use:—Held, that the settlement was inoperative. Re Waring, 16 Jur. 652; 21 L. J., Ch., 784. [2975 (1).

1. Order made relieving the tenant of an infant's estate from payment of arrears of rent. Henniker v. Chafy, 3 W. R. 300. [2995 (4).

2. P. 2993 (13), for Exp. Smith read Exp. Swift.

3. The Court will not give a direct benefit out of an infant's income to his father. Re Stables, 21 L. J., Ch., 620. [2996 (15).

A scheme by which an infant (whose father was living) was to be articulated to a solicitor, and to live with an uncle residing in the same place, was approved of by the Court; and the uncle was appointed to act in the nature of a guardian to the infant, and to have an allowance out of his income. An application that an allowance might be made to the father, who lived at a distance, and was in very narrow circumstances, was refused. Id.

4. The Court has no right to interfere with the course adopted for the education of an infant of tender years by a father who has not misconducted himself. Accordingly, where a husband and wife have been separated through the misconduct of the wife only, her petition for access to her infant child was dismissed, the Court being of opinion that such access would interfere with the course of education approved of by the father. Re W——, 5 N. R. 363. [2979 (7).

5. Right of mother to custody of or access to child under seven years of age, 2 & 3 Vict., c. 54. Re Woodward, 1 W. R. 59; 17 Jur. 56. [2981 (5).

6. A legacy of 10*l.* to an infant for mourning may be directed, by the decree on further directions, to be paid to the father, he undertaking to apply it for the benefit of the infant. Ker v. Ruston, 16 Jur. 491. [2989 (8).

7. Order made upon petition, that executors should be at liberty to apply certain small sums, part of the capital of the residuary shares bequeathed by a father to his infant children, towards their maintenance, education, and advancement, though the shares did not vest till the children came of age. Exp. Chambers, 1 Russ. & M 537. [2992 (9).

8. A fund was limited to children to vest at twenty-one. The income of their prospective shares to be applied for their maintenance at the discretion of the trustees. These children become entitled to certain annuities from the Bengal Military Orphan Society, during their respective minorities, on the condition of payment to the treasurer of all their property; to be dealt with according to the rules of the society. The Vice-Chancellor appointed the mother the sole guardian of her children, and directed the income of the infant children's respective shares to be paid to her, with liberty to her to pay the same to the treasurer of the society. Re Osborne's Settlement, 2 W. R. 85. [2992 (9).

9. A widow, on the death of her husband, entered into possession of the small real and personal property he had left, and out of its rents, and by carrying on his trade, maintained herself and his five infant children, the three eldest of whom were his children by a former marriage. Shortly after the husband's death, a bill was filed in the names of all the children by the maternal grandfather of the three eldest, as their next friend, for a declaration of the rights of the infants and for accounts, and the appointment of guardians and of a receiver. The infant plaintiffs, by their next friend, presented a petition in the cause, containing imputations against the widow of improper treatment by her of the infants, and asking the appointment of guardians, and of a receiver. The Court directed a reference to the Master, who by his report approved of the widow and her co-executor as the guardians of all the children, and found that the whole income ought to be allowed for their maintenance. The Court, on petition, confirmed this report, and directed that the receiver should pay all the income of the property to the widow for the maintenance of the children, thereby leaving all parties just in the same position as they had been in before the suit was instituted; and the costs of all the proceedings were ordered to be paid by the next friend, and all further proceedings were stayed until further order. Anderton v. Yates, 5 De G. & Sm. 202. [3001 (4).

INJUNCTION.

10. The Court will not interfere to restrain future acts of a wrongdoer, unless it is plain that they will be of a wrongful nature. Aldebert v. Leaf, 3 N. R. 455. [3008 (7).

11. If it appears that there has been unnecessary delay, an interim injunction only will be granted. Carew v. Yates, 1 W. R. 11. [3010 (1).

12. An injunction to stay a trial at law will not be granted on the eve of the trial, where there has been delay on the part of the plaintiff in equity in making the application: but the lapse of time before the application is made is not an objection to granting it, if the trial be not near. Holme v. Brown, 9 Hare (App) xxix. [3010 (1).

13. The Court will not grant relief by injunction where there has been, for a considerable time, a violation of the agreement in respect of which relief is sought, both by plaintiff and defendant. Sheard v. Webb, 2 W. R. 343. [3010 (1).

14. The word "trial," in an order to extend the common injunction, means the trial of an issue of fact, and not of a question of law raised by the demurrer. Love v. Faulkner, 16 Sim. 250. [3031 (14).

15. Common injunction which had been obtained under the old practice extended under the new on the application of the plaintiff. Horne v. Brown, 1 W. R. 5. S. C. nom. Holme v. Brown, 9 Hare (App) xxix. [3031 (14).

16. In a suit for the cancellation of a deed on the ground of fraud, and for an injunction to restrain an action on an agreement contained in the deed, where the evidence was insufficient to enable the Court to decide the question of fraud, and that question was raised by the pleadings in the action, the Court refused to restrain the defendant from proceeding in the action to verdict and judgment, but did restrain him from suing out execution thereon, and from otherwise acting upon the deed until further order. Leader v. McEwen, 2 N. R. 474. [3032 (10).]

1. T. was sued at law on a promissory note, in which he had joined as surety for a third party. He pleaded an equitable plea on which issue was taken, and the action was tried on the 29th May, when a verdict was found against T. On the 6th June, before judgment was signed, T. filed a bill to restrain the proceedings at law on the same equitable grounds as he had pleaded at law, and on the 12th June moved for an injunction, which was refused by the Vice-Chancellor. On the 15th June the plaintiff at law signed judgment, and afterwards T. gave notice of appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor:—Held, that under the circumstances T. had elected to rest on his defence at law, and that judgment having been signed he could have no relief in equity. Terrell v. Higgs, 5 W. R. 746. [3033 (2).]

2. The Court is not compelled by the Chancery Regulation Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 42), to take upon itself the decision of a question which is involved in a pending action at law, even though there should be matter open between the parties which can only be decided in a court of equity. Curteis v. Carter, 3 N. R. 60. [3035 (2).]

3. A plaintiff is entitled to an injunction to restrain the use of an inequitable plea to his action at law, although the facts establishing its inequitable nature would form a sufficient answer to the plea at law. The Common Law Procedure Act 1851 has not affected the jurisdiction of the Courts of Equity by allowing equitable matters to be pleaded at law. In an action to recover damages for injuries sustained in a railway accident, the railway company pleaded a discharge by the plaintiffs, whereupon the plaintiffs filed a bill, alleging that the discharge was obtained by fraud, and seeking to restrain the use of it at law:—Held, that they were entitled to an injunction. Stewart v. Great Western Railway Co., 6 N. R. 325. [3035 (2).]

4. Under the common order to elect between proceedings at law and in equity, the plaintiff's action was stayed by injunction. The plaintiff having subsequently obtained a decree for specific performance, liberty was given to the defendant to take such proceedings for the recovery of the costs of the action at law as he should be advised, notwithstanding the injunction. Simpson v. Sadd, 3 W. R. 191; 24 L. T. 285. [3035 (2).]

5. Injunction to restrain action at law refused before interrogatories are filed. Lovell v. Galloway, 1 W. R. 118. [3036 (10).]

6. A lessee of a mill desires to surrender the lease, and certain terms are agreed upon, money paid by the lessee, and the lessors enter and repair. After four years the lessors sue the lessee at law for rent from the time of the surrender, on the ground that the agreement was not final. The lessee pleads under the Common Law Procedure Act that there is not a good equitable defence, but the plea is disallowed and a bill filed to restrain the action. On motion for an injunction:—Held, that the plaintiff might have an injunction until the hearing, on paying into court the amount for which he was sued. Magnay v. Mines Royal, 3 W. R. 258; 3 Drew 130. 24 L. J., Ch., 413; 1 Jur., N. S., 153; 3 Eq. Rep. 377. [3038 (8).]

7. A mining company, admitting the forfeiture of their lease at law, sought relief in equity, on the ground of accidental stoppage of works, substituted performance of certain covenants, and implied acquiescence on the part of the lessor's agent. There appearing reasonable grounds for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction, an interim injunction was granted, the plaintiffs undertaking to abide by any order the Court might make at the hearing, and to allow judgment to go at law. North Stafford Steel, Iron, and Coal Co. (Burslem) v. Camdons (Lord), 6 N. R. 345. [3040 (7).]

8. On motion for an injunction to restrain an action of ejectment, the injunction was granted on an undertaking that judgment being allowed to go in the action, such judgment should be dealt with as this Court should direct. The plaintiff at law then brought an action of trover for the fixtures, and sought to use the judgment as conclusive evidence of his legal title. Upon motion for an injunction to restrain such use of the judgment, motion refused with costs. Semble, a judgment allowed to be taken on the terms of an injunction being granted and to be dealt with by this Court, is not given de bene esse, but on admission of legal title. Weeks v. Taylor, 3 W. R. 47. [3040 (7).]

9. After service of subpoena, and the appearance of a defendant, a motion for an injunction cannot be made ex parte. Langham v. Great Northern Railway Co., 1 De G. & Sm 186. And see 8 C. 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 437; 11 Jur. 839. [3043 (18).]

10. Service of notice of motion for an injunction to restrain execution on a judgment obtained in an action at law, on the housekeeper to the persons who were the defendants' attorneys in that action, is insufficient. Where the order obtained on such motion stated that it was made on notice to the defendants, they should move to discharge such order, and not to dissolve the injunction. Angier v. May, 3 W. R. 330; 3 Eq. Rep. 468. [3043 (22).]

11. The Court will grant an ad interim injunction on the application of a plaintiff out of its jurisdiction, notwithstanding he has filed no affidavit in support of his bill. Llamilton v. Board, 1 N. R. 379. [3044 (16).]

12. At the hearing an injunction may be granted, although not prayed for by the will. Reynell v. Sprye, 1 De G. M. & G. 660; 21 L. J., Ch., 633. [3046 (9).]

13. A party seeking relief by injunction must state in his bill the whole of the agreement in respect of which he seeks relief. Sheard v. Webb, 2 W. R. 343. [3048 (16).]

14. Where a bill is filed by some "on behalf, etc.," an injunction which restrains proceedings against persons not named parties to the record, is irregular, per the Lord Chancellor. Armistead v. Durham, 11 Beav. 556; 13 Jur. 330. [3052 (14).]

15. Where it is desired that the writ of injunction should not actually issue, the terms of the order should be that the defendant "be restrained," not that "an injunction be awarded to restrain" him. Goldsmid v. Croft, 4 W. R. 450. [3052 (14).

1. An answer was filed on Saturday, and an order nisi to dissolve the injunction obtained the same day. Notice of filing the answer and of the order was not given till Monday. Upon motion to discharge the order nisi, the Court, finding that the plaintiff had not been prejudiced, refused to discharge it, but made the defendant pay the costs. Suffield (Lord) v. Bond, 10 Beav. 331. [3060 (3).

2. On showing cause on merits why common injunction should not be dissolved, the common injunction having been obtained under the old practice, affidavits cannot be read in opposition to the answer. Lancaster v. Lancaster, 1 W. R. 92. [3030 (14).

INSURANCE.

3. A company which carries on two different kinds of business under two separate departments—e.g., the dealing with annuities, and the insuring of lives—is nevertheless one company; so that one department of it cannot enter into contracts with the other. Grey v. Ellison, 4 W. R. 497; 2 Jur., N. S., 511. [3078 (6).

4. Where policies are effected by the manager and secretary of one assurance society in the office of another, being a mutual assurance society, although such policy is expressed to be effected "for and on behalf of the society," the secretary alone is thereby constituted a member, by reason of the sum secured being payable to him and "his successors in office." Where directors of one assurance society have power to effect cross insurances in the office of another, if they do so in a mutual assurance office, that does not constitute their society a member, being ultra vires. The ordinary rules as to principal and agent do not apply to a case where the contract is ultra vires, and the society contracting with such agent must be taken to have constructive notice of such contract being ultra vires. Re Security Mutual Life Assurance Society, Ex p. Athenæum Life Assurance Society (Official Manager), 6 W. R. 431; 1 L. T., N. S., 94. [3078 (6).

5. One of the conditions indorsed on a policy of insurance was, that no insurance would be held in force until the premium should have been actually paid to the company, nor would any policy be valid beyond fifteen days after the expiration of any year unless the premium for its renewal should have been paid to the company. Insurances might be renewed within three months on satisfactory proof of the health of the life insured. In the printed directions of the company to their agents every life policy was to be renewed within fifteen days after the premium became due; and if any policy was not renewed within fifteen days the agent was to give notice thereof to the secretary, and the policy could not afterwards be renewed without a fine and subject to the conditions of the company; and all receipts for the renewal of life policies not paid within a month from the expiration of the policies were to be returned at the end of that period. A policy was effected with an agent of the company, who, to accommodate the insured, took bills for the amount of the several premiums, debiting himself with the amount of the premiums in his accounts with the company without communicating the transaction to the company. The bills not having been paid he took a security for them. A subsequent premium having accrued due in December 1846, the usual receipt in blank for the premium was forwarded to the agent. The premium was not paid, nor did the agent at the time it was due debit himself with the premium by any entry in a book or account; but in his next quarterly account in March 1847 he debited himself therewith, and shortly afterwards paid the account at the request of the treasurer without communicating to the company. Similar transactions took place in 1847 and 1848; the life died in 1849. The receipts for the premiums still in blank were handed back to the company. Shortly afterwards a correspondence took place between the secretary of the company and the agent, the agent claiming the amount of the policy; but as he had no assignment nor possession of the policy the company declined to pay unless the insurer joined in the receipt for the amount; and a report was prepared by the solicitor of the company and sent to the agent, suggesting that he or that the agent should proceed against the insurer to ascertain their relative rights. The insurer having declined to join in the receipt the company refused to give credit for the amount of the insurance against the balance by the agent, for which they brought an action, and recovered a verdict without giving credit for the three premiums of the disputed policy paid by the agent. The amount was demanded and paid by the agent to the company:—Held, first, that the policy had dropped:—Held, secondly, that the forfeiture of the policy was not waived by the report and correspondence relating to it. Semble, the retention of the premiums with knowledge of all the facts did not constitute a new contract to set up the policy, but the Court directed an action to be brought to try the question:—Held, thirdly, that supposing the policy to be set up by retention of the premiums, the agent had a lien on the policy enforceable in equity for the amount of them. Busted v. West of England Fire and Life Assurance Co., 5 Ir. Ch. R. 553. [3100 (4).

INTERPLEADER.

1. Where a bill of interpleader stated a case for relief as between two of the defendants, but also set up the claim of a third, which was paramount and adverse to the claims of the two others:—Held, that although this last claim might be one which could not support the bill, the introduction of it did not expose the bill to a successful demurrer on the part of one of the first-named defendants. Farebrother v. Beale, 3 De G. & Sm. 637; 14 Jur. 215; 19 L. J., Ch., 149.

2. A., having a claim to certain property in India, agreed with B. that B. should undertake the trouble and expense of recovering it, and that if successful he should receive half the value of the property recovered. Afterwards, A.'s title having been established, A., with B.'s concurrence, sent a power of attorney to C. to receive the money with instructions to remit it to England. C. accordingly received the money and transmitted a bill of exchange for the amount to his agent in England. A. having refused to perform the agreement, B. filed a bill against him, and A. brought an action at law against C. for the amount of the bill. C. thereupon filed a bill of interpleader against A. and B.:—Held, that C. having become possessed of the property solely as A.'s agent, it was not a proper case for interpleader, and the Court refused to allow C. a lien for his costs on the fund. Watts v. Hammond, 3 W. R. 312; 3 Eq. Rep. 641.

3. When two parties claim a right to a vessel which has been sold, and part of the proceeds is in the hands of a third party, in the form of a bill of exchange, that is a case for interpleader. Gibbs v. Gibbs, 6 W. R. 415.

4. Arrear of rent claimed by sequestrators, and a promissory note which had been given for the same arrear of rent put in suit by the defendant. Order obtained upon motion by the tenant in the cause without form, and to lodge in court expense of bill of interpleader. Crone v. O'Dell, 2 Moll. 348.

[3130 (7).]

5. An interpleader bill cannot be filed without an affidavit by all the plaintiffs as to no collusion, unless a satisfactory reason can be given why some of the plaintiffs have not joined in such affidavit. Gibbs v. Gibbs, 5 W. R. 243.

[3131 (12).]

JOINT TENANTS.

6. A fund settled on the husband and wife "during their joint and natural lives":—Held, to be construed "during their joint lives, and the life of each of them." Smith v. Oakes, 14 Sim. 122.

[3158 (8).]

7. Lands are settled to the use of the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs of both their bodies. The children of this marriage are joint tenants, and if any one dies before severance, his share shall survive to the others. There is nothing hard, severe, or unreasonable in the law of joint tenancy, there being always an equal chance of survivorship in all the joint tenants. If any of them have a bad opinion of their own lives, they may sever; but if the joint tenancy be not severed, it is an evidence of intention in the party to submit to the chance of survivorship, or of that supineness and neglect to which the law affords no assistance. Staples v. Maurice, 4 Bro. P. C. 590.

JOINTURE.

9. A jointress had her own part of the marriage settlement in her custody, and became possessed of her husband's as his executrix; on motion, she was ordered to produce it to the clerk in court, but not to deliver it up, that being the very end of the bill. Aston v. Aston, 3 Atk. 302.

A jointress or purchaser ought to produce their deed, to see if the lands they claim are comprised therein. Id.

JUDGMENT.

10. Where a testator devised a mortgage debt of 10,000*l.* secured on estates of H. in Ireland, and it appeared that the mortgage debt was 6,781*l.* only, but that H. also owed the testator 771*l.* on an Irish judgment.—Held, that if the judgment were registered against the estates under 13 & 14 Vict., c. 29, ss. 6, 7, it was included in the bequest. Puxley v. Puxley, 1 N. R. 509; 8 L. T., N. S., 570.

11. An insolvent (under 7 Geo. 4, c. 57) assigns all present and future property to assignees, and executes a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment, which is not done. The insolvent died, being entitled to certain leaseholds; on bill filed by his representative:—Held, that the judgment not having been entered up, the plaintiff, and not the assignees, was entitled. Holsgrove v. Hedges, 3 W. R. 94; 3 Drew. 74; 24 L. J., Ch., 456.

12. Bond and judgment assigned, interest must be calculated to the date of the report, so as not to exceed the penalty. Sharpe v. Scarborough (Earl), 3 Ves. 557.

13. Interest on the amount recovered was granted only from the date of the decree, as the bill contained no prayer for damages. Harvey v. Beckwith, 4 N. R. 90.

14. Where an inquiry was directed to be made in chambers as to the amount of premium to be returned to one partner on a dissolution of partnership, and a certain amount was certified by the chief clerk, whose certificate was afterwards confirmed by the judge and the Court of Appeal, interest on the amount was directed to be paid from the date of the certificate. Brewer v. Yorke, 46 L. T. 289. [3192 (16).]

1. Under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, a judgment is a security upon land as if the debtor had by writing agreed to charge his lands, independent of the intention of the parties. Semble, before 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, a judgment creditor by elegit could get possession of lands and the debtor could not withdraw them, but a judgment was not properly a security upon land. Bond v. Bell, 6 W. R. 163; 26 L. J., Ch., 233; 3 Jur., N. S., 1290. [3200 (12).]

2. On a petition, under the 27 & 28 Vict., c. 112, for the sale of the lands of a judgment-debtor, it was prayed that "all such inquiries and accounts might be directed to be made and taken as to the nature and particulars of the debtor's interest in such lands, and her title thereto, as might appear to be necessary and proper," etc.:—Ordered, that these general accounts and inquiries be omitted, and those only retained which were specifically asked for. Emp. Clark, 6 N. R. 335. [3217 (2).]

3. Under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, judgment debts not registered as required by 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110 and subsequent Acts have no priority in the administration of assets over simple contract debts. The rule is the same with regard to a County Court judgment. Walter v. Turner, 3 N. R. 413. [3234 (10).]

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

4. Bill for specific performance dismissed with costs, where the agreement had been procured by the plaintiff under circumstances of great suspicion. A., B., and C., being jointly interested in certain property, A. contracts with B. to take a lease of the whole of it; and the contract expresses that B. is to be bound by the contract, only so far as it is to be performed by him; but that A. is to be answerable to B., even for what is to be done by C.:—Held, that B. will not be precluded from enforcing the contract against A., by the circumstance that C. has taken proceedings in a court of equity, which deprive A. of that possession and enjoyment of the property, the subject of the contract, which it was the purport of the contract to give him: nor by the circumstance that B., A. having declared his resolution not to perform the agreement, has supported C. in some of the applications which he has made, tending to interfere with A.'s enjoyment and possession of the property. — v. Ogden, 5 L. J., Ch., 104. [3285 (1).]

5. A. B. offered in writing to grant a lease of a coal mine upon certain terms. C. D. verbally accepted the offer. A draft lease was sent to him, and returned with the approval of C. D.'s solicitor. C. D. laid out money in driving shafts towards the coal mine through the adjoining property. Before any lease was executed, and something more than a month after the return of the draft lease, A. B. died:—Held, that the parol acceptance of the written offer of the lessor, coupled with the subsequent acts in the lifetime of A. B., entitled C. D. to specific performance of the agreement from the representatives of A. B. Benecke v. Chadwick, 4 W. R. 687. [3297 (13).]

6. Agreement to grant a lease for twenty-one years of a house in H. Place, according to proposals, by which it was stipulated, that the lease should contain a covenant by the lessor not to let land near H. Place for the purpose of making or burning bricks; and that the lease should be in the form of one to be inspected at the office of the lessor's solicitor. The form of lease referred to contained a covenant by the lessor not to let land near H. Place, for the purpose of making or burning bricks, during the term of twenty-one years, if the lessor should so long live; and it turned out, on inspection of the abstract of the lessor's title, that the lessor was only tenant for life of land near H. Place, and unable to bind his successors in the ownership by the covenant not to let:—Held, on exception to the Master's report (finding in favour of the plaintiff's title to grant the lease in a suit by the lessor for specific performance), that this fact, under all the circumstances of the case, formed no ground for resisting the performance of the contract. Daves v. Betts, 12 Jur. 709. [3302 (8).]

Semble, that the objection was not one which could be rightly taken on a reference to the Master as to title. Id.

The plaintiff was tenant for life in possession, with power of leasing, of certain premises, subject to a mortgage charge in trustees. The trusts of the mortgage were for the plaintiff and wife, for their respective lives, with remainder to their unborn children. To enable the plaintiff to grant a lease of a portion of the property in mortgage, the trustees and the plaintiff and the wife (as cestuis que trustent) joined in releasing that portion from the mortgage; and the plaintiff thereupon agreed to grant a beneficial lease, under the power, of such portion to the defendant. Upon an objection being taken, in a suit for specific performance, to the title to grant a lease, on the ground that the release of the mortgage would be inoperative as against the wife and ulterior cestuis que trustent:—Held, that whether this was or was not a breach of trust on the part of the trustees (there being no legal title by which the position of the lessee could be affected), a court of equity would, under no circumstances, interfere with the title of the lessee, and that, therefore, the objection could not be supported. Id.

7. P. 3308, after par. (3), add reference S. C. nom. Thorpe v. Milligan, 5 W. R. 336.

8. The lessee of a house in the Strand contracted to grant an underlease to the defendant. The lease contained a covenant not to exercise any obnoxious trade. In the absence of evidence of express notice of the covenant:—Held, that notice of the existence of the lease did not imply notice of the contents of the lease, except of usual covenants; and that the covenant in restraint of trade was not a usual covenant. Wilbraham v. Livesey, 2 W. R. 281. [3308 (4).]

Execution of Counterpart.] 9. In the absence of any stipulation to that effect, the lessor is not entitled to insist upon witnessing by himself or his agent the execution of the counterpart of the lease by the lessee; and in a suit by the lessee to enforce specific performance of the agreement for a lease, the lessor ordered to pay the costs of the suit occasioned by his refusal to execute the lease, unless the execution of the counterpart was attested by his agent. Borradale v. Smart, 5 W. R. 270. [3311 (1).

1. Agreement for lease of factory, with engines, gas-houses, and appurtenants, to contain usual covenants.—Held, that the lease properly added the words "gas works," though the retorts and other gas works had been erected by the tenant when in occupation before the agreement. Thorpe v. Milligan, 5 W. R. 336. [3314 (3).

2. Under a covenant to renew a lease, there being no clause of re-entry the lessor cannot refuse to renew upon the ground of breach of covenant unless there has been a gross breach. Semble, the breach must not only be gross but wilful. Hare v. Burges, 5 W. R. 585. [3325 (11).

3. The Court refuses to relieve lessees against the legal consequences of breaches of covenant as well in cases which rest in contract, as where the legal relation between the parties is fully established. Gregory v. Wilson, 9 Hare 683; 16 Jur. 304. [3337 (5).

Neither in cases of accidental neglect to perform the covenants to repair, nor in case of wilful or obstinate breaches of such covenants, will the Court relieve the tenant against the consequences of the breach. Id.

A tenant is not absolved from the performance of the covenants of his lease by a notice to quit; such notice ought rather to be regarded as a notice to be more vigilant in the performance of the covenant. Id.

The fact of there being no personal representative of a lessee on whom the duty of performing the covenants of the lease has devolved, cannot be set up against the landlord. Id.

It must be a strong case of equity created by a landlord against himself to control his legal right. Id.

Covenants to repair after notice considered as distinct covenants. Id., 9 Hare 690; 16 Jur. 304.

4. A lessee of land covenanted to build thereon two houses, with the approbation and under the inspection of the lessor's surveyor, and to expend in such building 400*l.* With the surveyor's approbation he built five houses on the land, no two of which were worth so much as 400*l.*, though all together were worth much more.—Held, that the covenant was substantially performed, and that there was no objection, on the ground of the deviation from its terms, under the circumstances, to the lessor's title. Hume v. Bentley, 16 Jur. 1109; 21 L. J., Ch. 760. [3354 (3).

5. A. B. leases to C. D. the T. ferry and all the rights of shore thereunto appertaining, with a covenant by A. D. not to erect any building upon the ferry or landing place without the consent in writing of A. B. C. D., upon obtaining verbal permission from A. B., commenced building a bridge upon the foreshore; and subsequently, in January 1852, executes a deed tendered to him by A. B.'s solicitor, acknowledging, in consideration of permission to complete the bridge, the right to insist upon its removal, and agreeing to pay C. D. the yearly rent of 20*l.* for the concession, and 500*l.* on failure to remove the bridge after notice. C. D. subsequently discovers that the title to the foreshore upon which the bridge is built is claimed by the Crown—a circumstance in the knowledge of A. B. in January 1852—obtains a lease of the soil from the Crown, but continues to pay rent to both A. B. and the Crown. Upon notice from A. B. to remove the bridge, and action brought for the 500*l.* penalty accruing from noncompliance, C. D. files a bill against A. B. to set aside the deed of January 1852, for an account of the rent paid, and in restraint of the action:—Held, upon demurrer, that C. D. being in possession either under the original lease or the deed of 1852, could not set aside that contract without also giving up possession; and that in order to retain possession, he could not set up the adverse title of the Crown. The bill containing no offer to restore the property to A. B., demurrer allowed. Willoughby v. Chamberlaine, 5 W. R. 328. [3377 (9).

LANDS CLAUSES ACT.

7. The Court will not take into consideration the possibility of a public company hereafter obtaining extended parliamentary powers. Great Western Railway Co. v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 1 N. R. 551. [3382 (2).

8. On an application for a mandamus against a railway company, by a landowner, over whose land the line was authorised to be made, but to whom no notice had been given by the company requiring his land, to complete the line, and to purchase the necessary land for that purpose:—Held, that it was no answer to the rule, that the prescribed period for the compulsory purchase of the necessary land had nearly expired, if there was still a period during which the company might take the requisite initiatory steps. Reg. v. York, Newcastle, & Berwick Railway Co., 6 Rail. Ca. 648. S. P. Reg. v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 6 Rail. Ca. 654. [3385 (5).

Semble, the obtaining a private Act of Parliament enabling parties to execute railway works, creates an obligation on the parties to complete them. Id.

9. The 8 Vict., c. 18, s. 123, enacts, "that the powers of the promoters of the undertaking for the compulsory purchase or taking of land, for the purposes of the special Act, shall not be exercised after the expiration of the prescribed period," etc.—Held, that this limitation did not apply against a landowner, who, having within the prescribed period received a notice that his land was required by the promoters, and having within that period regularly served them with a notice that he required the amount of compensation to be determined by a jury, and, wishing to complete the sale of his land, applies for a mandamus to compel the company to issue a warrant for summoning a jury; that, in such case, the powers that the landowner wished to be exercised, were not "powers of the promoters of the undertaking for the compulsory purchase or taking of land" within the above section. Reg. v. Birmingham & Oxford Junction Railway Co., 6 Rail. Ca. 628.

1. The owner of houses, which were liable to be taken for making a railway under an Act of Parliament, received notice under the 15th section of the 8 Vict., c. 18, from the promoters, that they would be required for the railway, and the company demanded the particulars of his interest therein, and stated their willingness to purchase. The particulars were furnished by the landowner, and £5000. was claimed as compensation for taking the property, and he required payment thereof, or that a warrant should be issued by the company to summon a jury to assess the amount. The company took no further step in the matter:—Held, that the landowner could not maintain an action to recover the £5000. Burkinshaw v. Birmingham & Oxford Junction Railway Co., 6 Rail. Ca. 600.

2. A railway company were empowered to take land for the purposes of their Acts:—Held, that the Court would not go beyond the affidavit of the engineer of the company, which stated the specific purposes for which the land was wanted. *Flower v. R. 634. See also Subdivision, XVI. 1, page 3484. [3464 (9).]

3. A petition, under the Trustee Act 1850, stated that A. had mortgaged lands to B. in fee; that B. had died, having by his will devised his lands to infants, and appointed C. his executor; that a contract had been entered into by C. with a railway company for a sale of a part of the lands at a certain price, and that, for the purpose of carrying out the contract, it was necessary to get in the legal estate. The petition prayed that the legal estate might be vested in C., and that the railway company might pay the costs of the petition. The railway appeared at the hearing, but objected to pay the costs:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make any order either in favour of, or against, the company. Re Rees' Devises, 21 L. J., Ch., 687. [3465 (6).]

4. Land having been taken by a railway company from the transferee of a deceased mortgagee whose heir at law could not be discovered:—Held, that the company were bound to pay the costs of a petition by the vendor, for the appointment of a person to convey to the company in the place of the heir at law of the deceased mortgagee. Re Nash's Estate, 4 W. 5. "A." tenant for life of certain leaseholds, part of which are taken by a railway company. The compensation money is paid into court, and afterwards invested, and the dividends ordered to be paid to A. for life. The lease expires in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that A. is entitled to the whole of the compensation money and the dividends thereon. Costs of all parties out of the fund. Re Oxford, Worcester,

& Wolverhampton Railway Co., Re Beaufoy's Trusts, 1 W. R. 14. [3466 (10).]

6. Money has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act in respect of land purchased by a railway company. The tenant for life, who is plaintiff in a suit instituted for the purpose of raising certain legacies and charges upon the estate by sale of a portion thereof, petitions that the money be transferred to the credit of the cause to meet pro tanto the charges:—Held, that the company were bound to pay the costs of the petition only, and not the costs of the defendants to the suit interested in the charges who had been served and appeared upon the petition. Re Picton's Estate, 3 W. R. 327. [3467 (9).]

7. H., by will, gave his personalty to his wife, and all his real estate by description for the maintenance of herself and his three children, until his son G. attained twenty-one, when he gave him certain portions of the property charged with an allowance to his (testator's) wife; to his son H., when twenty-one, certain portions on the same condition; and to his daughter E., at twenty-one, certain portions; as to some to the wife for life, and at her decease to the daughter absolutely. If G. died without issue, then H. to possess the property; and if H. died before G. without issue, then G. to have H.'s property. If E. died without issue, her property to be equally divided between her brothers or the survivor; but if she survived them and they left no issue, then she to have all the property. But if the wife survived all the children, to her for life; remainder to his (the testator's) nephews and nieces equally. If there should be an after-born child which survived G. and H., they leaving no issue, the whole to such child; and if such child died without issue, to the wife for life, as if there had been only three children. Testator left four children, one after-born, and nephews and nieces. G. died an infant and unmarried; and on petition by H. to have certain money paid into court by a railway company, paid out to him, ordered accordingly; and held, that the wife took a life estate until eldest son attained twenty-one, and that there were three estates tail successively, and H. was now tenant in tail. The after-born child presented a counter-petition, which was dismissed with costs as against the company; but the costs of the daughter and H. appearing separately:—Held, not costs occasioned by adverse claimants. Re Hinks's Estate, 2 W. R. 108. [3470 (13).]

8. Land devised in trust for sale in an administration suit, is taken by a railway company, and the purchase money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act. Upon a petition by a mortgagee of the land, entitled to one-tenth of the proceeds of sale, for transfer of the fund in Court from the account of the company to the credit of the cause:—Held, that it was a payment out within the meaning of the Act, but that the company was not liable to pay the costs of the parties to the suit appearing separately, inasmuch as they should have been made co-petitioners. The trustees and the petitioners were entitled, however, to appear and have their costs against the company, but the costs of the other parties must be costs in the cause. Melling v. Bird.

1. The dividends arising from the purchase money of lands purchased by a railway company from the trustees of a school, had been ordered to be paid to the then trustees; subsequently new trustees were appointed. On a petition for payment of the dividends to the new trustees, no order was made upon the company for payment of costs. Re Andenshaw School, 1 N. R. 255. [3475 (6).]

2. Where lands settled in the same manner have been purchased by different railway companies, and the purchase moneys paid into court and invested, and the tenant for life afterwards dies, the orders directing payment of the dividends of the several funds to the person next entitled may all be obtained upon the same petition; and the railway companies will not in future be required to pay the costs of more than one petition. The point being a new one, the petitioner was not deprived of his additional costs out of pocket. Re Broke's (Lord's) Estate, 1 N. R. 568. [3475 (6).]

3. Costs of a petition for payment of dividends on interim investment must be paid by the company, although the petition was rendered necessary by a defective order on a former petition, such order having been made in the presence of the company. Re Goe's Estate, 3 W. R. 119. [3475 (6).]

4. Where land is purchased of a party seised in fee, by a railway company, and the money paid into court, and he dies leaving his real estate charged with legacies, upon the usual petition for payment out of court the costs of the legatees must be paid by the petitioners. *Exp. 5. The Commissioners of Sewers for the purposes of their Act took lands belonging to a charity, and provided other lands in substitution:—Held, that the charity was entitled to its costs of the enrolment, under the Statute of Mortmain, of the conveyance of the substituted lands. Semble, the conveyance would be void unless enrolled. Exp. Christ's Hospital (Governors), 4 N. R. 14. [3479 (1).]

6. By a railway Act a company was empowered to take lands belonging to a vicarage; and it was declared that the purchase money should be paid into court, and that, on a petition by the vicar and patron, and with the consent of the ordinary of the diocese, it might be laid out in the purchase of other lands. A purchase was made accordingly:—Held, that the bishop was entitled to be paid by the company, not only the costs of his attendance in the Master's office, but also of his appearances on the petitions to the Court for a reference and confirmation of the Master's report. Exp. Creech St. Michael (Vicar), 21 L. J., Ch., 677. [3479 (1).]

7. Railway purchase money being paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, charity lands are contracted for as an investment, the usual reference is made, and a petition under Sir Samuel Romilly's Act being necessary, the owner of the money agrees with the charity trustees to pay those costs, and, on a petition to confirm the purchase, asks for such costs against the company:—Held, that he was not entitled. Exp. Alsager (Incumbent), Re

North Staffordshire Railway, 2 W. R. 321, 2 Eq. Rep. 327. [3479 (1).]

8. Where money has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and is afterwards invested, together with a larger sum of money, in the purchase of land held under one title, the company must pay all costs except the extra stamp duty on the surplus money. Exp. Carlisle (Mayor), 1 W. R. 103. [3480 (4).]

9. Where two estates, settled upon different trusts, were jointly charged with certain incumbrances, and such incumbrances were, by arrangement between the two tenants for life, paid off by them out of their private moneys in certain proportions, and part of one of such estates was taken by a railway company for the purposes of their Act, and the purchase money paid into court:—Held, upon petition by the tenant for life of the land taken by the company, for payment to him out of the fund in court of the amount of the incumbrance paid off by him, and for the investment of the residue of the fund, that the company was liable for the costs of the appearance of the persons interested in remainder expectant on the life estate of such tenant for life. Re Furness Railway Co., Re Romney, 3 N. R. 287. [3481 (11).]

10. The 9 & 10 Vict., c. 39 (The Chelsea Bridge Act), empowers certain Commissioners to take land for the purposes of the Act, and, in the case of land held on trust, or belonging to persons under disability, directs the purchase money to be paid into court, and subsequently, on the petition of the persons interested, to be invested in the purchase of substituted land, or in other specified ways. The Act provides that, wherever it shall be necessary to pay the purchase money into court, the Court may order the expenses of all purchases from time to time to be made in pursuance of the Act, or so much as it shall deem reasonable, to be paid by the Commissioners:—Held (following Re Strachan's Estate, 9 Hare 185), that these words do not authorise the Court to order the Commissioners to pay the costs of the sale or conveyance to them. But, inasmuch as the Act was passed after the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845:—Held, that the 82nd section of the latter Act, not being excepted from or inconsistent with the provisions of the former, must be considered as part of it, and that therefore the Commissioners were rightly ordered to pay these costs. Re Cherry (10 W. R. 305) explained. Re Westminster Bridge Acts, Exp. St. Sepulchre's (Vicar), 3 N. R. 594. [3485 (10).]

11. Where lands which were subject to a lease were taken for the purposes of a company, and the purchase money in respect of such leasehold interest was invested under the Lands Clauses Act, the company was ordered to pay the costs of the half-yearly sales of stock for the purposes of distribution. Re Long's Estate, 1 W. R. 226. [3486 (10).]

12. The Court has no jurisdiction, except by express enactment, to make a company pay the costs of a petition for payment out to persons becoming absolutely entitled of moneys paid into the Court of Chancery, or the Court of Exchequer, in respect of lands taken by the company from owners under disability. Exp.

Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, 5 N. R. 463. [3486 (10).]

1. Upon petition for payment out of court of money paid in pursuant to an award in respect of land taken by a railway company, to a portion of which land the petitioners subsequently to the arbitration discovered that they were not entitled, an apportionment under the Lands Clauses Act (1845), s. 78, was directed by the Court, the petitioners paying the costs occasioned by such apportionment. Re Alston's Estate, 5 W. R. 189. [3486 (10).]

2. On a reference to arbitration under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Vict., c. 18, the arbitrators or umpire have no power, in the first instance, to determine anything but the amount of compensation payable by the promoters; but as soon as that is determined under s. 34, the costs may be subsequently taxed and settled by a separate instrument, and they need not be incorporated in the award. The settlement of the costs need not be within three months after the time of the reference. The 34th section directs the arbitrators, not the umpire, to settle the costs:—Held, that the term “the arbitrators” means the persons who make the award, either as arbitrators or umpires. Gould v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co., 6 Rail. Ca. 568. [3489 (2).]

3. Railway purchase money invested in 1844, and asked to be paid out by trustees of a settlement to mortgagees on the property, and that the company might pay brokerage both of investment and selling out, as well as costs of tenant for life, and mortgagees appearing separately:—Held, that the investment being made before the recent rule of deducting brokerage made no difference, but it would be payable by the company, except in this case there had been no taxation of costs of investment, and therefore the company were only liable to brokerage, on selling out; and that mortgagees and tenants for life had a right to appear separately and have their costs. Re Leigh's Settled Estate, 2 W. R. 109. [3490 (9).]

LEGACY.

4. In an abstract of legacies bequeathed by will, the testator added in the outer margin to his daughter's legacies, “I intend to make this up British money”:—Held, this is an immediate gift in augmentation of the legacies, and not merely a memorandum indicating intention to augment them by future acts. The words contain the essential requisites of a gift; the amount of the bounty and the objects are certain; they do not import fluctuation of mind, or future deliberation, as suspending testator's purpose; they are, therefore, capable of being considered a declaration of his immediate and fixed intention that the legacies should be augmented, and that is sufficient to constitute a bequest. Mason v. Mason, Beat. 322. [3492 (1).]

5. A testator gave his freehold and copyhold estates at H., and his leaseholds at C. and K., and all other his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and all the residue of his personal estate and effects, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death for his four children, in equal shares, absolutely. The testator had no other leaseholds than those at C. and K.:—Held, that the gift of the leaseholds was specific. Report of Fiedling v. Preston (1 De G. & J. 438) questioned. Cook v. Drew, 2 N. R. 437. [3502 (6).]

6. Where two legacies of different amount are given by the same will to the same person, the legacies are to be considered cumulative unless a contrary intention appears in the will. Brennan v. Moran, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 126. [3512 (8).]

7. Where two legacies are bequeathed to the same person by different testamentary instruments, e.g., one by the will, the other by the codicil, or where they are given by different codicils and both are given simpliciter, the Court, in the absence of intrinsic evidence to the contrary, considers the legacies as cumulative. Brennan v. Moran, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 126. [3513 (5).]

A testator by his will, after confirming the provision made for his wife by his marriage settlement and reciting his intention to make a further provision for her by way of annuity, directed his executor to purchase 3,333l. 6s. 8d. stock, and transfer the same to trustees upon trust to pay the dividends to his wife so long as she remained unmarried, and on her marriage or death that the stock should become part of the residue of his property. By a codicil, after reciting his will and directing that the codicil should be annexed thereto and taken as part thereof, and that it was his wish to increase the annuity bequeathed by his will to his wife, he directed his executor to purchase 3,333l. 6s. 8d. stock, and transfer the same to the same trustees upon trust, to pay the dividends to his wife so long as she might remain his widow and no longer, and from and after her decease, or in case she should marry again, that the said stock should form and be a portion of the residue of his property to be disposed of as directed by his will, and he ratified and confirmed his will and codicil in every respect:—Held, that the legacies were cumulative, and that the widow was entitled to both annuities. Id.

8. Ademption or satisfaction of legacy charged on land, by loan to legatee's husband. Higginson v. Wilson, 2 W. R. 217. [3534 (4).]

9. Testator, after directing that his residuary real and personal estate should be applied in payment of certain specified legacies if there should remain any surplus of the moneys to be appropriated to the object of the will after satisfying the legacies, gave the surplus to a charitable society, the same to be paid out of the funds appropriated as should not consist of lands or mortgages:—Held, that the legacies were payable out of the personal estate savouring of the realty; and if that were insufficient, out of the proceeds of the realty which had been sold, so as to appropriate to the charity all such pure personalty as might not be required to satisfy the legacies, after application for that purpose of the personalty savouring of realty, and the proceeds of the realty. Pritchard v. Norris, 4 W. R. 733. [3508 (4).]

1. A testator bequeathed to A. a share of the income of his personal estate, and directed that after A.'s death the share to which he would if then living be entitled, should be paid to his wife E. In a subsequent part of the will the testator, after reciting that A. was indebted to him for a sum advanced to him, directed that the sum advanced should be retained by his executors out of the share of A. in the income. A. having survived the testator and died before the sum was fully paid off:—Held, that the executors were to retain the balance out of the income bequeathed to E. Knight v. Sterry, 18 Jur. 298. [3534 (4).]

2. In 1815, a sum of 1,000*l.* was bequeathed to J. R. and C. R., in equal shares, to be raised out of the share of E. A. D. in the testator's residue, on the death of his (the testator's) widow. In 1818 J. R. bequeathed his interest in the 1,000*l.* to C. R., and appointed him one of his executors. In 1822, by an indenture reciting that all J. R.'s debts and legacies were paid, C. R. assigned the 1,000*l.* to D. and L., from whom, by diverse mesne assignments, the trustees of the Economic Life Assurance Society purchased it for valuable consideration. The testator's widow died, when the legacy fell into possession:—Held, that the whole of it might be paid to the said trustees, and that the 500*l.* which represented J. R.'s share ought not to be paid to his surviving representative, to be handed over to the said trustees. Revill v. Revill, 3 W. R. 541. [3574 (11).]

3. Where a legacy was given to A., to be paid on her attaining the age of twenty-one years, and in case of her death before that time, was given over, the evidence on which the Master made a report as to her age, with a view to allowing her a suitable maintenance, though sufficient for that purpose, may not be sufficient to establish the time of her birth so clearly as to sustain an application for the payment of the legacy. Anon., 1 L. J., Ch., 77. [3577 (7).]

LIFE ESTATE.

4. Order to produce cestui que vie before Commissioners, or the Court, granted on motion, although notice of the motion had not been served on the tenant pur autre vie. Exp. Abergavenny (Lord), 6 N. R. 335. [3612 (5).]

5. Trustees, having a discretion, allowed a reversionary interest to remain unsold for nineteen years, when it fell into possession:—Held, that the tenant for life, who had in the meanwhile received nothing in respect of income on it, was entitled to be recouped out of the fund. Wilkinson v. Duncan, 23 Beav. 469; 5 W. R. 398; 26 L. J., Ch., 495; 3 Jur., N. S., 530. [3637 (5).]

Mode of calculating the amount to be received by the tenant for life, and of regulating the relative rights of the tenant for life and remainderman, in such a case. Ib.

6. Widow held entitled to enjoyment in specie of long annuities (in which she had a life interest) not required for payment of debts of testator. Milne v. Parker, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 194; 12 Jur. 191. [3640 (9).]

7. As a rule the legatee for life of a reversion is entitled to have it sold, though the legatee be tenant for life in possession of the fund out of which the reversion springs. The surplus of a fund appropriated to discharge an annuity is not a reversion within the above rule. Johnson v. Rowth (27 L. J., Ch., 305) approved and distinguished. Mar- rington (Countess) v. Atherton, 4 N. R. 206. [3640 (9).]

8. A testator directed his executors to get in his debts, and to invest the proceeds with the clear moneys he should die possessed of in consols, and to pay certain annuities out of the stocks standing in his name and those purchased by his executors, and out of the rents of the real estate if necessary; and to accumulate the surplus during the lives of the annuitants (a period which turned out to be more than twenty-one years). Part of the personal estate consisted of long annuities, which the executors did not convert, but accumulated with the other surplus income till the death of the annuitants. The income of the personal estate would have been more than sufficient to pay the annuitants if the long annuities had been converted:—Held, that the executors were not bound to convert the long annuities. Hughes v. Perrens, 1 Eq. Rep. 385. [3640 (9).]

9. A testatrix, in terms sufficiently large to include "long annuities," directed her residuary estate to be converted, and, after payment of debts, to be invested in Parliamentary stocks and funds; and she gave the income of such stocks and funds, and of such stocks as should be standing in her name at the time of her death, to A. for life:—Held, that A. was not entitled to the income of the long annuities in specie. Sheppard v. Joynes, 2 W. R. 26. [3640 (9).]

10. A testator gave his property to trustees for the benefit of his wife for her life, and after her decease to be equally divided among his ten children, the object being that during the widow's life she might have the means of bringing up her children. One of the children became insolvent, and, on a claim for the administration of the testator's estate, filed by assignees in insolvency, and praying that the widow might be ordered to convert certain leaseholds and long annuities, and to invest the money in court, instead of enjoying the income in specie:—Held, upon the construction of the will, and considering that the testator's object was to provide not only for his widow, but also for his children during her life, that she was entitled to the income in specie, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to costs in prosecuting a claim in such a case. Marshall v. Bremner, 2 W. R. 320. [3640 (9).]

11. Testator gave all his freehold and leasehold messuages, lands, and hereditaments, ready money, securities for money, stock in the public funds, goods, chattels, and effects, and all other his real and personal estates and effects, to trustees, in trust to pay the rents of his freehold and leasehold estates, and the dividends, interest, and proceeds of his money in the funds, and other, his said personal estate, to his daughter for life, and after her death to stand possessed of his said freehold and leasehold estates, money in the funds, and all other his real and personal estate for the children of his daughter, and in default of such children in trust to pay the rents of his said freehold and leasehold estates, and the dividends, interests, and proceeds of his said stock in the funds, and other his said personal estate, to his nephews for their lives, and after their deaths in trust to stand possessed of his freehold and leasehold money in the funds, and other his said personal estate, for their children; and in default of such children, he gave his said freehold and leasehold estates, stock in the funds, and all other his said real and personal estate, to the corporation of S. in trust, as soon as conveniently might be after they should come into possession thereof, to sell the said freehold and leasehold estates, and also to sell, call in, and convert into money his said stock in the public funds, and all other his said personal estate, and to lend the same to certain persons, upon the terms therein mentioned. The testator, at the date of his will, and at his death, was possessed of leasehold estates, turnpike securities, bank stock, and other personal estate.—Held, that the bequest to the trustees was a general residuary bequest, and that the leasehold and bank stock ought to be sold, and the proceeds invested in 3 per cents.; and an inquiry was directed, whether the turnpike securities were real and permanent securities. Mills v Mills, 7 Sim. 501; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266.

1. The testator having directed his property to be converted and invested, and the dividends paid to his children for life, with remainder to their children after their deaths, and the Court being of opinion that it would be for the benefit of all parties that the business should be carried on, the tenants for life were allowed out of the profits 5l. per cent. on the capital for the time being in the business, the surplus to be accumulated and to go with the capital. Some of the tenants for life had drawn larger sums out of the profits than others. It was ordered that the drawings should be equalised, but no allowance should be made of interest on the sums which had been allowed to remain in the business. Lambert v. Rendle, 3 N. R. 247.

LIGHT AND AIR.

2. Where the plaintiff and defendant held adjoining pieces of ground under a common landlord, and the plaintiff, with the licence of the landlord, and without objection by the defendant, had erected a manufactory, an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant so building as to obstruct the lights of the plaintiff's manufactory, pending a trial at law. Crook v. Wilson, 3 W. R. 378.

LIMITATIONS. STATUTE OF AND LAPSE OF TIME.

3. In assumpsit the breach of a contract is the cause of action, and the Statute of Limitations runs from the time of the breach, and not from the time of the refusal to perform the contract. East India Co. v. Oditelburn Paul, 7 Moo. P. C. 85; 14 Jur. 253.

[3678 (5).

4 Gift of a leasehold house to executors, with direction to sell it, and out of the proceeds to pay 50l. to A.—Held, that there being a trust for sale, the gift to A. is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Lov v. Nash, 1 W. R. 63.

[3728 (1).

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

5. By the 5 Geo. 4, c. 49, the Corporation of Plymouth were empowered to make certain waterworks, and were required to supply a certain daily quantity of pure, wholesome, fresh water for the use of Her Majesty's naval establishments, in consideration whereof they were to be entitled to an annuity. In the course of the present session they failed in an application for an Act to extend their powers. They were restrained from applying any part of the borough fund in paying the expenses of the application to Parliament. Att.-Gen. v. Plymouth (Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of), 1 W. R. 445.

[3786 (6).

6. A local board of health, in the execution of certain works under the Public Health Act 1848, occasioned some damage to property belonging to A. Compensation was claimed by A. for the damage thus occasioned to him, or to have the same ascertained by arbitration. The Court refused to grant an injunction restraining A. from proceeding by arbitration under s. 123 of the Public Health Act 1848, holding that this section could not be distinguished from the compensation clauses in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845. Bradford Local Board of Health v. Hopwood, 6 W. R. 818.

LUNATIC.

7. An alleged lunatic is entitled of right to have an inquiry which has been ordered prosecuted at once, or to have the order for such inquiry discharged. Section 4 of the Lunacy Regulation Act 1862, 25 & 26 Vict.,

55

c. 86, s. 4, is prospective only. Re Naylor, 1 N. R. 173. [3824 (11).]

An inquiry ordered before this Act came into force ought to be prosecuted before the Master in Lunacy, not before a judge of a common law court. Ib

Protection will be granted to the person of the alleged lunatic pending inquiry. Ib

1. The wife of A. B. sued out a commission of lunacy, under which he was found a lunatic, and an order was made for taxation of the costs; but before taxation the lunatic died.—Held, that assuming the proceedings to have been proper, the solicitor of the wife was entitled to stand as a creditor against the lunatic's estate in respect of his bill of costs, and to institute a creditor's suit to enforce his right. Re Kutter, 2 Eq. Rep. 19. [3829 (15).]

Whether he would have been so entitled if employed by a person who was sui juris. Quære. Ib

2. Where costs are incurred in opposing a commission of inquiry as to the state of mind of a party and the opposition fails, although circumstances are stated showing a previous knowledge and that the opposition was vexatious, a solicitor will be allowed the costs of opposition as between solicitor and client. Field v. Turner, 3 W. R. 469. [3829 (15).]

3. In an inquiry as to an alleged lunacy, the costs of the petitioner were ordered to be paid out of the estate of the alleged lunatic, notwithstanding that the alleged lunatic had recovered and was certified to be of sound mind. Anon., 3 N. R. 272. [3829 (15).]

4. Previously to an inquisition of lunacy held in the case of Mrs. C., who was alleged and found to be of unsound mind, she was attended by several physicians, as well in their ordinary capacity as for the purpose of preparing themselves to give evidence in her favour upon the inquisition in question. They received at the time no remuneration for their services except in the case of one of them, to whom a promissory note was given by the lady, bearing date subsequently to the period at which her imbecility was afterwards declared to have begun. Under a suit to administer her estate, these gentlemen applied by motion to vary a certificate of the chief clerk, by adding their names to the schedule of creditors, in respect of their claims for the above services.—Held, that they were not entitled to be included in such schedule, and that their fees ought to have been paid and claimed by the solicitor of the lady; but the amount of the promissory note given to one of their number was ordered to be allowed to him. Elliott v. Ince, 4 W. R. 515. [3829 (15).]

5. A person who was entitled to a share in a business in partnership with a lunatic, and who was an accounting party in respect of such business, may, under special circumstances, be appointed committee of the lunatic's estate. Re Millington, 2 Eq. Rep. 158. [3832 (13).]

6. Where it is desired to enforce against the committee of the estate of a deceased lunatic and his sureties, the usual bond required of the committee of the estate, the proper course is to petition the Court that the bond may be deposited by the Master in

Lunacy with the Queen's Remembrancer; this Court will not transfer the bond to the administrators of the estate of the deceased lunatic. Re Wall's Lunacy, 1 N. R. 250. [3832 (13).]

7. An investment of lunatic's property ordered in a particular form. Magnus v. Bingley, 2 W. R. 130. [3836 (12).]

8. Where the committee of a lunatic's estate had passed his accounts and resigned his office, leaving a debt for maintenance of the lunatic still due to a third person, and the new committee repudiated the debt, the Court, on the petition of the creditor served on the new committee, directed a reference to the Master to ascertain the amount of the debt. Re T——, 5 N. R. 481. [3837 (1).]

9. The Court will, without application to it for that purpose, where the estate of a lunatic has been increased, direct the Master in Lunacy to inquire whether, by an additional expenditure, any increase of comfort can be procured for the lunatic. Re Melhuish and Re Haran, 1 W. R. 236. [3839 (7).]

10. Where a pauper lunatic has been placed in an asylum, and expenses incurred by the parish to which he belongs in his maintenance and that of family, and he comes into property, the Court will order payment to the overseers and guardians out of the fund, for the past maintenance of himself, his wife and child. Re Drewery's Trust, 2 W. R. 436. [3841 (1).]

11. Expenses incurred by the overseers for the maintenance of a lunatic paid to them, upon petition, out of his share in a sum of stock standing in court. Re Ward's Estate, 2 W. R. 106. [3841 (1).]

12. Practice as to granting leases of lunatic's estate at rack rent. Re White, 1 W. R. 294. [3848 (18).]

13. In a suit in which a person found lunatic sought to set aside a deed executed by her as a security for moneys advanced at a time subsequent to that from which she was found lunatic, and in which the defendant by his answer denied notice of the lunacy, the deed was not set aside, although at the hearing the defendant by his counsel admitted that the plaintiff was at the time of executing the deed of unsound mind; inquiries were directed as to the fact of the advance and the circumstances attending it, and as to the application of the money; and upon further directions the deed was ordered to stand as security for the money reported to have been actually advanced, with interest and costs. Kirkmall v. Flight, 3 W. R. 529. [3850 (1).]

14. A testator divided estates A. and B. in trust for payment of his debts, and afterwards purchased estate C. Subsequently he was found a lunatic, and under an order in the lunacy, estates B. and C. were mortgaged, for payment of certain debts of the lunatic and costs, with a proviso in the deed that as between the lunatic, his heirs, and devisees, estate C. should be the primary security.—Held, that the mortgage debt was payable out of the proceeds of the devised estate in exoneration of estate C. Semble, it is not ultra vires, under the Lunacy Regulation Act 1853, s. 116, for the Court sitting in lunacy to insert a proviso in a mortgage of the lunatic's estates, making one estate the primary security. Freeman v. Ellis, 3 N. R. 243. [3850 (1).

1. Method by which an alleged lunatic residing abroad may obtain a sale of stock standing in his name pending an inquiry as to his sanity. Re Naylor, 1 N. R. 173. [3852 (12).

2. Order in lunacy requisite for production and inspection of documents filed in office of Master in Lunacy, where lunatic is living Re Sartoris' Lunacy, Wyde v. Arnold, 1 N. R. 4. [3853 (10).

3. Order in lunacy requisite for production and inspection of documents, etc., filed in office of Master in Lunacy, where lunatic is deceased. Re Silcock's Lunacy, Hutton v. Hutton, 1 N. R. 4. [3853 (10).

4. The heir at law of a lunatic appearing on a petition relating solely to the life estate of a lunatic, is not entitled to costs. Re Dyneley, 1 W. R. 294. [3855 (6).

5. After a decree in a suit in which a lunatic and his committee were defendants, the committee died and a new one was appointed. Ordered upon motion, that the name of the new committee should be substituted for the deceased in all future proceedings in this cause. Bryan v. Twigg, 3 W. R. 42; 3 Eq. Rep. 62. [3858 (17).

MERGER.

6. Mortgagee purchasing an equity of redemption preserves his mortgage unmerged by taking a conveyance to a trustee, with a declaration of his intention to that effect. Bailey v. Richardson, 9 Hare 736. [3870 (13).

MINES AND MINERALS.

7. A reservation of "mines" includes minerals." Proud v. Bates, 6 N. R. 92. [3881 (8).

8. A., a shareholder in a cost-book mine, receives notice, in 1851, of an intended sale of a portion of the mine with a view to its being worked by a new company, and is subsequently informed that the arrangement had been adopted, that a transfer of the old share and issue of shares in the new company had been agreed upon, and a call directed in order to clear off the liability remaining upon the old mine as shown by the balance-sheet. A. does not transfer his shares or take up those issued by the new company, and declines to pay the call. On his being sued by a creditor of the company for a sum equal in amount to this unpaid call:—Held, that although A. could not disturb the arrangement of 1851 as to the transfer and sale, he was entitled to have the old company wound up for the purpose of settling the outstanding liabilities, in respect of which the allegations in the petition had not been satisfactorily explained. Re Birch

Torr and Vitiifer Mining Co., 3 W. R. 148; 1 Kay & J. 204. [3904 (5).

9. R., on the faith of a prospectus, stating that a company was shortly to be formed, to be conducted on the cost-book system, applied for, received, and paid deposit on shares in the company. He subsequently received scrip certificates in respect of such shares, whereon it was stated that the shares were to be held "subject to the rules and regulations of the company." At the date of the receipt by R. of the scrip certificates sent to him there were no rules or regulations of the company in existence, but soon after such receipt rules and regulations were entered on the cost-book of the company. R. neither signed the cost-book, nor attended meetings of the company, nor received any notices of such meetings, and he alleged that the rules and regulations above mentioned were at variance with the prospectus, and not in accordance with the cost-book system. The company was not abortive or fraudulent, but was unsuccessful, and was in course of being wound up. On the question whether R. ought to be placed on the list of contributories:—Held, that he ought, no substantial variation between the prospectus and the rules having been proved, but leave reserved to enter into evidence in chambers to prove that the rules were at variance with the cost-book system. Richardson's case, Re Great Cambrian Mining and Quarrying Co., 4 W. R. 670. [3905 (4).

10. Although in general no contract exists between a company and a person who holds scrip certificates by assignment from a shareholder who has signed the cost-book bona fide in respect of those shares so as to fix such scrip holder with the liabilities of a shareholder, there may be such a course of dealing as to establish a privity between the company and the holder of scrip certificates, and a liability against him, although he has not signed the cost-book in respect of the shares represented by such scrip certificates. A. B. signs the cost-book for certain shares, and transfers them to C. D., who accepts the transfer, and signs the book in respect of the shares. C. D. having been made a contributory in respect of these shares:—Held, that A. B. could not also be fixed with liability as a contributory in respect of these shares. Bowen's Case, Re Cambrian Mining and Quarrying Co., 4 W. R. 800. [3905 (4).

MORTGAGE.

11. A. B. is induced to intrust C. D., his co-trustee and a solicitor, with trust moneys, upon his representation that E. F. wishes to obtain the amount upon mortgage. C. D., who is also confidential solicitor of E. F., induces him to execute a mortgage to A. B. and C. D. of certain property of which C. D., as his solicitor, holds the title deeds. E. F. executes this deed in ignorance of its contents and effect from his confidence in C. D. The money advanced by A. B. is retained by C. D., nor is any part of it ever received by E. F. Two years afterwards C. D. becomes bankrupt, and is subsequently struck off the rolls. Mort- gage deed set aside as fraudulent and void as against H. F., and an action upon the covenant by A. B. restrained, the money not having been advanced by him upon the execution of the mortgage deed, but upon the false representation of C. D., who retained the money in his own possession. Rushout v. Turner, 5 W. R. 670. [3951 (4)].

1. A mortgagee, before the repeal of the Usury Acts, advanced to a mortgagor the sum of 842l. 0s. 10d., being the produce of a sale of stock; and the mortgagor agreed that the sum so advanced to him should be regarded as 360l., so as to protect the mortgagee against loss on re-investment, and to pay interest on 360l. at 5l. per cent.—Held, that this was a fair bargain, and, therefore, not void within the Usury Acts. Baskett v. Skeel, 2 N. R. 547. [3974 (1)].

2. Where there is the common proviso for reduction of the interest payable on a mortgage debt, in case of punctual payment, a failure in such punctual payment only affects the rate of interest payable for the half year in which such condition was not fulfilled. Wayne v. Lewis, 3 Eq. Rep. 1021; 3 W. R. 600. [3975 (9)].

3. The plaintiff, being the purchaser from a co-heir of a mortgagor, had tendered the mortgage money. An injunction was granted to restrain the mortgagee in possession from proceeding in ejectment against a lessee of the property, the plaintiff undertaking to make the other co-heirs parties. Herries v. Griffiths, 2 W. R. 72. [3993 (8)].

4. A tenant for life of leaseholds under a settlement, who is also entitled to a share of a deceased child, mortgages her interest twice, and a suit being instituted to carry out the settlement, the leaseholds are sold and others held for three lives are purchased; two of the lives drop, and a large fine being demanded to renew, a bill is filed to compel a renewal. A policy having been effected on the last life, the first mortgagee, who is in possession, with notice of the second mortgage, pays two premiums, with the authority of the tenant for life, and then allows the policy to drop. Such premiums were paid by the first mortgagee out of the rents, he being a solicitor, and managing the estate and suit himself. Another bill was afterwards filed impeaching the settlement, but ultimately dismissed with costs, and in that suit the first mortgagee is a defendant. Pending the suits, the surviving trustee of the settlement pays various sums to the tenant for life. In taking the accounts in chambers, the chief clerk disallows the premiums, the payments to the tenant for life, and allows only costs out of pocket to the first mortgagee. Upon exceptions to that certificate:—Held, that he was right in all the disallowances. Solater v. Cottam, 5 W. R. 744; 3 Jur., N. S., 630. [3995 (7)].

5. In 1812 a mortgage was executed by A. and B. to C.; in 1813 two judgments, and in 1815 a third judgment, were obtained by C. against A. C. entered into possession of the mortgaged lands in 1812, and continued in possession until 1855. In a redemption suit it was held that the judgments were not, so far as related to the question in this case, to be considered as incorporated in the mortgage so as to form one security, and therefore that the rents received or which might have been received by C, were to be applied; first, in payment of the interest and principal due on the mortgage; secondly, in payment of the interest and principal due on the two judgments of 1813; thirdly, in payment of the interest and principal due on the judgment of 1815. Montgomery v. Donohoe, 5 Ir. Ch. R. 495. [4040 (7)].

6. A. was seized in fee of estate X. and for life, with remainder to his son in tail, of estate Y., subject to certain incumbrances. By a private Act of Parliament passed in 1813, estate X. was vested in a trustee, subject to the incumbrances affecting it, and to certain judgments against A., which were specified in a schedule to the Act, to the use of A. for life, remainder to his son in tail; and estate Y. was vested in the trustee in trust to sell and pay off incumbrances, and to pay the residue to A. A. was also seized in fee of estate Z., which was not included in the private Act. A. confessed a judgment in 1846, and died, having allowed large arrears to accrue on the incumbrances on X.; a portion of X. and Z. were sold in the Incumbered Estates Court. X. was sufficient to pay the arrears of interest:—Held, that the arrears of interest on the judgment named in the schedule to the private Act should be paid out of the produce of the sale of X., so as to leave the produce of Z. to pay the judgment of 1846. Re Fox, 5 Ir. Ch. R. 541. [4048 (1)].

7. The mere fact that a solicitor is in possession of a mortgage deed executed by his client does not authorise him to receive the mortgage money for the client. If the client has not received the money the mortgagee cannot maintain the validity of the mortgage deed by showing that he paid the money to the solicitor, unless he can show that the solicitor was expressly authorised by the client to receive it. Emp. Swinbanks, Re Shanks, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 525; 48 L. J., Bky, 120; 27 W. R. 898; 40 L. T. 825. [4054 (7)].

8. The plaintiff, being the purchaser from a co-heir of the mortgagor, had tendered the mortgage money. Mortgagee in possession restrained from proceeding in ejectment against a lessee of the property, the plaintiff undertaking to make the other co-heirs parties. Herries v. Griffiths, 2 W. R. 72. [4056 (8)].

9. Mortgagee not compelled to produce draft deeds. Eycroft v. Sibel, 1 W. R. 96. [4060 (1)].

10. In a suit for the administration of trust property, part of which had been properly, and part improperly, included in a mortgage security:—Held, that no relief could be given against the mortgagee unless the plaintiff offered to redeem him. Eaton v. Hazel, 1 W. R. 87. [4073 (16)].

11. Two promissory notes being given, accompanied by a memorandum and deposit of title deeds, to remain as a security for both sums, judgments are entered up against the drawer; the acceptor of the notes and deposit of the debts transfers his interest by a mortgage on the premises comprised in the deeds, in which the drawer confirms and the acceptor releases. Upon a foreclosure claim by the transferee, and the question whether the transfer was not a separate transaction, and therefore came after the judgment debts:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to foreclosure, and stood in the shoes of the first equitable mortgagee. Neve v. Hodges, 2 W. R. 315.

1. A mortgagor being a defendant to a claim for foreclosure, in that character, and who, in such character, has a right given to him to redeem, is bound by the foreclosure, in respect of an interest which he may have as tenant for life under a settlement made of moneys secured by a second mortgage of the same estate, although such latter interest be not stated on the claim. Bromitt v. Moor, 9 Hare (App.) xxxix. n.

2. Plaintiff in redemption suit became insolvent after decree, but before default in payment. The bill was dismissed after default, without bringing the assignee before the Court:—Held, that the foreclosure was good against a purchaser under a second mortgage made before the insolvency, but pending the suit, of which the purchaser and his vendor had notice, though they were not parties thereto. Wood v. Surr, 2 W. R. 683.

[4083 (9).

3. Mortgagor having been outlawed, the first mortgagee obtained a decree to foreclose subsequent mortgagees, and if they should not redeem, to sell against the Crown. Scott v. Roberts, 4 W. R. 499.

[4083 (16).

4. In a foreclosure suit under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 48, an immediate sale will be ordered, notwithstanding that infants are interested in the equity of redemption without inquiring whether such sale is for their benefit. Wigham v. Measor, 5 W. R. 394.

[4085 (15).

5. The Court will decree a foreclosure against defendants who disclaim any interest, instead of simply dismissing the bill as against them. Johnson v. Clarke, 3 W. R. 193.

[4095 (1).

6. Form of order for foreclosure taken by consent without account. Boydell v. Manby, 9 Hare (App.) liii.

[4097 (1).

7. Immediate sale directed on a foreclosure suit, instead of the common foreclosure decree. Anning v. Lavers, 1 W. R. 19.

[4103 (6).

8. Under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 48, the Court requires a case to be made for a sale instead of a foreclosure. Robert v. Price, 1 W. R. 303.

[4103 (6).

9. Under statute 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 48, the Court will not make a decree for sale instead of foreclosure without the consent of the mortgagor, except under special circumstances. Probert v. Price, 1 Eq. Rep. 51.

[4103 (6).

10. Application by the mortgagor for sale, instead of foreclosure. Boydell v. Manby, 9 Hare (App.) liii.

[4103 (6).

11. A sale will not in general be ordered, under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 48, instead of foreclosure, unless there is such complication that the common decree cannot be conveniently worked. Horns v. Holtom, 16 Jur. 1077.

[4103 (6).

12. The Court refused, on the application of the mortgagee, after a decree of foreclosure had been made, to vary the decree by directing a sale, under the 48th section of the 15 & 16

Vict., c. 86. Girdlestone v. Lavender, 9 Hare (App.), liii.; 16 Jur. 1081.

[4103 (6).

13. An order for sale made on a claim for foreclosure, at the request of the mortgagee, such sale to be "one month after the judge's clerk shall have made his certificate of the amount of the principal, interest, and costs due to the mortgagee, if such amount shall not be paid." Staines v. Rudlin, 9 Hare (App.), liii. n.; 16 Jur. 965.

[4103 (6).

14. The right of an equitable mortgagee by deposit without memorandum is foreclosure, not sale. Samble v. Wilson, 5 N. R. 395.

[4105 (6).

15. Semble, that a mortgagor having conveyed to trustees for sale, cannot redeem as against a purchaser under the trustees; his remedy is to set aside the sale and have a new sale made. Manser v. Dix, 3 Jur., N. S., 253.

[4108 (9).

16. A sale of mortgaged property, consisting of freehold and leasehold premises, and a policy of life insurance, ordered in a foreclosure suit, at the request of the mortgagee. The mortgagors were bankrupt, and the suit was against their assignees and against incumbrancers subsequent to the plaintiff. The decree directed the accounts of what was due to the several incumbrancers, and directed the proceeds of the different property to be distinguished. Cutor v. Reeves, 9 Hare (App.), liii. n.; 16 Jur. 1004.

[4116 (6).

17. Where the receiver in a matter under the Mortgage Act pending at the passing of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 77, dies, the Court has power to appoint a new receiver, notwithstanding the repeal of the former by the 5th section of the latter Act. Harstone v. Tottenham, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 144.

[4124 (5).

18. A. mortgages to B. in fee; B. dies, having devised the mortgaged estate to C. and D. D. subsequently advances money to A. on the same security:—Held, that C. was alone entitled to file a bill for foreclosure, and that D. was properly made a party defendant. Remer v. Stokes, 4 W. R. 730.

[4126 (9).

19. Trustees of a will, whereby property is devised subject to mortgages, sufficiently represent the devisees; and although there are infants interested in the equity of redemption, the Court will direct an immediate sale where it appears to be for the benefit of the infants. Cockburn v. Aukett, 3 W. R. 641.

20. A mortgagee in fee died intestate; his heiress at law was also his administratrix; she, by will, devised all estates vested in her as mortgagee to two trustees, whom she also appointed executors, and by a codicil appointed the husband of her heiress at law "to be a trustee and executor of her will, jointly" with the two trustees named in the will, and died. The two trustees named in the will disclaimed the devise and renounced probate, but the husband proved. He and his wife filed their bill against the mortgagor, offering to re-convey and for a foreclosure. At the hearing, the mortgagor objected that the heiress at law had no interest, and was improperly made a co-plaintiff, and he asked the dismissal of the bill:—Held, that she had no interest, and that, though the objection would have prevailed if it had been made by demurrer, yet she was not so improper a party as that the Court would entertain the objection at the hearing; but the Court allowed no additional costs occasioned by her being made plaintiff, or of evidence in support of her pedigree. Pearce v. Watkins, 5 De G. & Sm. 315; 16 Jur. 832. [4133 (14).

Two separate portions charged on real estates were assigned by way of mortgage to a person who also became the mortgagee in fee of the entirety of the same estates, subject to the portions. The mortgagee in one foreclosure suit sought to foreclose the mortgagors of the two portions and the mortgagor of the entirety. On an objection taken by the mortgagor of the entirety at the hearing:—Held, that the suit was not multifarious. Id.

1. Mortgagee, after the death of the mortgagor and the person supposed to be his heir, finds the mortgaged premises, which have been left vacant and out of repair, occupied by lodgers placed there by M., the owner of the adjoining house, who had entered by breaking through the party wall. Possession having been obtained by the mortgagee, M. enters with a band of men and recovers possession. The mortgagee brings ejectment, upon the advice of counsel, against M., and obtains a verdict. M. had previously brought an action of trespass against the mortgagee, in which he was nonsuited:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to receive the costs of the proceedings in ejectment out of the estate of the deceased mortgagor, but not the costs of defending the action of trespass. Owen v. Crouch, 5 W. R. 545. [4134 (1).

2. An administratrix borrowed money for the repairs of a leasehold house, and secured the re-payment by a mortgage of the shares of herself and another party in the beneficial interest. The mortgagee was made a party to a suit for the administration of the estate:—Held, that his costs could not be paid out of the estate. Scurrah v. Scurrah, 2 W. R. 53. [4150 (10).

NOTICE.

3. Communications to a solicitor, to make them notice to a client, must be made in respect of some pending matter, and be such that the solicitor was bound to communicate them to the client. Hooper v. Cooke, 25 L. J., Ch., 467; 2 Jur., N. S., 527. [4167 (18).

4. Stock was transferred into the names of trustees, and, by a settlement made in 1799, settled upon trust for A. for life, and after his death in trust for other persons. By another settlement, dated in 1829, the reversionary interest under the first settlement was assigned to trustees upon trust for B. for life, and other persons. During the lifetime of A., B. mortgaged his interest to C. and D. successively. C. gave notice of his assignment to the trustee of the settlement of 1799. D. gave notice to the trustee of the settlement of 1829:—Held, that C. thereby retained his priority over D. Re Booth's Settlement Trusts, 1 W. R. 444; 16 Jur. 965. [4174 (5).

NUISANCE.

5. The 135th section of 18 & 19 Vict., c. 120 does not authorise the Metropolitan Board of Works to create a nuisance in executing the works directed by the Act. The 31st section of the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 104 does not take away the power of any person to prosecute the Metropolitan Board of Works for a nuisance created by them in the execution of their works, but gives an easier remedy to persons unwilling to prosecute at their own expense. Att.-Gen. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 2 N. R. 312. [4193 (5).

PARENT AND CHILD.

6. A father who had been extensively engaged in business, after directing that his trustees should carry on his business for a period not longer than till his youngest child should attain twenty-one, and should then sell his business if not previously sold, and directing the sale and conversion and investment of his estate, and giving an annuity to his wife, empowered his trustees to apply "the whole or so much as they shall think fit of the annual income as a common fund for the maintenance, education, and bringing up or otherwise for the benefit of my several children till the youngest shall attain twenty-one, in such manner as my trustees or trustee shall judge expedient, accumulating the surplus income in aid of the common fund, and the income and accumulation shall follow the destination of the capital whence the same shall have arisen." The capital of the estate was directed to be divided equally amongst all the children who attained twenty-one, or being daughters married under that age, except one son, for whom a different provision was made. By a codicil the testator recited that he had made advances to some of his children, and directed that all advances should be brought into hotchpot. The youngest child had recently attained twenty-one, and the trustees having, since the testator's death, applied portions of the income for the maintenance and benefit of the children, and accumulated the rest:—Held, that the proper mode of distribution was to divide the whole accumulated fund equally among the children, they giving credit for sums allowed for maintenance with interest and for interest from the testator's death on advances made by him, the capital of the advances being to be brought into hotchpot on the division of the capital of the estate. Hilton v. Hilton, 14 L. R., Eq., 468. [5381 (2).

PARTNERSHIP.

7. An executor, a member of a firm of stock-brokers, allowed the firm to use a portion of the administration assets for their own purposes:—Held, that the other partner, after the executor's death, was liable to account for the assets, and could not rely, in discharging himself, upon a settled account, which had been regularly kept and settled by the executor with the firm. Interest was allowed on either side at 5l. per cent. Price v. Peppercombe, 6 N. R. 317. [5506 (7).

PRACTICE AND PLEADING.

1. The conveyancing counsel of the Court, though in a sense an officer of the Court, is still counsel for the vendor, who is responsible for any misrepresentations in the conditions of sale settled by such counsel. Broad v. Munton, Re Banister, 27 W. R. 547, 826; 40 L. T. 319, 828. [4451 (1).

2. Semble, a bill to set aside a purchase may be maintained by some partners of a company, including the actual purchasers, without making all the partners parties against a vendor who is not a partner. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232; 2 Jur. 200, 226, 246. [5057 (1).

To a bill seeking payment of the residue of purchase money, payable under a contract on behalf of a company by some of their number, the directors of the company should be parties, as well as the individuals who entered into the contract, if it is right to enforce the lien on the property as well as the personal remedy against the contractors. S. C. 6 Cl. & F. 523. n.

3. Where real estates belonging to a charity had been improperly sold, the Court made a decree against the parties who had in their hands the proceeds of the sale, without requiring the persons in whom the charity estates had become vested to be made parties to the information. Att.-Gen. v. Kell, 2 Beav. 575; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 389. [5086 (11).

4. Premises held under a demise, containing a proviso that lessees shall not assign without the licence of the landlord in writing, are sold under a decree to a purchaser, who pays his purchase money into court, and is let into possession; the landlord having refused to concur in the assignment, the representatives of the lessee filed a bill against him, alleging that his conduct with respect to the sale had been such as to deprive him in equity of any right to an act on the legal construction of the covenant and proviso against assignment, and praying that he might be decreed to give his licence in writing for the transfer of the interest: the purchasers are necessary parties to such a bill. Maule v. Beaufort (Duke), 1 Russ. 349. [5125 (6).

1. Abercorn's (Lord) case, Re National Insurance and Investment Association (4 De G. F. & J. 78; 8 Jur., N. S., 951; 31 L. J., Ch., 828; 10 W. R. 548). The principle of the decision in this case applied in Roney's case, Re Llanharry Hematite Iron Ore Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 426; 33 L. J., Ch., 731; 10 Jur., N. S., 790, 812; 12 W. R. 814, 994; 10 L. 2. Abinger (Lord) v. Ashton (17 L. R., Eq., 358; 22 W. R. 582,) observed upon in Strelley v. Pearson, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 113; 49 L. J., Ch., 406; 43 L. T., 155; 28 W. R. 752.
3. Acherley v. Wheeler (1 P. W. 783) doubted in Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Sch. & Lef. 5.
4. Achroyd v. Smith (10 C. B. 164) explained in Thorpe v. Brumfitt, 8 L. R., Ch., 650.
5. Acton v. Blundell (12 M. & W. 321) commented on in Chesmore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Ca. 349; 5 Jur., N. S., 873; 33 L. T. 350; 7 W. R. 685; 29 L. J., Exch., 81.
6. Adams, Re (4 De G. J. & S. 182; 9 L. T. 626; 12 W. R. 291; 10 Jur., N. S., 137; 3 N. R. 339), commented on in Fairecloth, Re, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 307; 28 W. R. 481; 42 L. T. 72.
7. Adams v. Adams (1 Hare 537) explained in Mackenzie v. Bradbury, 6 N. R. 283.
8. Adams v. Fisher (3 Myl. & Cr. 526) dissented from in Swinborne v. Nelson, 16 Beav. 416; 22 L. J., Ch., 331.
9. Adams v. Gamble (12 Ir. Ch. R. 102). In this case, it was held that a married woman could dispose of freeholds settled to her separate use as if she were a feme sole, without an acknowledgment under the statute. The cause came before the full court in Ireland, by way of appeal from the Lord Chancellor. I have carefully read and considered that case, but am unable to concur with the two learned judges who dissented from, and overruled the decision of, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland. If the decision had been unanimous, I should not have ventured to differ from it; but as the Lord Chancellor, on reflection, adhered to his previous opinion, the case has not that weight which it would otherwise have possessed. The distinction that the words "separate use," applied only to what the husband would have taken if those words had not been used, does not appear to have been sufficiently presented to the minds of the learned judges who dissented from the Lord Chancellor. . . . I must choose between conflicting decisions, and I am of opinion that on principle, and by the preponderance of authority, it is established, that before the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, a fine was necessary to pass the interest of a married woman in that part of her fee-simple estate which did not belong to her husband, and that since that statute an acknowledgment, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 77, is necessary for that purpose, notwithstanding that the estate of the wife is given for her separate use. Per Romilly, M. R., in Leckmere v. Brothridge, 32 L. J., Ch., 577, 583; 9 Jur., N. S., 705.

12. Ainslie v. Sims (1 Eq. Rep. 17; 17 Jur. 657; 22 L. J., Ch., 834; 17 Beav. 57) overruled by Cambottie v. Ingate, 1 W. R. 533; 1 Eq. Rep. 533.

14. Aitchison v. Dixon (10 L. R., Eq., 589). The circumstance of the alleged domicile being the residence of the testator's wife and children has been much relied on in Forbes v. Forbes (Kay 341), and other cases, though the supposed rule that a man will be considered as domiciled where his wife and children permanently reside, which is referred to in the head-note in Aitchison v. Dixon (supra), seems not to be established by the judgment in that case, or by Forbes v. Forbes, and is hardly to be reconciled either with the general tenor of the authorities, or with principle. Per Wickens, V.-C., in Douglas v. Douglas, 12 L. R., Eq., 617, 647; 25 L. T. 30; 20 W. R. 55; 41 L. J., Ch., 74.

15. Aiton v. Brooks (7 Sim. 204). I have always considered the case of Aiton v. Brooks, and it has always been treated, as not quite consistent with the previous authorities, and there were peculiar circumstances in it which prevent its governing an ordinary case. The tendency of modern decisions is to construe words according to their natural signification, and not to turn them to something else, on the ground that it must have been intended, and that it is more beneficial to legatees. Per Romilly, M. R., in Greenwood v. Percy, 26 Beav. 572, 573.

2. Alexander v. Alexander (2 Ves. 640) is not quite in point. There were various questions in that case, but the actual decision was, that under the particular circumstances, the son was entitled to the whole of the appointed fund. Sir Thomas Clarke read the will as if the words were, "to my son Francis and his wife and children, if they shall by law be capable." In saying that the reasoning was "very artificial" and "not satisfactory," Lord St. Leonards (Vendors and Purchasers, 8th edition, pp. 504, 505) means to say it was unsound reasoning, and I agree with him. The Master of the Rolls had no right to put into the will the words he did. The decision in effect was, that although there was no possibility of ascertaining what shares the appointees were intended to take, yet the one object of the power took the whole. That decision has been overruled by later authorities. Oswald interposed this observation, "But Sir Thomas Clarke expressly follows the principle laid down in Humphrey v. Tayleur (Ambl. 136)." What he says in Alexander v. Alexander is a mere dictum, and it is difficult to support a dictum when the decision is gone. With great deference to Sir Thomas Clarke, I do not see what Humphrey v. Tayleur had to do with the case before him. Humphrey v. Tayleur does not appear to have been decided on general law, but on the words of the codicil. Lord Hardwicke treats the codicil as if it had the effect of erasing the name of one of the original appointees. Per Jessel, M.R., Kerr, Re, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 600, 602; 46 L. J., Ch., 287; 36 L. T. 356; 25 W. R. 390.

3. Alexander v. Wellington (Duke) (2 Russ. & M. 35) discussed in Kinlock v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 619; 51 L. J., Ch., 885; 47 L. T. 133; 30 W. R. 845. Affirming 15 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 49 L. J., Ch., 571; 42 L. T. 667; 28 W. R. 619.

9. Alleyne v. Alleyne (2 J. & L. 544). I should have had some doubt about that case. What was said was, however, merely a dictum of the learned judge, or rather a speculation as to what he would have decided if the case had come before him for decision. What was there said amounted to no decision, and I think can hardly be relied upon as such. Per Cranworth, V.-C., in Windus v. Windus, 6 De G. M. & G. 549, 562.

13. Amies v. Skillem (14 Sim. 428) not reconcilable with Woodgate v. Unwin (4 Sim. 129), but followed in Kenworthy v. Ward, 11 Hare 196; 1 W. R. 493; 1 Eq. Rep. 389.

14. Amus v. Hall (3 Jur., N. S., 554) not followed in Emmetts Estate, Re, Emmet v. Emmet (No. 2), 17 L. R., Ch. D., 142; 50 L. J., Ch., 341; 44 L. T. 172.

16. Anderson v. Fitzgerald (4 H. L. Ca. 484) proceeded on the ground that, when a warranty of a previously existing fact is part of the contract for life insurance, the materiality of the fact is important, and its falsehood is fatal to the contract. 20. Andrens v. Salt (8 L. R., Ch., 622; 21 W. R. 431, 616; 28 L. T., N. S., 686) considered in Clarke's Estate, Re, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 817; 51 L. J., Ch., 762; 47 L. T. 84; 31 W. R. 37.

23. Anon. (Buck 475) overruled, semble, in Coates, Exp., 1 Mont. & A. 328; 3 Dea. & Ch. 626.

24. Anon. (1 Giff. 392). It is clear, upon the authorities, with the one exception of the anonymous case before Vice-Chancellor Stuart, reported in 1 Giff. 392, that, the trusts of the settlement having failed, there is a resulting trust to the lady of the property settled by her, and that such property must now go to her next of kin, there never having been, either in form or in fact, any reduction of it into possession by her husband, the whole arrangement as to the settlement having been made before any marital right existed. Each fund will go to the next of kin of the individual settlor. With regard to the anonymous case before Vice-Chancellor Stuart, it was heard in private, no cases were cited, and it should also be borne in mind that it was a case where the wife was illegitimate, and consequently had no next of kin, and that in that case the husband survived the wife, and, therefore, probably the right of the crown, which was the only adverse claim, was not insisted on. Per Hall, V.-C., in Wollaston v. Berkeley, 24 W. R. 360; 34 L. T., N. S., 171, 172; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 213, 216.

Scumble, the case of Ashbury Railway Co. v. Riche (supra) appears to decide this, at all events, that where there is an Act of Parliament creating a corporation for a particular purpose, and giving a power for that particular purpose, what it does not expressly or impliedly authorise is to be taken to be prohibited. In an Act of this kind granting special powers, what is not permitted is prohibited. Ib.

Scumble, the test applied in Ashbury Railway Co. v. Riche to the powers of a joint stock company (limited) registered under the Companies Act 1862, applies with equal force to the case of a railway company incorporated by Act of Parliament. Ib.

The doctrine of ultra vires as explained in Ashbury Railway Co. v. Riche is to be maintained, but is to be applied reasonably, so that whatever is fairly incidental to those things which the Legislature has authorised by an Act of Parliament ought not (unless expressly prohibited) to be held as ultra vires. Ib.

17. Ashby v. Ashby (7 B. & C. 444). Now the only doubt that has been raised is from what is said by Mr. Justice Bayley, in the case of Ashby v. Ashby, which I cannot help thinking has been misunderstood by the Vice-Chancellor (Bacon) in this case; and I must also say it appears to me to have been misunderstood by the present Lord Chancellor (Lord Hatherley), when Vice-Chancellor, in Haynes v. Forshaw (11 Hare 93; 22 L. J., Ch., 1060), both of those learned judges appearing to understand him to have laid down, that if an executor asked a banker or anybody else to pay money for the purpose of paying a debt of the testator, and he did pay the money, that then that would be money paid to his use as an executor. All that Mr. Justice Bayley was considering was, whether the count for money paid to the use of an executor as executor was a good count; and of course it was a good count if, by any possibility, money could be paid to the use of an executor as executor. I think that what he says is explained by the instance which he puts afterwards, and that he did not mean to say that the money could be money paid to the use of the executor as executor, unless the matter arose out of a contract with, or something done by, the testator. And that is very clearly explained in the same case by Mr. Justice Littledale, who does not share the doubts of Lord Tenterden and Mr. Justice Bayley, but lays down very plainly what I apprehend, is perfectly clear law, that the debts contracted by the executor cannot come into competition with the debts contracted by the testator in respect of their being paid out of the assets. Per Mellish, L. J., in Farhall v. Farhall, 7 L. R., Ch., 123, 129; 41 L. J., Ch., 146, 149.

1. Ashley v. Ashley (6 Sim. 358; 3 L. J., Ch., 61). With great respect to the memory of Sir Lancelot Shadwell, I cannot help thinking that he went too far (in Ashley v. Ashley), in holding that life estates may be given to unborn issue as tenants for life, with cross remainders between them, because every such remainder must either be a remainder upon an estate tail or a cross executory remainder, bequest or limitation limited, so as to take effect necessarily within a life in being and twenty-one years afterwards. Per Malins, V.-C., in Stuart v. Cockerell, 38 L. J., Ch., 473, 477; 7 L. R., Eq., 363; 20 L. T., N. S., 513.

2. Ashley v. Waugh (4 Jur. 572). There must be some inaccuracy in the report of Ashley v. Waugh; the point really did not arise. Per Pemberton Leigh, P. C., in Hughes v. Hosking, 11 Moo. P. C. C. 9; and see also 2 Jarman on Wills, p. 724.

3. Ashmore, Re (9 L. R., Eq., 99). In this case Lord Justice James, when Vice-Chancellor, held that a similar gift was not vested. He admitted that his first impression was the other way, but he decided as he did on the authority of an old case, Pulsford v. Hunter (3 Bro., C. C., 416). I cannot help thinking there is some mistake in the report of Pulsford v. Hunter. The observations in the judgment, as reported, seem to me to point, not to a gift of the interest for maintenance, but to a gift of maintenance out of the interest, which is not in accordance with the terms of the will as given in the report. However that may be, it seems to me that the law is clearly laid down in subsequent authorities. In Watson v. Hayes (5 Myl. & Cr. 125, 133) Lord Cottenham says, "It is well known that a legacy which would, upon the terms of the gift, be contingent upon the legatee attaining a certain age, may become vested by a gift of the interest in the meantime, whether direct or in the form of maintenance, provided it be of the whole interest; which clearly marks the principle that it is the gift of the whole interest which effects the vesting of the legacy. It is, therefore, the giving the interest which is held to effect the vesting of the legacy, and not giving the maintenance; but when maintenance is given, questions arise whether it be a distinct gift, or merely a direction as to the application of the interest; and if it be a distinct gift, it has no effect upon the question of the vesting of the legacy." If that be law, it is very difficult to support the decision in Ashmore, Re. I agree that the case of Ashmore, Re, is not to be distinguished from Pulsford v. Hunter (3 Bro., C. C., 416), as regards the terms of the will, but I do not find that Lord Loughborough said that giving the whole of the income for maintenance was not equivalent to giving interest. The report says, that "the Lord Chancellor thought that, however it might be where interest was given, yet that the giving maintenance was a different case, and was not equivalent to giving interest." These observations, if correctly reported (which I doubt), seem to me to point to the distinction taken by Lord Cottenham between a gift of interest to be applied in maintenance, and a gift of maintenance apart from interest; but if this be not the true meaning of them, then I think they are overruled by what Lord Cottenham said, and by the current of modern authorities. Indeed, I cannot think that Watson v. Hayes (5 Myl. & Cr. 125), and the subsequent cases, were called to the Vice-Chancellor's attention; if they had been, I feel sure he would willingly and cheerfully have followed them. Per Jessel, M. 6. Ashton v. Corrigan (13 L. R., Eq., 76). There Wickens, V.-C., doubted whether a contract to execute a mortgage is one which the Court will specifically perform. 14. Athenæum Life Assurance Society v. Pooley (3 De G. & J. 294). Apart from this case I do not think there is any other authority which supports the contention of the official liquidator. And in that case I think the decision should have been the other way; but the judges seem never to have got over the impression of the fraudulent circumstances under which the bonds were in that case issued. Lord Cairns decided, in the case of Natal Investment Co. (3 L. R., Ch., 355; 37 L. J., Ch., 362; 16 W. R. 637; 18 L. T., N. S., 171), to some extent in accordance with Athenæum Life Assurance Society v. Pooley; but the subsequent decisions of the Lords Justices are opposed to this, and the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Webb v. Herne Bay Commissioners (5 L. R., Q. B., 642), and the other authorities adduced, warrant me in coming to the conclusion that whatever equities this company might have set up against Mr. Sheidan, their conduct has precluded them from setting those equities against the assignee from Sheidan. Per Malins, V.-C., in Hercules Insurance Co., Re, 23 W. R. 286; 19 L. R. Eq., 302; 44 L. J., Ch., 450; 31 L. T. 747.

1. Atkinson v. Mackreth (35 L. J., Ch., 624; 2 L. R., Eq., 570) observed upon. Malins, V.-C., in Plumer v. Gregory (43 L. J., Ch., 616; 31 L. T., N. S., 17; 18 L. R., Eq., 621), said that, with great submission to the late Master of the Rolls (Lord Romilly), he took it to be perfectly settled that where money had been advanced by a client to a firm of solicitors, to be applied on his behalf, if the money were lost, the client could sue all or any one of the members of the firm. That was settled by St. Aubyn v. Smart (5 L. R., Eq., 183, and on appeal, 3 L. R., Ch., 646), in which Atkinson v. Mackreth (supra) was cited.

4. Att.-Gen. v. Alford (4 De G. M. & G. 843; 1 Jur., N. S., 360) observed upon in Berwick (Mayor) v. Murray, 3 Jur., N. S., 847.

5. Att.-Gen. v. Alford (4 De G. M. & G. 843). There was a gross case of gross neglect by a trustee. I refer to the case of the Att.-Gen. v. Alford, in which I charged the trustee with compound interest. But the Lord Chancellor Cranworth having reversed that decision, I should have felt bound in this case by his decision, if the circumstances had been the same in the present case. I have observed, however, that in a valuable text book (Lewin on Trustees), the decision of Lord Cranworth is commented on as inconsistent with several cases of high authority which probably were not referred to in the argument. Per Stuart, V.-C., in Townend v. Townend, 1 Giff. 201, 212.

6. Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham and Derby Junction Railway Co. (2 Rail. Ca. 124) pronounced by Lord St. Leonards to be not "very clear or altogether satisfactory. Finnie v. Glasgow & South-Western Railway Co., 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 177.

7. Att.-Gen. v. Bowles (2 Ves. 547; 3 Atk. 806) "undoubtedly a wrong decision; and it was declared to be so by Lord Northampton, just ten years afterwards, in the case of Att.-Gen. v. Tyndall (2 Eden 207; Amb. 614), where Lord Northampton pointed out the error into which Lord Hardwicke had fallen. It is said, and we know from the history of the times that it was so, that Lord Northampton owed a grudge to Lord Hardwicke, and that he liked to throw out observations against his judgments; and probably there may be something of feeling in the mode in which he expressed himself in that case. But I must say that I quite agree with Lord Northampton in his opinion that the judgment which Lord Hardwicke gave in the case of Att.-Gen. v. Bowles is utterly irreconcilable with the statute and with all subsequent decisions. But Lord Northampton, while triumphantly showing the error in Att.-Gen. v. Bowles, says: "Building on a site is laying out the money in realty, and therefore contrary to the spirit of the statute. It is demandable in a præcipe, and is a purchase of so much realty." That has been entirely overruled in subsequent times. Per Cranworth, C., in Philpott v. St. George's Hospital, 6 H. L. Ca. 351, 352. This case was also observed upon to a similar effect in Carter v. Green, 3 Kay & J. 591; 26 L. J., Ch., 845.

8. Att.-Gen. v. Bright (2 Keen 57) observed upon in Wynch, Exr., or Wynch's Trusts, Re, 5 De G. M. & G. 188; 18 Jur. 659; 23 L. J., Ch., 930; 17 Jur. 588; 22 L. J., Ch., 750; 1 W. R. 426; 2 W. R. 570; 1 Eq. Rep. 521; 2 Eq. Rep. 1025; 1 Sm. & G. 427.

Att.-Gen. v. Bright (2 Keen 57) is inconsistent with Lord Thurlow's decision in Knight v. Ellis (2 Bro. C. C. 569), which is good law, and has never been overruled. Per the Lord Chancellor and Sir G. J. Turner, L.J. Ib.

9. Att.-Gen. v. Compton (1 Y. & C. Ch. 417) distinguished in Att.-Gen. v. Bermondsey Vestry, 51 L. J., Ch., 848; 46 L. T. 852; 30 W. R. 872.

10. A bequest to lay out money in the erection or repair of buildings upon lands already in mortmain, is a valid and effectual bequest. The rule is, as stated in Att.-Gen. v. Davis (9 Ves. 544), "that, unless the testator distinctly points to some land in mortmain, the Court will understand him to mean that an interest in land is to be purchased, and the gift is not good." Trye v. Gloucester (Corporation), 14 Beav. 173; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 81; 15 Jur. 887.

11. Att.-Gen. v. Day (1 Ves. 221) Lord Brougham referred to the statement that the proviso in the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36 was inserted on account of the charity of Queen Anne's Bounty (per Lord Hardwicke, C., in Att.-Gen. v. Day); and added, "When I was presiding in the Court of Chancery I applied to Lord Hardwicke for his ancestor's notes, and found a material difference between them and the report of that case." Philpott v. St. George's Hospital, 3 Jur., N. S., 1270.

13. Att.-Gen. v. Dunn (6 M. & W. 511) is irreconcilable with a great number of cases. (Forbes v. Forbes, Kay 341.) Per Romilly, M. R., in United States (President) v. Drummond, 10 Jur., N. S., 533.

1. The expression attributed to the Lord Chancellor in Att.-Gen. v. Hardy (1 Sim., N. S., 338), with respect to the removal of dissentient trustees, observed upon in Att.-Gen. v. Clapham, 4 De G. M. & G. 591; 1 Jur., N. S., 505; 24 L. J., Ch., 177.

2. Att.-Gen. v. Harley (5 Madd. 326). It is possible that this case may still stand with Myers v. Perigal (2 De G. M. & G. 599), on the ground that the testator, in the former case, had a sole interest entitling him to elect to take the land. Per Wood, V.-C., in Marsh v. Att.-Gen., 2 John. & H. 61, 66.

3. Att.-Gen. v. Hodgson (15 Sim. 146) extremely difficult to be reconciled with the principles of former decisions, or with the common understanding of mankind. Hall v. Warren, 9 H. L. Ca. 420.

4. Att.-Gen. v. Hodgson (15 Sim. 146) observed upon in Warren v. Rudall, 4 Kay & J. 603.

5. Att.-Gen. v. Lloyd (1 Ves. 32). This case was a very peculiar case, and I am of opinion that if the question had turned on the construction of the first codicil the decision would have been the other way. It is perfectly clear that the reason on which the gift was made having failed, the conditional gift would not be good. Then came the second codicil, by which the testator made an absolute gift of the realty to one person and an absolute gift of the personality to the charity to which he had previously given the whole, stating, as a reason for the alteration in disposition, his having been advised that a gift of the realty would have been void under the Statute of Mortmain. This was a mistake, because the will was made before the Act of 9 Geo. 2, but the codicil was upheld. That does not reach this case, because here there is no complete alternative gift. I think, however, that if the Att.-Gen. v. Lloyd had to be decided now, the decision would be the other way. Per Malins, V.-C., in Thomas v. Howell, 18 L. R., Eq., 198, 211, 212; 43 L. J., Ch., 511, 512; 30 L. T. 244; 22 W. R. 676.

6. Att.-Gen. v. Lucas (2 Phillips 753). I feel bound to follow the decision in that case, although I do so with great reluctance, considering, as I did in Att.-Gen. v. Clements (12 L. R., Eq., 32), that that decision is contrary to the spirit and intention of the framers of the Act of Parliament, 4 Geo. 4, c. 76. Per Bacon, V.-C., in Att.-Gen. v. Read, 12 L. R., Eq., 38, 40; 40 L. J., Ch., 678; 24 L. T. 494.

7. Att.-Gen. v. Magdalen College (6 H. L. Ca. 206, 3 Jur., N. S., 675; 26 L. J., Ch., 620). The decision in this case held to govern a case where charity land had not been aliened in fee, but had been held under a lease for five hundred years, at a rent which had been regularly paid. *Att.-Gen. v. 18. Att.-Gen. v. Tyndall (2 Eden 207, Amb. 614). Lord Northington's decision in this case, that a gift over for charitable uses, in the event of a previous gift being void under the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, must be taken as in fraud of the law, and intended to intimidate the heir or next of kin, and prevent their disputing the charity, and therefore void, disapproved of. Carter v. Green, 3 Kay & J. 591; 26 L. J., Ch., 845. See also Philpott v. St. George's Hospital, 6 H. L. Ca. 351.

19. A gift to trustees, with an option to build upon land already in mortmain, or to acquire other land, is good. When money is directed to be given to others for building upon new land, it is bad within the statute. The proper test is that laid down in Att.-Gen. v. Williams (2 Cox 387), viz., to see what, independently of the statute, would be the directions of the Court in carrying out the trust. If those directions, or any of them, are struck at by the statute, the trust is bad. Edwards v. Hall, 17 Jur. 593; 22 L. J., Ch., 1078; 11 Hare 17. Affirmed 1 Jur., N. S., 1189.

3. Auckland (Lord) v. Westminster Local Board of Works (7 L. R., Ch., 597; 41 L. J., Ch., 723; 26 L. T. 961; 20 W. R. 845). Now I have referred to this case, and speaking with all deference to the eminent judges who decided it, it appears to me that sufficient attention was not paid to the real facts of the case. The lords justices dealt with the case as if the Westminster Board of Works had threatened to pull down what they had no right to pull down, and that being a wrongful act, they felt no doubt as to their jurisdiction to restrain it. If that had been the case here, I should, without that decision, have granted an injunction, just as in the case of a railway company exceeding its powers. But on reading the report, that was not the real state of the case at all. The Westminster Board of Works had not threatened to pull down the houses, but to apply to a magistrate for an order to pull down, and such order could not have been made except by a magistrate having jurisdiction to make it; to that the application was really to restrain the board, not from pulling down, as both the lords justices treated it, but from applying to a magistrate for an order to pull down. Consequently the judgment in that case has, in fact, no real application to the present case. I cannot therefore treat that as a decision upon the question whether a court of equity will restrain an application to a magistrate for an order to pull down; it decided a totally different point, and therefore I cannot consider it as an authority applicable to the present case. If there is any reason against the application the magistrate will listen to it, and refuse to grant the order. Per Jessel, M.R., in Kerr v. Preston Corporation, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 463, 467; 46 L. C., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said:—"It has always been held, that when there are contained in the same instrument distinct engagements, by which a party binds himself to do certain acts, some of which are legal and some illegal at common law, the performance of those which are legal may be enforced, though the performance of those which are illegal cannot." 19. Bailey v. Richardson (9 Hare 734). The case of Barnhart v. Greenshields (9 Moo. P. C. C. 32, 33) was referred to in the course of the argument upon the question of notice. It does not seem to me to affect the present case; but I take this opportunity of observing, that I quite concur in the explanation there given of what fell from me in the case of Bailey v. Richardson (9 Hare 734). It was not my intention in that case at all to extend the doctrine of Daniels v. Davidson (16 Ves. 249) and Allen v. Anthony (1 Meriv. 282). Per Turner, L. J., in Knight v. Bowyer, 4 Jur., N. S., 569, 575; 27 L. J., Ch., 520, 532.

20. Bailey v. Elkins (2 Dickens 632). It is scarcely necessary to notice Bailey v. Elkins, a case reported in the second volume of Dickens' Reports. The accuracy of his reports is not to be relied upon, and this case is a remarkable instance of their inaccuracy. He reports it to have been laid down by Lord Thurlow that where there was a covenant to settle an estate, if the covenantor sold the estate he was only to be considered as a trustee and a debtor by simple contract; but that if a judgment at law were recovered on the covenant he became a debtor by specialty; that is, that where by the judgment the debt became of higher order than a debt by specialty, it was then, and not till then, a specialty debt. 4. Baker v. Parson (42 L. J., Ch., 228). I should not have felt either doubt or difficulty about deciding this case were it not for the decision of my predecessor, Lord Romilly, in the office I have the honour to hold, when this very case on this very will was before him in the case of Baker v. Parson. In accordance with the practice, which I consider to be binding on every judge of primary jurisdiction, I should have deferred to that authority without argument had there been no other decision on the subject of this very will by a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. But considering that the decision of the Court of Common Pleas in Doe d. Baker v. Winchester (15 L. T. 68), and the decision of Lord Romilly in Baker v. Parson on the same will, which I have now before me, cannot, by any possibility, stand together, I think I am at liberty to say that I am not conclusively bound by the decision in Baker v. Parson, especially considering that that decision was so recent as the year 1872. As I said before, being completely antagonistic to the decision of the Court of Common Pleas, which decision was not cited to Lord Romilly, it cannot be considered to have settled the law for any purpose whatever. Per Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Baker v. White, 44 L. J., Ch., 651, 653; 20 L. R., Eq., 166; 32 L. T. 847; 23 W. R. 670.

11. Banks v. Braithwaite (32 L. J., Ch., 45; 7 L. T., N. S., 149). It is settled by Haynes v. Haynes (3 De G. M. & G. 570), that when a testator gives a clear annuity, that is to be construed as an annuity free from duty, and in this case the testator has in effect given a clear yearly sum of 100*l.* to this charity. In Banks v. Braithwaite there was a direction to retain so much stock as should be sufficient to realize the clear yearly income of 150*l.*, and to pay, not an annuity, but the dividends of the stock. Here the direction is to pay such income or yearly sum, that is to say, the clear income or yearly sum of 100*l.* Whether Banks v. Braithwaite is consistent with Haynes v. Haynes, it is unnecessary for me to consider; I am bound to follow the latter, which is the decision of the Court of Appeal, and in the good sense of which, moreover, I entirely concur. I think that decision governs the present case, and I am therefore of opinion that this legacy was given free of duty. Per James, V.-C., in Colé's Will, Re, 22 L. T., N. S., 221, 222; 8 L. R., Eq., 271, 272.

12. Banks v. Sutton (2 P. W. 700), holding a wife to be endowed of equity of redemption, overruled. See Id. 119, note (2).

13. That a wife is not dowable of a trust estate, is now an established doctrine. In Banks v. Sutton (2 P. W. 712), Sir Joseph Jekyll took distinction in regard to a trust, where it descends to the husband from another, and not created by himself; but Lord Talbot afterwards, in the case of the Att.-Gen. v. Scott (Forrest. 138), determined directly contrary to this distinction. Godwin v. Winsmore, 2 Atk. 526.

14. Bannerman v. Clarke (3 Drew. 632). In the conflicting state of the authorities on the point before me, I feel myself bound to follow that which seems to me to be the most consistent with justice and common sense. I confess I do not see why it is more the act of God, that a vendor, having contracted to sell property, should afterwards die testate, than he should afterwards die intestate. Bannerman v. Clarke does not appear to have been mentioned to Wood, V.-C., when he decided Purser v. Darby (4 Kay & J. 41). I shall therefore follow the earlier decision, and now hold that, although there was really no fault in this case on either side, the decree (as to the plaintiff's right, to which there is no doubt) must nevertheless be without costs. Per Lord Romilly, M. R., in Hall v. Bushill, 12 Jur., N. S., 243; 14 W. R. 495; 14 L. T., N. S., 246.

2. Barnes v. Vincent (5 Moo. P. C. 201) considered in Este v. Este, 15 Jur. 159.
3. Barnesley v. Powell (Ambl. 102). Certainly that case seems to want very much the force of an authority. It appears to have been heard ex parte. There is no report whatever of any argument having taken place, and it is said that the counsel for the solicitor, whose lien was declared upon that occasion, "doubted of it" (that is the expression in the report). He doubted whether there could be any such lien. I think that doubt is very well founded, because to hold that a solicitor, obtaining a real estate for his client, could be entitled to a lien upon it for costs and charges, would be entirely contrary to the principle upon which the doctrine of lien proceeds. There can be no lien upon any property unless it is in the possession of the party who claims the lien. But if an estate is recovered by a solicitor, or if through a solicitor, it is conveyed to the client, and not to the solicitor, but his client is in possession of it, all that the solicitor has are the deeds and documents; he has a lien upon them. It is satisfactory to find that the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106, s. 141, has remedied the defect in the law, which occasioned great hardship and injustice. Per Stuart, V.-C., Coombe, Re, 1 Giff. 91, 93.

12. Barrow v. Wadkin (24 Beav. 1). I feel no difficulty in following the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Barrow v. Wadkin. From every early time, first, in Re v. Holland (Ayleyn, 14), by the dicta of Rolle and the other judges who were present, next by Lord Chief Justice Hale, in the Att.-Gen. v. Sands (Parker, 144), where he narrates that opinion, saying that he was counsel in the case, and gives his approbation to the doctrine; then by Gilbert, in his Treatise on Uses (3rd ed., p. 86); and recently, in the case before the Master of the Rolls, it has been recognized as law that the Crown cannot by virtue of office find oust trustees who are seised of land in trust for an alien, but is driven to its remedy in equity. That doctrine has been recognized by Lord St. Leonards, in his edition of Gilbert on Uses, as the true result of the authorities. On the other hand, we have dicta of Vice-Chancellor Shadwell, in Burney v. Macdonald (15 Sim. 6), and a decision of Vice-Chancellor Stuart, in Ritson v. Sturdy (3 Sm. & Giff. 230), adverse to the view contended for by the Crown. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Sharp v. St. Saviour, 7 L. R., Ch., 313, 353; 41 L. J., Ch., 576; 26 L. T. 112; 20 W. R. 469.

16. Barry v. Stawell (Fl. & K. 1; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 18, 146) considered in Upton v. McGarry, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 164.
17. Barry v. Wilkinson (3 Ir. Eq. R. 121) disapproved of in Burt v. Bernard, Fl. & K. 414; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 324. Affirmed 3 Dr. & War. 461; 2 Con. & L. 271.
18. Bartlett v. Bartlett (3 Sm. & G. 533; 3 Jur., N. S., 254, overruled 1 De G. & J. 127; 3 Jur., N. S., 705; 26 L. J., Ch., 577), but the decision on appeal seems to have been made without any accurate knowledge of the ground of decision of Stuart, V.-C. Lord St. Leonards' view of the law seems irreconcilable with the decision of the Lords Justices. See note at end of case, 3 Sm. & G. 542.
19. Bartlett v. Bartlett (supra), followed in Re Rawbone, 3 Kay & J. 476; 3 Jur., N. S., 837; 26 L. J., Ch., 588. Reversing 3 Kay & J. 300; 3 Jur. 556; 26 L. J., Ch., 509.
20. Bartlett v. Bartlett (4 Hare 631), followed in Marryatt v. Marryatt, 2 Eq. Rep. 1198; 2 W. R. 576; 23 L. J., Ch., 876.
21. Bartlett v. Pickersgill (1 East 577, n.; 1 Cox 15). This is a bill of a very ordinary description, and it is a startling proposition to say that, unless the bill alleges that the agency was constituted by writing, such a bill cannot be sustained. The only authority which has been cited in support of that proposition is Bartlett v. Pickersgill. It appears to me that it does not govern the present case, because it was a case in which the conveyance was executed, and it appears from the short statement in 4 East, that the bill sought a conveyance to the plaintiff from the defendant, to whom a conveyance had already been made. That entirely distinguishes that case from the present, which is an ordinary suit by a principal, bringing before the Court the agent and the person with whom the contract was entered into. Assuming Bartlett v. Pickersgill to be good law, it cannot, I think, be considered as laying down any such general proposition as is contended for by the defendants. At all events it would be subject to qualifications, especially to those which are mentioned by Lord St. Leonards in p. 118 of his book, and also to the qualification established by Lord Hardwicke in Willis v. Willis (2 Atk. 71), where his lordship says, There is another way of taking a case out of the statute, and that is by admitting parol evidence within the rules laid down in this Court to show the trust from the mean circumstances of the pretended owner of the real estate or inheritance, which makes it impossible for him to be the purchaser. Per Selwyn, L. J., in Heard v. Pilley, 17 W. R. 750; 38 L. J., Ch., 718, 720; 4 L. R., Ch., 548; 21 L. T., N. S., 68.

I cannot help saying, as regards the case of Bartlett v. Pickersgill, that it seems to be quite inconsistent with all the authorities of this Court, which proceed on the footing that it will not allow the Statute of Frauds to be made an instrument of fraud. Per Giffard, L. J., Id.

1. Bartlett v. Rees (12 L. R., Eq., 395) followed in General Credit and Discount Co. v. Clegg, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 549; 52 L. J., Ch., 297; 48 L. T. 182; 31 W. R. 421.

2. Basset v. Basset (3 Atk. 203). It appears from the registrar's book, that the decree in this case was not as the report in Atkyns implies, a declaration merely that the posthumous heir was not entitled to an account, but a declaration; "that the rents and profits of the settled estates belonged to the plaintiff from the time of the death of his father, and that the rents and profits of the lands in fee belonged to the plaintiff from the time of his birth only." See Richards v. Richards, Johns. 758. n.

3. Bateman v. Gray (29 Beav. 447). Evidently there had been a mistake on the hearing of this case, and the decree varied in accordance with Iredell v. Iredell, 25 Beav. 485. See Bateman v. Gray, 37 L. J., Ch., 592; 6 L. R., Eq., 215.

4. Bateman v. Gray (6 L. R., Eq., 215). I cannot agree to the ruling in this case. The original decision in Bateman v. Gray (29 Beav. 447) was right. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Gimblett v. Purton, 24 L. T., N. S., 793; 12 L. R., Eq., 427; 40 L. J., Ch., 556.

8. Bathurst v. De La Zouch (2 Dick. 460), or as it ought to be, Bathurst v. De Latouche, commented upon in Boyd v. Brooks, 34 L. J., Ch., 605; 13 W. R. 419; 12 L. T., N. S., 38.

9. Battiscombe v. Eve, 7 L. T., N. S., 697. (A church rebuilt requires reconsecration.) With regard to the necessity of the consecration, very little authority has been produced; no decided case has been cited, with the exception, perhaps, of the church of South Morley (Gibson's Codex, tit. 9, c. 1, 189); but in that case the church had been polluted, and also it is not to be regarded as a solemn legal decision. The other authorities cited are mere dicta of different judges. With regard to the case of Battiscombe v. Eve, Dr. Robertson in his judgment cites an authority anterior to the Reformation, which could not apply to the case of a Protestant church. As their lordships ground their judgment on the second question, it is unnecessary for them to consider the first question, but they are desirous of stating that they give no authority to the position, that, if a church be built on the same lines and on the same foundation as originally occupied by the one pulled down, such church requires reconsecration. Per Lord Westbury, P. C., in Parker v. Leach, 12 Jur., N. S., 911.

10. Battsford v. Kebbell (3 Ves. 363) commented on in Westwood v. Southey, 2 Sim., N. S., 192; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 473; 16 Jur. 400.

11. Baxter v. Bower (23 W. R. 805), "a very special case," per Thesiger, L. J., in Gaskin v. Balls, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 324, 329; 28 W. R. 552.

12. Beachcroft v. Beachcroft (1 Madd. 430) is a case in which Sir Thomas Plumer made a slip as to the right of illegitimate children to take as a class under a will. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Holt v. Sindrey, 38 L. J., Ch., 126, 131. I have more than once had occasion to say that I consider the case of Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, and the principle upon which it was decided, to be inconsistent with the other authorities upon this subject. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Crook v. Hill, 38 L. J., Ch., 579, 582.

13. Beachcroft v. Beachcroft (1 Madd. 430) stated to have been overruled. Overhill's Trust, Re, 1 Sm. & G. 362; 17 Jur. 342; 22 L. J., Ch., 485; 1 W. R. 208.

14. Beachcroft v. Beachcroft (1 Madd. 430). It is said that this case is no longer authority. My opinion, however, is that Beachcroft v. Beachcroft is a good and binding authority, founded on the soundest principles. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Dorin v. Dorin, 42 L. J., Ch., 462, 466; 29 L. T., N. S., 731, 733; 17 L. R., Eq., 463; 22 W. R. 217.

15. Beak v. Beak (13 L. R., Eq., 489; 14 L. J., Ch., 470; 26 L. T., 281) followed in Mead, Re, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 651; 50 L. J., Ch., 30; 43 L. T. 117; 28 W. R. 891.

16. Beamish v. Beamish (11 Ir. Com. Law Rep. 511; 5 L. T., N. S., 97; 9 H. L. Ca. 274). This appeal, in two preceding sessions, was most elaborately and learnedly argued on both sides at your lordship's bar before the English judges, who were summoned to assist your lordships with their advice, and who have favoured us with an opinion which displays extraordinary research, and will hereafter be considered a repertory of all the learning to be found in any language upon this important subject (marriage). Per Campbell, C., in Beamish v. Beamish, 5 L. T., N. S., 97, 102.

17. Beauchamp (Lord) v. Great Western Railway Co. (3 L. R., Ch., 745; 38 L. J., Ch., 162; 19 L. T., 189; 16 W. R. 1155) followed in Wilkinson v. Hull, Barnsley, & West Riding Railway and Dock Co., 20 L. R., Ch. D., 323; 51 L. J., Ch., 788; 46 L. T. 455; 30 W. R. 617.

18. Beaufort (Duke) v. Neeld (12 Cl. & F. 248). I do not by any means desire or mean to intimate the slightest doubt upon the opinion, given in the House of Lords in this case, that a general agent may bind the principal as to third persons, notwithstanding that the principal may have limited the authority of the general agent; but I take the rule to be otherwise when the limit of the authority of the general agent is known to the person who deals with the agent. I do not see how a third person dealing with my agent, knowing the fact that I have limited his authority, can say that the agent had power to bind me against the express limit which I have put upon the authority of the agent when the person with whom the agent is dealing knows that the authority of the agent is limited. Per Turner, L. J., in Tople v. National Guardian Assurance Society, 30 L. J., Ch., 900, 915; 7 Jur., N. S., 1109; 5 L. T., N. S., 193.

1. Beaumont v. Barrett (1 Moo. P. C. 59). In the case of Beaumont v. Barrett, from Jamaica, it was decided that an assembly possessed of supreme legislative authority had the power of punishing contempts; that the power was inherent in such an assembly, and incident to its legislative functions; and, according to the judgment in that case, every colonial assembly or council possessed the same authority for contempts which the House of Commons had exercised in this kingdom for a long series of years. But in the year 1842 the same question, in substance, came before this committee on an appeal from Newfoundland, and was twice argued; the second time before the Lord Chancellor, two noble members of the committee who had formerly held the great seal, the three chiefs of the common law courts in Westminster Hall, two out of the four members of the court who were present at the decision of the case of Beaumont v. Barrett, the Vice-Chancellor, and Dr. Lushington; and on that occasion (4 Moo. P. C. 84) their lordships "were of opinion that the House of Assembly did not possess the power of arrest, with a view to adjudication, on a complaint of contempt committed out of its doors." They held that the power of the House of Commons in England was part of the "Lex et Consuetudo Parliamenti," and the existence of that power in the Commons of Great Britain did not warrant the ascribing it to every supreme legislative council or assembly in the colonies. We think we are bound by the decision of the case of Keilley v. Carson (4 Moo. P. C. 63), the greater authority of which, as compared with Beaumont v. Barrett, it is quite unnecessary to enlarge upon. Per Pollock, C. B., delivering the judgment of the Committee in Fenton v. Hampton, 11 Moo. P. C. 347, 396.

2. The principles of Beaumont v. Barrett (1 Moo. P. C. 59) as to the lex et consuetudo parliamenti examined in Keilley v. Carson, 4 Moo. P. C. 63; 7 Jur. 137.

3. Beavan v. Oxford (Earl) (6 De G. M. & G. 492; 1 Jur., N. S., 1121; 25 L. J., Ch., 299) approved of in Shaw v. Neale, 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 4 Jur., N. S., 695; 27 L. J., Ch., 444.

4. Beck v. Burn (7 Beav. 492) "I should hesitate to follow." Per Romilly M. R., in Adams v. Roberts, 25 Beav. 658, 661.

5. Beckett v. Midland Railway Co. (3 L. R., C. P., 82; 37 L. J., C. P., 11). It appears to me that the case comes within the principle of Beckett v. Midland Railway Co. By that decision we are bound, and we must act, upon it until authoritatively told that we are wrong. It appears to me to have been a correct decision, and not to be at variance with any of the cases which have been referred to. Certainly it is not at variance with Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (3 L. R., H. L., 175), where there was only a temporary loss of trade to the tenant, and no diminution in the value of the house itself. That is explained in Beckett v. Midland Railway Co., and constitutes the distinction between that case and the Caledonian Railway Co. v. Ogilvy (2 Macq. H. L. Cas. 229). Per Willes, J., in McCarthy v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 7 L. R., C. P., 508, 514; 26 L. J. 772.

I think that this case is governed by Beckett v. Midland Railway Co., and I am not aware of any case which at all interferes with that decision. Per Keating, J. Ib.

9. Begg v. Jack (3 Court Sess. Cas., 4th Series, 35), approved, as an authority in favour of the equitable jurisdiction of the Court; but see Lord Watson as to his disapproval of the result at which the Court arrived in Begg v. Jack. Grahame v. Swan, 7 L. R. App. Cas (Sc.), 547.

11. Beeton v. Vachell (5 Bro. P. C. 51). I may here refer to the case of Beeton v. Vachell, which, I confess, appears to me rather a strong decision. Per Romilly, M. R., in Ramsay v. Shelmerdine, 11 Jur., N. S., 905.

12. Bevor v. Luck (4 L. R., Eq., 537; 36 L. J., Ch., 865; 15 W. R. 1221) commented on and not followed in Jennings v. Jordan, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 698; 51 L. J., Ch., 129; 45 L. T. 593; 30 W. 15. Bellamy v. Jones (8 Ves. 31), the rule there laid down by Lord Eldon is now considerably qualified. Blackwood v. Burrones, Fl. & K. 680; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 609.

16. Bellhaven (Lord), Exp., Agriculturist Cattle Insurance Co., Re (11 Jur., N. S., 207; 13 W. R. 479 on appeal 3 De G. J. & S. 41; 34 L. J., Ch., 503; 13 W. R. 349; 12 L. T.

N. S., 595; 11 Jur., N. S., 572). I am unable to distinguish this case in substance from Bellhaven (Lord), Exp. I am also unable to distinguish it from Spackman, Exp., Agriculturist Cattle Insurance Co., Re (11 Jur., N. S., 207; 34 L. J., Ch., 321; 13 W. R. 479; 12 L. T., N. S., 130. Reversing 10 Jur., N. S., 911; 12 W. R., 1133; 11 L. T., N. S., 13. Affirmed sub nom. Spackman v. Evans, 3 L. R., H. L., 171; 19 L. T., N. S., 151; 37 L. J., Ch., 752); but at the same time, with all due submission, I approve of the decision of the Lords Justices in Bellhaven (Lord), Exp., and I disapprove of Lord Westbury's judgment in Spackman, Exp. I cannot reconcile the two. It seems to me a monstrous thing, that when shares have been cancelled by the directors, under an arrangement of this sort, and they have taken money for so doing, after a lapse of fifteen years it should be said to be a fraud which makes no time a bar, though the fact that the person whose shares were cancelled was no longer a member of the company was duly registered, and that was the only notice that could be given of the matter. 5. Bennett's Trusts, Re (19 L. R. Eq., 245; 44 L. J., Bky., 244); 31 L. T. 720; 23 W. R. 229. Properly acquired after a liquidating debtor's order of discharge has been granted does not vest in the debtor but in his trustee: overruled in Ebbs v. Boulois, 10 L. R., Ch., 479, 490; 44 L. J., Ch. 691; 23 W. R. 820; 33 L. T. 342.

6. Bensley v. Burdon (2 Sim. & S. 519) determined that a conveyance by lease and release operated by way of estoppel. That decision was overruled, so far as it was there by decided that a conveyance by lease and release operated as an estoppel, by Stackpoole v. Stackpoole, and Lloyd v. Lloyd (4 Dru. & War. 354). But it was decided, on the appeal in Bensley v. Burdon, that the recital of a particular fact concluded the party executing the deed. The judgment, on the appeal, is not reported in the regular reports, as the concluding portion of 5 Russell, in which the case would have appeared, has never been published; but the decision on the appeal is referred to by Lord Tenterden in giving judgment in Right v. Bucknell (2 B. & Ad. 282), and the case, on appeal, is reported in 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 85. Per Cusack Smith, M. R., in Hungerford v. Becher, 5 Ir. Ch. R. 417, 426.

12. Beresford's case, Kollman's Railway Locomotive and Carriage Improvement Co., Re (2 Macn. & G. 197). There has been a contention as to the language of Lord Cranworth in Beresford's case. There is no doubt that that language does, to some extent, justify the contention. I do not think it too strong to say that the language must be taken in connection with what precedes and what follows, and to decide that it was competent to the directors to forfeit the shares under the circumstances of that case, and under the power of their deed. 23. Betts v. Cliford (1 John. & H. 74). I must suggest that in Betts v. Clifford, I am satisfied that the Vice-Chancellor, whose decision is there reported, must have been misunderstood in the passage referred to, because, as that passage stands, if I have read it correctly, it amounts to a dictum to this effect, that it is now settled by Bacon v. Jones (1 Beav. 389; 4 Myl. & Cr. 433), that a party filing a bill for an injunction will not succeed at the hearing unless he has applied for it by interlocutory application. I am sure the Vice-Chancellor never laid down, or intended to lay down, any such proposition. It might have been that he expressed himself in general terms, quo ad hoc, with reference to the case before him, and it was assumed that he meant to lay down that as a general proposition; but I am satisfied he never meant to do so. in a company, there is in general no binding contract to take shares until the company has communicated to him an allotment of shares; the decision in Blowam's case (33 Beav. 529; 12 W. R. 995) being referable to its special circumstances. Pellatt's case, 2 L. R., Ch., 527.

1. Blowham, Exp. (5 Ves. 448), overruled. See id. 449. n. 17.

2. Blundell v. Windsor (8 Sim. 601). The second ground of objection is, that the shares were transferable by delivery. I am not aware that any principle, either of law or equity, is violated by the shares in this association being indefinitely assignable; it does not appear to me to offend against society, or to injure any class of individuals; and therefore, unless bound by distinct authority, I should not be disposed to hold such an association to be void at common law. Harrison v. Heathorn (6 M. & G. 81) is an authority the other way; in that case the very point came before the Court, and the judge held, that, at common law, such an association is not an illegal association. In opposition to this case, I am referred to Blundell v. Windsor, which, singularly enough, was a decision upon the very same association as that in Harrison v. Heathorn. Upon referring to the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor of England (Shadwell) in Blundell v. Windsor, it is clear that the learned Vice-Chancellor founded his judgment on the ground, that, in point of fact, there was a fraudulent attempt by certain persons, to draw in others to subscribe to the association by false representations. No doubt, if that were established, the association would be fraudulent and void, and upon that ground the judgment ought not to be supported; but if it proceeded, on the other ground only, then, as it appears to me, it would be at variance with Harrison v. Heathorn, and I should be disposed to follow the latter case. Per Romilly, M. R., in Mexican and South American Co., Re, Aston, Exp., 5 Jur., N. S., 615, 616.

8. Bonomi v. Backhouse (9 H. L. Ca. 503). I can claim to be well acquainted with the ratio decidendi of that case in the Exchequer chamber. It was an action of tort. There was neither damnum nor injuria till the plaintiff's land was affected. The excavations were not tortious at the time they were made, and never would have become so had those who made them prevented these consequences reaching the plaintiff's land. Per Bramwell, B., in Spoor v. Green, 9 L. R., Exch., 99, 111; 43 L. J., Exch., 57; 30 L. T. 393; 22 W. R. 547.

11. Booth v. Carter (3 L. R., Eq., 757). It is in my opinion so important that the rules of construction should be free from doubt, and that every one should be able, upon reading the will, to say whether a bequest is valid or invalid, that I should not have called upon the counsel for the respondent in this case if it had not been for the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Booth v. Carter. I asked Mr. Cole to distinguish that case from the present, but he failed to do so, and in my opinion the two cases are undistinguishable. The only additional words in the bequest in this case, viz., "when such an erection shall take place," merely express that which would have been implied if it had not been expressed, and consequently they have no effect upon the construction. In Booth v. Carter the Master of the Rolls seems to have allowed himself to be influenced by the extrinsic evidence that there was land already in mortmain on which the chapel might be built. But in my opinion the rule is clearly settled, that in order to uphold such a bequest you must find in the will itself, and not outside it, a saving clause rebutting the implication which arises from a direction to build, that land is to be purchased, and as in Booth v. Carter there was nothing in the will but a direction to apply the money in building, I think that the decision in that case is contrary to all the authorities, and to the established rule, which is founded on principles of convenience and justice, and I must, with all respect for the Master of the Rolls, decline to follow it, and must decide that this bequest is void. I hope the case may be carried further, so that this point may be clearly settled by the Court of Appeal. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Watmough, Re, 22 L. T., N. S., 88, 90; 17 W. R. 959, 960; 38 L. 10. Bowers, Exp. (1 De. G. M. & G. 460). All that the Lords Justices say in Bowers, Exp., is, that such an order (a protection order made under the 211th section of the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106, giving protection until a certain day and until further order) as that was, may be irregular, and may be rescinded by the Court of Bankruptcy. Per Cockburn, C. J., in Tomline v. Cadman, 6 C. B., N. S., 733, 738.

I have felt somewhat embarrassed by the case of Bowers, Exp. But the Court of Exchequer in Bellhouse v. Melton (4 H. & N. 116) dealt with it in a way to bring it to the very words of this order. I do not think we can do better than follow the Court of Exchequer. Per Williams, J. Id.

I consider that the objection in Bowers, Exp., was one of mere irregularity. I do not see how it can be necessary to renew an order made for protection until further order. I should have thought that the order in Bowers, Exp., could only be questioned in the Court out of which the process issued. At all events the case of Bellhouse v. Melton is an authority that this is a valid order. Per Willes, J. Id.

22. Brace v. Wahnert (25 Beav. 343; 27 L. J., Ch., 572), as to the specific performance of a contract to build a house according to a plan, would have put some difficulty in the plaintiff's way, if it were still the law of the Court, but it was decided before the passing of Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict., c. 27), and I think it is allowed on both sides now, that it would not, at the present day, have been decided in the same way. 4. Bradford Local Board of Health v. Hopwood (6 W. R. 818). It is said that, looking at the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict., c. 63, and construing them by analogy to the decisions on the Lands Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 18), the prosecutor has mistaken his course; that the proper course would have been to set in motion the local board, under s. 144, to get the amount of compensation fixed by means of the course there prescribed, viz., by arbitration; and, the amount being ascertained, then to have brought an action, in which the liability of the local board would be tried. In support of that proposition, the decision of Wood, V.-Ch., in Bradford Local Board of Health v. Hopwood, was cited. That decision, which is entitled to great consideration, as all Vice-Chancellor Wood's decisions are, was, that this Act ought to be construed by analogy to the Lands Clauses Act, and, so construing it, he refused to grant an injunction restraining the claimant from proceeding by arbitration under s. 123. But that decision involves the necessity, in all these cases, of commencing an inquiry, which, in the result, may be entirely futile, and serve no purpose; and as there is nothing in this Act which constrains us to adopt that construction, we prefer the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, that the proceeding by mandamus is proper, and that it is more convenient to hold that the question of liability should be settled in the first instance. Per Williams, J., in Reg. v. Burslem Local Board of Health, 6 Jur., N. S., 696, 697; 29 L. J., Q. B., 234; 1 El. & E. 1077.

I am not at all sure that there was not some circumstance in the case before Wood, V.-Ch., which does not appear in the report, and which might make his decision consistent with that of the Court of Queen's Bench in *Reg. v. 18. Briggs v. Penny (3 Myl. & C. 546) I have been referred to the case of Briggs v. Penny as an authority by which I am bound to decide that a trust was created. In that case Lord Truro laid down what he considered to be the general principle. Being a decision of the Lord Chancellor it would be binding upon me if I had the same will to construe, but it is not necessarily binding upon me in the case of any other will, even if the words were the same. . . It has never been followed, as far as I know; at any rate, I am not aware of any case in which words so vague and so indefinite have been held to create a trust. The decision in Briggs v. Penny turned upon the particular words of the will and particular circumstances, and those words or circumstances are not before me in this case. The words were these: "well knowing that she"—the legatee—"will make a good use, and dispose of it in a manner and in accordance with my"—the testatrix's—"views and wishes." The Lord Chancellor appears to have been of opinion that the words "well knowing" were equivalent to, if not synonymous with, the expression "in the fullest confidence," and that they were used in such a manner as to exclude all option or discretion. With great deference to Lord Truro, that reason is very unsatisfactory to my mind. Why should the words "well knowing" not receive their natural meaning? No reason is given. However, that is the decision. Whether the case of Briggs v. Penny was rightly or wrongly decided (and I must not forget that it affirmed the decision of a very learned Vice-Chancellor) it is distinguishable from the present case. Unless you find the words "well knowing," the case of Briggs v. Penny does not apply. Per Jessel, M. R., in Stead v. Mellor, 36 L. T., N. S., 498, 499; 46 L. J., Ch., 880, 881; 5 L. R., Ch. 4. British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson (6 L. R., Exch., 108; 40 L. J., Exch., 97). Now it appears to me that the Vice-Chancellor's decision is correct, and that the contract was completed the moment the notice of allotment was committed to the post directed to the address in Dublin, which Mr. Harris himself had given. That decision seems to me to be entirely in accordance with a great number of cases in this court, and to be utterly undistinguishable, in principle or in fact, from Dunlop v. Higgins (1 H. L. Ca. 381), a case which is binding upon us, and in which every principle argued before us was discussed at length by the Lord Chancellor in giving judgment. He arrived at the conclusion that the posting of the letter of acceptance is the completion of the contract; that is to say, the moment one man has made an offer, and the other has done something binding himself to that effect, then the contract is complete, and neither party can afterwards escape from it. That is, in fact, the decision in Hebb, Exp. (4 L. R., Eq., 9; 36 L. J., Ch., 748; 15 W. R. 754; 16 L. T., N. S., 308). Against this current of authority there is the case of the British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson, in which the Court of Exchequer—not disputing the authority of the previous decisions, because, of course, they could not dispute the authority of a case in the House of Lords—established a distinction which does not apply to this case at all. The Court there held that although the posting of the letter, if the letter arrives, is a complete contract, yet if from any cause, such as a failure of duty by the post office, the letter never arrives at all, then there is a difference. Per James, L. J., in Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, Re, Harris's case, 7 L. R., Ch., 587, 591, 592; 41 L. J., Ch., 621, 623; 20 W. R. 690; 26 L. T., N. S., 781.

I confess I have great difficulty in reconciling the case of the British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson with the previous decision in Dunlop v. Higgins. Per Mellish, L. J. 16.

8. Neither the decisions on an executor's legal right to retain an undisputed residue, nor the reasons for those decisions are reconcilable with each other, but in tracing this subject through the successive cases, there appears to be a gradual tendency towards favouring the next of kin. Browne v. M'Gwire, Beat. 365.

9. Brogden v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (2 L. R., App. Cas., 666). But when you come to the general proposition which Mr. Justice Brett seems to have laid down, that a simple acceptance in your own mind, without any intimation to the other party, and expressed by a mere private act, such as putting a letter in a drawer, completes a contract, I must say I differ from that. It appears from the year books, that as long ago as the time of Edward IV. (17 Edw. IV., T. Pasch. Cas. 2) Chief Justice Brian decided this very point. The plea of the defendant in that case justified the seizing of some growing crops, because he said the plaintiff had offered him to go and look at them, and if he liked them, and would give 2s. 6d. for them, he might take them: that was the justification. That case is referred to in a book which I published a good many years ago, Blackburn on the Contract of Sale (page 190 et seq.) and is there translated. Brian gives a very elaborate judgment, explaining the law of the unpaid vendor's lien as early as that time, exactly as the law now stands, and he consequently says, "This plea is clearly bad, as you have not shown the payment or the tender of the money;" but he goes farther, and says (I am quoting from memory, but I think I am quoting correctly), "Moreover, your plea is utterly naught, for it does not show that when you had made up your mind to take them you signified it to the plaintiff, and your having it in your own mind is nothing, for it is trite law that the thought of man is not triable, for even the devil does not know what the thought of man is; but I grant you this, that if in his offer to you he had said, Go and look at them, and if you are pleased with them, signify it to such and such a man, and if you had signified it to such and such a man, your plea would have been good, because that was a matter of fact." I take it, my lords, that that, which was said 300 years ago and more, is the law to this day, and it is quite what Lord Justice Mellish in Harris's case, Imperial Land Co of Marseilles, Re (7 L. R., Ch., 593; 41 L. J., Ch., 621; 20 W. R. 690; 26 L. T., N. S., 781), accurately says, that where it is expressly or impliedly stated in the offer that you may accept the offer by posting a letter, the moment you post the letter the offer is accepted. You are bound from the moment you post the letter, not, as it is put here, from the moment you make up your mind on the subject. Per Lord Blackburn, in Brogden v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 2 L. R., App. Cas., 666, 692.

3. Brooke's Abridgment, tit. Conscience and Subpena. In Spence's Eq. Jur. 635, it is said that equity will reform a contract for some collateral mistake upon the authority of Brooke, tit. Conscience and Subpena, pl. 4, who vouches the Year Book, 37 Hen. 6, fo. 13. The following case comes very near to relief in respect of mutual ignorance of law, both parties having, from such ignorance, made a mistake as to the material of the thing sold. "The plaintiff had purchased from the defendant certain debts that were due to him: they were assigned to him, and he gave the vendor a bond for the price. The plaintiff afterwards filed a bill to be relieved from the bond, on the ground that nothing passed to him by the assignment of the debts, they being choses in action not assignable at law. The Chancellor, with the concurrence of the justices of both benches, whom he called to his assistance, decided that the bond should be delivered up as given without consideration, 'pur ceo que le plaintiff ne poet aver quid pro quo,' and the defendant on refusal was sent to the Fleet." The case cited from Brooke is wrong, for two reasons; first, that no consideration at all is necessary for a bond; secondly, that now debts may be the subject of assignment. Per Willes, J., in Balfour v. Sea Fire Life Assurance Society, 3 C. B., N. S., 805; 3 Jur., N. S., 1304.

So again, per Willes, J., with regard to the authority cited from Brooke's Abridgment. I should have thought a much better authority might have been found for the proposition that a court of equity would prevent a party from suing upon a security, the consideration for which had failed. The Court there seem to have considered that there could not be an assignment of a debt. That doctrine has, as every one must know, long since been exploded, certainly so long since as the year 1791, and probably 200 years before, as appears from Master v. Miller (4 T. R. 340), where Buller, J., says, "It is laid down in our old books, that, for avoiding maintenance, a chose in action cannot be assigned or granted over to another, Co. Litt. 214, a, 266, a; 2 Roll. 45, c, 40. The good sense of that rule seems to me to be very questionable; and in early as well as modern times it has been so explained away that it remains at most only an objection to the form of the action in any case." However, taking the case in Brooke to be an authority, it is only an authority for this, that a bond will be relieved against, if it be shown that the consideration has failed. Id. 308.

4. Brooke v. Aston (4 Jur., N. S., 279; 5 Jur., N. S., 1025). The principle laid down in this case, that the mere application of a known process to a new article, the mode of application not being new, is not a good subject of a patent, does not apply when the process is chemical. Young v. Fernie, 4 Giff. 577; 4 N. R. 218.

But this broad proposition was not necessary to the decision of that case; and with all deference to the Master of the Rolls, if he intended to lay down the proposition thus broadly, which I doubt, I am not, as at present advised, prepared to assent to it." 2. Browne v. Browne (3 Sm. & G. 568; 26 L. J., Ch., 635) dissented from, and Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279; 13 L. J., Exch., 74), followed and preferred in Holme v. Prescott (10 Jur., N. S., 557, 33 L. J., Ch., 264; 12 W. R. 636; 11 L. T., N. S., 38; 2 N. R. 559; 1 W. R. 636).

5. Brownson v. Lawrance (37 L. J., Ch., 351, 6 L. R., Eq., 1; 18 L. T., N. S., 143). Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Sackville v. Smyth (42 L. J., Ch., 494, 495; 17 L. R., Eq., 153; 22 W. R. 179), said that he did not agree with the decision in Brownson v. Lawrance, that the mere "fact of the testator having specifically devised part of the mortgaged estate, and left the other part to pass by the general residuary gift," was sufficient to show an intention to exonerate the specifically-devised property, and that he should hold that the mortgaged hereditaments were not to be exonerated from the mortgage.

6. Brownson v. Lawrance (18 L. T., N. S., 143; 6 L. R., Eq., 1). It was admitted that if the two estates had been specifically devised, that is, if the Heyford estate had been devised by name as the Bugbrooke estate was, those two estates must have borne the mortgage debt ratably. It was not and could not be questioned that before the Wills Act (1 Vict., c. 25) every devise of land, whether given by name, or passing by a residuary devise, was specific. But it had been decided by Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, in Dady v. Hartridge (1 Dr. & Sm. 236), and Hensman v. Fryer (14 L. T., N. S., 882; 12 Jur., N. S., 681), that, since the Wills Act, a residuary devise of real estate was not specific, because the 24th section made the will speak as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator. I confess I am unable to follow the reasoning of my learned predecessor, as I cannot see any reason for a devise being less specific because the will speaks at one time instead of another. The decision of Kindersley, V.-Ch., was, however, followed by the Master of the Rolls in Rotherham v. Rotherham (26 Beav. 465) and Bethell v. Green (34 Beav. 302). But Stuart, V.-Ch., had held the contrary in Pearman v. Twiss (2 Giff. 130), and so had the present Lord Chancellor, when Vice-Chancellor, in Edwards v. Pugh, which is reported in a note to Pearmain v. Twiss (2 Giff. 135). In this conflict of opinion the decision of Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Hensman v. Fryer, was heard on appeal before Lord Chancellor Chelmsford in November 1867, and on the 3rd December in that year his lordship gave judgment reversing the decree of the Vice-Chancellor, and holding that a residuary devise of land is just as specific after the Wills Act as it was before (3 L. R., Ch., 420). It being thus settled that a residuary devise of real estate is still specific, these rights of the parties claiming under this will are just the same as if the Heyford estate had been specifically devised by name to the plaintiff and the infant defendant, from which it follows that the Bugbrooke and Heyford estates must bear the mortgage debt ratably. There must, therefore, be a reference to make the apportionment, the plaintiff and defendant being both infants, and incapable of binding themselves as to the amount. The decision of the Master of the Rolls in Brownson v. Lawrance, supra, was much pressed upon me to show that the devisees of the Heyford estate were bound to exonerate the devisees of the Bugbrooke estate from the mortgage debt. It was there held that there was an exoneration, and the decision evidently proceeded on the ground that a residuary devise of land was not specific, as his lordship himself had decided in the cases of Rotherham v. Rotherham and Bethell v. Green, to which I have before referred; and though Brownson v. Lawrance was decided three months after Lord Chelmsford had reversed the decision of Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Hensman v. Fryer, and had thereby overruled Rotherham v. Rotherham and Bethell v. Green, and though the decision of Lord Chelmsford was cited, he did not advert to it in his judgment: and I am satisfied that his decision would have been different if he had done so, for that settles the law that an estate passing by a residuary devise is specific, and takes away therefore the ground of the decision. I cannot, therefore, treat that case as an authority in favour of the contention of the defendant James Bazeley. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Gibbins v. Eydin, 20 L. T., N. S., 516, 517.

7. Brownson v. Edwards (2 Ves. 242) disapproved of in Pearson v. Rutter, 3 De G. M. & G. 398.

8. Brownson v. Edwards (2 Ves. 243). The observation sometimes made on this case, that Lord Hardwicke read "or" for "and," is not correct, and this is pointed out and explained in the case of Mortimer v. Hartley 6 Exch. 60; 3 De G. & Sm. 316. Per Lord Wensleydale in Grey v. Pearson, 6 H. L. Ca. 109; 3 Jur., N. S., 831; 26 L. J., Ch., 473; 5 W. R. 454. Not being called upon to say whether, upon the grounds pointed out by Lord Hardwicke, that case (Brownson v. Edwards) was or was not rightly decided, I shall only observe that I conceive that either it was not rightly decided, or that, if rightly, it was so decided upon principles not governing this case. Per Cranworth, C.—This brings me to the case of Brownson v. Edwards, which was so much discussed at the bar, and I must without reserve say that I consider it a binding authority, and I entirely subscribe to Lord Hardwicke's doctrine in it. Per Lord St. Leonards.—This case has not been followed by any uniform course of other decisions, so as to make it binding upon us in the construction of similar words in this will. On the contrary, it is directly impugned by that of Doe d. Usher v. Jessop, 12 East 288. Per Lord Wensleydale, 6 H. L. Ca. 110.

9. Lord Hardwicke's opinion in Brownson v. Edwards (2 Ves. 243) followed in Collingwood v. Russell, 13 W. R. 63; 5 N. R. 1.

1. Brutton v. St. George, Hanover Square (13 L. R., Eq., 339; 41 L. J., Ch., 184; 25 L. T. 552; 20 W. R. 84). When the case came before the magistrate, he was at first inclined to think that the limitation clause did not apply to this case; but, upon being pressed with the case of Brutton v. St. George, Hanover Square, he decided that this was a case in which it was sought to make the defendant liable for the payment of a penalty or forfeiture under the Act (25 & 26 Vict., c. 102), within s. 107. I am, however, unable to see that this is a proceeding for "penalty or forfeiture" within that section. I think the magistrate very properly deferred to the opinion of Malins, V.-Ch., and dismissed the summons. But now that the matter has come before us, with every disposition to give due weight to an opinion expressed by a judge of the Court of Chancery, I am unable to give my assent to the view of the Vice-Chancellor in that case. There the vestry had proceeded against the builder, and not against the owner, and the summons was not issued until after the work was completed, and more than six months after the structure had been discovered to be so far advanced as to show the full extent of the projection complained of. Vice-Chancellor Malins decided against the vestry. But I find that, although it was brought under his notice that s. 107 did not apply to the case, he did not in his judgment take any notice of that argument. Having decided the real point in the case, he does go on to the other question in a way which shows that he assumed s. 107 to be applicable. In differing from that impression, therefore, we cannot be said to overrule a decision by which we might otherwise have felt ourselves bound. Per Keating, J., in Bermondsey Vestry v. Johnson, 8 L. R., C. P., 441, 445, 446; 42 L. J., M. C., 67; 28 L. T. 665; 21 W. R. 626.

I also agree with my brother Keating that, if we had found a deliberate expression of opinion by Vice-Chancellor Malins on the subject, we ought to have hesitated long before we came to a contrary conclusion. Per Honyman, J. 1b.

2. Bryden v. Willett (7 L. R., Eq., 472). James, V.-Ch., could not agree with the decision in that case, that the word "having" meant "having had." Watson, Re, 39 L. J., Ch., 770; 10 L. R., Eq., 36; 18 W. R. 642.

4. Buch v. Robson (3 L. R., Q. B. D., 686; 48 L. J., Q. B., 250; 39 L. T. 325; 26 W. R. 804) followed in Fisher v. Culvert, 27 W. R. 301.

5. Buckell v. Blenkhorn (5 Hare 131) overruled in Taylor v. Meads, 11 Jur., N. S., 166; 13 W. R. 394. Per Lord Westbury, C.

6. Buckell v. Blenkhorn (5 Hare 131) observed upon in Collard v. Sampson, 17 Jur. 641; 22 L. J., Ch., 729; 67 Beav. 543; 4 De G. M. & G. 224; 1 Eq. Rep. 262.

7. Buckell v. Blenkhorn (5 Hare 140) decided by Wigram, V.-Ch., and followed by the Master of the Rolls, in Man v. Ricketts (7 Beav. 95); though he expressed, however, his dissatisfaction with it, the decision being, that because it was a testamentary instrument, one of the requisites which the power prescribed—the seal—might be dispensed with. It was matter of surprise that so careful a judge as Sir James Wigram should so have decided. The case, however, came before the lords justices (Collard v. Sampson, 4 De G. M. & G. 224), and they refused to follow it. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Orange v. Pickford, 4 Jur., N. S., 649, 650.

8. Buckell v. Blenkhorn (5 Hare 131) not followed in West v. Ray, 1 Kay 385; 23 L. J., Ch., 447; 2 Eq. Rep. 431; 2 W. R. 319.

9. Buckland, Re (1 F. N. R. 250), overruled in Matheson, Exp., 1 De G. M. & G. 448, and in Copeland, Exp., 2 De G. M. & G. 914.

10. Buckton v. Hay (11 L. R., Ch. D., 645; 48 L. J., Ch., 563; 27 W. R. 527) observed upon in Herbert v. Webster, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 610; 49 L. J., Ch., 620.

11. Buden v. Dore (2 Ves. 445) seems overruled. See note there.

12. Bulkeley or Buckeley v. Wilford (2 Cl. & F. 102; 8 Bli. N. S. 11) distinguished in Lysaght v. M'Grath, 11 L. R., Ir., 142.

13. Bulkeley v. Schutz (3 L. R., P. C., 674; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 170) followed in Bateman v. Service, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 386; 50 L. J., P. C., 41; 44 L. T. 436.

14. Bulmer v. Jay (4 Sim. 48; 3 Myl. & K. 197) has, to say the least, been disapproved of by Lord Cottenham, who, in Daniel v. Dudley (1 Ph. 1, 7) says that the case of Bulmer v. Jay "stands alone." Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Page v. Sloper, 11 Hare 323; 17 Jur. 851; 22 L. J., Ch., 1044; 1 W. R. 518; 1 Eq. R. 540.

15. Buonaparte, The (8 Moo. P. C. 459). This brings their lordships to the consideration of that objection, and it is impossible for them not to perceive that, in dealing with it in the court below, it has been considered that it derived whatever weight it was entitled to from the decision of this committee, in the case of the Buonaparte, which it was supposed had introduced a new rule of decision into this branch of maritime law. Whether this supposition be correct or not, undoubtedly, if in itself that decision was both rightly understood below, and also rightly applied to the circumstances of this case, the learned judge could only determine the case before him as he has done. The important sentence in that judgment is to be found in p. 470, and is as follows:—"That it is an universal rule that the master, if in a state of distress or pressure, before hypothecating the cargo, must communicate, or even endeavour to communicate, with the owner of the cargo, has not been alleged, and is a position that could not be maintained; but it may safely, both on authority and on principle, be said that, in general, it is his duty to do so, or it is his duty, in general, to attempt to do so." This sentence is followed by one which in the report is printed as follows:—"If, according to the circumstances in which he is placed, it is reasonable that he should, it was rational to expect that he might obtain an answer within a time not inconvenient with reference to the circumstances of the case; it must be taken, therefore, upon authority and principle, that it is the duty of the master to do so, or at least to make the attempt." This passage is obviously inaccurate. The judgment was not written, but appears to have been printed from a shorthand writer's note. It is not, however, difficult to collect what really was said by the learned judge, and with a slight correction of the text, would stand thus:—"If, according to the circumstances in which he is placed, it be reasonable that he should—if it be rational to expect that he may obtain an answer within a time not inconvenient with reference to the circumstances of the case, then it must be taken upon authority and principle, that it is the duty of the master to do so, or at least to make the attempt." That this is the true wording of the passage we have ascertained by communicating with Lord Justice Knight Bruce, who delivered the judgment. It is a most important passage, and the complement and explanation of what goes before. The preceding sentence states that it is the duty of the master in certain circumstances to make an attempt to make the communication, and this sentence explains what the circumstances are in which this duty is imposed upon him. It shows what the learned judge understood by the expression "in general," if such words were used by him. The reporter has accurately stated in his marginal note the general rule established by the decision, though he has unfortunately omitted to correct the press in that portion of the judgment in which it is expressed. In the rule thus enunciated their lordships are unable to discern any novelty, either in the principle on which it rests, or in its application to the case. Per Lord Chelmsford, P.C., in Duranty v. Hart, 10 Jur., N. S., 600, 602.

1. Burder v. O'Neil (9 Jur., N. S., 1109) first doubted by the Privy Council in Berney v. Norvich (Bishop) (36 L. J., Ecc. Cas., 10; 1 L. R., Ecc. Cas., 281), and reversed in Norvich (Bishop) v. Pearse (37 L. J., Ecc. Cas., 90, by Sir Robert Phillimore); and in a criminal suit under 3 & 4 Vict., c. 86, against a clergyman, he is competent and compellable to give evidence.

2. The principle of Burdett v. Abbott (14 East 137), as to the lex et consuetudo parliamenti examined in Keilley v. Carson, 4 Moo. P. C. 63; 7 Jur. 137.

3. Burdett v. Spilsbury (10 Cl. & F. 340) observed upon in Vincent v. Sodor and Man (Bishop), 4 De G. & Sm. 294.

4. Burdick v. Garrick (39 L. J., Ch., 661; 5 L. R., Ch., 453; 22 L. T., N. S., 502). (As to costs of staying proceedings during pendency of appeal to the House of Lords) not followed in Merry v. Nicholls, 42 L. J., Ch., 479; 8 L. R., Ch., 205; 21 W. R. 305; 28 L. T., N. S., 296.

5. Burgess v. Burgess (3 De G. M. & G. 896; 22 J. J., Ch., 675). As to the case of Burgess v. Burgess, which was much relied upon on the part of the defendant, I confess it has always seemed to me rather a strong decision, though it was undoubtedly the rule of the Court. But in that case there did not appear to have been any distinctive label. Had the words "late of 107, Strand," which the defendant in that case painted over his shop door (and was restrained from so doing) been also printed on the labels of "Burgess's essence of anchovies," the decision of Lord Justice Knight Bruce would probably have been different. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Schulze v. Atkins, 16 W. R. 1080.

6. Burgess v. Eve (13 L. R., Eq., 450; 41 L. J., Ch., 515; 26 L. T. 540; 20 W. R. 311) distinguished in Lloyds v. Harper, 49 L. J., Ch., 217; 42 L. T. 218; 28 W. R. 419.

7. The dicta and opinions of Sir Thomas Clarke, in Burgess v. Wheate (1 Eden), and Lord St. Leonards, in his Treatise on Vendors and Purchasers. Commented on in Wythes v. Lee, 4 W. R. 184; 3 Drew. 396; 25 L. J., Ch., 177; 2 Jur., N. S., 7; 26 L. T. 192. S. C. on appeal 4 W. R. 316; 25 L. J., Ch., 389; 2 Jur., N. S., 130.

8. Burgess v. Wheate (1 Eden 177). With regard to the decision in Burgess v. Wheate, it might, or might not, be desirable that a different law should exist; but after a decision which has established a most important point of law for a hundred years, and upon which so many titles depend, it would be a great evil if the House of Lords were to reverse the decision in that case. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Sweeting v. Sweeting, 33 L. J., Ch., 211, 215.

13. Condition for marriage, with consent and approbation, with a limitation over on marriage, without such consent or approbation. Lord Hardwicke's opinion in Burleton v. Humphries (Ambl. 256), holding approbation, eleven months after marriage, sufficient, denied by Lord Thurlow. Clarke v. Parker, 19 Ves. 21.

14. Burn v. Burn (3 Ves. 573) was a case to be followed, but not to be extended. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Ferguson v. Gibson, 41 L. J., Ch., 640, 643; 14 L. R., Eq., 379.

15. Burn v. Carvalho (4 B. & Ad. 382; 1 N. & M. 883). We had held in the King's Bench in that case, that there was no legal or equitable assignment of the goods, but Lord Cottenham said (4 Myl. & Cr. 690), that though we were right at law, we were wrong in equity. Per Lord Wensleydale in Hoare v. Dresser, 7 H. L. Ca. 290, 308.

16. Burn v. Maddon (Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 493) discussed in French v. Macale, 2 Dr. & War. 269; in 1 Con. & L. 459; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 568.

1. Bush v. Fox (5 H. L. Ca. 707; 2 Jur., N. S., 1029). The dictum of Lord Cranworth, "that it is the duty of the Court to compare the two specifications of a patent together," is an obiter dictum, and cannot be taken as a declaration of the law, and expressly repudiated in Hills v. Evans, 8 Jur., N. S., 525. Per Westbury, C.

2. Bush's case, Imperial Rubber Co., Re (30 L. T., N. S., 458; 9 L. R., Ch., 554; 43 L. J., Ch., 772; 22 W. R. 699. Affirming 22 W. R. 685; 30 L. T., N. S., 458), explained. I think it desirable to say, as the appellant appears to have been misled by the marginal note to Bush's case, that the notion that shares are only issued when the certificates are issued, is a blunder which could hardly be attributed to us. Per James, L. J., in Blyth's case, Heaton's Steel and Iron Co., Re, 36 L. T., N. S., 124, 125; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 140; 25 W. R. 200.

9. Caillaud's Patent Tanning Co. v. Caillaud (26 Beav. 427; 5 Jur., N. S., 259) (as to security for costs by a limited liability company). I do not understand the case cited, as it is reported. It appears by the report that I did not call on the counsel for the plaintiffs, but that, upon the statements of the affidavits, which were uncontradicted, I declined to make the order. There must have been some counter evidence which influenced me. Per Romilly, M. R., in Isle of Wight and Southampton Steamboat Co. v. Rawlins, 9 Jur., N. S., 888.

10. Caldwell v. Gregory (1 Price 129) overruled. Mont. 365.

11. Caledonian and Dumbartonshire Railway Co. v. St. Helensburgh (Magistrates) (2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 391). That decision, as to the authority of which no one ought to entertain any doubt, proceeding as it did from the highest branch of judicature, went to this extent, and to this only: "that what directors cannot do after the incorporation of a company, provisional directors certainly cannot do before, for the purpose of binding the shareholders of the company. They cannot spend the money of their shareholders before their Act is passed, for the purposes for which they would not be allowed to spend it after the passing of the Act."  11. Carter v. Carter (3 Kay & J. 618; 27 L. J., Ch., 74) disapproved of by the Lords Justices James and Mellish, but defended by Lord Hatherley, C., in Pileher v. Rawlins (41 L. J., Ch., 485; 7 L. R., Ch., 259; 25 L. T., N. S., 921; 20 W. R. 281). The case of Carter v. Carter held, that, although you may get in any outstanding interest which a person may bond fide assign to you, you having notice of the intervening circumstances, and he not having any such notice, you cannot get an assignment from a trustee who has himself another duty to perform, and makes over to you that estate to protect you against those interests which he was bound to protect. That case has been quarrelled with and, to a considerable extent, overruled in the recent case of Pileher v. Rawlins (7 L. R., Ch., 259; 41 L. J., Ch., 485), by the Lords Justices, sitting with Lord Hatherley, who had decided Carter v. Carter, and who still adhered to his opinion. Per Chatterton, V.-Ch., in Monckton v. Braddell, 6 L. 19. Cary v. Hills (15 L. R., Eq., 79; 42 L. J., Ch., 100; 28 L. T., N. S., 6; 21 W. R. 166) observed upon in Rossell v. Morris, 17 L. R., Eq., 20, 22, 23; 22 W. R. 67.

20. Cary v. Hills (15 L. R., Eq., 79; 42 L. J., Ch., 100; 28 L. T. 6; 21 W. R. 166). The Master of the Rolls having decided a case of Cary v. Hills, the case of Rayner v. Koehler (14 L. R., Eq., 262; 41 L. J., Ch., 697; 27 L. T., N. S., 506; 20 W. R. 859), having been cited to him, the reporters have inserted in head-note "Rayner v. Koehler, not followed." Finding that in a head-note, I expected at least that the Master of the Rolls would have given some reason why he did not follow it. Possibly it escaped his notice altogether, and he did not even know of it, and from what I know of the Master of the Rolls, I think that if he had intended to dissent from me, he would at least have paid me the respect of stating the ground of his dissent when I had so explicitly decided this case in the month of July preceding. No notice appears to have been taken of it however. Therefore I cannot regard the Master of the Rolls as deciding contrary to me, and even if he had, I am sure I should feel constrained, with the most perfect respect, to decide in accordance with my own decision in Rayner v. Koehler. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Coot v. Whittington, 16 L. R., Eq., 534, 543, 544; 21 W. R. 839; 29 L. T. 206.
21. Case v. Drosier (2 Keen 764; 6 L. J., Ch., N. S., 353; on appeal, 5 Myl. & Cr. 246). That case is of the highest authority, from the care with which it was argued, and the judges (Lords Langdale and Cottenham) by whom it was decided. It may be observed, that the construction assumed by both judges as to the true one of the limitations there, and by virtue of which it becomes applicable here, has been since established as correct by a decision of the House of Lords in the case of Baker v. Tucker, 3 H. L. Ca. 106. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Sykes v. Sykes, 41 L. J., Ch., 25, 29; 13 L. R., Eq. 56; 25 L. T. 560; 20 W. R. 90.

2. Casson v. Roberts (31 Beav. 613; 32 L. J., Ch., 105). With regard to this case, I do not think it has much bearing upon the present question, but I must say that I do not think the reasons upon which it proceeded are satisfactory. Per Quain, J., in Thomas v. Brown, 1 L. R., Q. B. D., 714, 724; 45 L. J., Q. B., 811; 24 W. R. 821; 35 L. T. 237.

3. Caton v. Caton (34 L. J., Ch., 564; on appeal to the Lord Chancellor, 35 L. J., Ch., 292; 1 L. R., Ch., 137; on appeal to the House of Lords, 36 L. J., Ch., 886; 2 L. R., H. L. Ca., 127). I think that Lord Cottenham and the House of Lords, in Hammersley v. De Biel (Baron) (12 Cl. & F. 45, 62. n.), through Lord Brougham and Lord Campbell, have, with the utmost care, stated the doctrine as it really ought to prevail in this court. Lord Cottenham in that case, when it was before him as Lord Chancellor (12 Cl. & F. 62. n.), said, "A representation made by one party for the purpose of influencing the conduct of the other party, and acted on by him, will, in general, be sufficient to entitle him to the assistance of this court for the purpose of realising such representation." That I conceive to be an accurate statement of the equitable principle which governs this court. No doubt it may be said that there is no uniformity of decisions on the subject, and that the principle has not always been adhered to. In Jorden v. Money (5 H. L. Ca. 185; 23 L. J., Ch., 865) it was not adhered to. In a very recent decision of the House of Lords, it seems to me to have been violated. The case of Caton v. Caton (supra) was one in which a representation had been made to a lady on the occasion of her marriage, that the husband would by will make a certain provision for her. A will was actually prepared and made according to that representation, yet it was held that the husband was entitled to set that representation at naught, and to leave his wife to survive him and become his widow with a non-performance of the representation, and that representation one of so serious a nature. That case, I admit, was so decided. I can, however, only think that it was so decided in consequence of the extraordinary and peculiar circumstances of the case itself, and in obedience to the view entertained by Lord Cranworth with respect to it. That view appears to me to have been taken by him entirely in opposition to the principles laid down by Lord Cottenham, and acted upon and repeated by Lord Brougham and by Lord Campbell in the case of Hammersley v. De Biel. There are, moreover, subsequent cases in this court in which that of Hammersley v. De Biel has been followed. I must, therefore, consider that Lord Cottenham's decision of that case in this court, and the authentication and confirmation of his decision by the House of Lords upon the appeal to them, fortified by the grounds and reasons then stated in the judgments of Lord Brougham and Lord Campbell, have established the authority of it on impregnable grounds. . . . It was said, however, in the argument of the present case, that, in that of Gulliver, Re (2 Jur., N. S., 701), I had decided in a way contrary to Hammersley v. De Biel. To say that in that case I departed in the least from the doctrine laid down by Lord Cottenham, in Hammersley v. De Biel, is a mistake. Indeed, I referred to that case, when I decided that of Gulliver, Re, and I considered the evidence there adduced before me to be too loose and not specific enough as to the sum, and insufficient to prove that the representation had been made to the proper person. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Williams v. Williams, 37 L. J., Ch., 854, 857, 858.

4. Chadwick v. Doleman (2 Vern. 528). The principle of this case does not apply to a younger son succeeding to the reversion of the settled estates not under the settlement under which portions were created, but by descent. *Sing v. 1. Chapman v. Brown (6 Ves. 404) has been relied upon, but the case of Dundee Magistrates v. Morris (3 Macq. H. L. 19. Christian v. Corren (1 P. W. 329). The case of Christian v. Corren really proves nothing. The argument is the argument of Mr. Peere Williams himself, for it is not the judgment of the Court. No doubt Peere Williams is a great authority as a reporter, a very learned person, and I believe a very accurate reporter he is generally allowed to be; but what he says there is no part of the judgment of the Court. He says, even if there be express words in the charter, excluding the right of the subject, those words shall not be held to deprive the subject of his common law right of appeal to the Crown, in order that justice may not fail. The Court, which was assisted in that case by Lord Chief Justice Parker, in giving their judgment, proceeds upon no such ground. They only say, in this case there is nothing to take away the general right of appeal, which is necessary to prevent a failure of justice. And Lord Chief Justice Parker, in that case, observes that the Court of Chancery, even in the case of a proceeding of a copyhold court, if anything were done against good conscience, would review it, and would direct that the Court should re-assemble for the purpose of acting more conscientiously. But it is certain that that case was not borne out by the judgment of the Court of Chancery, when an attempt was made in a case before Lord Jeffries, Lord Chancellor, which had been very much considered at the Rolls by Mr. Sergeant Trevor, who was then Master of the Rolls, and where such a power to interfere was wholly denied, Ash v. Rogie, 1 Vern. 367. It is quite unnecessary, however, to enter into that, because it is quite sufficient to observe that the Lord Chief Justice, in granting that right of appeal which has been contended against, does not in the slightest degree bear out the generality of Mr. Peere Williams' argument. Per Lord Brougham, P. C., in Reg v. Alloo Paroo, 5 Moo. P. C. 296, 302; 11 Jur. 857.

20. Christian v. Goldie (2 Moo. P. C. 226) observed upon in Birnie v. Caystile, 9 Moo. P. C. 303, 324.

21. Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Mer. 320) disapproved in Hall v. Woolley, 39 L. J., Ch., 106, by Malins, V.-Ch., and commented on in Phillips v. Phillips, 10 Jur., N. S., 1173; 13 W. R. 170; 11 L. T., N. S., 472; 5 N. R. 102.

22. Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Meriv. 362) overruled in Potter, Re, 20 L. T., N. S., 649; 8 L. R., Eq., 52; 39 L. J., Ch., 102. Per Malins, V.-Ch.—I take Christopherson v. Naylor still to be an authoritative case, established, if necessary, by a recent recognition of it by the Lord Chancellor, when sitting as Lord Justice, so lately as on the 8th June 1868, in Gowling v. Thompson. That I set off against the express overruling of the case by V.-Ch. Malins in Potter, Re. Per James, V.-Ch., in Hotchkiss, Re, 8 L. R., Eq., 643, 648.

23. I think that this case is clearly within the rule of Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Meriv. 320), which I hold to be still a binding authority; and I consider that it does not come within any of the distinctions which have been taken in the cases to which I have been referred, where the rule of Christopherson v. Naylor was held excluded. At the same time, following Christopherson v. Naylor, I do not think I am overruling Potter, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 52), there being, as it seems to me, a substantial distinction between the two cases. Per James, V.-Ch., in Hotchkiss, Re, 8 L. R., Eq., 643, 650.

1. Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Meriv. 320). I agree entirely with what Lord Justice James, when V.-Ch., said in Hotchkiss, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 643), as to the unseemliness of courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction coming to contrary decisions in similar cases. Whatever has been said as to the decision in the case of Christopherson v. Naylor, that decision has been followed by a long head-roll of authorities, subsequent in point of time as well as prior to the decisions of the Vice-Chancellors Stuart and Malins impugning that decision, and has been upon two, if not more, occasions cited without disapproval in the Court of Appeal in Chancery, to the position and jurisdiction of which this Court has succeeded. Under such circumstances I do not feel myself at liberty to question the principles of decision which were laid down in that case, and which form the foundation of the judgment in it. Per Thesiger, L. J., in West v. Orr, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 60, 68; 33 L. T., N. S., 5, 8; 26 W. R. 409.

5. Clache's case (Dyer 33, b.) observed upon in Atkinson v. Barton, 8 Jur., N. S., 902; 31 L. J., Ch., 410.

6. Clare v. Clare (Foirest. 21) is overruled by Sabarton v. Sabarton, id. 245. See 3 Ves. 616.

8. Clare v. Clare (21 L. R., Ch. D., 865; 51 L. J., Ch., 553; 46 L. T. 851; 30 W. R. 789) not followed in McEwan v. Crombie, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 175; 53 L. J., Ch., 24; 49 L. T. 499; 32 W. R. 115.

9. Clark v. Browne (2 Sm. & Giff. 524). I must say I cannot reconcile that case with the doctrine of ademption. If a man by will gives a debt, and he is paid that debt in his lifetime, and with the money buys a horse or a perpetual annuity, the horse or annuity does not pass. That one authority does not seem to me to be consistent with the ordinary rules of law on the question of ademption. Per Jessel, M. R., in Harrison v. Jackson, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 339, 343; 47 L. J., Ch., 142.

10. Clark v. Clark (1 L. R., Ch., 16; 11 Jur., N. S., 914; 35 L. J., Ch., 151; 14 W. R. 115; 13 L. T., N. S., 482). The remarks of Cranworth, C., in his judgment in this case, gave rise to the supposition that in cases of injunctions to restrain an interference with light and air, a greater amount of diminution of light and air by reason of the obstruction complained of must be shown in the case of a populous town than in the open country. Such a principle appears to have been acted upon by the Lords Justices in Durell v. Pritchard (1 L. R., Ch., 224; 14 W. R. 212; 13 L. T., N. S., 545) and Robson v. Whittingham (1 L. R., Ch., 442; 35 L. J., Ch., 227; 13 L. T., N. S., 730). But the doctrine was apparently repudiated in Yates v. Jack (1 L. R., Ch., 295; 14 W. R. 618; 14 L. T., N. S., 152); and the decisions of Wood, V.-Ch., in Dent v. Auction Mart Co. (2 L. R., Eq., 238; 35 L. J., Ch., 555); and of Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Martin v. Headon (2 L. R., Eq., 425; 12 Jur., N. S., 387; 35 L. J., Ch., 602; 14 W. R. 723; 14 L. T., N. S., 585), have proceeded upon the assumption that such a doctrine does not exist.

11. Clark v. Freeman (11 Beav. 112) not approved in Rivière's Trade Mark, Re, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 53.

12. Clark v. Grant (14 Ves. 519). Mr. Karslake very properly relied upon the reported judgment in that case. But the case is one in which the reported judgment, unless it be read with the strictest reference to the remarkable circumstances of the case itself, would be wholly unintelligible. . . . The material and guiding fact of that case is this: not only was the agreement by parol to give the defendant the choice of the particular piece of land clearly proved to have been so made, but it was acted upon; for we find that the defendant was put into possession, not of the half acre mentioned in the agreement, but of the other half acre which he had chosen according to the parol understanding. Not only that,—not only was he so put into possession and enjoyment of the half acre,—but he had been six years in that enjoyment and possession, upon the parol modification of the written agreement, before the bill in the suit was filed against him. That was the ground of Sir William Grant's decision; and it would have been monstrous had he decided the case otherwise than he did, possession having followed the parol agreement. Because possession and part performance are, according to the established doctrines of this court, matters which will relieve the case from the obstacle of the Statute of Frauds. I mention the facts of that case to show how very easy it is, upon a doctrine so extremely difficult, and depending upon such refined circumstances as that involved in the present case, to fancy others are applicable, which, however, when thoroughly understood, afford no countenance to the arguments they are advanced to support. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Dear v. Verity, 38 L. J., Ch., 297, 302, 303.

4. Clavering v. Westley (3 P. W. 402), so far as it might be an authority for the recovery of rent as an equitable debt, disapproved in Walters v. Northern Coal Mining Co., 5 De M. & G. 629; 2 Jur., N. S., 1; 25 L. J., Ch., 633.

5. Clavering's case (5 Ves. 690) considered in Bankart v. Tennant, 10 L. R., Eq., 131; 39 L. J., Ch., 809; 23 L. T., N. S., 137.

8. Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 572) discussed in Sandham, Exp., 4 Dea & Ch. 818.

9. Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 572). The difficulty probably has arisen from the bankers not being aware of the rule in Clayton's case in Devaux v. Noble (1 Mer 572), which has always been acted on since, that payments not specifically appropriated are to be attributed to the payment of the earliest of several debts. Per Romilly, M.R., Mulane, Re, 26 Beav. 558, 592.

10. Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 572) followed in Pennell v. Duffell, 1 De G. M. & G. 372, 18 Jur. 273; 23 L. J., Ch., 115; and Annard v. Webster, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 139; 48 L. J., Ch., 318; 39 L. T. 494; 27 W. R. 212, and distinguished in Hallett's Estate, Re, Knatchbull v. Hallett, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 696, 49 L. J., Ch., 415; 42 L. T. 421; 28 W. R. 732.

11. Clements v. Clifford (11 Jur., N. S., 851). Upon motion ex parte on application of a plaintiff, the Court will order defendants who have disclaimed, to be dismissed from the suit, with their costs, without prejudice to the question how such costs are ultimately to be borne. See Wigginton v. Pateman (12 Jur. 69); Knight Bruce, V.-Ch., contra, where Baily v. Lambert (15 Hare 178, 10 Jur 109) was only cited.

12. Clindennin v. O'Keeffe, 1 Hog. 118. This case was cited before, and approved of by Lord Lyndhurst, in Begbie v. Beale, MS., May 1834.

13. Clinton v. Hooper (1 Ves. J. 187) disapproved of in Hudson v. Carmichael, 1 Kay 613; 18 Jur. 851; 23 L. J., Ch., 893.

14. Clive v. Clive (Kay 600). This decision in Clive v. Clive turned upon the peculiar wording of the clause of the deed of settlement in that case. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Wright v. Tuckett, 1 John. & H. 266.

15. Clogstoun v. Walcott (13 Sim. 523). I think all the authorities are consistent with this view of the case, except Clogstoun v. Walcott. But I do not think that case can be reconciled with Elliott v. Elliott (15 Sim. 321) or with Corn v. Foster (1 John. & H. 30), to say nothing of Ferrier v. Jay (10 L. R., Eq., 550; 39 L. J., Ch., 686; 23 L. T. 302; 18 W. R. 1130), so that case creates no difficulty. Per Lord Selbourne, C., in Teape's Trusts, Re, 16 L. R., Eq., 442, 446; 28 L. T. 799; 21 W. R. 780; 43 L. J., Ch., 87.

16. Crough v. Ratcliffe (1 De G. & Sm. 164). I think that case has been overruled in a recent case, where the Lords Justices held that a court of equity may entertain a suit merely to declare a will valid. Per Willes, J., in Hall v. M'Farlane, 2 C. B., N. S., 803.

17. Crough v. Ratcliffe (1 De G. & Sm. 164) distinguished in Hodges v. Wale, 2 W. R. 65.

18. Clones v. Higginson (1 Ves. & B. 524). With respect to that case, Sir Edward Sugden, in his excellent treatise, has noticed as a criticism on the elaborate judgment of Sir Thomas Plumer, that that judge did not distinguish between two sets of cases which have occurred in these courts (Sugden on Vendors and Purchasers, 13th ed., 132). Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Dear v. Verity, 38 L. J., Ch., 297, 302.

19. Coalville v. Wood (2 C. B. 210) commented on in Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co., 9 L. R., App. Cas., 49; 53 L. J., Q. B., 50; 49 L. T. 541; 32 W. R. 432. Reversing 10 L. R., Q. B. D., 337; 52 L. J., Q. B., 90; 47 L. T. 504; 31 W. R. 359.

20. Cobbett v. Woodward (14 L. R., Eq., 407; 41 L. J., Ch., 656; 27 L. T. 27; 20 W. R. 963) overruled in Maple v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 369; 31 W. R. 70; 47 L. T. 589; 52 L. J., Ch., 67.

21. Cockell v. Taylor (15 Beav. 103; 21 L. J., Ch., 545), observed upon in Barnard v. Hunter, 2 Jur., N. S., 1213; 5 W. R. 92.

22. Cockroft v. Sutcliffe (25 L. J., Ch., 313; 5 W. R. 340). To hold the deed to be void would be what I fear is too much the tendency of technical rules; it would be to strain a rule, intended for the purpose of benefiting the objects of the power, to a rigid exactness which inflicts a plain and manifest injury on them. This appears to me to be the evil attempted to be avoided by Lord Eldon in McQueen v. Farquhar (11 Ves. 467), and also in the case of Cockroft v. Sutcliffe, which is a still stronger case, and which appears to me to be a most valuable decision. There a tenant for life with a power of appointment among his children appointed to two of them, and then joined with them in a mortgage, the money being expressed to be advanced to all three, and it was held by Lord Hatherley, then Wood, V.-Ch., that this was no fraud on the power of appointment. I adopt that case in its fullest extent. The meaning and the good sense of the rule appear to be that if the appointor, either directly or indirectly, obtains any exclusive advantage for himself, and that to obtain this advantage is the object and the reason of its being made, then the appointment is bad; but that if the whole transaction taken together shows no such object, but only shows an intention to improve the whole subject-matter of the appointment for the benefit of all the objects of the power, then the exercise of the power is not fraudulent or void, although by the force of circumstances such improvement cannot be bestowed on the property which is the subject of the appointment without the appointor to some extent participating therein. Per Lord Romilly

M. R., in Huish's Charity, Re, 22 L. T., N. S., 565, 566, 567; 10 L. R., Eq., 5; 39 L. J., Ch., 499; 18 W. R. 817.

1. Cockle v. Joyce (7 L. R., Ch. D., 56; 26 W. R. 41). When this case came before me I was at first disposed to think that the defendant need not prove that he had been served with notice of trial. But I was told by the registrar that the practice was to require proof of the service. Lows, Exp. & Re (7 L. R., Ch. D., 160; 37 L. T., N. S., 533), however, appears to be a case in point, and upon its authority I now hold that the defendant need not prove that he has been served with notice of trial, and I give judgment for him with costs. Per Fry, J., in James v. Crow, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 410, 411; 47 L. J., Ch., 200; 26 W. R. 236; 31 L. T., N. S., 649.

3. Coffin v. Cooper (34 L. J., Ch., 692; 12 L. T. 106; 13 W. R. 571; 2 Dr. & Sm. 365) approved and followed in Palmer v. Locke, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 294; 50 L. J., Ch., 113; 43 L. T. 454; 23 W. R. 926.

4. Cogan v. Stevens (5 L. J., Ch., 17; S. C. Lewin on Trusts, App. 911, 3rd ed.), although as a decision at the Rolls, I am not bound by it, and, if I thought otherwise, I could come to a different conclusion, yet I conceive it is so consistent with all reason and justice, that one would not disturb it, and certainly I should be the very last to disturb or quarrel with it. 10. Collier v. McBean (34 Beav. 426; 13 W. R. 766; and on appeal, 1 L. R., Ch., 81; 14 W. R. 156). A good many years ago William Collier, the father, attempted to sell the estate; the purchaser objected to the title, and therefore a suit of Collier v. McBean was instituted, which came on to be heard before my predecessor, Lord Romilly. Upon the hearing of that suit, which was for specific performance, his lordship determined two things: first of all that the purchaser was not to take the title, because it was bad; and, secondly, that according to the true construction of the will the estate taken by the trustees was what I may call a determinable fee. His lordship says, at p. 430, "I am of opinion that, though the estate taken by the trustees was a fee simple estate, still that it was one determinable on the payment of the debts and legacies, and the decease of William Collier." So that he decided that the title was bad, and because they took a determinable fee. The case went upon appeal, and I am sorry to say the Lords Justices appear to me to come to a decision quite as contrary to law as the decision of Lord Romilly was, because they decided that they could not force the title on the purchaser, one Lord Justice being of opinion that the title was good, and the other not appearing to have dissented. I may say so now without difficulty, because that class of decisions has been since overruled by a decision of the Court of Appeal in Alexander v. Mills (6 L. R., Ch., 124; 19 W. R. 310), therefore I am entitled to say that the decision in Collier v. McBean, in the Appeal Court, was not according to law. Now comes the singularity of the case. In that state of the authorities, I felt a difficulty (though I thought the decision altogether erroneous) in overruling a decision come to on a former occasion by my predecessor, and I declined to do it. The case was therefore, at my request, taken before the present Court of Appeal, and they gave me leave to consider the case, as if I was not bound by the decisions of Lord Romilly, or the opinion expressed by Knight Bruce, L. J., on appeal. Therefore I was free to consider it as if there were no authority on the question. Now comes another singular point. When the case was on before, the counsel for the plaintiff naturally asserted that I was bound by the decision of Lord Romilly, and I thought I was, until I was freed from it, but when the case came on to be argued, and I was not to be bound by that decision, neither counsel asserts that that decision is right, but both positively abandon it, and the junior counsel on consideration say that they cannot support the decision. That is a very strong and a very peculiar circumstance. His lordship having determined according to the true construction of the will that there was a determinable fee, neither of the counsel for the plaintiff will argue in support of that proposition at all. In fact, there is no case at all to be found like it; no such determinable fee was ever heard of, and it appears to me that the whole decision was founded on a simple misapprehension of what the law as to real property is when applied to the case of such devisees as we are now dealing with. I should not perhaps have expressed myself so strongly if it had not been for the singular fact that neither counsel has even endeavoured to support it. There is not an authority to be found for any such determinable fee. I have looked at an enormous number of cases (I am afraid to count them) to see if I could find it, but I have been quite as unsuccessful as the counsel for the plaintiff, and I think there is no such case to be found. I think, therefore, I may dismiss the interpretation of the will given by Lord Romilly as being utterly untenable. Per Jessel, M. R., in Collier v. Watters, 29 L. T., N. S., 868, 870; 22 W. 7. Cooke v. Cranford (13 Sim. 91) commented on and held to have been misunderstood in Wilson v. Bennett, 5 De G. & Sm. 475; 16 Jur. 966; 21 L. J., Ch., 741.

8. Cooke v. Cranford (13 Sim. 91) distinguished in Saloway v. Strambridge, 1 Kay & J. 371; 24 L. J., Ch., 393. Affirmed 1 Jur., N. S., 1194; 25 L. J., Ch., 121; 7 De G. M. & G. 594.

9. Cooke v. Cranford (13 Sim. 90) observed upon in Ashton v. Wood, 3 Jur., N. S., 1164, 1167; 3 Sm. & G. 436. The doctrine of this case will not be extended. Hall v. May, 3 Kay & J. 585.

10. Cooke v. Gittings (21 Beav. 497). Malins, V.-Ch., said, that it appeared to him that leave to amend ought to have been given in that case. Rayner v. Kochler, 41 L. J., Ch., 697; 14 L. R., Eq., 438; 27 L. T. 471.

11. Cooke v. Turner (15 M. & W. 727). There are undoubtedly dicta and even decisions in some of the earlier cases to the effect that conditions of this kind (that a legatee disputing the will should be deprived of its benefits) were to be held to be in terrorem only, and, in the language of the Touchstone, "against the liberty of the law." But in the case of personal legacies effect was given to the condition if there was a gift over on the breach of the condition. The whole law on this subject appears to their lordships to have been considered and put upon a sound foundation by the Court of Exchequer in Cooke v. Turner (15 M. & W. 727), upon the case sent to them by the Court of Chancery. It was suggested at the bar that that ruling was not acted upon by the Court of Chancery in the particular case. But, from the report of that case in the fifteenth volume of Simon's Reports, it appears that though pressed to send the case before another court of law, the Vice-Chancellor of England declined to do so, but directed, in the interest of the unborn issue of a marriage, an issue so framed as not to involve the forfeiture by the legatees of their legacy under the clause assumed to be valid. The case of Dickson, Exor. (20 L. J., Ch., 33), which was decided by Lord Cranworth as Vice-Chancellor, after his judgment in Cooke v. Turner, is supposed to conflict with the latter. But it does not really do so. No doubt the learned judge says of such conditions as the present that they had been "considered (whether justly or not it is unnecessary to inquire) as contrary to the policy of the law." But he was not in any way called upon to decide that question; he was dealing with a condition of a very different kind, to which he gave effect. The real effect of his judgment is only that, if the condition be conditio rei licita, it ought to be enforced. It does not affect the authority of Cooke v. Turner. Per Sir Barnes Peacock, P. C., in Evanturel v. Evanturel, 23 W. R. 32, 36; 31 L. T., N. S., 105, 110, 111; 43 L. J., P. C., 58.

12. Cooke's Settled Estates, Re (12 L. R., Eq., 12; 40 L. J., Ch., 400; 19 W. R. 693), inconsistent with his own previous decisions, and, therefore, Lord Romilly, M. R., declined to follow it in Shaw's Settled Estates, Re, 14 L. R., Eq., 9; 41 L. J., Ch., 166.

13. Cookney v. Anderson (1 De G. J. & S. 365). This case has not altered the practice as to serving a defendant out of the jurisdiction. Curtiss v. Grant, 9 Jur., N. S., 766.

14. Cookney v. Anderson (1 De G. J. & S. 365; 32 L. J., Ch., 427; 8 L. T., N. S., 295) not followed by Stuart, V.-Ch., in Drummond v. Drummond (12 Jur., N. S., 581; 35 L. J., Ch., 780; 14 W. R. 828), and expressly overruled on appeal by the full Court of Appeal. See S. C. 15 L. T., N. S., 337; 15 W. R. 267; 36 L. J., Ch., 153, and consequently the Consolidated Orders have a statutory force and effect, and under Consolidated Order X, Rule 7, the Court of Chancery may order service abroad in cases not falling within the 2 Will. 4, c. 33, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 82.

15. Cookson v. Cookson (6 L. J., Ch., 337; 8 Sim. 529) not followed in Cox v. Willoughby, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 863; 49 L. J., Ch., 237; 42 L. T. 125; 28 W. R. 503.

17. Coope v. Carter (2 De G. M. & G. 297, 298; 21 L. J., Ch., 570). Dictum of Knight Bruce, L. J., in, explained. Lord Eldon's rule, that in order to obtain an inquiry as to wilful neglect and default against an executor or a trustee, the plaintiff must allege and prove at least one act of wilful neglect or default, is still the rule, and was not intended to be relaxed by Coope v. Carter (2 De G. M. & G. 292). Dicta in that case, from which the contrary has been inferred, explained. Sleight v. Lamson, 3 Kay & J. 292, 297; 26 L. J., Ch., 553, 556.

18. Coope v. Carter (2 De G. M. & G. 298). The observations in this case were not meant to let in general allegations of default, but to meet the case of specific allegations imperfectly proved at the hearing. See Massey v. Massey, 2 John. & H. 728; 32 L. J., Ch., 13; 11 W. R. 19; 7 L. T., N. S., 811; 1 N. R. 15.

1. Cooper v. Blissett (1 L. R., Ch. D., 691; 45 L. J., Ch., 272; 24 W. R. 235). The good sense of the matter is entirely in accordance with the view of V.-Ch. Hall in Cooper v. Blissett, but the rule is express that, when no other provision is made by the Orders, the old procedure and practice remain. The writ had better be amended by making the plaintiff sue on behalf of himself and all other creditors. Per Jessel. M. R., in Worraker v. Pryer, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 109, 111; 45 L. J., Ch., 273; 24 W. R. 269.

2. Cooper v. Bockett (4 Moo. P. C. 419; 10 Jur., 913) considered, and approved. Greville v. Tylee, 7 Moo. P. C. 320.

3. Cooper v. Hubbard (7 Jur., N. S., 457; 9 W. R. 352). Where Romilly, M. R., was supposed to have held that a party having several windows in a house could put an intermediate new window between two old ones, where no apparent detriment to the owner of the servient tenement appeared to arise therefrom. I wholly dissent from this doctrine. I think that the right to restrict the owner of the adjoining land from building on his own land gained by user or grant, must be confined to the subject matter of such user or grant, and that the restriction on the owner of the servient tenement must be substantially the same, according to the rule as laid down in Blanchard v. Bridges, 4 A. & E. 176; 5 N. & M. 567. Per Crompton, J., in Hutchinson v. Copestake, 9 C. B., N. S., 863. 867; 31 L. J., C. P., 19.

24. Cousens v. Cousens (7 L. R., Ch., 48; 25 L. T., N. S., 719; 41 L. J., Ch., 166). The most important point was that as to the fees of the third counsel. In Cousens v. Cousens, their lordships affirmed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, affirming the decision of the taxing-master. In that particular case the Court thought that the defendant must be made to pay the costs occasioned by his opponent having employed three counsel. The arguments addressed to the Court to-day led his lordship to think that that had gone rather too far in that case. If Cousens v. Cousens applied to the present case, it amounted to an extension of the rule as to allowing the costs of three counsel to all cases in which the junior counsel was called within the bar during the progress of a suit. But his lordship thought that the taxing-master was quite right in holding that this case was not brought within Cousens v. Cousens. Here there was no moral obligation to employ at the hearing a leader who had appeared for the defendants on a mere interlocutory application; while in Cousens v. Cousens there was a retainer which did impose such a moral obligation. Per James, L. J., in Betts v. Cleaver, 27 L. T., N. S., 85, 86; 7 L. R., Ch., 513; 41 L. J., Ch., 663; 20 W. R. 732.

25. Coutis v. Acworth (8 L. R., Eq., 558; 38 L. J., Ch., 694). It has been almost laid down in this case, that, where there is no power of revocation contained in a voluntary settlement, the deed will be set aside; and Wollaston v. Tribe (9 L. R., Eq., 44), and Everett v. Everett (10 L. R., Eq., 405) have been relied on as favouring the same view. But whether there should be a power of revocation or not must depend upon circumstances, and it cannot be laid down as a general rule that such a deed would be voidable unless it contained a power of revocation. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Phillips v. Mullings, 7 L. R., Ch., 244, 247; 41 L. J., Ch., 211, 213; 20 W. R. 129.

1. Couturier v. Hastie (8 Exch. 40; 22 L. J., Exch., 97, 102), that a contract for a del credere agency is not a promise for the debt of another within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, observed upon in Wickham v. Wickham, 2 Kay & J. 478. Couturier v. Hastie was reversed by Exchequer Chamber (9 Exch. 102); and by House of Lords (25 L. J., Exch., 253).

6. Cornell v. Simpson (16 Ves. 275) explained and commented on in Angus v. McLachlan, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 330; 52 L. J., Ch., 587; 48 L. T. 863; 31 W. R. 641.

7. Cox v. Foster (1 Joln. & H. 30) opposed to Clogstown v. Walcott (13 Sim. 523). This point has been before two learned judges, whose decisions are in direct opposition to one another. On the bulk of the authorities, I am bound to follow the latter of the two decisions, that in Cox v. Foster, by the Lord Chancellor, when Vice-Chancellor, Wood. Although all the authorities do not appear to have been cited in that case, I must assume that the Vice-Chancellor had them all in his mind when he gave that decision. In Cox v. Foster, which was precisely the same case as Clogstown v. Walcott (13 Sim. 523), Wood, V.-Ch., said that the direction for payment of debts was not sufficient to avoid the exercise of the power. On principle, and on the authority of that case, therefore, I am of opinion that the power was well executed. I am sorry that Clogstown v. Walcott was not cited in Cox v. Foster, but still I think Wood, V.-Ch., came to a sound conclusion. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Ferrier v. Jay, 23 L. T., N. S., 302; 10 L. R. Eq., 550; 39 L. J., Ch., 686; 18 W. R. 1130.

11. Coxens v. Bognor Railway Co. (1 L. R., Ch., 594; 12 Jur., N. S., 738; 14 W. R. 1002; 15 L. T., N. S., 168). A railway company having entered into possession of the land, and constructed their railway, without having paid the whole of the purchase money, an order was made for payment of the balance, and upon default the company was restrained from using the land. This decision is contrary to Pull v. Northampton & Banbury Junction Railway Co. (12 Jur., N. S., 897; 15 W. R. 27; 15 L. T., N. S., 168), and was not followed by the Lord's Justices.

15. Crause v. Cooper (1 John. & H. 213). A testator, by reference, gave the income of a fund to M., who was unmarried, for life, with a gift to her husband (if any) for his life; and upon the decease of the longer liver of M. and her husband, he directed his trustees to pay, assign, and transfer the capital to his four children, A. B., C., and D., who should be then living.—Held, that upon the death of any one of the four, A. B., C., and D., whether before or after the determination of the life estates, his children then living took vested interest in the fund; and that his children then dead were wholly excluded. The dictum in Crause v. Cooper, that in such a case the children must survive the tenants for life, overruled. Meyricke, Re, 35 L. J., Ch., 148.

decision binding on the Court of Chancery. M'Donald v. Bryce, 16 Beav. 581; 1 W. R. 261; 17 Jur. 335; 22 L. J., Ch., 779; and followed in Hearn v. Baker, 2 Kay & J. 383; and distinguished in Re Hopkins, 2 Hem. & M. 411.

1. Cripps v. Wollcott (4 Madd. 11). The rule in this case is not applicable to a devise of real estate, at least where no personal estate whatever is included in the same gift. In that case the principle laid down in Wilson v. Bailey (3 Bro. P. C. 195) will be followed, on the ground that the estate is to be vested at the earliest possible moment. Gregson, Re, 2 Hem. & M. 504; 33 L. J., Ch., 531; 4 N. R. 222. But on appeal the Lord's Justices held that the rule applied as well to real as to personal estate. S. C. 34 L. J., Ch., 41; 2 De G. J. & S. 428; 5 N. R. 99; 10 Jur., N. S., 1138; 13 W. R. 193; 11 L. T., N. S., 460.

2. Crofts v. Middleton (2 Kay & J. 194; 1 Jur., N. S., 1133; on appeal, 8 De G. M. & G. 192; 2 Jur., N. S., 528; 25 L. J., Ch., 513). I am quite satisfied, with reference to the fines and Recoveries Act, that the course of the observations in Crofts v. Middleton was intended to displace the error that I fell into, of saying the statute was not intended to give effect to that which could only be operated upon de facto if the deed were executed, and not as to matters settled by contract. I am quite satisfied that the reasoning and the decision in Crofts v. Middleton were intended to dispose of those abuses. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Pride v. Bubb, 41 L. J., Ch., 105, 110.

3. Crofts v. Middleton (2 Kay & J. 194; 1 Jur., N. S., 1103; 25 L. J., Ch., 513; 8 De G. M. & G. 192) commented on in White and Hindle, Re, 26 W. R. 124; 7 L. R., Ch. D. 201; 47 L. J., Ch., 85.

5. Crookus v. Whitworth (10 L. R., Ch. D., 289; 39 L. T. 348; 27 W. R. 149) not followed in Wallace v. Greenwood, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 362; 50 L. J., Ch., 289; 43 L. T. 720.

6. Cross v. Hudson (3 Bro. C. C. 30). See as to this case Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 247.

7. Cross v. Sprigg (6 Hare 552; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 204; 13 Jur. 785). Semble, the dictum of Wigram, V.-Ch., in this case that, if a debt be not released at law, it cannot be considered as released in equity, is not sustainable. Hedges v. Aldworth, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 406.

8. Crossley v. City of Glasgow Life Assurance Co. (4 L. R., Ch. D., 421; 46 L. J., Ch., 65; 36 L. T. 285; 25 W. R. 264) overruled as to part in Webster v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co., 15 L. R., Ch. D., 169; 49 L. J., Ch., 769; 43 L. T. 229; 28 W. R. 818.

9. Crosse v. Beddingfield (12 Sim. 35; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 219; 5 Jur. 836) referred to its special circumstances. Powell's Trust, Re, 10 Hare 134.

11. Croughton, Re (8 L. R., Ch. D., 460; 47 L. J., Ch., 795; 38 L. T. 447; 26 W. R. 574), approved in O'Halloran v. King, 27 L. R., Ch. D., 411; 53 L. J., Ch., 881; 50 L. T. 796; 33 W. R. 58.

12. Crowder v. Stone (3 Russ. 217; 7 L. J., Ch., 93), is a questionable authority, or no longer law. It is said that this view is in opposition to the decision of Lord Lyndhurst in Crowder v. Stone. If that case were to govern this, the decree would be that on the death of each his original share would go to the survivors living at his decease. Now, with every respect for the decision of Lord Lyndhurst, I am of opinion that Crowder v. Stone can no longer be considered law. Certain it is that Littlejohns v. Household, 21 Beav. 29, and Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 409, which are clear authorities to the contrary, were not cited in that case. As to the case of White v. Baker (8 W. R. 533; 2 De G. F. & J. 55), I agree with the Lord Chancellor that it was decided on the particular language of the will. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Marriott v. Abel or Abell, 17 W. R. 569, 570; 20 L. T., N. S., 690; 7 L. R., Eq., 478; 38 L. J., Ch., 451, 453.

13. Croze v. Del Rio, stated and observed upon in Bent v. Young, 9 Sim. 180; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151; 2 Jur. 202.

14. Crowtherv. Crowtherv. (23 Beav. 305; 26 L. J., Ch., 702; 5 W. R. 290). An infant may file a bill in equity to recover land under a legal title. That was established by many early cases, and though there was a recent decision to the contrary (Crowtherv. Crowtherv.), the earlier authorities were not cited in that case, and it was in fact an erroneous decision. The law was laid down correctly by Wyllie v. Ellice (6 Hare 505), and the authorities cited in Boddy v. Lefevre (1 Hare 602 n.). Per Jessel, M.R., in Howard v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 43 L. J., Ch., 495, 498; 17 L. R., Eq., 378, 398; 29 L. T., N. S., 862, 867; 22 W. R. 290.

15. Crutwell v. Lye (17 Ves. 335) observed upon in Giv's v. Cooper, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 596; 49 L. J., Ch., 691; 42 L. T. 751; but see Leggott v. Barrett, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 306; 28 W. R. 962.

16. Cummins (Executors) v. Finn, cited and approved of in Kirkwood v. Lloyd, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 585; 11 Ir. Eq. R. 561.

19. Cupit v. Jackson (McCl. 495; 13 Price 721) followed, notwithstanding observations thereon, in 2 Byth. Conv. 49, 3rd ed. by Sweet. White v. James, 26 Beav. 191; 28 L. J., Ch., 179; 7 W. R. 35.

"I am bound by Cupit v. Jackson, and must follow it, notwithstanding any observations in a text-book." Per Romilly, M. R., in S. C., 4 Jur., N. S., 1214.

20. Curling v. Austin (2 Dr. & Sm. 129). It has been argued before us, and the language of Kindersley, V.-Ch., in the above case, has been relied upon as going to this extent, that where there is an open reference as to title in the decree, the vendor is precluded from referring to the conditions of sale, or to the contract at all, to show that he has made a good title according to the conditions. I am of opinion that if the Vice-Chancellor's words bear that construction, it is not, and ought not, to be the rule of the Court. Whether there be any waiver otherwise is a question to be determined at the hearing; but the question whether there is a good title appears to me to mean whether there is a good title according to the contract, the specific performance of which is decreed at the hearing, whether those words are in the decree or not; otherwise in every case every stipulation as to evidence, and every stipulation as to the commencement of the title, and matters of that kind, would have to be referred to specially in the decree. Per James, L. J., in Upperton v. Nicholson, 6 L. R., Ch., 436, 442.

7. Cuvillier v. Aylwin (2 Knapp 72). But the petitioner is met by the case of Cuvillier v. Aylwin, in which the very point which he raises was decided in the Privy Council against him. If the question is to be considered as concluded by this decision, his petition must be at once dismissed; but upon turning to the report of the case, their lordships are not satisfied that the subject received that full and deliberate consideration which the great importance of it demanded. The report of the judgment of the Master of the Rolls is contained in a few lines, and he does not appear to have directly adverted to the effect of the proviso contained in the 43rd section of the 34 Geo. 3, c. 6 (Lower Canada Act), on the prerogative of the Crown. Their lordships must not be considered as intimating any opinion whether this decision can be sustained or not, but they desire not to be precluded by it from a further consideration of the serious and important question which it involves. Per Lord Chelmsford, Marois, Re, 8 Jur., N. S., 269.

11. Dale's case (Reilly 11) decided by Lord Cairns as arbitrator in the Albert Assurance Society, is not citable as an authority. The decision was nothing but an opinion of a living lawyer. 16. Dawson v. Jay (3 De G. M. & G. 764). There is only one other case which I think I am called upon to notice, Dawson v. Jay, before Lord Chancellor Cranworth. As at first stated at the bar, it certainly seemed closely in point, and it alarmed me much, for we were told that an American infant, who had a guardian regularly appointed by the Supreme Court at New York, having been fraudulently brought to England against the will of the guardian, Lord Cranworth had refused to interfere, and would not order the infant to be delivered up. But, on the case being examined, it turns out that the infant came to England with the entire concurrence of the guardian originally appointed, who continued guardian at the time of the removal, and that it was another guardian, afterwards appointed with doubtful regularity, who wished to get possession of the infant, and carry her back to America, after she had been living several years in England. It further appeared that she was a British subject, although born in America; and the Lord Chancellor was thus called upon, without any offence being imputed to her, to sentence her to transportation to America by the decree of a court of equity. 25. Deere v. Guest (1 Macn. & G. 516) referred to as an authority, to show that Lord Cottenham decided that the Court will not interfere by injunction to restrain the use of work constructed, on land which has been taken possession of, where that possession has been obtained even by fraud. The marginal epitome of the report of that case is inaccurate. There is not one word of Lord Cottenham's judgment to justify so extraordinary a proposition as that the Court will not interfere against a possession fraudulently taken, whether the works are constructed or not. Looking at the report of Lord Cottenham's judgment, the grounds of it are plain. The case was decided on demurrer, and the only question was, whether, on the allegations in the bill, there was enough to show that the plaintiff would be entitled, on the case stated in his bill, to relief in a court of equity; and Lord Cottenham thought not, because what the defendants claimed was simply a right of way, and the case stated by the bill was a case of mere trespass; and upon that ground, on demurrer, he affirmed the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor of England, by whom the demurrer was allowed.—Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Perks v. Wycombe Railway Co., 3 Giff. 662, 673; 7 L. T., N. S., 150, 153.

2. De Mattos v. Gibson (4 De G. & J. 276). As I understand the law to be as laid down in De Mattos v. Gibson, if a charter party is bonâ fide entered into between the owner of a vessel and the charterer, either party is entitled to an injunction to restrain the other from doing anything inconsistent with the contract entered into. If nothing can be adduced by the defendant to show that this charter party ought not to be acted upon, it is a case in which the charterer is entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from doing anything inconsistent with the rights which he has given to the plaintiffs under the charter party which he has executed. 4. Dendy v. Dendy (5 W. R. 221) is contrâ to Jackson v. Ward (1 Giff. 30), and Gilbert v. Tomlinson (6 Jur., N. S., 532), which decide that the devisee of a deceased plaintiff may obtain a common order to revive under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 52.

6. Denton v. Stewart (1 Cox 258). I certainly recollect the time at which there was a floating idea in the profession, that the Court might award compensation for the injury sustained by the non-performance of a contract, in the event of the pecuniary relief for a specific performance failing; and I have formerly seen bills praying such relief; but that arises from my having known the profession sufficiently long to recollect the time when the decision of Lord Kenyon, in Denton v. Stewart, had not been formerly overruled; but at that time very little weight was attached to it, and very few instances occurred in which plaintiffs were advised to ask any such relief, and, for a short time, Sir W. Grant's decree, in Greenaway v. Adams (1 Cox 258), added something to the authority of Denton v. Stewart, although he threw out strong doubts as to the principle of that case. This, however, lasted but a short time, for Greenaway v. Adams (12 Ves. 395) occurring in 1806, Lord Eldon, in 1810, in Todd v. Gee (17 Ves. 273), expressly overruled Denton v. Stewart, and from that time there has not, I believe, been any doubt upon the subject. Per Lord Cottenham, C., in Sainsbury v. Jones, 5 Myl. & Cr. 3.

I confess I should have hesitated before I concurred in these decisions, because I think there might have been a considerable difference drawn between the analogy of an assignee of a lease assigning the lease to a man of straw, and a shareholder who has become a partner with others, and who has incurred a joint liability at a time when the property had ceased to be of any value, and his sole object being to throw the liability entirely on his co-partners; but I most respectfully bow to the decisions of this Court. 15. De Visme v. De Visme (1 Macn. & G. 336). This case must be acted on with some caution; and it is not in every case of delay in the delivering of a sufficient abstract that a vendor is to lose the interest which he has stipulated for. Rouley v. Adams, 12 Beav. 476.

The rule that, where a vendor fails to complete at the time agreed upon, the purchaser, by providing himself with the money, and giving notice that it is lying idle, may free himself from payment of subsequent interest, is settled by well-established authorities, and could not have been intended to be rendered doubtful by the dicta in De Visne v. De Visne (1 Macn. & G. 332). Dyson v. Hornby, 4 De G. & Sm. 481.

1. De Visne v. De Visne (1 Macn. & G. 336), overruled. In De Visne v. De Visne Lord Cottenham held, that if the delay arises from the default of the vendor, the purchaser is not bound to pay interest; and that as the vendor had not performed his part of the contract with regard to the delivery of the abstract, he could not insist on the purchaser performing his part with regard to the payment of interest, and that to hold otherwise would be encouraging negligence and delay on the part of the vendor, who alone being acquainted with his own title, was, as Lord Cottenham thought, bound to make such conditions only as he knew he could comply with. In Sherwin v. Shakespeare (18 Beav. 527) I followed this decision, which was binding on me, as the decision of Lord Cottenham. On appeal (5 De G. M. & G. 517), however, the Lords Justices dissented from Lord Cottenham, and reversed my decision, and the only question is whether they have overruled De Visne v. De Visne, because if they have, I am bound to follow that decision. (Reads judgment of Knight Bruce, L. J., in Sherwin v. Shakespeare, and proceeds.) Hence, as I read the judgment of Knight Bruce, L. J., which is concurred in by Turner, L. J., if the state of the title is such that, without fraud or wilful delay, the abstract, which contains a statement of the deeds necessary to deduce the title, is not delivered within the time specified in the contract, this does not relieve the purchaser from his obligation of paying the interest specified in the contract from the time therein mentioned. Per Romilly, M. R., in Vickers v. Hand, 26 Beav. 630, 633.

2. Devo v. Devo (3 Sm. & Giff. 403; 5 W. R. 222). But it is also contended that, whatever may have been the rule of law before, it has been altered by V.-Ch. Stuart's decision in Devo v. Devo, which it is said is an express authority to compel me to admit this document of April 1871 in evidence, and the following passage in the judgment of the V.-Ch. Stuart is referred to. He says (3 Sm. & Giff. 405), "In support of that argument it has been said, that if the father had died before he gave evidence of the nature of the transaction, no record would have been preserved of the transaction, and the Court must then have given effect to it as an advancement to the child. The circumstance that if the father had died, the evidence would have been lost, cannot in the slightest degree affect the truth of the case, where the evidence is not lost." And then it is said, that the evidence here is not lost, and that we have it under the hand of the man himself that he made the lodgment for the purpose stated in the memorandum.

It would appear to me, assuming Devo v. Devo to have been rightly decided, that there is a marked distinction between the evidence of a living man on his oath, and a scrap of paper written by him, and found among his papers after his death. In the former case you can probe his conscience and examine him as to the truth and grounds of his statement. That case was followed in Stone v. Stone (2 Jur., N. S., 708); and it came again before the same judge in Forrest v. Forrest (13 W. R. 380). Now the last case was a very peculiar case. Two points arose in it; first, whether certain transactions of the testator in relation to certain shares, he standing in loco parentis at the time, were to be considered as amounting to an advancement. These the Vice-Chancellor considered did not amount to an advancement, and it is unnecessary that I should go into the grounds on which he so decided. . . . In the very valuable Treatise of Mr. Lewin on Trusts, p. 187 (4th edit.), is this passage: "Of course the father cannot defeat the advancement by any subsequent declaration of intention. But his evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing what was the intention at the time."

The only authority for that latter proposition was the case of Devo v. Devo. That was a very difficult case. There the father was living, and he had admitted his evidence as to the nature of the transaction. He still thought that he was justified in admitting the evidence of the father in that case, but he was not sure that the case went quite so far as to support the proposition of Mr. Lewin. After those observations I do not think that Devo v. Devo can be fairly cited as an authority that declarations of the father subsequently to the advancement are admissible. I say nothing about the actual decision in Devo v. Devo, I have no such case before me here; but I must say that it is no authority whatever for the admission in evidence of mere declarations of the father subsequent to the advancement. V.-Ch. Stuart himself, in Forrest v. Forrest, states the rule of law to be otherwise. Per Sullivan, M. R., in O'Brien v. Sheil, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 255, 261, 262.

J., Ch., 230); and I do not think it right to overrule it, recognised as that case has been by Lord Cottenham. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Newell v. Newell, 41 L. J., Ch., 432, 433, 434; 7 L. 8. Dixon v. Gayfere (17 Beav. 421), where it was held, that although the right of the true owner is extinguished at the end of twenty years, still adverse possession by a succession of trespassers for a period exceeding twenty years, confers no right upon any of them who has not himself been in uninterrupted possession for twenty years, except as furnishing a defence to a trespasser in possession against an action by the true owner. Per Cockburn, C. J., I am bound to say, that I question the propriety of that decision. If it be law, it would lead to this extraordinary state of things—that, where a person encloses land, and continues in possession for nineteen years, at the expiration of which he is turned out by another wrongdoer, who holds for a year longer, the latter would in such case acquire the freehold. Asher v. Whitelock, 11 Jur., N. S., 925, 926.

9. Dixon v. Holden (7 L. R., Eq., 488). But for this case I should have considered it perfectly well settled that the Court of Chancery will not restrain by injunction the publication of a libel. What was said by Lord Ellenborough in Dubois v. Beresford (2 Camp. 511), "that the Lord Chancellor would grant an injunction against the exhibition of a libellous picture," has been expressly disavowed by Lord Campbell in the case of the Austria (Emperor of) v. Kossuth (3 De G. F. & J. 217, 239; 30 L. J., Ch., 690; 7 Jur., N. S., 639; 9 W. R. 712; 42 L. T., N. S., 494), and is inconsistent with the dictum of Lord Eldon in the case of Gee v. Pritchard (2 Swans. 414), with what Lord Langdale said in Clark v. Freeman (11 Beav. 112; 17 L. J., Ch., 142), and with that of Sir Lancelot Shadwell, in Martin v. Wright (6 Sim. 297); and, lastly, it seems to me inconsistent with what may be clearly discovered to have been Lord Cottenham's opinion in Fleming v. Newton (1 H. L. Ca. 366); for which opinion, it may be observed, he gives very strong reasons. The case of Dixon v. Holden has introduced a rule which, if not contrary to the doctrine of these cases, affords at least a very material qualification of it. It was laid down in that case that the Court will restrain the publication of a libel where it affects property, or the potentiality of acquiring property, at least where the potentiality of acquiring property is professional or commercial. It is not for me to say that the rule so laid down is erroneous; but I think it was wholly new, and that nothing whatever was said in the case of the Austria (Emperor of) v. Kossuth, or in any of the case, except possibly in the peculiar and very different case of Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley (6 L. R., Eq., 551; 37 L. J., Ch., 889), which supports it in any way. In Dixon v. Holden, what was restrained was (as the Court considered) an advertisement of an absolutely false statement, calculated to injure a merchant carrying on a large business, and which emanated from a discharged solicitor, who had probably acquired his knowledge of the facts while in the employment of the firm, and who appeared to have been actuated by no motive but a malicious one. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Mulhern v. Ward, 13 L. R., Eq., 619, 621; 41 L. J., Ch., 464, 465; 26 L. T. 831.

10. Dixon v. Holden (7 L. R., Eq., 488). The only shadow of authority otherwise is in the case of Dixon v. Holden, which was decided by V.-Ch. Malins in 1869. I say nothing about the decision in that particular case; I do not mean to say that it is not capable of being maintained. It professes to proceed mainly upon the decision in Routh v. Webster (10 Beav. 561), because I observe the Vice-Chancellor says: "The case of Routh v. Webster is an authority going the whole length of what is asked here." Now, the case of Routh v. Webster, if I may say so, appears to me to have been perfectly rightly decided. . . . It was upon the authority of that case that the case of Dixon v. Holden was professedly decided. But the Vice-Chancellor went further, and said this: "Now the business of a merchant is about the most valuable kind of property that he can well have. Here it is the source of his fortune, and, therefore, to be injured in his business is to be injured in his property. But I go further, and say if it had only injured his reputation, it is within the jurisdiction of this Court to stop the publication of a libel of this description which goes to destroy his property or his reputation, which is his property, and, if possible, more valuable than other property. In this case, I go on general principle, and I am fortified by authority. General principle is in favour of it, but authority is not wanting." And further on the Vice-Chancellor says: "In the decision I arrive at I beg to be understood as laying down that this Court has jurisdiction to prevent the publication of any letter, advertisement, or other document, which, if permitted to go on, would have the effect of destroying the property of another person, whether that consists of tangible or intangible property, whether it consists of money or reputation." Now, in those opinions the Vice-Chancellor conceived that he was fortified by authority. The only authorities cited were Fleming v.

Newton (1 H. L. Ca. 363), which appears to me to be an authority exactly to the contrary; Routh v. Webster (10 Beav. 561), which I have already mentioned, which is an authority for preventing the improper use of a man's name against his will; Clark v. Freeman (11 Beav. 112; 17 L. J., Ch., 142), where an injunction was refused, and where Lord Langdale said that the Court would not interfere to prevent a libel; and the only other case mentioned was Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley (37 L. J., Ch., 889; 6 L. R., Eq., 551), decided by the Vice-Chancellor himself. I have not before me the facts of that case, but of course it must be taken to have expressed the same opinion which the learned judge expressed in Dixon v. Holden. I am unable to accede to those general propositions, which appear to me to be at variance with the settled practice and principles of this court, and I cannot accept them as an authority for the present application. Per Lord Chancellor Cairns, in Prudential Insurance Co. v. Knott, 44 L. J., Ch., 192, 194; 23 W. R. 249; 10 L. R., Ch., 142; 31 L. T. 866.

I think that the V.-Ch. Malins in Dixon v. Holden was led, by his desire to do what was right in that case, to exaggerate the jurisdiction of this Court to an extent for which there is no authority in any reported case, and no foundation in principle. I think it right to say, that in my opinion that is not a true statement of the law of this Court. Per Lord Justice James. Ib.

25. Dovaston v. Payne (2 H. Bl. 527), there can be no easement, properly so called, unless there is both a servient and a dominant tenement. It is true that in the well-known case of Dovaston v. Payne, which is reported, or rather reprinted in Smith's Leading Cases, Mr. Justice Heath is reported to have said, with regard to a public way, that the freehold continued in the owner of the adjoining land, subject to an easement in favour of the public, and that expression has occasionally been repeated since that time. That, however, is hardly an accurate expression. There can be no such thing according to the civil law, as what I may term an easement in gross. The case must be connected with the two tenements which I have described. In truth, a public road or highway is a dedication of that extent of ownership or of occupancy to the public consistent with the freehold or the solum of the land remaining in the original owner; it is not an easement, it is a dedication of the surface of the land for the purpose of passing and repassing, the public generally taking upon themselves (through the parochial authorities or otherwise) the obligation of repairing it. It is quite clear that that is a very different thing from an ordinary easement where the occupation remains in the owner of the servient tenement subject to the right of affording the same. 5. Dreary v. Barnes (3 Russ. 91; 5 L. J., Ch., N. S., 47) in my opinion is beyond the possibility of question. Per Baron, V.-Ch., in Preston v. Great Yarmouth (Mayor), 41 L. J., Ch., 310, 317; 26 L. T. 225.

6. Drinkwater v. Ratcliffe (20 L. R., Eq., 528; 44 L. J., Ch., 605; 33 L. T. 417; 24 W. R. 25) approved in Pitt v. Jones, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 651; 49 L. J., Ch., 795; 43 L. T. 385; 29 W. R. 33.

7. Driver v. Frank (3 M. & S. 25; 8 Taunt. 468). The effect of a devise to A. (an unmarried man) for life, with remainder to his wife in fee, is, I believe, unsettled by authority. Mr. Jarman thought that such a devise would give an absolute interest to the first person who acquired the title of his wife (1 Powell on Devises, 340. n.), but he cites no authority for this except Driver v. Frank, notwithstanding that Peppin v. Bickford (3 Ves. 570) (which he refers to some special circumstances) is in some degree inconsistent with his view, and the passage in the note in Powell on Devises seems to have been preserved in all the editions of Jarman on Wills, up to and including the last, without any addition of authority. Driver v. Frank does not seem to warrant the general proposition deduced from it; that case I think must be taken to have proceeded on the simple principle, that the second son of A. on the body of B. begotten means the second son born of A. and B., as held in Trafford v. Ashton (2 Vern. 600), and no other person. It is unnecessary for the present purpose to determine whether it is or is not true as a general proposition that a gift to A. for life with remainder to a person who may afterwards bear a given relation to A., the relation being one which may be borne by numerous persons successively, by virtue of the rule of law which favours the earliest possible vesting, is a gift to A. and to the first person who shall bear that relation. 9. Drury v. Drury (2 Elen 89) reversed on appeal by the House of Lords S. C. nom. Buckingham (Earl) v. Drury, 3 Bro. P. C. 492; 2 Elen 60; where Lord Hardwicke reviewed the synonymous authorities. Lord Thulow, however (as was observed by Eldon, Ch., in Milner v. Harewood (Lord) (18 Ves. 275), said great doubts had been entertained as to the propriety of the decision of the Lords, and expressed himself strongly in favour of Lord Northington's opinion. The result of the subsequent authorities (which are collected, 2 Eden 75), however, is, that an infant cannot be bound by any article entered into during the minority as to her own real state, which nothing but her own act when of age can fetter or affect. 2 Bridg. 86. 14. Dugdale v. Robertson (3 Kay & J. 695). In Shafte v. Johnson (8 B. & S. 252. n.) V.-Ch. Wood came to a different conclusion from that which he had arrived at in Dugdale v. Robertson, and though there were no words distinctly reserving the right to support, he held in effect that the lessees were not responsible for the subsidence caused by getting the minerals. He commences his judgment as follows: "I have carefully considered the lease, and I cannot arrive at the conclusion that any act has been done by the lessees which is unlawful and contrary to the stipulations contained in it."

This embodies the view which we take of such a case as the present. In the subsequent part of the same judgment, in which the subject is gone into very fully, and the whole of which is well worthy of consideration, the learned judge refers to the case of Dugdale v. Robertson as one which went to the full extent of the authorities, and in which the case was put as strongly as it well could be against the view which he was entertaining in the case under consideration. No doubt the case of Dugdale v. Robertson is not disapproved of, but it does appear to us that the principle of the two decisions is not the same, and that the correct view is that taken at the beginning of the judgment in Shafto v. Johnson, which we have given above.

The judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in Taylor v. Shafto (8 B. & S. 228) agrees with that of the Vice-Chancellor in making the terms of the lease decisive as to the extent to which the lessees were justified in going in working the mines. The case is not referred to as decisive of the present case, because the terms of the lease were different, and there were other covenants, but as showing the proper principle of decision. Per Cleasby, B., in Eaton v. Jeffcock, 42 L. J., Exch., 36, 45; 7 L. R., Exch., 379; 28 L. T. 273; 20 W. R. 1033.

3. Duncan v. Chamberlayne (11 Sim. 123; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 307; 4 Jur. 189) overruled by Thompson v. Speirs, 13 Sim. 469; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 453; 9 Jur. 933.

4. Duncan v. Findlater (6 Cl. & F. 894). Dictum of Lord Cottenham, that persons incorporated for the purpose of executing works, are not in their official or corporate capacity liable for damages at all for wrong or neglect, overruled. See Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 12 Jur., N. S., 571; 35 L. J., Exch., 225; 14 W. R. 872; 14 L. T., N. S., 677.

5. Dunch v. Kent (1 Vern. 260). With regard to the authorities, I had occasion to review them in the case of Ranorth v. Parker (2 Kay & J. 163; 25 L. J., Ch., 117), and it appeared to me that nothing very decisive was come to on the subject, except in the case of Dunch v. Kent. I am obliged to Mr. James for his exposition of the case, and I am certainly bound to retract the observation I made that Dunch v. Kent must be overruled if it were held that deeds of this kind must be executed within the limited period, because, looking at all the facts of the case, which, although it was a simple grant from the Crown to the husband of the executrix of the deceased creditor of the Crown, was yet coupled with a trust for the benefit of all creditors who should come in within twelve months, the case seems to me to have been properly determined, for in reality this comes in substitution of assets, and must be regarded in truth as assets of the original testator, so that the executor could not claim as he claimed in that case, to set up debts of his own against creditors of the testator, although the creditors had not come in within the period specified. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Whitmore v. Turquand, 30 L. J., Ch., 345, 350.

On appeal, Campbell, C., said, "I think it unnecessary again to go over the long list of cases cited in the argument, and most minutely analysed and commented upon by the Vice-Chancellor. I content myself with saying that I concur with his remarks upon them, except the leading case of Dunch v. Kent, and of that I think the first view taken by his Honour is the sounder one. I likewise place great reliance on his own previous decision in Nicholson v. Tutin, 2 Kay & J. 18." Per Lord Campbell, C., 30 L. J., Ch., 354.

15. Edwards v. Edwards (15 Beav. 357). It has been stated that these decrees proceed mainly, if not entirely, on the authority of the case of Edwards v. Edwards; and unquestionably, reading the marginal note of that case, and taking it to express the settled law on the subject, it would follow as a necessary consequence that the decision below was right. The fourth proposition in that marginal note is, that in a gift to "X. for life, with remainder to A, and if he shall die without leaving children, to B," the contingency has reference to the death of the tenant for life. When I first saw that proposition so stated, it certainly struck me as one plainly adverse to the course and current of the authorities on the subject. It is not necessary for me to examine them in extenso, but it is quite plain that no such principle of construction has ever been previously established. When, however, we come to examine Edwards v. Edwards, it seems to be a very plain decision, and perfectly right with respect to the subject matter submitted to the consideration of the Court. . . . The case before Sir John Romilly is perfectly right when considered in reference to the subject matter of which he was speaking, the cases in which a declaration was required. . . . The marginal note of Edwards v. Edwards is, in my apprehension, mistaken, and is not borne out by the case when examined. I think, therefore, that this order, which appears to have been made on the supposed decision in Edwards v. Edwards, cannot be supported. Per Brady, C., in O'Mahony v. Burdett, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 14, 19, 21.

16. Edwards v. Edwards (15 Beav. 357). The fourth rule laid down in this case applies to the case where a life estate is given in a portion of the income of the estate, but the whole, together with the accumulation of income, is given, subject to a gift over on death without issue, upon the determination of that estate. *Dean v. 24. Ernest v. Nicholls (6 H. L. Ca. 401; 3 Jur., N. S., 919), notwithstanding dicta of Lord Wensleydale, the Queen's Bench adhere to doctrine propounded in Henderson v. Australian Royal Mail Steamer Navigation Co., 5 El. & Bl. 409; 1 Jur., N. S., 830, and Reuter v. Electric Telegraph Co., 6 El. & Bl. 341; 2 Jur., N. S., 1248. See London Dock Co. v. Snnott, 8 El. & Bl. 347, 351; 4 Jur., N. S., 70, 71. We are of course bound by the judgment of the House of Lords in that case, and we should all most heartily have concurred in it, the question having been as to a special contract to do the very unusual thing of purchasing by one company the trade of another. But we are not bound by the extrajudicial observations of any noble and learned lord delivered in that assembly, although they are no doubt entitled to high consideration. Smith v. Hull Gas Co., 8 C. B. 688; 11 C. B. 897, seems to us to be at variance with the dicta quoted to us. Per Campbell, C. J., in Prince of Wales Insurance Co. v. Harding, 4 Jur., N. S., 851; 27 L. J., Q. B., 297.

25. Esdaile v. Visser (13 L. R., Ch. D., 421; 41 L. T. 745; 28 W. R. 281) commented on in Chard v. Jarvis, 9 L. R., Q. B. D., 178; 51 L. J., Ch., 429; 51 L. J., Q. B., 442; 30 W. R. 504.

27. Essex v. Essex (20 Beav. 442) approved and followed in Cow v. Willoughby, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 863; 49 L. J., Ch., 237; 42 L. T. 128; 28 W. R. 503.

1. European and Australian Royal Mail Co. v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. (4 Kay & J. 676; 5 Jur., N. S., 310). I cannot concur in the unlimited right of the mortgagee to use the ship as the owner might do, notwithstanding the dicta of Wood, V.-Ch., in European and Australian Royal Mail Co. v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., which have produced this marginal note, "A mortgagee of a ship has power, under the 70th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1856, to use as well as sell the ship, semble." I doubt whether the enactment in the statute referred to, as to the rights and liabilities of the mortgagee of the ship, which regulate the relation between the mortgagee and third persons, and protect him both from claims founded on contract and on tort till he has taken possession, are intended to vary or regulate the power of the mortgagee as between him and the mortgagor. At any rate, they cannot be intended to empower the mortgagee, at the expense and risk of the mortgagor, to send the ship to any quarter of the globe, and to employ her in any trade for which she may be adapted, for any indefinite length of time. Is the burden of repairs, and of paying the master and seamen, and of all the ship's disbursements, to be borne by the mortgagor? Is he to be charged for insurance? And if the ship is wrecked uninsured, is the loss to fall upon him, he being still liable for the balance of the unpaid mortgage money? Nor can I lay down the strict rule that the mortgagee can never lawfully employ the ship to earn freight, or that after taking possession he must allow her to lie idle till he may prudently sell her. He may take possession when she is prosecuting a voyage under a charter-party, and at the end of the voyage it is easy to conceive circumstances which would justify him in a temporary employment of the ship while waiting for a favourable opportunity to sell her. Per Lord Campbell, C, in Marriott v. Anchor Reversionary Co. 7 Jur., N. S., 713.

6. Evans v. Crosbie (15 Sim. 600). I own I have some difficulty in understanding that case before Shadwell, V.-Ch., because that learned judge seems to me to have been a little distrustful, as I infer, of his own opinion, for he refers to arguments of which I confess I am unable to see the force. Per Cranworth, C, in Windus v. Windus, 6 De G. M. & G. 549, 562.

7. Evans v. Evans (17 Sim. 108) overruled in Williams v. Evans, 1 El. & Bl. 727.

10. Evans v. Salt (6 Beav. 266). I do not consider that is a decision which ought to govern subsequent cases, inasmuch as the report gives only the decision, and not one word as to the reasons upon which it is founded. Per Kindeisleigh, V.-Ch., Roots, Re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 228, 230.

22. Farina v. Silverlock (6 De G. M. & G. 124). Observations of Lord Cranworth, C, in this case explained in Farina v. Silverlock, 4 Kay & J. 650.

23. Farnham v. Phillips (2 Atk. 215) can hardly be considered of much authority, as Lord Hardwicke himself expressed doubts as to the correctness of the doctrine there laid down per Turner, L. J., in Montefiore v. Guedalla, 6 Jur., N. S., 329, 330.

24. Farrow v. Austin (18 L. R., Ch. D., 58; 45 L. T. 227; 30 W. R. 50) followed in Turner v. Hancock, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 303; 51 L. J., Ch., 517; 36 L. T. 750; 30 W. R. 480.

25. Farthing v. Allen (2 Madd. 310) strongly disapproved of by Malins, V.-Ch. The decision was irrational and opposed to the current of modern decisions. Bowers v. Bowers, 17 W. R. 1004; 33 L. J., Ch., 596. But on appeal the case of Bowers v. Bowers was reversed, and Giffard, L. J., said, that in Edwards v. Edwards (15 Beav. 357), the Master of the Rolls then did not dissent from Farthing v. Allen, from the decision in which I do not see any reason to dissent now. Bowers v. Bowers, 5 L. R., Ch., 241, 251; 18 W. R. 301.

1. Farthing v. Allen (2 Madd. 310) was referred to in Bowers v. Bowers (5 L. R., Ch., 244; 39 L. J., Ch., 351; 23 L. T. 35; 18 W. R. 301) in the Appeal Court, and Giffard, L. J. expressed his full approval of that decision. Malins, V.-Ch., said, in Clark v. Henry (11 L. R., Eq., 222, 225; 40 L. J., Ch., 151; 24 L. T. 256; 19 W. R. 319), "And I have expressed my full disapproval of it. What I said in Bowers v. Bowers (8 L. R., Eq., 283) was, I should arrive at the same conclusion in the absence of authority, and if I found such a case as Farthing v. Allen in my way, I should have decided in direct contradiction." Farthing v. Allen is more fully reported in 2 Jarman on Wills, 3rd ed., p. 730.

2. Faussett v. Carpenter (2 Dow & Cl 232) is strongly animadverted on by Lord St. Leonards, Sug. V. & P. 1022. . . . The case as it stands is an authority for the proposition, that where a trustee and cestui que trust join in a conveyance, the legal estate will not pass at law. If that case should come to be reconsidered, there will be great difficulty in supporting it. Lord St. Leonards suggests (3 Jones & Latouche 284), that a short Act of Parliament should be passed to overrule it. But none having been passed, I should feel bound by that decision, with all its insuperable difficulty, if the present case were on all fours with it. But that is not the case. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Carter v. Carter, 4 Jur., N. S., 65; 27 L. J., Ch., 74, 80, 81.

3. Fawcett v. Hodges (3 Ir. Eq. Rep. 232) overruled. O'Flaherty v. McDowell, 6 H. L. Ca. 142; 4 Jur., N. S., 33.

4. Fuzakerley v. Ford (4 Sim. 390) approved of in Harrison v. Round, 17 Jur. 563; 22 L. J., Ch., 322; 2 De G. M. & G. 190; 1 W. R. 26.

5. Fearon v. Bowers (1 H. Bl. 364) not followed in Glyn, Mills, & Co. v. East and West India Dock Co., 7 L. R., App. Cas., 591; 52 L. J., Q. B., 146; 47 L. T. 309; 31 W. R. 201, 580. Affirming 6 L. R., Q. B. D., 475; 50 L. J., Q. B., 62; 43 L. T. 584; 29 W. R. 216.

7. Felton's Executors' case, or Felton, Exp., East of England Bank, Re (1 L. R., Eq., 219; 35 L. J., Ch., 196; 14 W. R. 247; 12 Jur., N. S., 291; 13 L. T., N. S., 741) approved and followed in British Guardian Life Assurance Co., Re, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 335; 49 L. J., Ch., 446; 28 W. R. 945.

8. Fenn v. Edmonds (5 Hare 314) overruled. Desborough v. Harris, 5 De G. M. & G. 439; 1 Jur., N. S., 986.

9. Fennall v. Brown (18 Jur. 1051). I do not decline to follow the case cited because it is reported in the unauthorised reports. It is of such materials that the law of England is made up, and I should be denying myself much valuable assistance in ascertaining what the law is, if I were to refuse to receive the citation of cases reported by barristers in those useful publications. But I cannot, for the reason I have mentioned, accept the case in question as an authority. Per Lord Westbury, C., in Francombe v. Francombe, 11 Jur., N. S., 123, 124. S. C. nom. Francombe v. Francombe, 11 L. T., N. S., 757; 5 N. R. 289; 12 L. T., N. S., 123.

And Stuart, V.-Ch., by whom the case of Fennall v. Brown was decided, said, "I cannot act upon that report as an authority. I wish, however, to take this opportunity of stating that I am not one of those who have lately made a raid against the ephemeral reports. Any gentleman whom it may please to do so is at perfect liberty to report whatever cases he thinks proper, and the ephemeral reports are, in my opinion, most useful; but, nevertheless, I consider them useful rather for the purpose of intelligence and of suggesting inquiry, than of authority. That, in my opinion, was the intention in which they were originated, but I think the original intention has, of late years, been somewhat abused, and I, for my part, cannot act upon them as binding authorities." R. 229), approved in Barrow-in-Furness Investment and Northern Counties Land and Investment Co., Re, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 400; 42 L. T. 888.

16. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279; 5 Hare 573; 13 L. J., Exch., 74). It is very like a case of Festing v. Allen which I argued many years ago. This was a decision of the Court of Exchequer, which was afterwards affirmed by Sir James Wigram (5 Hare 573), that a gift to A. for life, and to the children who should attain twenty-one, was a contingent remainder. And where the life estate had failed while the children were in their minority, they would fail to take the estate altogether. I consider that that case was properly overruled in a case which I argued before V.-Ch. Stuart, of Browne v. Browne, 3 Sm. & Giff. 568. I believe it has been the subject of strife since. My opinion was always against Festing v. Allen, though it was the judgment of the Court of Exchequer delivered by a very eminent judge, Lord Cranworth. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Jull v. Jacobs, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 703, 713; 35 L. T. 153; 24 W. R. 947.

L. T., N. S., 150; 12 M. & W. 279; 5 Hare 573) distinguished in Marshall v. Gingell, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 790; 51 L. J., Ch., 818; 47 L. T. 159; 31 W. R. 63.

1. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279; 5 Hare 573) commented on and discussed. Per Wood, V.-Ch., Styan, Exp., Johns. 387.

2. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279; 5 Hare 573; 13 L. J., Exch., 74); which has been followed in some more recent cases, but in the other recent cases has not been followed. The reports of the two other cases, in which the decision in Festing v. Allen has been followed, afford nothing to increase the inadequate weight of that case. It is satisfactory to find that there are at least two subsequent cases in which it has not been followed, and that Knight Bruce, V.-Ch., in the case of Riley v. Garnett, 2 De G. & Sm. 629, preferred adhering to older authorities so often affirmed by the House of Lords." Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Browne v. Browne, 3 Sm. & G. 568, 582, 591; 3 Jur., N. S., 728, 736; 26 L. J., Ch., 635, 643; 5 W. R. 777.

3. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279) followed in Holmes v. Prescott, 2 N. R. 559; 1 W. R. 636; 10 Jur., N. S., 587; 33 L. J., Ch., 264; 12 W. R. 636; 11 L. T., N. S., 38.

4. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279) commented on in Astley v. Micklethwaite, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 59; 49 L. J., Ch., 672; 43 L. T. 58; 28 W. R. 811.

5. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279). The rule laid down in this case that in a devise to the children of A, "who shall attain the age of twenty-one" the words "who shall attain the age of twenty-one" are part of the description of the devisees, gives way to a contrary direction expressed in the devise. Musket v. Eaton, 24 W. R. 52; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 435; 45 L. J., Ch., 22; 33 L. T., N. S., 716.

6. Field v. Brown (27 Beav. 90), read "with" for "without" impeachment of waste, and "Esther" for "Sarah" in the 14th line of the report in that case. See 34 Beav. 508. n.

7. Field v. Evans (15 Sim. 375), reported decision in, ascertained to be erroneous. Baker v. Bradley, 2 Sm. & G. 531; 1 Jur., N. S., 489.

8. Field v. Moore (19 Beav. 176; 2 Jur., N. S., 145; 25 L. J., Ch., 66) explained in Barrow v. Barrow, 4 Kay & J. 409; 4 Jur., N. S., 1049.

9. Fielding v. Preston (1 De G. & J. 438) questioned in Cook v. Dren, 2 N. R. 437.

10. Filkin v. Hill (4 Bro. P. C. 640) observed on in Watts v. Hyde, 2 Ph. 406; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 39; 11 Jur. 979. Reversing 2 Colly. 368; 10 Jur. 127; and in Watts v. Eglinton (Lord), 1 Coop. C. C. 432. n.

11. Filley v. Bridger (2 Vern. 519) doubted. See Curtis v. Curtis, 2 Bro. C. C. 620.

12. Finch v. Hattersley (3 Russ. 345. n.). Judges have expressed doubts whether this case ought to be followed. See Cook v. Dawson, 8 De G. F. & J. 127.

13. Finch v. Squire (10 Ves. 41) not followed in Jervois v. Lawrence, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 209; 52 L. J., Ch., 242; 47 L. T. 428; 31 W. R. 267.

14. Fisher, Exp., Ash, Re (7 L. R., Ch., 636; 41 L. J., Exch., 62; 26 L. T. 931; 20 W. R. 849), explained in Kilner, Exp., Barker, Re, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 245; 41 L. T. 520; 28 W. R. 269, and in Barton, Exp., Tunstall, Re, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 102; 41 L. T. 471; 28 W. R. 268.

15. Fisher v. Ronalds (17 Jur. 398). Judgment in this case observed upon in Sidebottom v. Adkins, 5 W. R. 743; 3 Jur., N. S., 631.

16. Fishmongers' Co. v. East India Co. (11 Dick. 163) observed upon by Lord Westbury, C., in Jackson v. Newcastle (Duke), 10 Jur., N. S., 688; 10 L. T., N. S., 635.

17. Fishmongers' Co. v. Robertson (5 M. & G. 181). In considering this case, however, we have been obliged to direct our attention to the case of the Fishmongers' Co. v. Robertson, on account of a dictum which forms part of the elaborate judgment of the learned Lord Chief Justice Tindal. He says (at p. 192): "Even if the contract put in suit by the corporation had been on their part executory only, not executed, we feel little doubt but that their suing upon the contract would amount to an admission on record by them, that such contract was duly entered into on their part, so as to be obligatory on themselves, and that such admission on the record would estop them from setting up an objection in a cross-action that it was not sealed with their common seal." The Mayor of Thetford's case (1 Salk. 192) is cited as an authority for this proposition, but it does not support it in any degree whatever. It was a case of mandamus, and it was held that the return did not require to be sealed. There is no authority for saying that a record binds a plaintiff in such a manner, and the doctrine has been completely overruled in the Copper Miners' Co. v. Fox (16 Q. B. 229), although the observations of Chief Justice Tindal are entitled to very great respect. Per Kelly, C. B., in Kidderminster Corporation v. Hardwick, 22 W. R. 160, 162.

J., Ch., 29) as to mortgages to building societies, is binding on the Court, and extends to the deduction of redemption moneys paid in by the mortgagor, although that point is not expressly referred to in the judgment. Smith v. Pilkington, 1 De G. F. & J. 120. And see Archer v. Harrison, 7 De G. M. & G. 404; 3 Jur., N. S., 194; 29 L. J., Ch., 227; 4 Jur., N. S., 58.

22. Fletcher v. Fletcher (4 Hare 67) distinguished in Scales v. Maude, 1 Jur., N. S., 1147.

23. Fletcher v. Moore (3 Jur., N. S., 458; 26 L. J., Ch., 530; 29 L. T. 173) rightly decided, though the grounds of the decision cannot be supported. Wardroper v. Cutfield, 10 Jur., N. S., 194; 33 L. J., Ch., 605; 9 L. T., N. S., 753.

24. Fletcher v. Rylands (3 L. R., H. L., 330; 37 L. J., Exch., 161) distinguished in Anderson v. Oppenheimer, 5 L. R., Q. B. D., 602; 49 L. J., Q. B., 708.

1. Fletcher v. Rylands (3 L. R., H. L., 330; 35 E. J., Exch., 155). The foundation of the doctrine there laid down is derived from an old case (Tenant v. Goldwin, 1 Salk. 21, 360; 2 Lord Raym. 1089) in which it was determined that it was the duty of a man to keep his own filth on his own ground. If a person brings on to his own land things which have a tendency to escape and to do mischief, he must take care that they do not get on to his neighbour's land. This is a very different proposition from that which has been contended for on behalf of the plaintiff; it is that where a person has yew trees growing on his own land which are clipped by some means, he must prevent the clippings from escaping on to his neighbour's land, and from being placed there by a stranger. Per Mellor, J., in Wilson v. Newbury, 7 L. R., Q. B., 31, 33; 41 L. J., Q. B., 31, 32; 25 L. T. 695; 20 W. R. 111.

7. Flower v. Lloyd (10 L. R., Ch. D., 327; 39 L. T. 613; 27 W. R. 496) explained and commented on in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer, 10 L. R., Q. B. D., 308; 52 L. J., Q. B., 7; 47 L. T. 328; 31 W. R. 57. Per Brett, L. J.

8. Foden v. Finney (4 Russ. 428) disapproved of in Cutler, Re, 14 Beav. 220; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 504; 15 Jur. 911; and overruled by Bailey v. Dennett, 3 Y. & Coll. 459; 3 Jur. 844.

9. Foley v. Maillardet (1 De G. J. & S. 365; 33 L. J., Ch., 335; 11 W. R. 628; 9 L. T., N. S., 643) (service of bills in equity out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery) not followed in Drummond v. Drummond, 12 Jur., N. S., 581; 35 L. J., Ch., 780; 14 W. R. 828, by Stuart, V.-Ch., and expressly overruled S. C. on appeal 15 L. T., N. S., 337; 15 W. R. 267; 36 L. J., Ch., 153.

10. Folkes v. Western (9 Ves. 456) maintained and shown to be consistent with Pitt v. Jackson (2 Bro. C. C. 51). Lee v. Head, 1 Kay & J. 620; 1 Jur., N. S., 722; 24 L. J., Ch., 569; 3 W. R. 591; 3 Eq. Rep. 1046.

11. Folkes v. Western (9 Ves. 496) approved of in Brownlow v. Meath (Earl), 2 Dr. & Wal. 674; 2 Ir. Eq. R. 393.

12. Forbes v. Moffatt (18 Ves. 393), dictum of Sir William Grant in this case, explained in Horton v. Smith, 4 Kay & J. 624.

13. Forbes v. Peacock (12 Sim. 528; 13 L. J., Ch., 46; 15 L. J., Ch., 371). The doctrine of this case amounts only to this, that where prior to 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, and 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, there is a trust to sell real estate, and pay debts and legacies out of the proceeds, there is also an implied power to the trustees to give receipts for the purchase money. There is nothing in that case authorising trustees, by reason merely of such a charge, to sell a settled estate. Carlyon v. Trustcott, 20 L. R., Eq., 348; 44 L. J., Ch., 156; 32 L. T., N. S., 50.

14. Ford v. Chesterfield (Earl) (16 Beav. 520). The rules laid down in as to costs of disclaiming defendants in suits for foreclosure or redemption approved. Bellamy v. Brickenden, 4 Kay & J. 670.

15. Forth, Exp (Mont. & M. 10), varied in Palmer, Exp., id. 211.

16. Forth v. Chapman (1 P. W. 666) the dictum therein as to a bequest of leasehold estate questioned in Kerr or Ker v. Dungannon (Lord), 1 Dr. & War. 509; 1 Con. & L. 335; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 343.

17. Forth v. Chapman (1 P. W. 664). According to Lord Hardwicke's note of this case Lord Macclesfield held, that the words "leave no issue" must relate to the time of the deaths of the testator's two nephews, and could not be extended to a dying without issue generally. See Beauclerk v. Dormer, 2 Atk. 808.

18. The doctrine of Foss v. Harbottle (2 Hare 492), as to the interference of this Court in the internal administration of incorporated companies, confirmed in Lord v. Governor and Company of Copper Miners, 2 Ph. 740; 1 H. & Tw. 55; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 65; 12 Jur. 1059. Reversing 2 De G. & Sm. 308; and in Macdougall v. Gardiner, 45 L. J., Ch., 27; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 13; and in Edwards v. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co., 2 De G. & Sm. 537.

19. Foss v. Harbottle (2 Hare 461) approved and followed in Duckett v. Gover, 25 W. R. 554; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 82; 46 L. J., Ch., 407.

23. Fourdrin v. Goudey (3 Myl. & K. 383) overruled in part by Du Hournelin v. Sheldon, 4 Myl. & C. 525. S. C. nom. Du Hournelin v. Att.-Gen., 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25. Affirming Du Hournelin v. Sheldon, 1 Beav. 79; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 183; 3 Jur. 69.

24. Fowle v. Freeman (9 Ves. J. 351) "appears to me to be correctly decided whether at law or in equity." Per Cranworth, C., in Ridgway v. Wharton, 4 Jur., N. S., 175. "The case of Fowle v. Freeman does not touch the present case. There can be no objection whatever, I apprehend, to that judgment." Per Lord Brougham. Id.

25. Fowle v. Freeman (9 Ves. 351) distinguished in Chinnock v. Ely (Marchioness), 6 N. R. 1; 11 Jur., N. S., 329; 13 W. R. 597; 12 L. T., N. S., 251; 4 De G. J. & S. 688; 6

1. Fowler v. Richards (5 Russ. 39; 6 L. J., Ch., 185), as to who is the proper legal representative, doubted by Vice-Chancellor in Jernegan v. Baxter, 5 Sim. 568.

2. Fowler's case, British and American Telegraph Co., Re (27 L. T., N. S., 748; 14 L. R., Eq., 316; 21 W. R. 37; 42 L. J., Ch., 9). Speaking with great respect for the decision in Fowler's case, I should have some difficulty in following it; in fact, I could not follow it. I could distinguish the two cases, but I do not think it is desirable for a judge to go out of his way to find distinctions. It is better to say at once that he does not agree with a case. In Fowler's case, each director agreed to take twenty-five shares of 20% each, so that he was to contribute to the funds of the company 500% for the benefit of the creditors of the company. But Mr. Fowler made a mistake; he thought that the qualification was twenty shares of 25% each. Under that mistake, and in ignorance that any shares had been allotted to him, he applied for and was allotted other shares of exactly the same amount. The liquidator insisted on his taking, in addition to the shares allotted to him, twenty-five of 20% each. He said, "I have done so already in substance though not in form." A very technical judge might have insisted on this number, but there was no justification for making him take both. With all my respect for V.-Ch. Bacon, I am utterly unable to agree with Fowler's case. I should not have followed it if this had been the same case, but this is fairly distinguishable. Per Sir George Jessel, M. R., in New Burton Lime Co., Re, Duke's case, 33 L. T., N. S., 776; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 620, 622; 45 L. J., Ch., 389; 24 W. R. 341.

3. Fox, Exp. (1 Ves. & B. 67). The case relied on is Fox, Exp., where Lord Eldon laid down the rule that the specification must be complied with, irrespective of the drawing; and if not the patent is bad. Now, of course I should be most reluctant to suppose that anything laid down by Lord Eldon was wrong, but I confess, although that was the rule then, the great improvements of science since that time, as instanced by the inventions of locomotives, electric telegraphs, etc., have made it impossible that it can be now adhered to. Look at any of these modern inventions, they are utterly unintelligible, even to a skillful engineer, without the drawings; and therefore it is not surprising that that rule can be no longer the law. A specification may consist of figures or one figure only; or it may consist of a description aided by the figure or figures. [The Vice-Chancellor then referred to Coryton on Patents, 140.] That rule, therefore, is no longer a rule, and a specification may be good although it consists of a drawing only. The specification here, although it has had various objections made to it, is very short. I do not think that any ordinarily skilled workman upon perusing it would have any difficulty in reproducing the article for which the plaintiff claims a patent. The specification is therefore, I consider, sufficient, and there is nothing in it calculated to mislead the public. I cannot come to the conclusion that the addition of the words at the end vitiate the patent although, perhaps, they had been better omitted. On the rule, therefore, laid down in Lewis v. Marling (10 B. & C. 27), the specification complies with the law, and the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a perpetual injunction, with an account and a reference as to damages. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Poupard v. Fardell, 21 L. T., N. S., 699; 18 W. R. 127.

5. Fox v. Fox (19 L. R., Eq., 286; 23 W. R. 314) in Parker, Re, Barker v. Barker, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 44.

6. Fox v. Gregg (2 Sugd. Pow. App., No. 213) distinguished in Neatherway v. Fry, 1 Kay 172; 23 L. J., Ch. 222.

7. Fox v. Hawks (13 L. R., Ch. D., 822) observed upon in Breton's Estate, Re, Breton v. Woolven, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 416; 50 L. J., Ch., 369; 44 L. T. 337; 29 W. R. 777.

8. Fox's case (5 L. R., Eq., 118; 37 L. J., Ch., 257) overruled in Scottish Petroleum Co., Re, Wallace's case, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 413; 49 L. T. 348; 31 W. R. 846.

9. Fowley, Exp., Nurse, Re (3 L. R., Ch., 515; 16 W. R. 831; 18 L. T., N. S., 862), observed upon in Field, Exp., 13 L. R., Ch. D., 106. n.; 23 W. R. 267.

10. Fowley, Exp. (3 L. R., Ch., 515) explained in Burton, Exp., Tunstall, Re, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 102; 41 L. T. 571; 28 W. R. 268.

11. Foy's Trusts, Re (33 L. T. 161; 23 W. R. 741), not followed in St. Mary's, Wigton (Vicar), Exp., 18 L. R., Ch. D., 646; 45 L. T. 134; 29 W. R. 883.

12. Foy v. Foy (1 Cox 163; 1 Bro. C. C. 393) not to be found in Reg. Book. 2 Rep. Leg. 23. n.

13. Frame v. Dawson (11 Ves. 386). With regard to this case, the actual decision was no doubt correct, but as to the unqualified terms in which the general principle was there stated, Malins, V.-Ch., in Williams v. Evans (44 L. J., Ch., 319, 323; 19 L. R., Eq., 517; 32 L. T. 359; 23 W. R. 466), was of opinion that subsequent authorities negatived them altogether.

14. France v. France (13 L. R., Eq., 173) Form of decree in this case not adopted in Dacey v. Wietlisbach, 15 L. R., Eq., 269.

15. Francis v. Clemow (Kay 435) followed. Wheeler v. Howell, 3 Kay & J. 198.

16. Francis v. Rucker (Ambl. 672). According to a law in Pennsylvania, bills of exchange drawn or indorsed on persons in England, and protested, should be paid to the holder, with 20% per cent. for damage; and where bills drawn on a merchant in England were accepted by him, and he afterwards became bankrupt before they were due, and they were protested for non-payment, the drawer having paid the money due on the bills, and the 20% per cent. to the holder, he was permitted to prove under the commission. Francis v. Rucker was well considered by Lord Camden, C., who so felt the great importance of it, that, in order to settle the law solemnly and finally, he was not satisfied to do what I believe he might have done in bankruptcy, but he directed a bill to be filed so that his opinion might be reviewed, and the opinion of the House of Lords, if necessary, taken upon it. His decision however, was not appealed against. It has, I believe, been considered law ever since, and is, in my opinion, consistent with reason and good sense, per Campbell, C., in Walker v. Hamilton, 1 De G. F. & J. 602, 610, 611.

I say nothing as to how this case would stand, as between a holder and the acceptors, because this is not the case before us; but as between the drawer and the acceptors, in my opinion, there is a liability in the acceptors, which would have been provable under a bankruptcy. Therefore, the case of Francis v. Rucker, is distinct upon the point, and I do not think that that authority, after having examined the petition which was presented in bankruptcy, is confined at all to the special circumstances of the particular case, per Turner, L. J. Id.

1. Frank v. Frank (1 Ch. Ca. 84). A., seised in tail of freehold lands, and in fee of copyhold lands, devised the copyholds to defendant, who was entitled to the remainder of the freehold lands, and devised the freehold to plaintiff. Defendant apprehending that A. had suffered a recovery, agreed with plaintiff, without consideration, that each should enjoy according to the will, but discovering afterwards that no recovery had been suffered, he sued for the freehold lands. Plaintiff brought his bill to establish the agreement, and it was decreed to him accordingly. See Leonard v. Leonard, 2 Ball & B. 183, where Manners, Ch., said this was a very unsatisfactory decision, and in a book of very doubtful authority.

2. Frankland v. Lucas (4 Sim. 586). The judgment of the Vice-Chancellor in this case does not justify the statement in the marginal note of the reporter. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Chapman v. Chapman, 18 W. R. 533, 537; 9 L. R., Eq., 276; 22 L. T. 145.

3. As to Franklin v. Thornebury (1 Vern. 132). See per Lord Henley in Drury v. Drury, 2 Eden. 58.

I think this case carries the doctrine to an extent not warranted by the modern practice of the Court. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Wilkinson, Re, 37 L. J., Ch., 384.

5. Fraser v. Pigott (1 Younge 354) stated to have been overruled. Overhill's Trust, Re, 1 Sm. & G. 362; 17 Jur. 342; 22 L. J., Ch., 485; 1 W. R. 208.

6. Fraser v. Pigott (1 Younge 354) is a case in which Lord Lyndhurst obviously misapprehended the interpretation of the will then before him. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Holt v. Sindrey, 38 L. J., Ch., 126, 131.

7. Fraser v. Pigott (1 Younge 354) inconsistent with the other authorities upon the subject. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Crook v. Hill, 38 L. J., Ch., 579, 582.

8. Fream v. Donling (20 Beav. 624), is not reported on appeal, but it would appear from a note of the case in 4 L. R., Eq., 145. n., that the decision on that part of the will on which the case is reported, is not overruled. I have to thank Mr. Turner for giving me a note of the judgment of the lords justices on the appeal in Fream v. Donling, which shows very clearly that their lordships proceeded on the ground of the residue being given, and not on the ground that they differed from me on that part of the case on which I gave my judgment, as reported by Mr. Beavan. Per Lord Romilly in Hodges v. Grant, 4 L. R., Eq., 140, 149; 36 L. J., Ch., 935; 15 W. R. 607.

14. French v. French (6 De G. M. & G. 95. Reversing 1 Jur., N. S., 840) commented on and doubted in Wakefield v. Gibbon, 3 Jur., N. S., 353; 2 Jur., N. S., 169; 25 L. J., Ch., 612.

15. Freshney v. Carrick (1 H. & N. 653), held, on the authority of this case, that although the possession of the engine was in accordance with the bona fide agreement between the plaintiff and L., it was in the possession, order, and disposition of the bankrupt, with the consent of the true owner, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act of 1849, s. 125. Hornsby v. Miller, 5 Jur., N. S., 938; 28 L. J., Exch., 99; 7 W. R. 53; 32 L. T. 125; 1 El. & Bl. 92. S. P. Murray, Re, Tickell, Exp., 9 Ir. Ch. R. 281.

16. Friar or Fryer v. Wilkinson is not reported either in print or in MS.; the case is cited from the proceedings in the cause filed in the chancery offices, but it is extremely difficult to rest safely on a case not reported by any competent person, and in which the grounds of the decision are to be picked out of the facts appearing on the recorded proceedings; while, if the case had been reported, it might appear that, in truth, some other matter than the reason supposed was the principal cause of the dismissal of the bill. If the case had been seriously argued it would probably have been reported, and being a question of law, it would probably have been sent for the decision of a court of common law, as was done in the case of Bleamire v. Barfoot (6 Taunt. 504), by Sir William Grant. Per Romilly, M. R., in Knight v. Bowyer, 28 Beav. 627; 3 Jur., N. S., 968, 969.

20. Garrard v. Lauderdale (Lord) (3 Sim. 1. S. C. on appeal 2 Russ. & M. 451). That case has been questioned by Lord St. Leonards upon the facts in Simmonds v. Palley (2 J. & L. 489); but in point of principle and law, I apprehend there is no doubt that if the matter is a simple transaction between assignee and assignor, that the assignee is to take the property, no creditor can take advantage of that, except by communication made to him of the nature and effect of that deed. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Glegg v. Rors, 41 L. J., Ch., 243, 244, 245; 7 L. R., Ch., 71, 74; 20 W. R. 198; 25 L. T. 612.

22. Garth v. Ersfield (Sir J. Bridgman's Reports, 22). I am bound to say that I do not at all feel confident that the case in Bridgman would be so decided at the present day. Per Cranworth, C., in Beavan v. Oxford (Earl), 6 De G. M. & G. 507, 519, 520.

23. Garthwaite v. Robinson (2 Sim. 43). With regard to the case of Garthwaite v. Robinson, decided by V.-Ch. Shadwell. I must confess I should not have decided that case in the same way that he did. It was decided as a pure and simple question of the construction of a will. The will there reads different from the will now before me, and no general rule of law was laid down. I must say the Vice-Chancellor came to the conclusion he did for reasons which I am unable to appreciate. It cannot be expected that the minds of any two judges will always adopt the same view of the construction of particular words used by a testator, and, therefore, a decision on the mere meaning of such words is of little value. Words which strike one mind as of great importance, do not strike another mind in the same way, and possibly the Vice-Chancellor attached greater weight to particular words than I should have done. In that case the power was to appoint among the testator's present or future grandchildren, or their respective issue, and the Vice-Chancellor held that the power had been badly executed on account of the exclusion of the children of a deceased grandchild, who were living at the donee's death. I should be entirely unable, on that will, to arrive at that conclusion, and if I had to construe the same words, I should feel myself at liberty, according to the rule laid down by the House of Lords in Jenkins v. Hughes (8 H. L. Ca. 571), that one judge is not bound to follow the decisions of another on questions of mere verbal interpretation, to decline following that decision. Per Jessel, M. 11. Gilbert on Uses. The proposition rests very much on Chief Baron Gilbert's sole authority; I do not place much reliance on that, for it is known that the book was a posthumous work, and not presented in the form in which he intended it to be made public, and it is possible he might have made considerable alterations if published in his lifetime; and it bears marks, particularly in the latter part of it, of being incomplete. Per Romilly, M. R., in Barrow v. Wadkin, 27 L. J., Ch., 134.

12. Gilbert v. Lewis (1 De G. J. & S. 38; 11 W. R. 223; 32 L. J., Ch., 347; 9 L. T., N. S., 541). In regard to the application of authorities to ascertain the meaning of the word "sole" in a gift to a female, there is a marked distinction between a gift to an unmarried woman and one to a married woman, or in contemplation of marriage. Sir Edward Williams, in his book on Executors, last edition, p. 668, states fully and accurately the doctrine on the subject, that, to exclude marital right, it must be done in express terms. The dictum of Lord Westbury in Gilbert v. Lewis is recognised by Wood, V.-Ch., and Kindersley, V.-Ch., and followed by the latter in Lewis v. Matthews, 2 L. R., Eq., 177; 14 W. R. 682. Per Blackburne in Massey v. Hayes, 15 W. R. 376, 377.

The case of Gilbert v. Lewis has been cavilled at, but the dictum of Lord Westbury has lost nothing in point of reason. The word "sole" is a shifting and varying term, taking sense and colour from the relation in which it is used. In relation to marriage it means separate; in relation to property, several; and is used both as to males and females in wills in the sense of own, i.e., her use, and nobody's else. The intention to exclude the marital right must be expressed beyond doubt. In Green v. Marsden (1 Drew. 647; 1 W. R. 511) sole use and benefit was decided not to mean separate, but belonging to no other person. The word "sole" is midway between separate and own, and must be controlled by the context. The dictum of Lord Westbury is a landmark in the quicksands of conflicting decisions. Though the interposition of trustees sometimes has been held to show that it was intended to give separate estate, the mind of the Court must be clearly satisfied that that was the single purpose of the interposition. Per Christian, J. Ib.

13. Gilbert v. Lewis (1 De G. J. & S. 38) distinguished in Tarsey, Re, 1 L. R., Eq., 561; 12 Jur., N. S., 370; 35 L. J., Ch., 452; 14 W. R. 474; 14 L. T., N. S., 15.

16. Gill v. Cubitt (3 B. & C. 466) observed on, and declared to be no longer law in Cutler, Re, 14 Beav. 220; 15 Jur. 911; 20 L. J., Ch., 504.

17. Gill v. Shelley (2 Russ. & M. 336). I wish to make this observation on Gill v. Shelley, which I have looked at carefully. The Master of the Rolls evidently took a great deal of interest in the matter before him, and I wanted to observe that Mr. Jarman, in his book, seems to have fallen into an error. I have not got the last edition of his book, and it may be different in that, but I do not understand on what authority the following remark rests. At p. 187 of the 2nd vol. (2nd edit.) he makes this remark on Gill v. Shelley: "Sir John Leach, M. R., said that if Swaime v. Kennerley (1 Ves. & B. 469) and Hart v. Durrand (3 Anst. 684) had not been distinguishable from the case before him (that is, Gill v. Shelley), he should have felt no hesitation in overruling them, and decreed that the illegitimate child was entitled to share in the residue." I do not know what the authority for that is. There is no such statement in the report, which I have gone through as carefully as possible. The observation throws a considerable amount of doubt upon the matter, to persons who do not look into the cases. The cases of Swaime v. Kennerley and Hart v. Durrand both appear to me to be remarkably good law. The decision of Swaime v. Kennerley is by Lord Eldon, and that of Hart v. Durrand is in 3 Anst. 684, and is, I think, the decision of Chief Baron Macdonald. I only wish to state that I do not know that there is anything to throw a doubt on these cases. Per Lord

10. Godfrey v. Davis (6 Ves. 43). That case was in my opinion, in the opinion of Sir Thomas Plumer, and I should have said in the opinion of almost every lawyer, well decided; but unfortunately, in the report (6 Ves. 43) of what was said by Lord Alvanley on that occasion, his language is certainly too unqualified. Upon that want of strictly accurate language Mr. Jarman, in his very valuable treatise, has founded some criticisms upon the judgment in that case which seems to me far less happily made than most of Mr. Jarman's observations on the cases which he has collected (2 Jarm. Wills, 135-140, last edit.). Mr. Jarman's work is one of great value. It has followed what was begun by Mr. Roper, begun by Mr. Powell, improved by Mr. White, and by Mr. Jarman himself brought to a surprising degree of perfection. Mr. Jarman has, upon a deliberate consideration of cases in his chambers, endeavoured to extract certain rules of construction to guide in considering the language of testators; but it is quite possible to attempt to do a great deal more than it is in the power of any human being to accomplish in that respect. Lord Eldon, I recollect said of Lord Redesdale's Treatise on Pleading, that it was not surprising that there should be some mistakes in it, but it was surprising there should be so few; that is to say, whoever attempts to deduce certain artificial rules of construction from what has been delivered by various judges, upon the consideration of various cases, is very apt to make a mistake. I do not think Mr. Jarman has gone very far wrong, and I think he has done very good service, even in this part of his work which has been considered during this argument, very good service indeed, because, although he has done some injustice to Lord Alvanley, I think he has directed attention to niceties and distinctions which are of great importance to consider. . . . Sir T. Plumer, in Hutcheson v. Jones (2 Madd. 130), completely explains the principle of the decision in Godfrey v. Davis, for he says, "It was decided upon the principle of the period being distinctly fixed when the distribution was to take place. The children born after that period were not entitled. That was the principle of the decision in Godfrey v. Davis." Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Conduitt v. Soane, 4 Jur., N. S., 502, 504.

12. Golding, Exp., Knight, Re (13 L. R., Ch. D., 628; 42 L. T. 270; 28 W. R. 451), approved and followed in Falk, Exp., Kiell, Re, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 446; 42 L. T. 780; 28 W. R. 785. Affirmed sub nom. Kemp v. Falk, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 573; 52 L. J., Ch., 167; 47 L. T. 454; 31 W. R. 125.

13. Goldsmid, Exp. (1 De G. & J. 257; 25 L. J., Bky., 25) had been relied on by the appellants, but I do not think that case in point; and even if it were in point, so far as it went, it was of but little authority, considering that the Court was divided in opinion, and that an appeal was now pending in the House of Lords. Per Turner, L. J., in Thornton, Exp., 5 Jur., N. S., 211, 214; 28 L. J., Bky., 7.

14. Goldsmid v. Stonehewer (9 Hare (App.) xxxviii.; 1 W. R. 91) distinguished in Mills v. Jennings, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 639; 49 L. J., Ch., 209; 42 L. T. 169; 28 W. R. 549.

15. Goodall v. Ganthorne (2 Sm. & Giff. 375), which decided that a posthumous heir was entitled to the rents of a descended estate, not followed by Wood, V.-Ch., in Richards v. Richards, Johns. 754; 6 Jur., N. S., 1145.

16. Goodall v. Little (1 Sim., N. S., 155; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 132; 15 Jur. 809) approved in Glyn v. Caulfield, 3 Macn. & G. 463; 15 Jur. 807.

17. Goodman v. Goodman (3 Giff. 643; 6 L. T. 641) considered in Goodman's Trusts, Re, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 619; 49 L. J., Ch., 805; 43 L. T. 14; 28 W. R. 902. Reversed 17 L. R., Ch. D., 266; 50 L. J., Ch., 425; 44 L. T. 527; 29 W. R. 586.

18. Gordon, Re (37 L. J., Ch., 408; 6 L. R., Eq., 335). Costs of all parties of a petition for payment to the tenant for life of the income of a fund paid into court, not payable out of income, per Malins, V.-Ch.; not followed in Whitten, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 352); by James, V.-Ch., or by the Master of Rolls in Smith, Re (9 L. R., Eq., 374; 18 W. R. 513; 22 L. L., N. S., 220), or by Malins, V.-Ch., himself in Munton, Re (39 L. J., Ch., 764), and such costs are payable out of income.

1. Gordon, Re (6 L. R., Eq, 335), disapproved of and overruled in Evans, Re, 26 L. T., N. S., 815; 20 W. R. 695; 7 L. R., Ch., 609; 41 L. J., Ch., 512.

2. Gordon v. Gordon (3 Swan. 400). Quære, whether Lord Eldon meant what is there ascribed to him as to directing issue in Malone v. Malone, 8 Cl. & F. 179; West, 637; 6 Jur. 177.

3. Gordon v. Graham (7 Vin. Ab. 52, Creditors, E. pl. 3; 2 Eq. Ab. 598, pl. 16). "The authority of that case has always been considered extremely questionable." Per Chelmsford, C., in Shaw v. Neale, 6 H. L. Ca. 608; 4 Jur., N. S., 695, 698; 27 L. J., Ch., 444, 447, and by the Master of the Rolls S. C. 20 Beav. 157.

4. Gordon v. Graham (2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 598, pl. 16; 7 Vin. Abr. 52, Creditor, E., pl. 3), inaccurately reported and the doctrine laid down therein overruled in Rolt v. Hopkinson, 3 De G. & J. 177; 4 Jur., N. S., 1119; 28 L. J., Ch., 41; 7 W. R. 27; and Hopkinson v. Rolt, 9 H. L. Ca. 514; 34 L. J., Ch., 468; 7 Jur., N. S., 1209; 5 L. T., N. S., 90.

5. Gottlieb v. Cranch (4 De G. M. & G. 440; 1 Eq. Rep. 341). See Courtenay v. Wright, 6 Jur., N. S., 1283; 9 Giff. 337; 30 L. J., Ch., 131; 9 W. R. 153; 3 L. T., N. S., 433.

6. Goudy v. Duncombe (1 Exch. 430) discussed in Anglo-French Co-operative Society, Re, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 533; 49 L. J., Ch., 358; 28 W. R. 580.

7. Gough v. Hayward (3 Bulstrode 121). It is laid down in Jarman's Conveyancing, vol. 2, p. 12, that an annuity charged upon a term of years, where there are no words of limitation, is an annuity co-extensive with the duration of the term; and a distinction is drawn between an annuity granted expressly for the life of A. B. and an annuity granted to A. B. where there are no words defining his estate. For that proposition certain passages are referred to from 1 Rolle's Abridgment, 831, pl. 5, and 10 Viner's Abridgment, 219, pl. 5. On looking, however, to the passages referred to from 1 Viner's Abridgment to see on what authority the proposition is based, I find cited as the authority the case of Gough v. Hayward, of which there are several reports. In 3 Bulstrode's Reports, part 3, at page 121 et seq., there is a very full and very accurate report, giving a narrative of the discussion that took place on the case. . . . I find, also, in Sheppard's Touchstone (Mr. Preston's edition), at page 443, the principle laid down in the same way as in Jarman's Conveyancing, viz., that an annuity charged upon a term of years, without any words of limitation, is co-extensive with the term: and the case of Gough v. Hayward is again cited as the authority. But I find that in the Touchstone this is put with a query; "sed quære," says Sheppard, "for the judges were divided on this point;" and I find also a note by Mr. Preston, expressing his own opinion that upon the second question that arose in that case Lord Coke was wrong and the other judges were right, but expressing no opinion upon the abstract question whether an annuity charged upon a term of years simpliciter, without any words of limitation, was or was not to continue for the entire duration of the term. I confess that, if that abstract question were presented to me to decide, I should incline to the opinion that the annuity was not to continue during the entire term, notwithstanding the dictum of Lord Coke to the contrary, but that it was an annuity determinable by the death of the original grantee of the annuity, according to the opinion of the other judges. Per Flanagan, J., Gillman, Re, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 92, 95, 96.

8. Gould v. Gould (2 Jur., N. S., 484) not followed in Wood v. Wood by Lord Romilly, 23 L. T., N. S., 295; 10 L. R., Eq, 220; 18 W. R. 819; 39 L. J., Ch., 790.

10. Gowan v. Broughton (19 L. R., Eq., 77; 31 L. T., N. S., 533). Semble, the rule laid down in this case is merely that lapse of the residue does not exonerate it from the expenses of administration. Jones, Re, Jones v. Coless, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 40; 27 W. R. 108; 39 L. T. 287.

11. Gonland v. De Faria (17 Ves. 20). The rule laid down in this case, as explained in Headen v. Rosher (1 M'Clel. & Y. 89), and Potts v. Curtis (1 Younge 543), imposing upon the purchaser of an expectancy the burden of proving that he gave the proper value, does not import that the value is to be calculated according to the tables, but that it must be the fair market value, with reference to the circumstances of the case. So explained in Aldborough (Earl) v. Tyre, West 221; 7 Cl. & F. 436.

12. Grabowski, Re (37 L. J., Ch., 926; 6 L. R., Eq., 12), as to the apportionment of interest between tenant for life and remainderman. There must have been some slip in this case, and it was not followed in Cox v. Cox, 38 L. J., Ch., 569; 8 L. R., Eq, 343.

13. Grace v. Newman (19 L. R., Eq., 623; 44 L. J., Ch., 298; 23 W. R. 517) followed in Maple v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 369; 52 L. J., Ch., 67; 47 L. T. 589; 31 W. R. 70.

14. Graftey v. Humpage (1 Beav. 46; 8 L. J., Ch., 98) observed upon in Wilton v. Colvin, 25 L. J., Ch., 850; 3 Drew. 617, 624; 2 Jur., N. S. 867; 4 W. R. 759.

15. Graftey v. Humpage (1 Beav. 46) not approved of by Knight Bruce, V.-Ch., in Hoare v. Hornby, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 129, or by Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Archer v. Kelly, 6 Jur., N. S., 814.

16. Graftey v. Humpage (1 Beav. 46; 8 L. J., Ch., 98) followed. The criticisms made on this case are not, in my opinion, well founded, and I do not feel myself justified, on such grounds, in shaking the authority of that case, which, in my opinion, is in accordance with the laws of this court. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., Hughes, Re, 4 Giff. 432, 436.

17. Graham, Esq. (5 De G. M. & G. 356). In that case the Lords Justices asked if there was any authority to show that knowledge acquired subsequently to the engagement would fix upon the creditors the obligation of seeing to the interests of the surety; and counsel citing none, it seems to have been held that in that case the discharge did not take place.

But Oakeley v. Pasheller (10 Bligh 548; 4 Cl. & F. 207) is a precise and direct authority upon the point, and being in the House of Lords, is of course above that of this court or that of the Lords Justices. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Oriental Financial Corporation v. Overend, Gurney & Co., 7 L. R., Ch., 142, 152; 41 L. J., Ch., 332; 25 L. T. 813; 20 W. R. 253.

1. A bill of sale to secure an existing debt and a present advance, which assigns the whole of the grantor's property, including that which he may purchase by means of the advance, is not necessarily void as an act of bankruptcy. Graham v. Chapman (12 C. B. 85) on this point overruled. Hauwell, Exp., Hemingway, Re, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 626; 52 L. J., Ch., 737; 48 L. T. 742; 31 W. R. 711.

2. Grainge v. Warner (13 W. R. 833) inconsistent with Bartlett v. Bartlett (1 De G. & J. 127; 26 L. J., Ch., 577), and with the current of modern practice. Per Mahns, V.-Ch., in Stuart v. Cockerell, 39 L. J., Ch., 127, 128.

3. Grant v. Grant (5 L. R., C. P., 727; 18 W. R. 951; 39 L. J., C. P., 272; 22 L. T., N. S., 233). The only difficulty in the case arises from the decision of the Exchequer Chamber in Grant v. Grant. But that case only decided that the primary meaning of the word "nephew" included not only the child of the testator's own brother, but also the child of his wife's brother. That is a question not of law, but of the English dictionary, and according to my view of the English language, the ordinary meaning of the words "nephews and nieces" is a man's own nephews and nieces, that is, by consanguinity and not affinity; and therefore I am of opinion (as I must decide between the judgments of the two courts) that the decision of the Court of Appeal in Chancery (Blower, Re, 6 L. R., Ch., 351; 19 W. R. 666; 42 L. J., Ch., 24; 25 L. T. 151; and Sherratt v. Mountford, 8 L. R., Ch., 928; 42 L. J., Ch., 688; 29 L. T. 284; 21 W. R. 818) is to be preferred. That being my view, as it was the view of Wood, V.-Ch., in Smith v. Lidiard (3 Kay & J. 252), I hold that the nephews and nieces of the testatrix by blood are the only persons entitled to take. Per Sir George Jessel, M. R., in Wells v. Wells, 18 L. R., Eq., 504, 506; 22 W. R. 893; 43 L. J., Ch., 681; 31 L. T. 16.

5. Grant v. Grant (22 L. T., N. S., 233; 18 W. R. 576; 5 L. R., C. P., 727; 39 L. J., C. P., 272) discussed in Parker, Re, Bentham v. Wilson, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 262; 50 L. J., Ch., 639; 44 L. T. 885; 29 W. R. 855.

6. Gray v. Lewis (8 L. R., Eq., 526; 17 W. R. 431). There the committee of the Stock Exchange had, upon the faith of the statement made to them as to Laffitte & Co.'s balance, granted the settling day. This fact is not distinctly stated in the report of Gray v. Lewis, in the Law Reports, though it might be inferred from that report that it was so. In the report in the Weekly Reporter (17 W. R. 433) the fact is distinctly stated. Per Bramwell, B., in British and American Telegraph Co. v. Albion Bank, 7 L. R., Exch., 119, 126; 41 L. J., Exch., 67, 72; 26 L. T. 257; 20 W. R. 419.

7. Graydon v. Hicks (2 Atk. 16). I think there must be something omitted in the report of this case before Lord Hardwicke. It is one on which the Court could not act without further inquiry. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Evans v. Addison, 4 Jur., N. S., 1034.

8. Great Australian Gold Mining Co. v. Martin (5 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 46 L. J., Ch., 289; 35 L. T. 874; 25 W. R. 246) not followed in Fowler v. Barstow, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 240; 51 L. J., Ch., 103; 45 L. T. 603; 30 W. R. 112.

9. Great v. Great (26 Beav. 621) questioned. If it were necessary for us to deal with this case, I should be slow to express my assent to it. Per James, L. J., in Shaw v. Jones-Ford, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 1, 15; 37 L. T. 233; 25 W. R. 815.

10. Great Western Railway of Canada v. Braid (1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 101; 8 L. T., N. S., 31). That an accident may be of such a nature that negligence may be presumed from the mere fact of the accident. That case has been much doubted on that very point, and Eale, C. J., protested against it, per Willes, J., in Czech v. General Steam Navigation Co., 17 L. T., N. S., 246, 247.

12. Greedy v. Lavender (11 Beav. 417) overruled by Coates v. Coates (12 W. R. 634; 33 Beav. 249; 3 N. R. 355). (Costs of inquiries as to incumbences): see per Hall, V.-Ch., in Ger v. Mahood, 23 W. R. 71.

13. Green v. Britten (42 L. J., Ch., 187; 27 L. T. 811) followed in Guthrie v. Walrond, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 573; 52 L. J., Ch., 165; 47 L. T. 614; 31 W. R. 285.

14. Green v. Low (4 W. R. 669; 22 Beav. 625) distinguished in Adams and Kensington Vestry, Re, 27 L. R., Ch. D., 394; 51 L. T. 852; 32 W. R. 883.

15. Greenough v. Gaskell (1 Myl. & K 98) not followed by Romilly, M. R., in Ford v. Tennant, 9 Jur., N. S., 292.

16. Greenway, Exp., Adams, Re (16 L. R., Eq., 619; 42 L. J., Bky., 110; 29 L. T. 75; 21 W. R. 866), contrary to Holmes v. Tutton, 5 El. & Bl. 65; 1 Jur., N. S., 975; 24 L. J., Q. B., 346, and disapproved of in Joselyne, Exp., Watt, Re, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 327; 47 L. J., Bky., 91; 38 L. T. 661; 26 W. R. 645.

17. Greenwell v. Greenwell (5 Ves. 194). The extension of rule as to giving interest by way of maintenance disapproved. See this case id. 199. a. n. (50).

18. Greenwood v. Roberts (15 Beav. 92) not followed in Wilson v. Wilson, 4 Jur., N. S., 1076.

19. Greenwood v. Taylor (1 Russ. & M. 185) questioned in Mason v. Bogg, 2 Myl. & C. 443; 1 Jur. 380.

20. Greenwood v. Taylor (1 Russ. & M. 185). The principle laid down in Greenwood v. Taylor has always seemed to me consistent with justice and good sense, and I should be very glad if Mr. De Gex's argument was correct when he contended that that case, though questioned, had never been overruled; however, I do not think it necessary further to direct his attention to that authority on the present occasion, for I consider that the rules of bankruptcy must be applied to the winding up of companies, and not the rules adopted by a court of equity in administering the estates of deceased persons. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Xerez Wine Shipping Co., Re, Alliance Bank, Exp., 16 W. R. 479.

2. Gregory v. Williams (3 Meriv. 582) explained in Empress Engineering Co, Re, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 125; 43 L. T. 742; 29 W. R. 342.

3. Greisley v. Chestenfield (Earl) (13 Beav. 288) not followed by Hall, V.-Ch., in Marshall v. Cronther, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 199; 23 W. R. 210.

4. Grellier, Exp. Macniel, Re (Mont. & M. 95), reversed S. C. Mont. 264.

5. Greville v. Browne (7 H. L. Ca. 689; 34 L. T., N. S., 8; 5 Jur., N. S., 849) distinguished in Elliott v. Dearsley, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 322; 44 L. T. 198; 29 W. R. 494.

6. Greville v. Browne, (7 H. L. Ca. 689; 3 Jur. N. S. 849). I think there is no getting over the case in the House of Lords (Greville v. Browne). It was formerly thought that where there was a specific devise followed by a residuary devise, legacies were not a charge on the residuary real estate; but Greville v. Browne settled that in such a case legacies are a charge on the real estate. I will, therefore, make a declaration in this case to that effect. Per Lord Romilly, M. R., in Skiller v. Haisman, 25 L. T., N. S., 745; 19 W. R. 693.

7. Greville v. Browne (7 H. L. Ca. 689; 34 L. T., N. S., 8) distinguished in Browning v. French, 24 L. T., N. S., 649.

8. Greville v. Browne (7 H. L. Ca. 689) followed in Gaisford v. Dunn, 17 L. R., Eq., 405; 43 L. J., Ch., 403; 30 L. T. 283; 22 W. R. 499.

9. Grey v. Ellison (2 Jur., N. S., 511) observed upon in Fitzwilliam (Earl) v. Price, 4 Jur., N. S., 889.

10. If a father purchases land in the name of his eldest son, this shall be an advancement for the son, and not a trust for the father, though the father had been in possession, and had received the rents and profits. Grey v. Grey, 1 Ch. Ca. 296; Finch 338; Scroope v. Scroope, 1 Ch. Ca. 27; Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Ch. Ca. 231, where this was said to be the constant rule; but Lord Chancellor, in that case, took this distinction; where a parent made a purchase in the name of an unadvanced child, and where in the name of one already advanced; for in the former case it should be considered as an advancement, and in the latter a trust for the parent. See Shales v. Shales, 2 Freem. 252, where this rule is said to have been so settled before the Statute of Frauds, and it is stronger since; and in Redington v. Redington, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 181, it was said by Fitzgibbon, Ch., that the rule laid down in Grey v. Grey, supra, and also in Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 F. W. 111, and in Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 386, has this strong additional circumstance in the two latter cases, that parol evidence was there held admissible on the part of the advanced son or his heir to rebut a claim of trust, because although improper against the legal operation of a deed, yet in the case of an advanced son, it is in support of the deed, and of law and equity too. Bridgm. Ind.

11. Grey v. Kentish, as stated in 1 Atk. 280, is arrant nonsense: corrected in Register Book, 21st July 1743, fol. 522. Garner v. Wilkinson, Dick. 494.

13. Griffith v. Pownall (13 Sim. 393). It was supposed that Greenwood v. Roberts, 15 Beav. 92, was in conflict with that decision; and it has even been treated as wrongly decided, on the ground that the Master of the Rolls did not advert to it (1 Jarm. on Wills, 2nd ed., p. 216; see p. 241 of 3rd ed.), where it was alleged that the case of Leake v. Robinson (2 Mer. 363) was wrongly applied in it. However, Sir John Romilly, in Webster v. Boddington, 26 Beav. 133, holds the former opinion, and says it is consistent with Griffith v. Pownall. Per Mazicre Brady, C., in Bell v. Bell, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 517, 529.

14. Griffiths v. Wood (1 Ves. & B. 307) followed in Wood v. Dyneley, 1 Madd. 32.

3. Hackett v. Baiss (20 L. R., Eq., 494; 45 L. J., Ch., 13). The regulation as to the angle of 45° is to be found, I believe, only in that provision of the Metropolis Local Management Act in which the width of a street is spoken of, and which of itself, measuring the width of a street and the height of the house, furnishes an angle of 45°. That, be it observed, is from the street, as Mr. Kay said, and if he had not said it, the Act of Parliament has said it; for the statute enacts that, "in determining the height of such building, the measurement shall be taken from the level of the centre of the street;" and that must be so, because the position of the windows is so different in various buildings that if you were to search for the point from which to measure your angle of 45°, it would be as various as the buildings to which it would be applied. It is said that the Master of the Rolls on a recent occasion, in Hackett v. Baiss, applied this rule about 45°. This, however, he did not do; on the contrary, he quoted the decision in the City of London Brewery Co. v. Tennant (9 L. R., Ch., 220), in which Lord Selborne said, there is no positive rule of law on the subject. The regulation may be an illustration or a guide, but rule there is none. It is said that the Master of the Rolls applied that rule and applied it by measuring through the middle of the window. No doubt the Master of the Rolls did what was suitable in the case before him, having regard to the arguments addressed to him, but that he laid down any rule of law I am by no means convinced, and I should be very much surprised to find that that was his intention, when I find him at the same time referring to a decision which lays down that there is no rule on the subject. He was deciding what was right between the parties before him, but a positive rule he never in any respect laid down. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Theed v. Debenham, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 165, 170; 24 W. R. 775.

4. Haines v. Burnett (27 Beav. 500). That case appears to me to be opposed both to principle and authority, and it must now be treated as distinctly overruled by Hodgkinson v. Crowe (10 L. R., Ch., 622; 44 L. J., Ch., 680; 33 L. T. 388; 23 W. R. 885). In Haines v. Burnett, Lord Romilly, without any special provision having been made in the contract to that effect, held that a covenant should be inserted making the lease determinable on the bankruptcy of the lessee, or on his making any arrangement for the benefit of his creditors. That was, in fact, nothing less than a variation of the contract. I cannot see any reason for holding such a covenant to be usual. Yet it is rather difficult, in looking at the case, to understand how it was decided. Lord Romilly seems to have thought that in considering general covenants, and all such other covenants as are usually inserted in leases of property of a similar description, some regard might be had to the peculiar nature and tenure of the property. But I cannot find any evidence on that point mentioned in the report, and it would seem that the judge, from his view of the nature of the property, inserted the clause. But when we look at the reasoning of V.-Ch. Bacon in Hodgkinson v. Crowe (19 L. R., Eq. 593), I think it is conclusive against any judge being allowed to say from his own view that such a covenant ought to be introduced. The Court of Appeal affirmed that decision, and went further, and held that under an agreement for a lease to contain "all usual and customary mining clauses," the landlord was not entitled to have inserted in the lease a proviso for re-entry except on non-payment of rent. Per Jessel, M. R., in Hampshire v. Wickers, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 555, 560; 47 L. J., Ch., 243; 38 L. T. 408; 26 W. R. 491.

11. Hall v. Macdonald (14 Sim. 1). There is a difficulty created by the case of Hall v. Macdonald, but I am bound to say that for a great many years I have thought that case was not law. I remember making a note against the case when it was first reported. I have no doubt whatever that the V.-Ch. Shadwell's decision was right, but I cannot help thinking that Mr. Simons has misconceived what was precisely the point of the case, and, in fact, he did not report the case for that point. It is mentioned incidentally, and I can easily conceive certain states of circumstances in which the decision would have been perfectly right, without that precise expression having been necessary, or having been used. It seems to me that the case, in fact, is settled by principle, and the principle is so well established that I may venture to depart even from so great an authority as the V.-Ch. Shadwell in that case. There is no doubt as to the right of retainer as against legal assets on the part of an executor; and there is also, I think, such a preponderance of authority in favour of holding that assets like these are equitable; that, notwithstanding the decision in Lovegrove v. Cooper (2 Sm. & G. 271), I may so hold them. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Bain v. Sadler, 19 W. R. 1077; 12 L. R., Eq., 570; 25 L. T. 202; 40 L. J., Ch., 791.

But when you come to the general proposition which Mr. Justice Brett seems to have laid down, that a simple acceptance in your own mind, without any intimation to the other party, and expressed by a mere private act, such as putting a letter in a drawer, completes a contract, I must say I differ from that. It appears from the Year Books, that as long ago as the time of Edward IV. (17 Edw. IV., T. Pasch. Cas. 2), Chief Justice Brian decided this very point. The plea of the defendant in that case justified the seizing of some growing crops, because he said the plaintiff had offered him to go and look at them, and if he liked them, and would give 2s. 6d. for them, he might take them: that was the justification. That case is referred to in a book which I published a good many years ago, Blackburn on The Contract of Sale (pages 190, et seq.), and is there translated. Brian gives a very elaborate judgment, explaining the law of the unpaid vendor's lien as early as that time, exactly as the law now stands, and he consequently says, "This plea is clearly bad, as you have not shown the payment or the tender of the money;" but he goes farther, and says (I am quoting from memory, but I think I am quoting correctly), "Moreover, your plea is utterly naught, for it does not show that when you had made up your mind to take them you signified it to the plaintiff, and your having it in your own mind is nothing, for it is trite law that the thought of man is not triable, for even the devil does not know what the thought of man is; but I grant you this, that that if in his offer to you he had said, Go and look at them, and if you are pleased with them, signify it to such and such a man, and if you had signified it to such and such a man, your plea would have been good, because that was a matter of fact." I take it, my lords, that that, which was said 300 years ago and more, is the law to this day, and it is quite what Lord Justice Mellish, in Harris's case, accurately says, that where it is expressly or impliedly stated in the offer that you may accept the offer by posting a letter, the moment you post the letter the offer is accepted. You are bound from the moment you post the letter, not, as it is put here, from the moment you make up your mind on the subject. Per Lord Blackburn, in Brogden v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 2 L. 16. Hawkes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. (1 De G. M. & G. 737) is not inconsistent with Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 4 De G. M. & G. 115, 17 Jur. 845; 22 L. J., Ch., 682; 6 H. L. Ca. 113.

17. Hawkins v. Crook (2 P. W. 556) erroneous, per Lord Hardwicke in Turner v. Turner, Dick 316.

18. Hawkins v. Gathercole (1 Sim., N. S., 63; 20 L. J., Ch., 59; 14 Jur. 113), observed upon in Bales v. Brothers, 18 Jur. 715; 23 L. J., Ch., 150, 782; 17 Jur. 1174; 2 W. R. 116; 2 Eq. Rep. 321.

20. Hawthorn v. Shedd (3 Sm. & G. 293; 2 Jur., N. S., 749). I was surprised, however, to find the decision of Hawthorn v. Shedd, and also to find it approved by Lord St. Leonards in his book on Powers, p. 310, 8th ed.; and I should have had great difficulty in deciding this case if it had been on all fours with that one. But there the gifts were all pecuniary, while here there is a gift of Indian stock, and the case is, therefore, not so strong, though there is an appointment of executors. And in Shelford v. Ackland, 28 Beav. 10; 3 Jur., N. S.,

8, a doubt is expressed whether the words of the 4 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 27, s. 27, go to the full extent which V.-Ch. Stuart seemed to think they did in Hawthorn v. Sheddon. Here I am asked to say that a gift of Indian stock ought to be considered an appointment of a sum of Consolidated Bank Annuities. No doubt, if you describe the fund in a manner applicable to pass it, it will do so, but if you give a sum of 1,000*l.*, that gift will not pass leaseholds. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Hurlstone v. Ashton, 11 Jur. N. S. 725, 726.

3. Hayden v. Carroll (3 Ridgw. P. C. 545) questioned in O'Flaherty v. McDowell, 6 H. L. Ca. 142.

4. Hayes v. Hayes (4 Russ. 311) is not sound law. Per Jessel, M.R., in Hampton v. Holman, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 183, 190; 36 L. T., N. S., 287; 46 L. J., Ch., 248; 25 W. R. 459.

5. Haynes v. Haynes (3 De G. M. & G. 590), whether this case is consistent with Banks v. Braithwaite (32 L. J., Ch., 35; 7 L. T., N. S., 149). It is unnecessary for me to consider; I am bound to follow the former, which is the decision of the Court of Appeal, and in the good sense of which, moreover, I entirely concur. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Coles' Will, Re, 8 L. R., Eq., 271, 272; 22 L. T., N. S., 221, 222.

8. Head v. Egerton (3 P. W. 280), which has been called a landmark of the law, determined that where one man has the legal estate but not the title deeds, and the other the title deeds but not the legal estate, the Court will not assist either party. This case was followed in Thorpe v. Holdsworth, 7 L. R., Eq., 139. Per Malins, V.-Ch., Russell Road Purchase Monies, Re, 12 L. R., Eq., 81; 40 L. J., Ch., 673; 23 L. T. 839; 19 W. R. 520, 706.

10. Hearle v. Greenbank (3 Atk. 695) observed upon in D'Angibau, Re, Andrews v. Andrews, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 228; 43 L. T. 135; 28 W. R. 980; 44 L. T. 49.

11. Heath v. Bucknall (38 L. J., Ch., 372; 8 L. R., Eq., 1; 17 W. R. 755; 20 L. T., N. S., 549). I come, then, to the remaining part of the case founded upon the authority of Heath v. Bucknall. With respect to that case, I cannot come to any conclusion but that it was decided upon its particular circumstances, which were, as I gather it, that a very small and unappreciable proportion of the ancient window was preserved, and the rest was new; if so, there would have been no material damages at law. But if the case is supposed to lay down the proposition that a plaintiff, who, according to Tapling v. Jones (20 C. B., N. S., 1; 34 L. J., C. P., 342; 11 H. L. Ca. 290; 13 W. R. 617; 12 L. T., N. S., 555) has substantial rights, cannot come to this Court and obtain protection for those rights, I entirely demur to such a conclusion. If, for instance, there be a house with three ancient windows, and it be desirable to add at no great distance from those windows two other windows, the plaintiff is not to come to this court to preserve what, according to Tapling v. Jones, is his clear legal right. I think such a conclusion would be neither according to the principle nor practice of this Court. The course of the Court is, that where there is a material injury to what is a clear legal right, and it appears that damages from the nature of the case would not be a complete remedy, this Court will interfere by injunction. Per Giffard, L. J., in Staught v. Burn, 39 L. J., Ch., 289, 290; 18 W. L. 243, 245; 22 L. T., N. S., 831, 833.

as to marshalling the deficiency between the legacy and the real estate was decided in Hensman v. Fryer, under a misapprehension as to the effect of the decision in Tombs v. Roche, 2 Colly. 490, 502, and I must refuse to follow it. The Court is not bound to follow a decision even of the Court of Appeal if clearly erroneous. There were in my recollection no less than three decisions of Lord Westbury which V.-Ch. Stuart declined to follow. One of the cases in which he did so was Drummond v. Drummond, 2 L. R., Eq., 335; 36 L. J., Ch., 153; 14 L. T., N. S., 822, which afterwards went to the Court of Appeal (2 L. R., Ch., 32; L. T., N. S., 337), and the decision was affirmed. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Dugdale v. Dugdale, 14 L. R., Eq., 234, 235; 41 L. J., Ch., 565; 27 L. T., N. S., 705, 706.

1. Hensman v. Fryer (3 L. R., Ch., 420; 37 L. J., Ch., 97; 17 L. T., N. S., 394). The decision in this case is clearly a mistaken decision; I must therefore decline to follow it. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Collins v. Lewis, 8 L. R., Eq., 708, 709; 17 L. T., N. S., 394. And see Gibbins v. Eyden, 20 L. T., N. S., 516, 517, where Malins, V.-Ch., treats the decision of Lord Chancellor Chelmsford as of no authority.

2. Hensman v. Fryer (3 L. R., Ch., 420; 17 L. T., N. S., 394; 37 L. J., Ch., 97) not followed in Lancefield v. Iggulden, 17 L. R., Eq., 556; 43 L. J., Ch., 570; 30 L. T. 156; 22 W. R. 726.

3. Hensman v. Fryer (3 L. R., Ch., 420; 37 L. J., Ch., 97; 17 L. T., N. S., 394). Then, with regard to the state of the authorities, it appears that V.-Ch. Kindersley and the late Master of the Rolls (Lord Romilly) took a different view from that which I have expressed, and that V.-Ch. Stuart, V.-Ch. Hall, and Lord Hatherley, when Vice-Chancellor, took the opposite view. But I feel bound to say that I look upon Hensman v. Fryer, decided by Lord Chelmsford, as a direct decision on this particular point. It was a most carefully considered judgment, and was a distinct expression of opinion by the judge, who was then the head of this Court, that the Wills Act had made no alteration in the law in this respect. Per Lord Chancellor Cairns, in Lancefield v. Iggulden, 10 L. R., Ch., 136, 141; 44 L. J., Ch., 203; 31 L. T. 813; 23 W. R. 223.

4. Herbert v. Sayer (8 Jur. 812; 5 Q. B. 965) followed in Jameson v. Brick and Stone Co., 4 L. R., Q. B. D., 208; 48 L. J., Q. B., 249; 27 W. R. 221; 39 L. T. 594.

5. Hereford and South Wales Waggon and Engineering Co., Re, Head and Walter's Claims (2 L. R., Ch. D., 621; 45 L. J., Ch., 461; 35 L. T. 40; 24 W. R. 953) commented on in Rotherham Alum and Chemical Co., Re, Peace, Exp., 25 L. R., Ch. D., 103; 53 L. J., Ch., 290; 50 L. T. 219; 32 W. R. 131.

6. Heron v. Stokes (12 Cl. & F. 161). The opinions of Lord Plunkett and Lord Brougham in this case, that the rule in Wild's case (6 Rep. 17) applied to personalty, are not correct. Per Lord Campbell, C., in Audsley v. Horn, 6 Jur. N. S., 205, 206.

7. Hereford (Marquis) v. Suisse (13 Sim. 489) overruled - Zulueta v. Vincent, 3 Macn. & G. 246; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 474; 15 Jur. 277.

8. Herefordshire Brewery Co., Re (2 L. R., Ch. D., 611). With regard to that case, considering the way in which the order in that case appears to have been made, without discussion and substantially by consent, I cannot consider it an authority binding upon me. Per Hall, V.-Ch., Nassau Phosphate Co., Re, 24 W. R. 692, 693; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 611, 615; 45 L. J., Ch., 584.

9. Heslop, Exp. (1 De G. M. & G. 477), not followed. The date of an order is the day when it is made; and the time for appealing under 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106, s. 12, runs from that day, and not from the day when the order was drawn up. Dudley & West Bromwich Banking Co., Exp., Hopkins, Re, 32 L. J., Bky., 68.

10. Heslop, Exp. (1 De G. M. & G. 477), followed in Lucas, Exp., Gwyer, Re, 3 De G. & J. 113; and in Rutledge v. Rutledge, 2 Ir. Eq. Rep. 290; and in Wilson v. Emmett, 19 Beav. 233.

11. Hewitt v. Kaye (6 L. R., Eq., 198; 16 W. R. 835) approved in Mead, Re, Austin v. Mead, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 651; 43 L. T. 117; 28 W. R. 891.

12. Hewitt v. Loosemore (9 Hare 449; 21 L. J., Ch., 69). Now, in the case of Hewitt v. Loosemore, it appears that Turner, L. J., then Vice-Chancellor, came to the conclusion, in a similar case to the present, where a mortgagor was himself a solicitor, and no solicitor was acting for the mortgagee, that there the mortgagor quâ solicitor was to be considered as solicitor of the mortgagee. I confess, I think I am bound to state that if it were not for the opinion expressed in that case, I doubt whether I should arrive at a similar conclusion, but the long experience and ability of that learned judge are such, that although I should consider it probable that his opinion is right and mine wrong, yet I should hesitate to apply the principle in every case. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Espin v. Pemberton, 28 L. J., Ch., 308, 310. Then it appears to me, the case of Hewitt v. Loosemore is a clear and distinct authority. It is said that Sir George Turner, then Vice-Chancellor, in that case laid down a new doctrine when he held that where a bonâ fide inquiry is made for the deeds, and a reasonable excuse is given for their not being forthcoming, there is no ground for imputing knowledge which a further and fuller inquiry might have imparted, and this decision was said not to have given satisfaction to the profession. But it would appear that Sir George Turner founded himself on a long course of prior authorities, examined them all with his usual care, and arrived at his conclusion only after the most full and careful examination. I think that judgment is consonant with the prior decisions, which will govern me in this case. Per Chelmsford, C., in Espin v. Pemberton, 5 Jur., N. S., 157; 28 L. J., Ch., 311, 314.

13. Hicks v. Sallitt (3 De G. M. & G. 782) distinguished in Hope v. Liddell, Liddell v. Norton, 21 Beav. 183; 2 Jur., N. S., 105; 25 L. J., Ch., 90.

14. Higginson v. Blochley (1 Jur., N. S., 1104). I cannot accede to the principle which was laid down by V.-Ch. Kindersley in this case, that because an exception is bad in part therefore it is bad in the whole. Per Giffard, L. J., in Hoffmann v. Postell, 4 L. R., Ch., 673, 681; 17 W. R. 401; 29 L. T., N. S., 893.

1. Hildich, Re, Hiphins v. Hildich (44 L. T. 547; 29 W. R. 733), not followed in Murray, Re. 45 L. T. 707; 30 W. R. 283.

2. Hildyard v. South Sea Co. (2 P. W. 76) questioned in Ashby v. Blackwell, 2 Eden 299; Ambl. 503.

3. Hill v. Audus (1 Kay & J. 263; 24 L. J., Ch., 229). So far as applies to proceedings in the Court of Chancery under these Acts, I may observe that in Hill v. Audus, the bill does not appear to have been dismissed, though it seems as if Wood, V.-Ch., was ready to dismiss the bill because there was no admission of liability. But the decision was simply that no injunction ought to be granted to restrain the trial of a particular cause. That is perfectly intelligible, because the Court of Chancery would have had no ordinary jurisdiction to try such a cause; but to treat it as a dismissal of the bill, and a refusal to interfere altogether, unless there was a general admission of liability in the first instance, would lead to the most serious consequences, because, except by means of the intervention of the Court of Chancery, there is no mode of arriving at the amount at which the limitation of liability is to be fixed, or of making the distribution of the amount when fixed. But, whatever may be the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery with respect to such matters, it is not material in this case to define that jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, because the defendants have here first of all to establish the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty, before any difficulty has to be dealt with as to the mode by which that jurisdiction is to be enforced. Per Willes, J., in the Exchequer Chamber, in James v. London & South-Western Railway Co., 41 L. J., Exch., 186, 187, 188; 7 L. R., Exch., 287, 291; 27 L. T. 362; 21 W. R. 25.

As far as Hill v. Audus is concerned, I agree with my brother Willes, that the Vice-Chancellor was right in refusing an injunction, though as to concurring in what he is reported to have said I entertain very considerable difficulty. Per Blackburn, J., S. C., 41 L. J., Exch., 190, 191; 7 L. R., Exch., 287, 293.

4. Hill v. Hill (10 W. R. 400) considered in Clarke, Re, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 817; 51 L. J., Ch., 762; 47 L. T. 81; 31 W. R. 37.

5. Hill v. Kirkwood (42 L. T. 105; 23 W. R. 358), examined and commented on in Hickson v. Darlow, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 690; 48 L. T. 449; 31 W. R. 417.

6. Hills v. Croll (2 Phil. 60). In my opinion, it is very difficult to reconcile that case with Lumley v. Wagner (1 De G. M. & G. 604), which has been repeatedly followed; and if Hills v. Croll is to stand with that case at all it can only be upon its particular circumstances. Per Selwyn, L. J., in Catt v. Tourle, 4 L. R., Ch., 654, 660.

With respect to Hills v. Croll, as was said by Lord St. Leonards, in his judgment in Lumley v. Wagner, decided according to its particular circumstances, unless it is to be taken as laying down that the Court is to refuse to act on a negative covenant wherever there is a correlative obligation which it cannot enforce, it does not apply; if it is taken as going that length, it is contrary to Lumley v. Wagner, and must be considered as overruled. Per Giffard, L. J. Id.

7. Hilton v. Jones (9 L. R., Ch. D., 620; 47 L. J., Ch., 740; 38 L. T. 415; 26 W. R. 556) overruled by Sherrin v. Selkirk, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 68; 27 W. R. 842; 40 L. T. 701.

9. Hinckley v. Maclarens (1 Myl. & K. 27) overruled in Elmsley v. Young, 2 Myl. & K. 780; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 200. Reversing 2 Myl. & K. 82; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 17.

10. Lord v. Whitmore (27 L. T., N. S., 55; 4 W. R. 379; 2 Kay & J. 458) considered in Payne, Re, Randle v. Payne, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 288; 52 L. J., Ch., 544; 48 L. T. 194; 31 W. R. 509.

11. Held, that the Bills of Exchange Act of 1878 was in effect a declaration by the Legislature, that the decision in the case of Hindlaugh v. Blakey, 3 L. R., C. P. D., 136, was erroneous; and as no distinction whatever was made by the terms of the English enactment corresponding with the 11th section of the Scottish Act between one kind of acceptance and another, the effect of that declaration, although in terms confined to an acceptance by the drawee of a bill, was necessarily to displace the whole construction of the English statute on which that decision was founded. Steele v. McKinlay, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 754; 43 B. T. 358; 29 W. R. 17.

13. Hindle v. Taylor (5 De G. M. & G. 577) followed in Boyd v. Boyd, 2 N. R. 486; 9 L. T., N. S., 166.

14. Hindman v. Taylor (2 Bro. C. C. 7) not to be relied on as to the statement, per Vice-Chancellor in Robertson v. Lubback, 4 Sim. 173; 9 L. J., Ch., 138.

15. Hindmarsh, Re (1 Dr. & Sm. 129; 8 W. R. 203), must be taken to depend upon the special facts disclosed in the report. It seems to me that the decision could not be justified if it were simply the case of a person holding funds expressly for a particular purpose, and having the duty cast upon him of holding and retaining them for the benefit of the person who so intrusted him with them; but the report shows that it was not a case of that description. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Burdick v. Garrioch, 39 L. J., Ch., 369, 372; 18 W. R. 387, 388; 5 L. R., Ch., 223.

18. Hirst v. Tolson (2 Macn. & G. 134; 19 L. J., Ch., 441). With regard to the equity case the Lord Chancellor refers to two former decisions in the time of Vernon and Finch, which appear to be Soam v. Bowden (Finch 396) and Newton v. Rouse (1 Vern. 496). On referring to the report of the former case in Finch, it appears that there the master had received a premium of 250*l.*, and died within two years, and a bill having been filed against the executors for the return of a portion of the premium, it is stated that the executors said that they would be willing to do whatever the Court should direct in the matter. It is quite consistent with this report that the executors really did not contest the point, but submitted to what the Court might, under the circumstances, think just. The case of Newton v. Rouse (1 Vern. 460) is certainly a very remarkable case, because there the agreement contained an express provision that in the event of death 60% should be returned, and on a bill being filed, the Court decreed the return of 100%. This is certainly wholly inconsistent with the principles regulating the interpretation of contracts both at law and equity. The only possible ground on which the decision can be explained is that mentioned by the note to the case in the 3rd edition of Vernon, by Mr. Raithby, and referred to in 1 Story's Equity Jurisprudence, 10th edition, p. 472, viz., that it must have been the case of mutual mistake, misapprehension, or unconscientious advantage taken by one side of the other. Under these circumstances it does not appear to me that the case of Hirst v. Tolson is a satisfactory authority or one by which we are bound. It appears to be based on a misapprehension of the law on the subject, and is distinctly contrary to the opinion of the Court of Exchequer in the case of Thompson (1 Exch. 864). Per Bovill, C. J., in Whincup v. Hughes, 6 L. R., C. P., 78, 83; 40 L. J., C. P., 104; 24 L. T. 74; 19 W. R. 439.

The decision in the case of Hirst v. Tolson does not appear satisfactory, for the authorities given by my lord. With the utmost respect to the authority of the eminent Chancellor (Lord Cottenham) who decided it, with regard to the question of equity, I must confess that the justice of that decision appears to me very doubtful. The executors there seem to have offered to get the clerk placed in the office of another attorney without premium, and that having been declined they were made to refund money which the testator had probably spent long before his death without ever contemplating the necessity of refunding it. I must say that the doctrine of the common law which, except in the instance of the paternal or masterful jurisdiction of the Court over its own officers, does not compel any return on the partial failure of consideration, appears to me on the whole preferable to an equity so doubtful as this. . . . In 2 Williams on Executors, 6th ed., p. 1631, the case of Hirst v. Tolson is treated as applicable to attorneys only, and being an exercise of the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. Per Willes, J., Id.

5. Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl) (1 Hem. & M.

376, 391; 9 L. T., N. S., 18; 34 L. J., Ch., 489). It is impossible for any serious purpose to distinguish this case from Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl). The same point arose there, and the same law must be applied as has been there laid down as being the law from the highest authority which we know of, namely, the House of Lords. In another case referred to, a case decided by one of the same judges who decided Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl) in the House of Lords, I mean Sidney v. Wilmer (4 De G. J. & S. 84; 9 L. T., N. S., 18), a direct and contrary decision was arrived at, the Court in that case being influenced to some extent, no doubt, by the construction that was put upon the will, and a great deal more by the general principle found in the judgment. And if there was no such case as Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl), I do not hesitate to say that I would rather adopt the decision in Sidney v. Wilmer than the principle of the decision in Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl). But I am bound by Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl), and have no alternative. The law is plainly decided, and I must obey the law, and I should be outraging and acting contrary to the decision in Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl) if I yielded to the strong temptation which I feel, and to the strong solicitations which have been presented to me, not to leave the income of this property any longer in suspense, to wait for an event which may never happen, and in all probability never will happen, and not to hand over the income of the property in the meantime to the person whom the law has designated as being entitled to that intermediate enjoyment, if the testator has not taken it away from him. If he has given it to nobody else, he has not taken it away from him. In my opinion the heir-at-law and the next of kin are, therefore, entitled to the intermediate proceeds of this estate, real and personal, until it shall be ascertained whether the contingency, which in any event will put the plaintiff in possession, has happened. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Wade-Gery v. Handley, 34 L. T., N. S., 233, 235; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 653, 663; 45 L. J., Ch., 457.

It is utterly impossible to say that the case before Lord Westbury (Sidney v. Wilmer), which is so entirely different from all the other cases, would justify us in departing from the rule which was so well settled long before Hodgson v. Beattie (Earl), and so clearly established by that case as to the title of the heir-at-law and next of kin respectively. I think the Vice-Chancellor could not do otherwise than follow that decision. Per James, L. J., S. C. on appeal, 35 L. T., N. S., 85, 86; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 374, 375; 45 L. J., Ch., 712.

11. Home v. Pillans (2 Myl. & K. 15). There a gift to a female, when and if she should attain twenty-one, to her sole and separate use, and in case of her death, leaving children, her share to go to her children, was held to vest an absolute interest in the legatee on her attaining twenty-one. Mr. Jarman, in his book (3rd ed, vol. ii., p. 737), refers to this case as a doubtful case. Malins, V.-Ch., said in Clark v. Henry (11 L. R., Eq., 222, 225), "In the course of my professional life I have cited Home v. Pillans scores of times, and I do not remember one occasion upon which it was spoken of with disapprobation. I think it has stood the test of time remarkably well." And in the course of his final decision the learned Vice-Chancellor said, "Then as to the case of Home v. Pillans; it seems that Mr. Jarman thought that Home v. Pillans was a doubtful case. I am happy to find indeed, I have had my attention called to it before, that the Master of the Rolls, in the case of Edwards v. Edwards (15 Beav. 357), said that he found no difficulty about Home v. Pillans. That case is a distinct authority, and as sound a decision as was ever pronounced by any judge, because it proceeds upon the broad principle of giving a rational interpretation to words and making

In this case there have been contrary decisions, one by Lord Romilly at the Rolls, on appeal, reversed by Lord Chancellor Westbury. That case had been appealed to the House of Lords, but was not proceeded with, it having been terminated by a compromise. I am bound by the decision in that case of Lord Westbury, as Chancellor. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Kitchin v. Kitchin, 19 L. T., N. S., 674, 675.

25. With regard to the propriety of this court interfering to restrain proceedings in the Divorce Court, the counsel for the plaintiff rely upon Hunt v. Hunt (supra), in which Lord Westbury, overruling the Master of the Rolls, decided that where parties have entered into a contract to do or not to do certain things, and they proceed to act in contravention of those stipulations in the Divorce Court, this Court will interfere to prevent them by injunction. Whatever my private opinion may be, of course I must take the law from the Lord Chancellor, although I may concur with the Master of the Rolls, whose decision was overruled; but I am told, as a matter of fact, that there was an appeal to the House of Lords, and I am informed that no judgment was ever given, in consequence of the death of one of the parties, Mis. Hunt. I cannot tell what the House of Lords might have done, and I must assume, for the purpose of my present decision, that it is within the jurisdiction of this Court to restrain proceedings in the Divorce Court in contravention of the terms of a deed of separation, though I confess I can see no impropriety in such proceedings being taken, because all these things can be made a defence in that court. 4. Hunter v. Nockolds (1 Macn. & G. 640). All that this case determined was, that in a suit for the administration of the assets of a grantee of an annuity the annuitant cannot prove, as a personal debt, for more than six years' arrears. If the decision went beyond that, it is overruled by Cow v. Dolman (2 De G. M. & G. 592). Per Wood, V.-Ch. Snow v. Booth, 2 Kay & J. 132; and explained, 2 Jur., N. S., 244; 25 L. 28. Israel v. Douglas (1 H. Black. 239) is relied upon as an authority, but the correctness of that decision has been doubted in several subsequent cases. In order to maintain an action for money paid and received, the money must have been actually or constructively received for the use of the plaintiff. Per Watson, B., in Liversidge v. Broadbent, 4 H. & N. 603, 614.

29. Iveson v. Moore (1 Ld. Raym. 486; 1 Salk. 15). The facts in this case are best stated in 1 Ld. Raymond, at page 488, from which report Willes, J., appears to have taken his judgment in Richet's case (2 L. R., H. L., 175; 10 L. T., N. S., 542). 4. Jackson v. Noble (2 Keen 590; 7 L. J., Ch., 138) extremely difficult to reconcile with Doe d. Bloomfield v. Eyre (5 C. B. 713; 18 L. J., C. P., 284). Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Robinson v. Wood, 27 L. J., Ch., 726, 728.

5. Jacobs v. Richards (18 Beav. 308. n.; on appeal, 5 De G. M. & G. 53; 2 Eq. Rep. 299) observed upon in Campbell v. Hooper, 3 Sm. & G. 153; 3 Eq. Rep. 727; 1 Jur., N. S., 670; 24 L. J., Ch., 644.

6. Jacques v. Chambers (2 Colly. 435). It appears to me to be a just principle, which the Master of the Rolls recognised in Armstrong v. Burnett (20 Beav. 424), that where a testator purports to bequeath shares in a company, if at his death any payments remain to be made which are necessary for constituting him a complete shareholder, those payments must be made out of the general estate; but I do not see any reason to put on the same footing calls made after the testator's death, which are necessary, not for constituting the testator a complete shareholder, but for rendering the undertaking itself a working concern. Having regard to the cases, I cannot help thinking that if the learned judge who decided Jacques v. Chambers had not thought himself bound by Blount v. Hiplins (7 Sim. 43), he would not have arrived at the conclusion that he did arrive at. I think the Master of the Rolls, in Armstrong v. Burnett, felt some difficulty in reconciling the decision in that case with that which he felt to be the best principle, and upon which he decided Addams v. Perick (28 Beav. 384), namely, that the question depends entirely upon this, whether the call was made before or after the testator's death. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Day v. Day, 1 Dr. & Sm. 261, 263, 264.

10. James v. Ditchofield (39 L. J., Ch., 248; 9 L. R., Eq., 51). I am not prepared to follow the dicta in that case, which support the notion that the doctrine of Daniels v. Darison (16 Ves. 249), applies as between vendor and purchaser, whilst the matter still rests in contrast. Such a notion does not seem to me to be deducible from the previous authorities. These decisions apply only to certain equities between the purchaser and the tenant when the purchase has been completed, and have nothing to do with the rights and liabilities of vendors and purchasers. Per James, L. J., in Caballero v. Henty, 43 L. J., Ch., 635, 637; 9 L. R., Ch., 447; 30 L. T. 314; 22 W. R. 44b.

13. Jefferys v. Boosey (4 H. L. Ca. 815). I think that the opinion of the six judges in this case was correct, that since the 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, there is no occasion to have an assignment in writing of a copyright executed in the presence of two witnesses. I think the receipt in writing for the price of the copyright would operate as an effectual assignment. Per Lord Wensleydale, in Kyle v. Jeffreys, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 611, 617.

14. Jefferys v. Boosey (4 H. L. Ca., 815). Great reliance was placed by the appellant's counsel on the decision of the House of Lords in Jefferys v. Boosey, reversing a unanimous decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, in which I had concurred. That high tribunal must, of course, be considered as having decided rightly; but the ratio decidendi was merely that an absolute assignment, executed abroad, of all an author's copyright in a musical composition, gave no title to the assignee beyond the territory of the state in which the assignment was executed. And this is no authority for saying that the assignee could not have maintained an action in England for an injury to the copyright within the limits of that territory. Per Campbell, C., in Austria (Emperor) v. Kossuth, 7 Jur., N. S., 642; 9 W. R. 712; 4 L. T. N. S., 494; 4 De G. & J. 217; 30 L. J., Ch., 690.

10. Johnston v. Swann (3 Madd. 457). "The marginal note to this case is not quite correct. Per Komilly, M. R., in Hartshorne v. Nicholson, 4 Jur., N. S., 864; 27 L. J., Ch., 810; 26 Beav. 58.

11. Johnstone v. Beattie (10 Cl. & F. 42) explained in the case of Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 9 H. L. Ca. 440.

12. Johnstone v. Beattie (10 Cl. & F. 87). I must use the freedom to observe, that whatever opinion the Scotch judges may justly form of the decision of this House in Johnstone v. Beattie, they would have acted with more dignity and more magnanimously, as well as more judicially, if they had calmly considered what was for the benefit of the infant, and had recollected that a Court may not only be censured for exceeding its jurisdiction, but for declining to exercise its jurisdiction for the relief of a suitor, from the apprehension that in another case its jurisdiction has been unjustifiably encroached upon by another Court. I can take upon myself to say, that Johnstone v. Beattie, whether properly or improperly decided, is no authority whatever for the interlocutor appealed against. Per Campbell, C. in Stuart v. Stuart, 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 1, 64; 7 Jur., N. S., 1129, 1132.

I would make a passing observation upon Johnstone v. Beattie. Perhaps it might have been more consonant to the principles of general law to have held there that every country would recognise the status of guardian, in the same way as they would undoubtedly recognise the status of parents, or the status of husband and wife. But supposing that not to have been the view taken by the House, yet there is nothing in that decision of Johnstone v. Beattie in other respects that could at all interfere with or touch the present question; for all that was decided there was, that, the status of guardian not being a status recognised by the law of this country, unless constituted in the country, it was not a matter of course to appoint a foreign guardian to be an English guardian, but that was only a matter to be taken into consideration. That was all that was decided in that case. Per Lord Cranworth. Ib.

17. Jones v. Colbeck (8 Ves. 38). With respect to the authority of Jones v. Colbeck, which in the course of the argument was so much insisted upon on the one side, and impeached on the other, it is not, I think, necessary for us to give any opinion; but I have no hesitation in saying that the ground on which the decision in that case rested seems to me to have been perfectly sound. The case, as I understand it, proceeded upon this—that the testator had by his will sufficiently indicated his intention that the property should go to his next of kin at the death of his daughter. Whether that conclusion was right or not, it cannot, as I think, be disputed, that if it was correct the decision was well founded. In these cases, no less than in other cases of dispositions by will, the intention of the testator, if sufficiently expressed or indicated, must govern, and the question in each case must be, whether the intention is sufficiently expressed or indicated. It is not a question which can be measured by rule. In determining it in cases of this nature the question must often be whether the testator has intended to give to those who may fill a particular character at a particular time, or whether he has meant that the property should go as the law would give it—a question not, as I venture to think, to be determined, at all events, when the disposition is of personal estate, without taking into consideration the distinction between gifts to next of kin simply, and to next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions, and without bearing in mind also that if the property was meant to go as the law would give it, it might not have been necessary for the testator to express that intention. Per Turner, L. J., in Lees v. Massey, 7 Jur., N. S., 534, 535.

1. Jones v. Fowall (15 Beav. 388). The only case that was referred to which, as it appeared to me, involved circumstances at all similar to these, was the case of Jones v. Fowall. What was actually done by the decree in that case prevents it from being an authority for the proposition for which it was cited; because the trustee there, being by the terms of his trusts bound to accumulate the interest of the trust fund for the benefit of the cestui que trust, was charged simply with compound interest, which the very existence of a trust for accumulation might make proper. It is true that in the course of the judgment, the late Master of the Rolls did, in that case, say that there might have been a right on the part of the cestui que trust to claim the profits made by the use of the money in the business in which the executor was a partner, if that had appeared to be more for his interests. My lords, with great respect and deference to the authority of that learned judge, I am not prepared to follow in this case, or in any other that is exactly similar, that dictum in Jones v. Fowall. The circumstances of that case, as I recollect them, were these: there was a common loan of small amount, by the owner of the money, to certain bankers, and afterwards a trust of that debt due from the bankers was constituted, one of the partners in the bank being made the trustee, and undoubtedly it became his duty to call in the money, which he did not do. As far as the other partners were concerned, they were not treated as in any way otherwise liable, by reason of what had taken place, than they had originally been as mere debtors. I cannot agree that, in those circumstances, the liability of the trustee who was a partner in the bank with respect to profits would be established, his co-partner not being liable. There was another ground, entirely depending upon the terms of the trust deed, on which he might be charged with compound interest, and it may be that even independently of anything in the terms of the trust deed, a trustee who suffers money which he ought to call in to be used in a business in which he has any interest, may be chargeable with compound interest. Of that I say nothing. But that being the only authority cited as a case, the circumstances of which at all resemble the present, I must say that, unless the case can be distinguished on some other grounds than any which I am aware of, I cannot agree with what was said by the Master of the Rolls on that point; and not agreeing with what was then said, I know of no authority whatever which would be reasonably referred to in support of the argument of the present appellant. Per Lord Selborne, in Vyse v. Foster, 31 L. T., N. S., 177, 182; 7 L. R., H. L., 318; 44 L. J., Ch., 37; 23 W. R. 355.

2. Jones v. Green (dictum) (5 L. R., Eq., 555; 37 L. J., Ch., 603; 16 W. R., 603) observed upon in Freer, Re, Freer v. Freer, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 622; 52 L. J., Ch., 301; 31 W. R. 426.

3. Jones v. How (7 Hare 267; 19 L. J., Ch., 324) was relied upon to show that, inasmuch as these marriage articles are a contract to provide for the husband and wife and the issue of the marriage, no person can take by virtue of these articles who did not survive the testator, because no person can take under the will of a man unless he be in existence at the time of the death of the testator, with the single exception that is made by the 33rd section of the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 26). In Jones v. How, the question was simply this: the testator, by a contract made on the marriage of his daughter, covenanted to leave to his daughter absolutely, or to her and her children, "one equal eighth part, or such other part as shall be an equal share with all and each of his children and child of all estates, moneys, real and personal estate, of which he should die possessed." The daughter died in the testator's lifetime; by will, therefore, she was of course incapable of taking anything; had the testator made a will, and had the Wills Act not been in operation, there would have been simply an intestacy. The case being sent by Sir James Wigram, according to the unfortunate practice of the day, for the opinion of a court of law, a question was submitted to the Court of Common Pleas, whether on the events which had happened there was any subsisting contract on the part of the testator, the contract being that he would leave an equal share to her as well as the other children, and the answer of the court of law was, that there was no breach of contract, inasmuch as he had only contracted to leave by will; and there being no person to take under the will, the contract had no operation. Now, what ought to have been the decision there? There was a contract by a man for valuable consideration, that he would, by his will, leave to his daughter an equal provision with his other children. If he had performed that covenant, which he ought to have been compelled to do, or his estate left to bear the consequence, what would have been the result? You would have found in that will a bequest to the daughter of one-fourth of his property; if she had left children, the 33rd section of the Wills Act would have come into operation, which would have made the bequest to the daughter take effect; and what would have been the consequence? The property would have vested in her; if the husband had survived her he would have taken it and have provided for his family; and if he had died in her lifetime, her children as next of kin would have taken it, or, if the covenantor had died intestate, her children as her representatives would have taken her share under her intestacy, and the object would have been secured; instead of which, by the narrow construction put upon it by a court of law and acquiesced in by Sir James Wigram, the whole object was defeated and came to an end. I entirely dissent from that case, which I should myself have decided in a directly contrary manner, and I decline to follow it in the present instance. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Brookman, Re, 38 L. J., Ch., 535, 539.

4. Jones v. Lane (3 Y. & C. 281, 294; 3 Jur. 365) deciding that when an over-due bill or note is indorsed after action brought, the indorsee, with notice of the action, has no right of action upon it, overruled in Deuters v. Townsend, 10 Jur., N. S., 1072; 33 L. J., Q. B., 301; 12 W. R. 1002; 10 L. T., N. S., 602. His remedy is to apply to the Court to stay proceedings in the second action.

4. Jordan v. Lowe (6 Beav. 350) observed upon in Wynck, Exp., or Wynck's Trusts, Re, 5 De G. M. & G. 188; 18 Jur. 659; 23 L. J., Ch., 930; 17 Jur. 588; 22 L. J., Ch., 750; 1 W. R. 426; 2 W. R. 570; 1 Eq. Rep. 521; 2 Eq. R. 1025; 1 Sm. & G. 427.

5. Jorden v. Money (5 H. L. Ca. 185). Although the decision in this case is no doubt binding, it cannot be considered as a reversal of the decision of the H. of L. in Hammersley v. De Buel (Baron), 12 Cl. & F. 45; and the proposition attributed to Lord Cranworth in the printed report, that a statement or representation of what a person intends or does not intend is not sufficient, and seems irreconcilable with the decision of the House of Lords in Hammersley v. De Biel and with the law as laid down by all the judges of the highest authority. It is remarkable that Hammersley v. De Biel was not referred to by any of the counsel or law lords in Jorden v. Money. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Loffus v. Man, 3 Grif. 604.

6. Jorden v. Money (5 H. L. Ca. 185). I am bound to suppose this case to have been properly decided by the majority of the members of the House who voted upon it; but on considering the doctrine of law which it establishes, I must look to the facts which those that decided it considered to be proved by the evidence. I cannot look at that evidence and say that different inferences are to be drawn from it, and that the law laid down is accommodated to those inferences. The majority of the Lords thought that nothing more was proved than the declaration of a present intention not to enforce the bond. Therefore it is not legitimate reasoning, after comparing the evidence there with the evidence in this case, to argue that there, as much as here, a positive assertion of a fact had been made. The doctrine there laid down and acted upon was, that where a person possesses a legal right, a court of equity will not interfere to restrain him from enforcing it, though, between the time of its creation and that of his attempt to enforce it, he has made representations of his intention to abandon it. This is the ratio decidendi, and this only is binding upon us. We are not called upon to give any opinion upon the point of law on which the law Lords were divided as to the difference between a misrepresentation of a fact as it actually existed and a misrepresentation of an intention to do, or to abstain from doing, an act which would lead to the damage of the party thereby induced to do an act on the faith of the representation. Taking the law as there laid down, that a mere expression of intention, although acted upon, is no ground for equitable interference, we are to say whether in this case, considering the evidence, we come to the conclusion that there was here a mere expression of an intention not to do an act. Per Campbell, C., in Piggott v. Stratton, 1 De G. J. & F. 33, 51, 52.

7. Jorden v. Money (5 H. L. Ca. 185). I apprehend that nothing can be more certain than this, that the doctrine of equitable estoppel by representation is a wholly different thing from contract, promise, or equitable assignment, or anything of that sort. The foundation of that doctrine, which is a very important one, and certainly not one likely to be departed from, is this, that if a man dealing with another for value makes statements to him as to existing facts, which being stated would affect the contract, and without reliance upon which, or without the statement of which, the party would not enter into the contract, and which being otherwise than as they were stated, would leave the situation after the contract different from what it would have been if the representations had not been made; then the person making those representations shall, so far as the powers of a court of equity extend, be treated as if the representations were true, and shall be compelled to make them good. But those must be representations concerning existing facts. The limits of that doctrine, and the distinction between it and contract, were carefully examined, and, I think, well pointed out in the judgment of Lord Cranworth in this House in the case of Jorden v. Money (supra), where, after referring to the cases of Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & Ell. 463, and Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 654, which latter case Lord Cranworth thought had stated the doctrine somewhat more accurately than it had been expressed in Pickard v. Sears, he says he takes this to be the general result of the rule. Per Lord Chancellor Selborne in Citizens' Bank of Louisiana v. First National Bank of New Orleans, 6 L. R. H. L., 352, 360; 43 L. J., Ch., 269; 22 W. R. 194.

8. Josselyn v. Josselyn (9 Sim. 63). Maintenance of infants as fixed by a testator. There is an error in that report, which was discovered by Mr. Macpherson, and made public by him in his work on the Law relating to Infants, p. 229, n. It appeared from Mr. Macpherson's correction that the additional money allowed for the infant's maintenance in that case was paid, not out of the property in which the infant had only a contingent interest, but out of the rents of real estate in which the infant had a vested interest. Per Walford arguendo, in Griggs v. Gibson, 14 W. R. 539.

3. Kearnan v. Fitzsimon (3 Ridgw. P. C. 16). The dictum of Lord Clare in this case that the rule of marshalling assets holds only where it is proper to be done at the death of the party whose assets are to be marshalled, and can never arise upon any subsequent fact or accident, considered. Ellard v. Cooper, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 376.

4. Keble. With respect to the authority of Keble, we cannot refrain from referring to the highly valuable and interesting work of Mr. J. W. Wallace, of Philadelphia, The Reporters, 3rd. ed., pp. 207, 208, from which it appears that more is to be said for the character of this reporter as "a tolerable historian of the law," than from the remarks made upon him from time to time might have been supposed. Per Willes, J., in Furroll v. Hilditch, 5 C. B., N. S., 855.

5. Kellett v. Kellett (3 Dow 248). If Kellett v. Kellett were before me, I should decide it exactly the other way. Per Jessel, M. R., in Hughes v. Pritchard, 25 W. R. 761, 762; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 24; 46 L. J., Ch., 840; 37 L. T. 259.

10. Kennedy v. Green (3 Myl. & K. 699). As to the extent of the doctrine laid down in this case, see Atterbury v. Wallis, 2 Jur., N. S., 313. S. C. on appeal 4 W. R. 734; 2 Jur., N. S., 1177; 25 L. J., Ch., 792; 8 De G. M. & G. 454; and Kettleworth v. Watson, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 685; 51 L. J., Ch., 281; 46 L. T. 83; 30 W. R. 482.

11. Kennedy v. Green (3 Myl. & K. 699). I entirely assent to the law there laid down. Per Campbell, C., in Perry v. Holl, 2 De G. F. & J. 54; 6 Jur., N. S., 661, 663.

12. Kennedy v. Green (3 Myl. & K. 699). The doctrine of this case requires to be administered with the greatest care and delicacy, and to be so acted on as, on the one hand, to protect a purchaser for valuable consideration against all the world, and, on the other, so as not to encourage fraud, by permitting a purchaser to disregard the plain and obvious marks and symbols of it. Greenlade v. Dare, 20 Beav. 284; 1 Jur., N. S., 294; 24 L. J., Ch., 490.

13. Kennedy v. Green (3 Myl. & K. 718), and Vorley v. Cooke (1 Giff. 230). These cases, where deeds were said to be void as being procured by misrepresentation, though sufficient ground for the relief granted, could not have sustained a plea of non est factum at law. Per James, L. J., in Hunter v. Walters, 20 W. R. 218; 7 L. R., Ch., 75; 41 L. J., Ch., 175; 25 L. T. 765.

14. Kensington (Lord) v. Bouverie (19 Bëav. 39). I see that the Master of the Rolls is reported to have said (page 54), "Nothing is better settled than that, if the remainderman allows the tenant for life to receive the rents without keeping down the interest, he cannot, after the death of the tenant for life, ask for an account of the rents, and seek to establish a debt against his assets, on the ground that the rents were sufficient for this purpose." How is that? How is the one to know, as of course, what the other is doing? Per Lord Brougham, in Kensington (Lord) v. Bouverie, 7 H. L. Ca. 564. Whereupon the counsel for the respondent said that that passage had excited attention in Ireland in a case of Baldwin v. Baldwin, which twice came before Lord Chancellor Brady, see 4 Ir. Ch. R. 505; 6 Ir. Ch. R. 156. On the first occasion his lordship described himself as "coerced" by that statement, but on the second occasion he said that he had communicated with the Master of the Rolls on the subject, when his Honour stated, "that some error must have occurred in the report, which he was not prepared to say was strictly in accordance with what he had said on the occasion."

15. Kensington v. White (3 Price 164) is too loosely reported to afford any principle. Shackell v. Macaulay, 2 Sim. & S. 87; 3 L. J., Ch., 27.

16. Keppell v. Bailey (2 Myl. & K. 517). The principle that incidents of a novel kind cannot be devised and attached to property, at the fancy or caprice of the owner, enunciated by Lord Brougham, C., in this case, was recognised and adopted in Achroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164, and London Loan and Discount Co. v. Drake, 6 C. B., N. S., 803, 804.

17. Keppell v. Bailey (2 Myl. & K. 517), so far as it is a decision that a restrictive covenant as to the use of land, which does not run with the land at law, is not binding in equity upon an assignee with notice, has been overruled by recent cases. Per Fry, J., in Laker v. Dennis, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 227; 37 L. T., N. S., 827; 47 L. J., Ch., 174.

18. Kerrick v. Bransby (7 Bro. P. C. 437) is no authority for the proposition that a court of equity has no jurisdiction to try the validity of a will of real or personal estate. Middleton v. Sherburne, 4 Y. & Coll. 358.

19. Kerrick v. Bransby (7 Bro. P. C. 437). Previously to the Statute of Frauds the Court of Chancery frequently took upon itself to determine the validity of wills by inquiry before some of the Masters of the Court, a practice which has ceased since the case of Kerrick v. Bransby (7 Bro. P. C. 437, A.D. 1727). But as early as the time of James I. it appears to have been considered that the proper mode of trying the validity or invalidity of a will of real estate was by a trial at law, the Court of Chancery reserving power to deal with the case as justice might require.

Boyse v. Rossborough, 1 Kay 71; 2 W. R. 91, 290; 23 L. J., Ch., 305; 18 Jur. 205; 2 Eq. Rep. 675; 3 De G. M. & G. 817.

1. Key v. Key (4 De G. M. & G. 73). According to the ordinary rule this Court will not decide a legal question as to a right to real estate in remainder; and will not try the legal title to real estate in possession of a person who is out of possession. Both propositions are elementary. As regards the former, De Windt v. De Windt (1 L. R., H. L., 87) was referred to during the argument as giving the highest sanction to what was said in Greenwood v. Sutherland (10 Hare (App.) xii.), and Garlick v. Lawson (10 Hare (App.) xiv.). But, in fact, no authority is required for either. It is said that the Court is asked to do no more here than was done in Key v. Key (supra), and (by means of an artifice suggested by the Court), as in Forsbrook v. Forsbrook, 14 L. T., N. S., 282; 3 L. R., Ch., 93. If Key v. Key be law, the amendment in Forsbrook v. Forsbrook seems to have been unnecessary, so that the cases are not quite consistent. And notwithstanding my unfeigned respect for the judges who decided Key v. Key, and notwithstanding the fact (which, though not appearing in the report, was stated to me by Mr. Dickinson) that the point was considered, I must decline to follow it as regards the question of jurisdiction in any case not absolutely similar, which this is not. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Pryse v. Pryse, 27 L. T., N. S., 575, 577; 15 L. R., Eq., 86; 42 L. J., Ch., 253; 21 W. R. 219.

2. Lord Brougham's observation in Keys, Exp. (1 Mont. & A. 242; 3 Dea. & Ch. 275), as to the Lord Chancellor's jurisdiction in all matters relating to the fiat being wholly untouched by the provision of that statute, corrected. Stubbs, Exp., Hall, Re, Mont. & Ch. 489, 511; 3 Dea. 549; 3 Jur. 427.

3. Kilner, Exp. (13 L. R., Ch. D., 245; 41 L. T. 520; 28 W. R. 269), distinguished in Hawswell, Exp., Hemingway, Re, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 626; 52 L. J., Ch., 737; 48 L. T. 742; 31 W. R. 711.

7. King v. Burchell (Ambl. 379; 1 Eden 424; 4 T. R. 296. n.) observed upon in Woodhouse v. Herrick, 1 Kay & J. 352; 24 L. J., Ch., 649; 3 W. R. 303; 3 Eq. Rep. 317.

8. King v. Hoare (13 M. & W. 494; 14 L. J., Exch., 29). All the authorities on the subject were brought to the attention of the Court of Exchequer, and fully considered by that court in the case of King v. Hoare in a judgment pronounced by one of the most distinguished judges who ever sat in Westminster Hall. I need not go into the elaborate reason assigned by Lord Wensleydale in that judgment, which enters into the whole law on the subject, but the result is, that the law, as there laid down, and I hope I may say as finally established, is that judgment recovered against one of two or more joint debtors, or of two or more wrongdoers, is a bar to an action against the others for the same cause. Under these circumstances, having, as we have, not only principle but a long series of authorities in favour of this being law, affirmed by Lord Chief Baron Comyns in his Digest (tit. Action, K. 4), and lastly, recognised and affirmed by the Court of Exchequer in King v. Hoare, I think we are bound to act according to these English authorities, notwithstanding American decisions to the contrary, and the respect I have for those decisions. Per Kelly, C. B., in the Exchequer Chamber, in Brinsmead v. Harrison, 41 L. J., C. P., 190, 192; 7 L. R., C. P., 547; 27 L. T. 99; 20 W. R. 784.

9. King v. Hoare (13 M. & W. 494; 14 L. J., Exch., 29). By a highly artificial chain of reasoning, the justice of which I could never comprehend, it was there held that a plaintiff, issuing execution against one of two defendants, abandoned his right against the other, because the consideration for the original contract became merged in what is called a contract of record, and therefore, though he never recovered a penny from the defendant against whom he first proceeded, he could not get his money from the other. Per Blackburn, J., in Baker v. Sayers, 17 L. T., N. S., 579, 580.

10. King v. Hoare (13 M. & W. 494; 14 L. J., Exch., 29) adopted in Kendall v. Hamilton, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 504; 48 L. J., C. P., 705; 41 L. T. 418; 28 W. R. 97.

I see nothing I confess in the case of King v. Hoare, which would lead one to doubt that this case was one, as the law stood, legally decided; and if there be any consequential injustice arising from any particular circumstances to persons similarly situated to Messrs. King & Hoare, the evil would preponderate over any advantage there might be in requiring all co-contractors to be made parties liable. If there is any injustice in it, it can only be remedied by the legislature, should it think fit to afford this remedy. At this distance of time after so much reliance has been placed from time to time in other cases upon the law as laid down in King v. Hoare, it cannot be now altered by a decision of your Lordships' House. Per Lord Hatherley. S. C., 4 App. Cas. 523.

But in such a case as King v. Hoare, where the plaintiff had contracted with the provisional committee of a company, and consequently was very uncertain how many were joint contractors, it did operate harshly. He dared not join many in the first action, for, as the law then stood, if he failed as to any one he failed as to all; and it does seem hard that a judgment obtained under such circumstances against one should be without satisfaction a bar as to all the others. This hardship is very much removed by the provisions of the existing law, by which the plaintiff recovers judgment against those whom he proves to be his debtors; though he has joined others as defendants he has only to pay the costs of those improperly joined. But I think that the hardness of the law, even if it exist, is a reason for altering it, not for refusing to act upon it; and I think no doubt has ever been expressed, unless perhaps in Exp. Waterfall (4 De G. & Sm. 199), that King v. Hoare does truly state the law as it existed before the Judicature Acts, and it was not doubted in the courts below, or I think seriously questioned at the bar that it did so. Per Lord Blackburn. S. C., 4 App. Cas. 545.

2. It is a rule of construction, particularly in wills, that where words are of an ambiguous signification, or are of such a nature as that they may be sometimes considered as words of purchase, and sometimes as words of limitation, the intent of the deviser must fix the meaning of those words. The word "issue" is of this nature. In deeds it is a word of purchase, and technically speaking it is so. The case of King v. Melling (2 Lev. 58) was the first case where it was taken and considered as a word of limitation. Manderiville v. Carrick, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 365.

4. Kinsey v. Kinsey (2 Ves. 577; 3 Atk. 809). Though the marginal notes lay down the general rule (adopted by text-writers) that a decree in one suit cannot be pleaded in bar of another suit, unless such decree has been signed and inrolled, the decision of Lord Hardwicke in that case was apparently made under special circumstances, the bills in the two suits being in the nature of bill and cross-bill, and the cross-bill having been filed before the decree in the first suit was made. *Pearse v. 13. Knight v. Majoribanks (2 Macn. & G. 10) approved in Melbourne Banking Corporation v. Brougham, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 307; 51 L. J., P. C., 65; 46 L. T. 603; 30 W. R. 925.

14. Knight v. Moseley (Ambl. 176) and Holden v. Wicks (1 John. & H. 278). It is laid down in these cases that a patron cannot file a bill for an account. I confess that doctrine has always seemed to me to be utterly unintelligible. I never could understand why a vicar who has wrongfully cut timber should not be called to account for the proceeds after he has turned it into money, in order that they may be invested for the benefit of the advowson; it being conceded that the patron is entitled to the specific timber. Per James, V.-Ch., in Soverby v. Fryer, 8 L. R., Eq., 417, 423; 38 L. J., Ch., 617.

15. Knight v. Selby (3 Mann. & Gr. 92; 3 Scott, N. R., 409) commented on and followed in Moore v. Cleghorn, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 400; 12 Jur. 591. Affirming 10 Beav. 423; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 469, 11 Jur., 958.

R. 982). Per Brett, L. J.; and in Walker v. Mottram, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 355; 51 L. J., Ch., 108; 45 L. T. 659; 30 W. R. 165. Per Lindley and Lush L.J.J.; and not followed in Walker v. Mottram (supra), Per Baggallay, L. J.

The rule of Labouchere v. Danson, which precludes the vendor of the good-will of a business from soliciting the former customers, is not to be extended to the case of a compulsory alienation. Walker v. Mottram (supra).

The decision of Labouchere v. Danson is founded on an implied contract by the vendor of the good-will of a business not to injure the property for which he has received consideration, but the obligation enforced by that case is purely personal, and not a mere incident to the transfer of property. Id.

The decision of Labouchere v. Dawson held to apply to the cases of voluntary sales. Semle, Ib.

15. Langridge v. Payne (2 John. & H. 423; 10 W. R. 726). It is said that the case is governed by the decision in Langridge v. Payne. And if this question was really there decided, I should certainly follow that decision; but that case is one which I cannot help regretting to find reported, because the judgment does not tell the reader upon what principle it proceeded, and it is merely a judgment restraining an ejectment until the hearing. The case was this: There was an agreement in writing that the mortgagee would not call in the money for two years, the mortgagor fulfilling the covenants. The mortgagor forgot to pay the interest, and the mortgagee gave him notice that in consequence of his failure to pay interest the mortgagee would not be bound as to the two years, but would exercise his discretion, and the latter requested payment of interest due and costs. The interest and costs were paid, and then the mortgagee issued a writ in ejectment. He was restrained until the hearing. Now the Vice-Chancellor might have thought that the notice was a conditional demand, and that the mortgagee in fact said, "If you make this payment I will for the present waive my right;" and if that was so there was ground for the injunction. It is worthy of note that when that case was called to the attention of the judge of the Landed Court in Ireland (Mr. Justice Hargrave), in Taff's Estate, Re, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 347, he spoke in very strong terms, and said that the case would be overruled, and that he could not conjecture the ground of the doctrine on which it was decided. In other words, he thought it a mere determination on the balance of convenience till the hearing, and not on any doctrine. There is no principle in Langridge v. Payne inconsistent with my decision. Per Fry, J., Keene v. Biscoe, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 201, 203, 204; 26 W. R. 552, 553; 47 L. J., Ch., 644, 646; 38 L. T. 286.

16. Largan v. Bowen (1 Sch. & Lef. 296). The order made in this case is not to be reconciled with the rules of pleading in equity. It is not an authority by which the Court will be governed. White v. Westmeath (Marquis), 2 Moll. 128, 129.

2. Lawless v. Mansfield (1 Dr. & War. 557) "contains nothing to show that any other rules than those of ordinary evidence are applicable to cases of solicitor and client." Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Judd v. Ollard, 5 Jur., N. S., 755, 758.

3. Lawless v. Mansfield (1 Dr. & War. 557). Semble, that what was said in this case does not apply to a mortgage for bill of costs. Blagrove v. Routh, 8 De G. M. & G. 620; 3 Jur., N. S., 399; 26 L. J., Ch., 86; 5 W. R. 95.

4. Lawless v. Mansfield (1 Dr. & War. 557): the proposition in this case, that a general charge is sufficient to open accounts between a solicitor and his client, is in conflict with the rule of the Court of Chancery in England. Blagrove v. Routh, 2 Kay & J. 509.

5. Lawless v. Mansfield (1 Dr. & War. 557). Wood, V.-Ch., from his observations in Blagrove v. Routh (2 Kay & J. 509), seems to have thought that Lord St. Leonards, in the case of Lawless v. Mansfield, laid down the doctrine that, if there be an account settled between solicitor and client, the bare existence of the relation of solicitor and client is enough to induce the Court to open the account, without proof of any erroneous items or the proof of anything more than the existence of the relation of solicitor and client. That is a misapprehension of the language of Lord St. Leonards, who says the account will be opened "if sufficient cause be shown." These important words, "if sufficient cause be shown," seem to have escaped the notice of Wood, V.-Ch. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Morgan v. Higgins, 1 Giff. 270, 277, 278.

6. Lawrence v. Lawrence (1 Bro P. C. 591), followed in Incedon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 436.

8. Leake v. Leake (10 Ves. 477). I cannot help noticing, in addition to the observations of the Lord Chancellor, that it is very singular that the case having been left in the position in which it was by Lord Eldon, with two judgments singularly inconsistent with each other, namely, Leake v. Leake (supra) and Twisden v. Twisden (9 Ves. 413), as far back as the years 1804 and 1805, there never has been any opportunity for the Court of Chancery to make any comment on those cases except in Onslow v. Mitchell (18 Ves. 490), before Sir William Grant in 1812, where he felt himself obliged, in order to arrive at a conclusion consistent with what was decided in Leake v. Leake, to place the whole of the judgment on the meaning of the words "give and settle." Lord Eldon lived himself a great many years afterwards, and held the great seal, but he appears never to have had an opportunity of again expressing his opinion upon the subject, or of explaining those two decisions. Under these circumstances, I agree with the Lord Chancellor in thinking that we are not obliged to extend the doctrine, such as it is, any further. Per Lord Justice James, in Cooper v. Cooper, 8

12. Lechmere v. Carlisle (Lord), 3 P. W. 215. The opinion of Sir Joseph Jekyll in this case, that the forbearance of trustees in not doing what it was their office to do, shall not prejudice the cestui que trust, denied, being contrary to many decisions. Pentland v. Stokes, 2 Ball & B. 74.

13. Lechmere v. Clump (31 Beav. 578; 7 L. T., N. S., 411) followed by London Monetary Advance Co. v. Bean, 18 L. T., N. S., 349.

16. Leeds (Duke) v. Amherst (Earl) (14 Sim. 357; 15 L. J., Ch., 351; 16 L. J., Ch., 5. S. C. on appeal 2 Ph. 117; 16 L. J., Ch., 5) had been referred to, and in that case the Court went, there could be no doubt, to a most extraordinary length, a length unprecedented in any previous case, and it would remain without being followed until another case as extraordinary should occur. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Morris v. Morris, 4 Jur., N. S., 961, 966.

17. Leeds v. Barnardiston (4 Sim. 538) disapproved of in Cooke, Re, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 145; 15 Jur. 765.

18. Leeds v. Cheetham (1 Sim. 146). The decision in this case is not accepted as law by Lord St. Leonards, who, in his Handy Book on Property Law, p. 101, 1st edit., p. 106, 6th edit., says to the landlord: "If, however, you have insured, although not bound to do so, and received the money, you cannot compel payment of the rent, if you decline to lay out the money in rebuilding." Upon this passage being cited, Lord Campbell, C. J., said: "With regard to the opinion expressed by Lord St. Leonards, his book is a most valuable publication, and I pay respect to it; if it were proposed to make it law, I might be ready to support it; but it is only the opinion of a most learned judge, and it is contrary to a solemn decision, and to my own opinion." Lofft v. Dennis, 5 Jur., N. S., 727, 729.

19. Leeming, Re (30 L. J., Ch., 263; 9 W. R. 403; 3 De F. & J. 43), observed upon in Freer, Re, Freer v. Freer, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 622; 52 L. J., Ch., 301; 31 W. R. 426; and followed in Melly, Re, 49 L. T. 429; 53 L. J., Ch., 248.

20. Lees v. Marton (1 M. & Rob. 210). The marginal note is, "Semble, that a breach of an appointment by a trader to call at his creditor's house to pay a debt is not an act of bankruptcy." Upon this case being cited, Macn. J., observed. "I have never been able to see the difference between breaking an appointment at the house of the creditor and breaking an appointment at the house of the trader himself. The latter has been always held to be an act of bankruptcy; and I am of opinion that where a trader makes an express appointment to meet his creditor, at a particular hour, at the creditor's house, for the purpose of paying a debt, and fails to keep the appointment, he thereby commits an act of bankruptcy." O'Neil, Re, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 281.

1. Legge v. Asgill (T. & R. 465). As to the authorities, I need only refer to Legge v. Asgill, on which doubt has never been cast, that I am aware of, a decision of Lord Eldon's, and which I should not presume to act against. It has been thrown out in the argument that the report of that case is inaccurate. There is not a shadow of foundation for that statement; I cannot for a moment entertain such a notion. In that case Lord Eldon decided that, under the words, "if there is money left unemployed I desire it may be given in charity," the general residue of the personal estate passed. The words here are, "whatever money is left after my burial." In my opinion, that case, followed as it has been by a long series of authorities, Kendall v. Kendall (4 Russ. 360), and the two cases in Keen, Rogers v. Thomas (2 Keen 8) and Dowson v. Gaskom (2 Keen 14), is a clear authority for holding, on the context of this will, that money was used in a sense capable of embracing stocks. I think I should be violating the testatrix's intention if I came to any other conclusion. Under what circumstances did she die? She had no money whatever—not one penny, but she had 492*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* stock. Unless I put the construction on the word "money" which was put on it in Kendall v. Kendall and Legge v. Asgill, I must declare that she died intestate as to the greater portion of her property, in the face of a will which, in my opinion, clearly indicates that she intended to dispose of all her property. Per Sullivan, M. R., in Boardman v. Stanley, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 342, 346.

9. Lester v. Foweraker (Colles's P. C. 108) distinguished in Harris v. Horwell, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 11.

10. Lett v. Randall (3 Eq. Rep. 1034; 6 Jur., N. S., 1359; 9 W. R. 130; 3 L. T., N. S., 455; 30 L. J., Ch., 110; 3 Sm. & G. 83; 2 De G. F. & J. 358) questioned in Tavernor v. Grindley, 32 L. T., N. S., 424.

11. Leving v. Caverley (Pre. Ch. 229), the reasoning in which case is so unsatisfactory, not to say absurd, that I think it would be impossible to follow it. Per Cianworth, C., Stanton v. Percival, 5 H. L. Cas. 257, 273; but see, per Lord St. Leonards, Id. 286.

12. Levy v. Lovell (14 L. R., Ch. D., 284; 49 L. J., Ch., 305; 42 L. T. 242; 28 W. R. 602) followed in Sear, Exp. Price, Re, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 74; 44 L. T. 887; 51 L. J., Ch., 448.

13. Lewis v. Morgan (3 Y. & J. 230). The general expressions of Lord Redsdale in this case are not to be construed to mean that accounts settled between parties standing in the relation of solicitor and client are to be disregarded. It would be absurd that a solicitor, however accurately his accounts were settled, and however plainly his books show prima facie that the accounts were regular, should more than any other man be put to vouch his account over again. Hickson v. Aylward, 3 Moll. 1, 15.

14. Lewin v. Lewin (2 Ves. 415) observed on in Miller v. Huddleston, 3 Macn. & G. 513; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 15 Jur. 1043.

Where bankrupt's reversionary estate was offered for sale by auction, and 950*l.* bid, and the same was bought in for 1,000*l.* upon a reserved bidding to that amount, and afterwards, when reduced into possession, sold for 510*l.*:—Held, under the circumstances, not within the rule established in Lewis, Exp., 1 G. & J. 69, so as to make the assignee liable for the difference. Buxton, Exp., 1 G. & J. 355.

16. Lewis Bowle's case (11 Rep. 79) considered and explained in Creagh v. Blood, 3 J. & L. 133; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 688.

17. Lewis v. Chace (1 P. W. 621) is overruled Sumner v. Brady, 1 H. Bla. 647.

18. Lewis v. Duncombe (29 Beav. 175). The marginal note is in these terms:—"Upon the grant of an annuity, secured on real estate, a term was vested in trustees in trust, to raise and pay the arrears, and hold the surplus of the proceeds in trust for the grantor:—Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, being created as between the trustee and the grantor and grantee, the case is within the 25th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. If that were a correct note, the case would be directly in point, and would be conclusive. On reading the report of the case, however, it will be seen that the facts as stated in it, and in the judgment and the marginal note, are not consistent with each other; and from the report of the same case in 7 Jurist, N. S., 695, it is evident that the marginal note in 29 Beav. is incorrect. No term of years was created, but the entire estate was conveyed in fee simple and otherwise to the trustee. Per Flanagan, J., Birmingham, Re, 4 Ir. R., Eq., 187, 195, 196.

8. Lightfoot v. Burstall (1 Hem. & M. 546; 33 L. J., Ch., 188; 9 L. T. 711; 12 W. R. 148) observed upon in Cranshaw v. Cranshaw, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 817; 49 L. J., Ch., 662; 43 L. T. 309; 29 W. R. 68.

9. Lightfoot v. Burstall (33 L. J., Ch., 188; 9 L. T. 711; 12 W. R. 148; 1 Hem. & M. 546) followed in Savage's Trusts, Re, 50 L. J., Ch., 131.

10. Liley v. Hey (1 Hare 530; 11 L. J., Ch., 415). I have unwillingly come to the conclusion that I am bound by the cases of the Att.-Gen. v. Price, 17 Ves. 371, and Isaac v. De Friez, Ambler 595 sed compare 17 Ves. 373, note, and that I must treat this as a charitable bequest. It is remarkable that those cases do not appear to have been cited before Wigram, V.-Ch., in Liley v. Hey (supra). The true rule in all these instances is to do what Sir William Grant did in the case of the Att.-Gen. v. Price, 17 Ves. 371, namely, to ascertain, as near as possible, what the true intention of the testator was. . . . If the case of the Att.-Gen. v. Price, and the other case which I have mentioned, had been cited before Wigram, V.-Ch., in Liley v. Hey, I should have followed the more recent decision. As it is I am not entitled to dissent from authorities so much in point. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Gillam v. Taylor, 42 L. J., Ch., 674, 675; 21 W. R. 823; 16 L. R., Eq., 581; 28 L. T. 833.

11. Lincoln v. Windsor (9 Hare 158) observed upon in Broughton v. Broughton, 5 De G. M. & G. 160; 1 Jur., N. S., 965; 25 L. J., Ch., 250; 3 W. R. 602. Affirming 3 Eq. Rep. 131; 2 Sm. & G. 422; 24 L. J., Ch., 190; 3 W. R. 130.

12. Lindsay v. Gibbs (22 Beav. 522; 28 L. J., Ch., 692). It is very true that the Master of the Rolls, in this case, says that where there is a charter-party inquiries should be made, and notice should be given. I am rather disposed to think that that is rather dangerous doctrine, because I think the mortgagee of a ship has a right to say: "I am going to take the ship: I am going to realise my security: I know nothing whatever besides, for nobody has given me any notice." I am rather disposed to think that if he takes a mortgage of the ship, and registers it, he is not bound to make further inquiries; but however that may be, what the Master of the Rolls says is, that where the mortgagee knows there is a charter-party he should inquire of the charterer whether he has received notice of any incumbrance. That may be so, but it was impossible for this defendant to do that, because here there was no charter-party. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Wilson v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Ch., 423, 427; 14 L. R., Eq., 32; 20 W. R. 436; 26 L. T., N. S., 346.

15. Litton v. Litton (3 L. R., Ch. D., 793; 46 L. J., Ch., 64; 24 W. R. 962) explained and commented on in Pascoe v. Richards, 50 L. J., Ch., 337; 44 L. T. 87; 29 W. R. 330.

16. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner (30 L. J., Ch., 379; 9 W. R. 292; 1 John. & H. 159) explained and commented on in Batthyany v. Boueh, 50 L. J., Q. B., 421; 44 L. T. 177; 29 W. R. 665.

17. Lloyd v. Collett (4 Bro. C. C. 459) is as nearly as possible this case, and I cannot find that Lloyd v. Collett has been overruled or objected to in any authority or any text book on the subject. I think the Lord Chancellor's judgment in that case is a very striking one. The judgment is not given where the case is reported, but is set out in a note to Flarrington v. Wheeler, in 4 Vesey, jun. The facts of the case are stated in 4 Brown; and in a note in 4 Vesey, jun., at page 659, it is stated that the Lord Chancellor in Lloyd v. Collett, which was cited, pronounced judgment. Per Lord Romilly, M. R., in Venn v. Cattell, 27 L. T., N. S., 469, 470.

18. Lloyd v. Harvey (2 Russ. & M. 310) considered in Hall v. Hall, 1 Con. & L. 120; 1 Dr. & War. 94; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 27.

19. Lock v. De Burgh (4 De G. & Sm. 470; 15 Jur. 961; 20 L. J., Ch., 384) doubted and not adopted, for the purpose of being reviewed. Fletcher v. Moore, 3 Jur., N. S., 458; 26 L. J., Ch., 530.

20. Lock v. De Burgh (5 De G. & Sm. 470) before Knight Bruce, L. J., when Vice-Chancellor, but it is so shortly reported, that it is impossible to say what were the grounds of his honour's judgment; it is, however, an express decision on the case now before me. The last case is that of Fletcher v. Moore (3 Jur., N. S., 458; 26 L. J., Ch., 530) before Kindersley, V.-Ch., in which, having Lock v. De Burgh before him, that learned judge came to a conclusion opposed to that case. . . . The more I consider it, the more I think the view a reasonable and just one; that the first branch of the commencement of the 2nd section of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, refers to two classes of subjects, to each of which the enacting words are applicable; that, in fact, the section must be read thus: in the first place, that after the passing of the Act all rents reserved by tenants in fee or for life, or by donees of powers of leasing, such leases being granted after the passing of the Act, shall be apportioned; and, in the next place, that all other rent charges and other rents, etc., made payable or coming due at fixed periods, under an instrument executed after the passing of the Act, shall also be apportioned. According to this construction, the former portion of the section provides for interests existing at the passing of the Act, whilst the latter looks to and provides for the future. I think that this is a rational interpretation of the statute, and although open to the objection that to a certain extent it renders the statute ex post facto legislation, I think it must have been the ground upon which Lock v. De Burgh was decided. I shall therefore follow that decision in deciding the present case, and declare that the rents in question ought to be apportioned. Per V.-Ch. Wood in Plummer v. Whiteley, Johns. 585, 589; 5 Jur., N. S., 1416.

In the copy of the Law Reports in this court (Common Pleas), I find in the handwriting of my late brother Willes the following addition to the head-note to London (Mayor) v. Cow:—"The cause of action must arise and the garnishee reside within the city, in order to give the Lord Mayor's Court jurisdiction." We have repeatedly held since that that means substantially the whole cause of action. Per Keating J., in Cooke v. Gill, 8 L. R., C. P., 107, 110; 21 W. R. 334; 42 L. J., C. P., 98; 28 L. T., N. On reading it, I cannot, I confess, reconcile it either with principle or with the authorities. I regret it was not carried further, because it is of the greatest importance that nothing should shake settled rules of construction. It is to be observed that it does not appear that the point was raised, though certainly, speaking from my own experience, it rarely occurs that counsel omit to suggest to the Court any point that can properly be urged in support of their case. There may have been some circumstances that affected the particular matter. Per Romilly, M. R., in Page v. May, 24 Beav. 323, 326; 27 L. J., Ch., 242; 3 Jur., N. S., 1047; 5 W. R. 840.

The principles laid down in these cases—viz., that a director being in a fiduciary position to his company cannot retain a consideration received by him from the promoters as an inducement to become a director; and, if the consideration has been a gift of fully paid-up shares, that he may be compelled not only to restore the shares, but to account to the company for the highest value to be attributed to them since they have been in his possession—are equally applicable to proceedings in an action by the company to recover the value of the shares, as to proceedings under the Companies Act 1862, s. 165, for the same purpose. The director is further chargeable with interest on the highest value of the shares. Nant-y-glo and Blauna Ironworks Co. v. Grave, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 738; 26 W. R. 504; 3 L. T., N. S., 345.

1. MacKenzie v. Coulson (8 L. R., Eq., 368). The non-disclosure of a fact, after the policy was made in equity, could have no more effect than a similar non-disclosure after it was made in law. The present is an intermediate case, and the question which must now be determined seems to us to be whether, after the negotiation is complete and the contract made, in fact and in good faith, and the underwriter is under a moral obligation to execute a formal policy, the assured is bound by good faith to give information to the assurer of a matter which would make him aware that his bargain was a bad one, information which ought to have no effect on him, but would expose him to a temptation to break his contract, which, as far as the law is concerned, he may do with impunity, because for fiscal purposes the Legislature has forbidden the Court, either of law or equity, to enforce the contract. To the question thus stated the answer seems obvious, that he is not bound to lead his neighbour into temptation. Until lately, no question of this sort could be raised in any Court, for the rules of evidence required that the contract, being written, should be proved by the production of the writing, the slip; and Lord Ellenborough, in Warwick v. Slade (3 Camp. 127), accurately expressed the effect of the statutes then in force, when he said, "The revenue laws forbid me to look to what is called the slip;" and such continued to be the law down to and after the time when Xenos v. Wickham (2 L. R., H. L., 276; 36 L. J., C. P., 313; 16 L. T., N. S., 800) was argued in the House of Lords; and the judges who (on the 8th May 1867) gave their opinions, in the House of Lords, used language showing that they thought that the law was as stated by Lord Ellenborough; and so it was. These passages were quoted and relied on in the argument before us. But in that very year, on the 31st of May 1867, the 30 Vict., c. 23, received the royal assent. This statute was not brought to the notice of James, V.-Ch., in MacKenzie v. Coulson (8 L. R., Eq., 368). According to the construction put upon it by this Court in Ionides v. Pacific Insurance Co. (6 L. R., Q. B., 674; 41 L. J., Q. B., 33; 26 L. T., N. S., 161, 162, 163), that Act completely changed the law, and repealed all those Acts which had ordered that the slip was not so much as to be looked at in a court of justice, putting it on a footing very similar to that of an unsigned memorandum of a contract within the Statute of Frauds, or a lease for more than for three years not under seal, viz., that it was void and not enforceable at law or in equity, but might be given in evidence wherever, though not valid, it was material. It is open to the defendant in a court of error to question the accuracy of the reasoning on which the judgment in Ionides v. Pacific Insurance Co. (6 L. R., Q. B., 674; 41 L. J., Q. B., 33) proceeded, but we think that whilst it stands unreversed, it leads irresistibly to the conclusion that the judgment in the present case should be for the plaintiffs. Per Blackburn, J., delivering the considered judgment of the Court in Cory v. Patton, 7 L. R., Q. B., 304, 308, 309, 310; 41 L. J., Q. B., 195, n., 196, n.; 26 L. T. 161; 20 W. R. 364.

4. McLean v. Fleming (2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 128). After the argument of this case, and I had written what I have read as my judgment on the point of dead freight, our attention was called to the case of McLean v. Fleming, decided by the House of Lords on the 3rd of April last. The delivery of the judgment of this Court was postponed till we had an opportunity of inquiring into the case of McLean v. Fleming. My brother Bramwell considers the decision in the House of Lords governs this case, and must govern him, whatever his opinion otherwise would have been. My brother Brett, for reasons he has given, considers that McLean v. Fleming does not apply. Other of the judges, including myself, take the same view of the effect of the decision in McLean v. Fleming. If I considered the decision of the House of Lords as one which governs the present case, of course I should be bound by it, and should withdraw so much of the judgment respecting the point of dead freight as I had prepared and have read; but, thinking that the decision of the House of Lords does not govern the present case, I abide by the opinion that the plaintiff cannot recover his claim for dead freight; and I therefore think the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench should be affirmed on all points. Per Channell, B., in Gray v. Carr, 25 L. T., N. S., 216, 223; 6 L. R., Q. B., 522; 40 L. J., Q. B., 257; 19 W. R. 1173.

Since this case was argued, and since this judgment was written, our attention has been called to the case of McLean v. Fleming, in the House of Lords, and if I had thought that that case overruled anything I have said in this, I should have willingly bowed to it. But in that case, as I understand the judgment, the charter-party was in respect of the carriage of a uniform cargo, and the freight was payable at a fixed sum per ton, and the charter-party ascertained the amount of the cargo that was to be loaded. It then put upon the charterers the liability of loading a full cargo, and gave a lien to the shipowner for dead freight. Now, under those circumstances, it was pointed out by some, if not all, of the learned lords who took part in the judgment, that the damages for not loading a full cargo were, in point of fact, ascertained, because they would be the specified amount per ton upon the quantity that was really ascertained; and if that were so, that would properly be dead freight within the ordinary meaning of the term, and the lien being given in terms for dead freight, that case would be within the recognised rule; and as I understand their lordships, they declined to overrule the case of Kirchner v. Venus (12 Moo. P. C. C. 361), and expressly declined to overrule the case of Pearson v. Goschen (17 C. B., N. S., 352), which I think is decided on valuable principles, that ought to be generally applied. I therefore do not consider that that case overrules what I have said of this charter-party. With regard to the question of the bill of lading, even although the charter in this case did give a lien for dead freight, it seems to me that the authority in the House of Lords leaves the case untouched, because the House of Lords in the case before it came to the conclusion that the action was between those who were virtually the charterers and shipowner, and, therefore, they decided the case on the charter party alone, and held only that the facts of bills of lading being given to a charterer cannot alter or effect his liability under the charter-party. It therefore seems to me that that case does not affect this case, and I adhere to the judgment which I had already written. The case seems to me to be one of great importance, because bills of lading are the documents on which bills are bought and sold before ships arrive, and if the value of the bill of lading is to be dependant on an unascertained amount to be paid in respect of antecedent transactions, which cannot be known or estimated, any legitimate, in the sense of wholesome, traffic in such a document cannot be undertaken. This consideration tends to the same conclusion as the legal reasoning which has been before applied. Per Brett, J., S. C., 25 L. T., N. S., 216, 221, 222.

We may observe with respect to the rules regulating bills of review, to which we were referred in the argument as laid down by Lord Redesdale in the above case, that we do not find any observations to the effect of those rules attributed to Lord Redesdale in the report. They appear to be the reporter's own note of what he considers to have been established by the decision. Per Lord Kingsdown, P. C., in Hosking v. Terry, 15 Moo. P. C. 493, 504; 8 Jur., N. I doubt whether I was right in what I said in this case, that possibly the doctrine in Walker, Exp. (4 Ves. 373), might apply not only to a case where there was an exchange of accommodation acceptances, but might apply to a case where one bill was, in some respects, the consideration for another bill. I have great doubt, on further consideration, whether that was right, and whether the rule was not that which was stated by Lord Selborne in that case, namely, that proof could only be admitted when an action at law would lie, and not in a case of pure accommodation acceptances, in respect of which if there was no bankruptcy, no action at law would lie. 9. Maddison v. Pye (32 Beav. 658). Now, with regard to that case, I must say that I think it is a pity that cases which are to be reported at all should be reported as that was. The particular form of the will is not given, and there are no arguments, or even the name of the counsel engaged, and not a single authority is stated to have been cited. There is nothing to show whether the estate was charged with debts or legacies. Somebody must have told Mr. Beavan that such a case had occurred when he himself was not in court. The rule is thus laid down, and evidently incorrectly, "Eyre v. Marsden (1 Myl. & Cr. 231) settles this. Where a real estate is disposed of in favour of several persons and the suit is solely for the administration of the real estate, and some of the shares lapse, these shares are not to be made to bear the costs of the suit, but the costs are to be borne by the real estate"—which was not done in Eyre v. Marsden—"generally, and the heir-at-law's estate is not to bear all the costs." Further on the Master of the Rolls says, "I have always understood the rule to be this in suits for the administration of the personal estate the part of it undisposed of is first applicable to the payment of the costs; but the rule is different as to real estate. There the heir-at-law is only charged with his proportion of the costs of the suit." The rule as thus laid down is entirely erroneous, and I cannot believe that the Master of the Rolls ever stated it in those broad terms; and if he did, I can only say it is impossible that I can follow it. As to the cases which have been cited, I should decide Morgan v. Griffith the same way; the decision in Mann v. Nunn I am inclined to think wrong, but it is unnecessary to say how that may be. 22. Martin v. Wilson (3 Bro. C. C. 324). I made a note to this case many years ago in my copy of that volume, that the case of Martin v. Wilson is opposed to *Viner v. 28. Mather v. Fraser (2 Jur., N. S., 902, 903). Dalton v. Whitem (3 Q. B. 961; 6 Jur., 1063) is a case at common law, to show that fixtures cannot be distrained. Although Wood, V.-Ch., in Mather v. Fraser (2 Jur., N. S., 902, 903), thought that fixtures could not be distrained, there is a long series of authorities to the contrary. Per Willes, J., in Beck v. Denbigh, 6 Jur., N. S., 998.

1. Matthew v. Hanbury (2 Vern. 187). The dictum to this case that the Court may aid the executor of a party culpable, where it would not have aided the party culpable himself, is not law. Per Lord Selborne, C, in Ayerst v. Jenkins, 21 W. R. 878; 29 L. T., N. S., 126; 42 L. J., Ch., 690.

6. May v. Bennett (1 Russ. 370). With respect to the case of May v. Bennett, I cannot go quite so far. I say nothing in disparagement of that authority whatever; it is distinguishable from the present case; at the same time I will take leave to say, with the greatest possible respect for the learned judge who decided it (the late Lord Gifford), that if I had had to decide it, I think I should have come to a different conclusion from that at which he arrived. Per Lord Brougham, in Baker v. Baker, 4 Jur., N. S., 491, 493.

7. Maycock, Re (11 W. R. 1094), erroneous. See Lovell, Exp. & Re, 13 L. T., N. S., 451; 1 L. R., Ch., 134; 35 L. J., Bky., 14; 14 W. R. 186; 13 L. T., N. S., 118.

8. May v. Shey (16 Sim. 588). One adverse case was cited which I must notice, May v. Shey, the marginal note being, "A. having gone abroad, and left his wife unprovided for, the plaintiff lent her money to purchase necessaries, and she applied it accordingly — Held, that the plaintiff could not sue for the money in a court of equity." But it appears that the Vice-Chancellor who decided that case, not holding that there was not a debt due from A. to the plaintiff which might be recovered, proceeded upon the notion that this was a legal debt, the payment of which could not be directed by a court of equity. His Honour more fully explains this as his ratio decidendi in the subsequent case of Hirst v. Tolson (16 Sim. 620). But this is clearly erroneous, that no action at law could be maintained, for such a demand was considered too clear for argument in the recent case of Know v. Bushell, 3 O. B., N. S., 334. Per Campbell, C, in Jenner v. Morris, 7 Jur., N. S., 375, 376.

9. May v. Shey (16 Sim. 588) is no longer law and was overruled by Jenner v. Morris, 3 De G. F. & J. 45; 9 W. R. 391. Per Lord Romilly, M. R., in Deare v. Soutten, 18 W. R. 203, 204.

18. Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North Western Railway Co. (17 L. R., Ch. D., 246). The ratio decidendi of this case applies to a local board just as it does to an ordinary landowner. As to existing drains, as to those which were made before the defendant board came into existence, they could not be interfered with; and as to those made since, under the circumstances of the case, they would not be interfered with. *Att.-Gen. v. 25. Middleton v. Spicer (1 Bro. C. C. 201). The 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 2, does not affect the rule laid down in this case. Johnston v. Hamilton, 11 Jur., N. S., 777; 13 W. R. 961; 12 L. T., N. S., 822.

26. Midland Railway Co., Re (34 Beav. 525;

34 L. J., Ch., 596). There Sir John Romilly, M. R., said, "If a testator had by his will said, 'I leave all the money I now possess in the 3l. per cent. consols to A. B.,' it would, I apprehend, be properly confined to the stock he held at the date of the will." Upon this dictum being cited, Lord Romilly, M. R., said, "That dictum was not necessary to the decision in that case, and now that I hear it read I am not sure that I approve of it." Wagstaffe v. Wagstaffe, 38 L. J., Ch., 528.

1. Milbank v. Revett (2 Meriv. 405) is very shortly and very loosely argued. Tyson v. Fairclough, 2 Sim. & S. 145.

2. Mildmay v. Methuen (3 Drew. 91). This case was referred to, in which there was a demand for a sum of 10,000*l.* and odd, but from which a deduction of 1,500*l.* and odd was made on investigation of the accounts, and interest was allowed on the balance. The statute (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 28) was referred to and was relied on as entitling the claimant to interest, but the argument seems to have been very curt and brief, and the statement of the case and the circumstances under which the reference was made to an architect to ascertain the amount, are not set forth with that amount of detail which would make the decision in the case satisfactory under any circumstances. No authority was referred to, and the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor (Kindersley) is not a very full one. The impression on the Vice-Chancellor's mind seems to have been that it was a case of debt or sum certain; and he declared that the claimant was entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from the date of his demand. It does not appear from the report whether it was a debt certain or a sum certain payable at a certain day;—there is not a word about that in the argument. But the Vice-Chancellor appears to have been influenced by the consideration of the 29th section of the statute; which enables the jury on the trial of any issue, or on any inquisition of damages, to give damages in the nature of interest, over and above the value of the goods at the time of conversion or seizure, and over and above the money recoverable. But that is a special clause applicable to trespass and trover, and to policies of assurance; with reference to which last, interest had, in the older cases, been allowed. The Vice-Chancellor seems to have considered that the 29th section assisted him in coming to a conclusion upon the construction of the 28th section. But I am quite at a loss to understand the bearing of that in any way; for the 29th section does not deal with sums certain at all; except that sums assured may or may not be a sum certain. I do not consider that the decision in that case is satisfactory, or one which ought to guide me in coming to a conclusion in this case; if, independently of it, I should come to a different conclusion, which, under all the circumstances of this case, I certainly should come to. The circumstances of that case are not set forth, and there is nothing to explain what the nature of the deduction was; but even supposing that I could treat the present as a case within the 28th section, I do not find that that section is imperative. It merely empowers a jury, if they shall think fit, to allow interest at a rate not exceeding a certain amount. Those words give a discretion to the jury to say whether the case is, under all the circumstances of it, one in which interest ought to be allowed or not. A new trial would not, I think, be granted, because the jury had not allowed interest under that section. Per Hall, V.-Ch., in Hill v. South Staffordshire Railway Co., 43 L. J., Ch., 556, 561; 18 L. R., Eq., 154.

J., Ch., 212) had been called to the attention of the learned Vice-Chancellor, he would, no doubt, have followed it. That authority is conclusive. The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, does not apply, as none of the demises were in writing, and the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, does not apply, because they did not determine on the death of the tenant for life. Per Giffard, L. J., in Mills v. Trumper, 4 L. R., Ch., 320, 322; 17 W. R. 423; 20 L. T., N. S., 384.

But, independently of principle, the case was concluded by the authority of Brown v. Candler, which was a decision of the Lord Chancellor. No attempt had been made to distinguish that case from the present, but it did not appear to have been cited before the Vice-Chancellor. Per Selwyn, L. J. Id.

5. Mitchel v. Reynolds (1 P. W. 181). Lord Macclesfield, when chief justice of the Queen's Bench, in the celebrated case of Mitchel v. Reynolds, described very clearly what are conditions which shall be considered to be invalid; and he said: "All the instances of conditions against law, in a proper sense, are reducible under one of these heads.—1st. Either to do something that is malum in se, or malum prohibitum; 2ndly. To omit the doing of something that is a duty; 3rdly. To encourage such crimes and omissions. Such conditions as these the law will always, and without any regard to circumstances, defeat, being concerned to remove all temptations and inducements to those crimes." 10. Montague v. Kater (8 Exch. 507; 22 L. J., Exch., 154). A case of great authority. Per Lord St. Leonards, in Saunders v. Evans, 7 Jur., N. S., 1293, 1296.

11. Montague v. Kater (8 Exch. 507) approved of. I am convinced that the conclusion of the Court of Exchequer in that case was as right in law as it was plainly agreeable to good sense and justice. Per Knight Bruce, L. J., in Evans v. Saunders, 6 De G. M. & G. 654, 666.

12. Montgomery v. Montgomery (3 J. & L. 47; 8 Ir. Eq. Rep. 740) explained in Woodhouse v. Herriek, 1 Kay & J. 352; 24 L. J., Ch., 649; 3 W. R. 303; 3 Eq. Rep. 817.

Lord St. Leonards did not disapprove of the rejection in a devise like the present, of creating a tenancy in common, but of the cases where, although words of limitation were superadded to the word "issue," as in a devise to one for life, with remainder to his issue, and their heirs, it has still been held that the issue took not as purchasers, but by descent through the first taker. Id.

13. Money Penny v. Money Penny (4 Kay & J. 174; 4 Jur., N. S., 873; 27 L. J., Ch., 369) reversed on appeal to the Lord Chancellor, 5 Jur., N. S., 253; 23 L. J., Ch., 303; 3 De G. & J. 572. The principles upon which covenants are to be construed, are elaborately and lucidly laid down and illustrated in the judgment of Lord Chancellor Chelmsford, in the late case of Money Penny v. Money Penny, in which he overruled (I think very properly) the judgment of two common law judges, who had departed from these principles. Per Lord Campbell, C., in Pigott v. Stratton, 29 L. J., Ch., 1, 8.

14. Molton v. Camroux (2 Exch. 487. S. C. in error, 4 Exch. 17) observed upon in Price v. Berrington, 3 Macn. & G. 486; 15 Jur. 999.

15. Moor v. Raisbeck (12 Sim. 123) observed upon in Fenn v. Death, 2 Jur., N. S., 700; 23 Beav. 73; 4 W. R. 828.

16. Moore v. Faulkner (1 Anstr. 11). No good reason can be given why the contract should be considered binding upon the ancestor, and not upon the heir. Jones v. Kearney, 1 Dr. & War. 159; 1 Con. 34; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

17. Moore v. Moore (1 Phillimore 375, 406) observed upon in Cutto v. Gilbert, 9 Moo. P. C. 131.

18. Moore v. Choat (8 Sim. 508; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 128; 3 Jur. 220) approved in Robinson v. Roshier, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 7; 5 Jur. 1006.

19. Moore v. Choat (8 Sim. 508; 8 L. J., Ch., 128), which overruled, or, at all events, displaced the authority of the cases of Lucas v. Comerford, 1 Ves. J. 235; 3 Bro. C. C. 166; and Flight v. Bentley, 7 Sim. 149; 4 L. J., Ch., 262, has been followed in all the subsequent cases, excepting only Saunders v. Benson, 4 Drew. 350, where the bill had been dismissed upon other grounds. Per Turner, L. J., in Cox v. Bishop, 3 Jur., N. S., 499, 500; 26 L. J., Ch., 389, 394.

20. Moorhouse v. Lord (9 Jur., N. S., 677; 32 L. J., Ch., 295; 11 W. R. 637; 8 L. T., N. S., 212). The opinion of Lord Kingsdown, given in his judgment in this case, as to the necessity of a settlement of many doubtful points in the law of domicile, referred to. See Mitchell, Re, 9 L. T., N. S., 282.

2. Morison v. Turnour (18 Ves. 175) incorrectly reported. Sansom v. Prole, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25.

3. Morley, Exp. (8 L. R., Ch., 1026; 43 L. J., Bky., 28; 29 L. T. 442; 21 W. R. 940), approved in Butcher, Exp., Mellor, Re, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 467; 28 W. R. 484.

4. Morrice v. England (Bank of) (3 Swan 573) followed in Dolland v. Johnson, 18 Jur. 767; 23 L. J., Ch., 637.

5. Morris's case, Oriental Commercial Bank, Re (41 L. J., Ch., 11; 7 L. R., Ch., 200, 25 L. T., N. S., 443; 20 W. R. 25. Reversing 40 L. J., Ch., 520; 24 L. T., N. S., 699; 19 W. R. 944). With regard to Morris's case, I own I think the determination of that case cannot subsist with the determination at which your lordships seem now likely to arrive on the present appeal, and I myself think that the decision in Morris's case proceeded upon a construction of this Act of Parliament which I am unable to accept. Per Lord Cairns, in Webb v. Whiffin, 42 L. J., Ch., 161, 173; 5 L. R., H. L., 711.

6. Morse v. Slue (1 Vent. 190, 238; Sir T. Raym. 220; 1 Keble 806; 1 Mod. 85; 3 Keble 72, 112, 135; 2 Lev. 69) is a very obscure case. The great question there was, whether the common law liability of a carrier extended to a carrying beyond seas. Per Williams, J., in Blaikie v. Stenbridge, 6 C. B., N. S., 894, 899.

With respect to Morse v. Slue, 1 Vent. 238, it was founded upon a contract to carry goods actually delivered to and in the custody of the master on board the ship, and he was bound, as he would have been here if a bill of lading had been given for the injured pans, to deliver the goods in the state in which he received them, except prevented by the act of God or the Queen's enemies, or other expressly excepted peril. Accordingly, in Abbott on Shipping, Part 2, ch. 2 (10th edit.), p. 91, referring to Morse v. Slue, the law is laid down as follows: "It is true that the master also is answerable for his own contract; for, in favour of commerce, the law will not compel the merchant to seek after the owners and sue them, although it gives him the power to do so, but leaves him a twofold remedy against the one or the other." Per Willes, J. Ib. 909, 910.

15. Moss v. Harter (2 W. R. 540; 2 Sm. & Giff. 458), and Lord St. Leonard's comments upon it ("Sugden on Powers," 8th ed., p. 8306), observed upon in Clarke's Estate, Re, Maddick v. Marks, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 422; 49 L. J., Ch., 586; 40 L. T. 49; 28 W. R. 753. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 205; 28 W. R. 342.

16. Mostyn v. Brooke (33 Beav. 457) (compromises sanctioned by the Court of Chancery) reversed on appeal 2 De G. J. & S. 373, and afterwards it was brought by appeal to the House of Lords, where no counsel appeared for the respondents, and the decision of the Lords Justices was reversed. This reversal did not effect the law as laid down in the courts below, but proceeded on the opinion of the House that, in fact, there had not been any concealment of documents, or any misrepresentation, when the arrangements, which the suit sought to set aside, had been agreed upon. Mostyn v. Brooke, 4 L. R., H. L., 304.

17. Motley v. Downman (3 Myl. & Cr. 1). The judgment in this case acted upon in Collins Co. v. Reeves, 4 Jur., N. S., 865.

18. Moult, Exp. (1 Mont. 321; 1 Dea. & Ch. 44). I own that at first I was very much perplexed, but upon the whole I have come to this conclusion, that Moult, Exp., ought not to be overturned. That really is the question for us—ought Moult, Exp., to be supported or overturned? Now Moult, Exp., was very fully considered by the learned judge who determined that case, and there it was held that the double proof ought not to be allowed. I called upon Mr. De Gex to distinguish upon principle Moult, Exp., from Hinton, Exp., De Gex, 550, and with all his learning and ability I think that he has failed in doing so. He only says that Moult, Exp., rests upon an arbitrary rule, which ought not to be extended. Now, I must suppose that it rests upon some principle; and upon whatever principle it rests, that principle must apply as well to Hinton, Exp., as to Moult, Exp. I cannot distinguish between the case of one member of a firm, who is a sole trader in a separate business, and two members of a firm carrying on a separate business, all the members of the separate firm being members of the joint firm; it is impossible, I think, to draw a distinction between the cases. That being so, I think that Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, when Vice-Chancellor, properly decided Hinton, Exp., and although he has changed his opinion, and has been disposed since to express an opinion dissenting from it, I should say, in this instance, first thoughts were best, and that he did well in considering Moult, Exp., as a sound authority, and in deciding Hinton, Exp., as it was decided. That case of Moult, Exp., was decided a good many years ago; it has been considered and acted upon as law ever since, and I think that we should not be justified in overturning it. Per Chelmsford, C, in Goldsmid v. Cazenove, 5 Jur., N. S., 1230, 1232; 29 L. J., Bky., 17; 7 H. L. Ca. 785. Affirming S. C. nom. Goldsmid, Exp., 2 De G. & J. 67; 2 Jur., N. S., 1106; 25 L. 2. Mounsey v. Burnham (1 Hare 15, 22) not followed by Lord Romilly, M.R., in Finch v. Westrope, 24 L. T., N. S., 412; 12 L. R., Eq., 24, 25; 40 L. J., Ch., 441; 19 W. R. 672.

3. Mountford v. Keene (19 W. R. 708; 24 L. T. 925). But there is one case, and one only—Mountford v. Keene—before the Master of the Rolls, in which, as reported, the broad proposition relied on in this case appears to have been laid down. That case is only reported in the Weekly Reporter, and the material part of it is as follows. [His lordship referred to the report.] It is not probable that the Master of the Rolls intended to lay down that which he is here reported to have said wholly irrespective of the consideration that "there was a set of relatives quarrelling over the poor enfeebled semi-paralytic old man," and of the other circumstances in that case, which might have well warranted the conclusion that it was not the deliberate act of a person understanding sufficiently the nature of what he was doing. It could not, at all events, have been intended by the Master of the Rolls to have overruled his own very elaborate judgment in Toker v. Toker, 31 Beav. 629, affirmed as that decision was by the Court of Appeal, 3 De G. J. & S. 487. Per James, L. J., in Hall v. Hall, 21 W. R. 373, 374; 8 L. R., Ch., 430.

4. Mountstephen v. Lakeman (in Q. B., 39 L. J., Q. B., 375; 5 L. R., Q. B., 613; 18 W. R. 1001; in Exch. Ch., 41 L. J., Q. B., 67; 7 L. R., Q. B., 196; 20 W. R. 117; in Dom. Proc., 43 L. J., Q. B., 188; 7 L. R., H. L., 17; 30 L. T. 437; 22 W. R. 617). The Statute of Frauds has said that if one man promises to pay the debt of another, the promise is void unless it is in writing; and no one doubts that that is the law. It appeared to me upon principle so plain that a promise like this is not within the Statute of Frauds, that I expressed perhaps rather too decided an opinion in the early part of the opening of the case; but I am very glad to find that that which then occurred to me as being the proper view of the case is finally decided to be the law on the subject. There has, however, been a conflict of authority, and I confess I am surprised to find that there has been so much conflict. The point was originally decided by two of the most eminent judges known on the bench, sitting in banc, Mr. Justice Bayley and Mr. Justice Parke (afterwards Lord Wensleydale), in the case of Thomas v. Cooke, 8 B. & C. 728, and they decided it upon the plainest principles of common sense and justice. I was therefore surprised to find that, in a later case of Green v. Creswell, 10 A. & E. 453; 2 P. & D. 430; 9 L. J., Q. B., 150, the same Court, constituted at that time of other judges, had taken a different view—and a view which if it had been maintained, I should have followed very reluctantly, if I had been obliged to follow it at all. But I am happy to find that, the matter having been most carefully and elaborately considered in the case of Reader v. Kingham, 13 C. B., N. S., 344; 32 L. J., C. P., 108, when the full number of judges was present, the case of Green v. Creswell was considered and was overruled, and the law, as laid down by Thomas v. Cooke, restored. The learned judges commented upon those cases, and said that the law was accurately laid down in Thomas v. Cooke. I entirely approve of that expression of opinion. I accordingly decide that, where a man induces another man to enter into an engagement by a promise to indemnify him against liability, an agreement of that nature is not within the Statute of Frauds, and does not require to be in writing. This is a case in which the father induced his son to guarantee the debt of his son-in-law, upon a promise that he would see him harmless. Upon every principle of justice he is bound to indemnify him, and I think, therefore, that the son is perfectly right in helping himself out of the estate which has come to his hands. The force of the decision in Reader v. Kingham, 13 C. B., N. S., 344; 32 L. J., C. P., 108, was somewhat shaken by the opinion expressed by Blackburn, J., in Mountstephen v. Lakeman. However, I am glad to find that Mountstephen v. Lakeman was overruled, not only by the Court of Exchequer Chamber but in the House of Lords. Therefore, the law is restored to the plain and reasonable ground upon which it was put in Reader v. Kingham. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Wildes v. Dutton, 44 L. J., Ch., 341, 343; 19 L. 16. National Mercantile Bank, Exp. (15 L. R., Ch. 18. Naylor v. Arnitt (1 Russ. & M. 501) followed in Fitzpatrick v. Waring, 11 L. R., Ir., 35.

19. Naylor v. Arnitt (1 Russ. & M. 501), where the Court allowed a lease to be granted for ten years by trustees. I do not think that the decision in this case is considered to be good law. There is no case which distinctly overrules it; but in the case of Wood v. Paterson (10 Beav. 541, 541) Lord Langdale said: "As to Naylor v. Arnitt, I should be afraid to act on it; for if the trustees, unauthorised by the will, have the power of leasing for ten years, I see no reason why they should not have power to lease for sixty." After that expression of opinion, I think that Naylor v. Arnitt is not a case to be followed. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Shaw's Trusts, Re, 12 L. R., Eq., 124, 126; 19 W. R. 1025; 25 L. T., N. S., 22, 23.

20. Neale v. Davies (5 De G. M. & G. 258). This case has been relied on by the defendant Roche as an authority to the contrary, and the language of Turner, L. J., affirming the decision of Wood, V.-Ch., if taken to apply generally, and not merely to the facts of that particular case, would seem to conflict with what I have mentioned as the general principle. Knight Bruce, L. J., differed from Turner, L. J., and expressed his dissent in very unequivocal language. He was of opinion that persons accepting a fund upon trust are bound to perform the trusts which they undertook, even if by so doing they should become personally liable to an adverse claimant, and he was of opinion that they would not be thus liable by reason of paying over the fund to their cestuis que trustent. In this difference of opinion I would venture to say that the view of Knight Bruce, L. J., seems more in accordance with the principle which the authorities appear to have established. I should, notwithstanding, of course be bound to follow the actual decision in the case, if it were not distinguishable from the present. Per Chatterton, V.-Ch., in Neligan v. Roche Ir. 1. Neeson v. Clarkson (2 Hare 163) commented upon in Parkinson v. Hanbury, 2 L. R., H. L., 1, 17, 18, by Lord Westbury.

2. Neilson v. Betts (5 L. R., H. L., 1) most undoubtedly decided the general principle that, upon a decree against a party for the infringement of a patent, the patentee is not entitled both to an account of profits and an inquiry into damages. That principle applies generally and without any distinction at all. It applies to every case of infringement; and, therefore, it must be taken to have settled conclusively that point, that the patentee must, in all these cases where he has a decree, elect whether he will have an account of profits, or an inquiry into damages; he cannot have both. Per Lord Chelmsford, in De Vitre v. Betts, 6 L. R., H. L., 319, 321; 42 L. J., Ch., 841; 21 W. R. 705.

3. Neilson v. Monro (41 L. T. 209; 27 W. R. 936) followed in Stannard, Re, Stannard v. Burt, 52 L. J., Ch., 355; 48 L. T. 660.

4. Nervis v. Levene (Ambl. 237). In this case it is said that partition was to be at the expense of both parties; but Mr. Beames (Costs, 48 n) suggests that this may be the same case with Norris v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 82, and that, though stated by Ambl. as a case of partition, it was a case respecting settling boundaries.

10. Newton v. Chorlton (10 Hare 646). There was a case of Newton v. Chorlton, before myself, to which I think it right to refer, because, although the case itself has not been overruled, the Lords Justices have in another case intimated that they do not concur with the view which I there took, an intimation which, of course, binds me as much as if my decision had been reversed before them. It was a case in which a creditor, after the contract of suretyship, had obtained a security for the debt, which he afterwards parted with. I considered that I ought not to hold that the same principle applied to after-taken securities which applies to those which exist at the date of the contract of suretyship. The Lords Justices have, however, held that the rights of a surety extend to this, and that he is entitled to have the benefit of every after-taken security. The present, however, is a much stronger case, as the security was already taken when the debt was contracted. Were it otherwise, I should not think myself at liberty to follow Newton v. Chorlton. The surety here cannot have the same title to, or the same effect as, the security of 1850; and the effect of the alteration in the security is to discharge him. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Pledge v. Buss, Johns. 663, 668; 6 Jur., N. S., 695, 696.

11. Newton v. Harland (1 Scott, N. R., 474) considered in Beddall v. Maitland, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 174; 50 L. J., Ch., 401; 44 L. T. 248; 29 W. R. 484.

12. Nicholas v. Chamberlain (Cr. Jac. 121). There it was held by all the Court, upon demurrer, that if one erects a house and builds a conduit thereto in another part of his land, and conveys water by pipes to the house, and afterwards sells the house with the appurtenances, excepting the land, or sells the land to another, reserving to himself the house, the conduit and pipes pass with the house, because it is necessary and quasi appendant thereto. This case has always been cited with approval. It was expressly approved of by Lord Westbury in Suffield v. Brown (33 L. J., Chanc., 259), where, though his lordship objects to the decision in Pyer v. Carter (1 H. & N. 916; 26 L. J., Exch., 258), in which it was held that a right to an existent continuous apparent easement was implicitly reserved in a conveyance by the owner of two houses of the alleged servient house, yet he seems to agree that a right to such an easement would pass by implied grant where the dominant tenement is conveyed first. Per Mellish, L. J., in Watts v. Kelson, 40 L. J., Ch., 126, 129; 6 L. R., Ch., 166; 24 L. T. 209; 19 W. R. 338.

17. Noel v. Bewley (3 Sim. 103). I think the Lord Chancellor of Ireland has taken an erroneous view, probably because he thought himself bound to follow the last authority on this subject (Noel v. Bewley), which, sitting in the highest tribunal of appeal, I am at liberty to say was, in my judgment, wrongly decided. Smith v. Osborne, 6 H. L. Ca. 375, 394; 3 Jur., N. S., 1181, 1183. 14. Oakeley v. Pasheller (4 Cl. & F. 207; 10 Bl. N. S. 548). It was, however, argued, that however much this might be contrary to principle, it was established by the House of Lords in Oakeley v. Pasheller. We do not think that any such point either arose or was decided in that case. The case is very imperfectly reported, and the judgment seems to have been very meagre. The case is abstracted in Lindley on Partnership, 3rd ed., p. 463. The decision appears to us to have proceeded on the ground that, by an arrangement to which the creditor, Sir Charles Oakeley, was a party, Kynaston, who was Sir Charles's son-in-law, became a partner in the house which was indebted to Sir Charles, and then by arrangement between the three parties, Kynaston became a principal debtor to Sir Charles, and the outgoing partners became sureties to Kynaston. There was ample consideration for Sir Charles Oakeley agreeing to this change, and whether the conclusion of fact that he did so agree was right or wrong, the case did not and could not decide that it could be done without his consent. That such was the ground of the decision of the Lords we think sufficiently appears from both reports, ill as they are reported. The facts clearly were that Kynaston made himself a new debtor to Sir Charles Oakeley; and, if he was so, the respondents could not be liable for his default except in consequence of some arrangement by which they became his sureties. In the very meagre report of the judgment of the Master of the Rolls in Bligh (10 Bl. N. S., p. 578), he bases his judgment on the fact that "Sir Charles Oakeley well knew, in 1817, that by the arrangement between the two partners, Reid and Kynaston, they had become the principal debtors," that is, to Sir Charles, which Kynaston could not be without Sir Charles's consent, "and Sherard's estate surety only." And during the argument in the House of Lords, Lord Lyndhurst points out the difficulty in converting a joint debtor into a surety without the creditor's assent (10 Bl. N. S., p. 586; and 4 Cl. & F., p. 232). He seems to have relied on this objection until the fact that Kynaston became a new debtor was brought to his notice (19 Bl. N. S., p. 587). And, finally, in the judgment he says, "an arrangement was made between Sir Charles Oakeley and Kynaston" (10 Bl. N. S., p. 589). This would have been quite irrelevant unless Kynaston had become a new debtor, and the other parties, by agreement with Sir Charles, sureties for him. It is impossible to suppose, that if Lord Lyndhurst had been delivering a judgment of the House of Lords on a case of the first impression, and on which he knew (as appears from 10 Bl. N. S., p. 586; 4 Cl. & F., p. 232) there was no previous decision, he would have done it in so perfunctory a manner as he appears to have done. It was not right in deciding on the special facts of the particular case to give so little information to the parties, but it would have been an incredible neglect of duty to say so little. It is, however, true, that in Wilson v. Lloyd (16 L. R., Eq., 60, 70), Bacon, V.-Ch., in citing Oakeley v. Pasheller, takes no notice of the very important fact that the new partner was introduced as a new member of the firm, and as a fresh debtor to the creditor by an arrangement between the three. No English case has actually decided this point if Oakeley v. Pasheller does not. But there is an Irish case cited by Mr. Wills, which should be noticed. It is that of Maingay v. Lewis (3 Ir R., C. L., 495; in error 5. Ir. R., C. L., 229). There was a plea there on equitable grounds raising this very defence. The Irish Court of Queen's Bench on demurrer unanimously held the plea to be bad. But, on appeal before seven judges, four reversed this decision, three being for affirming it. But it is worth while to notice the reasons on which Lawson, J., based his judgment, which turned the scale. After stating the point, he says: "To hold that this is so seems to me contrary to all sound principles of law. To affect the rights and alter the remedies, or even the order of the remedies of a creditor by an arrangement entered into between his debtors to which he was no party, seems to me to be an interference with contracts very contrary to the spirit of our law" (5 Ir. R., C. L., p. 231). So far we quite agree with him; but he adds, "I feel myself bound to come to the conclusion that the case is governed by the decision of the House of Lords in Oakeley v. Pasheller, and that I ought to follow it implicitly." Had Mr. Justice Lawson thought, as we do, that the decision in Oakeley v. Pasheller proceeded on the ground that the creditor was a party to the arrangement, he would have decided in conformity with the opinion of the dissentient three in the Irish Court of Appeal. Per Cockburn, C. J., in Swire v. Redman, 35 L. T., N. S., 470, 471, 472; 1 L. R., Q. B. D., 536, 543; 24 W. R. 1069.

5. Occleston v. Fullalove (9 L. R., Ch., 147; 43 L. J., Ch., 297; 29 L. T. 780; 22 W. R. 786). The principle of the decision in this case, as I understand it, is this, that a gift by a testator or testatrix to one of his or her children by a particular person is perfectly good if the child has acquired the reputation of being such child as described in the will before the death of the testator or testatrix. Per Sir G. Jessel, M. R., in Goodwin, Re, 17 L. R., Eq., 345, 346; 43 L. J., Ch., 258; 22 W. R. 619.

8. O'Flaherty v. McDowell (6 H. L. Ca. 182; 4 Jur., N. S., 33). The opinion in this case of Lord St. Leonards, that the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14 (Ir.), is repealed, so far as banking companies in Ireland are concerned, by 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, dissented from and held by Walsh, M. R., and by Lord Chancellor O'Hagan, that the Act still regulates all banking transactions in Ireland. Davies v. Kennedy, 17 W. R. 305; 3 Ir. R., Eq., 31, 668.

9. Ogilvie, Exp. (3 Ves. & D. 133), said to be overruled, arguendo, in Ellis, Exp., 2 G. & J. 312; 6 L. J., Ch., 44.

10. Ogilvie v. Currie (18 L. T., N. S., 593; 37 L. J., Ch., 341). In support of the demurrer to this bill, it was argued that the proper remedy for the plaintiff, if he had any remedy, was to proceed by action at law. It has been so often decided that this Court will grant relief in such cases that I should have overruled the demurrer without hesitation were it not for the case of Ogilvie v. Currie, said to have been decided by Lord Cairns when Lord Chancellor. Having examined the case, it is impossible to say that it does not countenance the argument that this Court ought not to give relief on bills brought against persons to recover back money paid on the faith of false representations. But this is only said in the latter part of the judgment, which deals with that which seems to have been a subordinate point. It is so well settled that this Court will entertain jurisdiction in such cases, that it would be a misfortune indeed to the public if there were any sufficient ground for considering that the jurisdiction is doubtful. Lord Eldon, in Evans v. Bicknell (6 Ves. 173), has stated it in clear and strong terms. Other great judges have quoted Lord Eldon's language with approbation when enforcing the doctrine. Sir William Grant carried it to a great extent in the remarkable case of Burrows v. Lock (10 Ves. 540). In Green v. Barrett (1 Sim. 45) Sir John Leach overruled a demurrer to a bill by a shareholder to recover back from directors of a joint stock company money paid on false representations. In the case of Slim v. Croucher (2 Giff. 37, S. C. on appeal 1 De G. J. & S. 415; 2 L. T., N. S., 103) the Lord Chancellor, in affirming my decision, expressed his approbation of the doctrine, and said he should not be sorry to see it extended. Although courts of common law may have jurisdiction in some such cases, there is clearly concurrent jurisdiction in this court. Both the Lords Justices fully concurred in the views stated by the Lord Chancellor in Slim v. Croucher. So long ago as the case of Colt v. Woollaston (2 P. W. 154) the Master of the Rolls said, "It is no objection that the parties have their remedy at law, and may bring an action at law for money had and received for the plaintiff's own use, for in cases of fraud the Court of Equity has concurrent jurisdiction with the common law, matter of fraud being the great subject of relief here." In the most recent case, Ramshire v. Bolton (8 L. R., Eq., 294; 2 L. T., N. S., 50), before Malins, V.-Ch., the jurisdiction was upheld to its full extent. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Hill v. Lane, 23 L. T., N. S., 547, 548; 11 L. R., Eq., 215; 40 L. J., Ch., 41; 19 W. R. 194.

11. Ogle v. Morgan (1 De G. M. & G. 359; 17 Jur. 277. Reversing 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 531; 14 Jur. 801) followed in Youghan v. Booth, 16 Jur. 808.

12. Oliver v. Oliver (in part) (10 L. R., Ch. D., 765; 48 L. J., Ch., 630; 27 W. R. 657) not followed in Gowan, Re, Gowan v. Gowan, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 778; 50 L. J., Ch., 248.

1. Onions v. Cohen (2 Hem. & M. 361). Dictum of Wood, V.-Ch., in this case, that, "except in the case of Grillim v. Stone (14 Ves. 129), there is no instance of a contract being delivered up to be cancelled, unless there was fraud in obtaining the contract itself," disapproved of in Panama & South Pacific Telegraph Co. v. India-rubber, Gutta Percha, & Telegraph Works Co., 32 L. T., N. S., 238; 10 L. R., Ch., 515; 45 L. J., Ch., 121; 23 W. R. 583.

2. Onions v. Tyrer (1 P. W. 343) distinguished in Tupper v. Tupper, 1 Kay & J. 665; 1 Jur., N. S., 917.

4. Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb (5 L. R., Ch. D., 713; 36 L. T. 433), not followed in Beddall v. Maitland, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 174; 50 L. J., Ch., 401; 44 L. T. 249; 29 W. R. 484.

5. Ormond (Marquis) v. Kynnersley (5 Madd. 369) disapproved in Kingham v. Lee, 15 Sim. 396; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49; 11 Jur. 4.

6. Orr v. Union Bank of Scotland (1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 513). I should be very sorry that what fell from me in this case should be misunderstood. When I said that there might be circumstances of fraud or negligence that would vary the case, what I meant was, that there might be negligence in the circumstances that were the immediate cause of the payment by the bank, as in the case decided in the Common Pleas (Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253, 12 Moore 484) where, when a cheque had been drawn payable to bearer, "fifty pounds," and it had been so badly written, or there had been so large a blank left on the left hand side of the "fifty," that the person who got hold of it was enabled to put in "three hundred and," the Court held, that as that negligence on the part of the drawer had afforded the opportunity for that fraud, which the bank could not have discovered by ordinary diligence, they were absolved from the ordinary liability attaching to the payment of a forged cheque. Per Lord Cranworth, in British Linen Co. v. Caledonian Insurance Co., 7 Jur., N. S., 587, 588.

7. Orrell v. Busch (18 W. R. 588; 5 L. R., Ch., 467; 22 L. T. 61). The rule laid down in this case that, when there are two concurrent suits in different branches of the court relating to the same subject matter, the secondly instituted suit ought to be transferred to the court in which the first suit was instituted, applies even where a decree has been made in the second suit and not in the first. Lucas v. Siggers, 20 W. R. 458; 7 L. R., Ch., 517; 41 L. J., Ch., 364; 26 L. T., N. S., 651.

10. Osborne v. Rowlett (13 L. R., Ch. D., 774; 49 L. J., Ch., 310; 42 L. T. 650; 28 W. R. 365). I should like to consider whether I should adopt the same view." Per Baggallay, L. J., in Morton and Hallett, Re, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 143; 49 L. J., Ch., 559; 42 L. T. 602; 28 W. R. 895.

12. Owen v. Homan (3 Macn. & G. 378; 15 Jur. 339). I do not feel myself at liberty to comment upon the propriety or impropriety of a principle which, more than half a century ago, was stated by Lord Eldon in Samuel v. Howarth (3 Meiv. 272), to have been long established, and which has been continually acted upon since that time, and is well settled and established as any other principle in courts of equity. I think that sometimes the cases are a little open to this observation; that they do not, all of them, especially the later cases, clearly and distinctly show in what way the principle was established and brought to bear. But, undoubtedly, if we look to the earlier cases, amongst which I might cite especially Oakeley v. Pasheller (10 Bligh 548), the principle is laid down very clearly, that if you agree with the principal to give him time, it is contrary to that agreement that you should sue the surety, because, if you sue the surety, you immediately turn him upon the principal, and therefore your act breaks the agreement into which you have entered with the principal. It is not simply neglecting to sue the principal which would have any effect upon the surety, but there must be a positive agreement with the principal that the creditor will postpone the suing of him to a subsequent period. To show that this is the principle, we have only to refer to another class of cases which, down to one very late case, clearly and distinctly established that it is competent to the creditors to reserve all their rights against the surety, in which case the surety is not discharged; and for this reason, that the contract made with the principal is then preserved, because the creditors have engaged with the principal not to sue him for a given time, but subject to the proviso that the creditors shall be at liberty to sue the surety, and so turn the surety upon the principal without any breach of the engagement with the principal. I say that this doctrine has been always recognised down to a late period, because Lord Truro threw some doubts upon it in the case of Owen v. Homan (supra). But Lord Cranworth, in giving judgment in that case, on appeal to the House of Lords (4 H. L. Ca. 997; 17 Jur. 861), said there could be no doubt about the case before the House, and that he did not think he should have entered into any discussion of the case had it not been for the doubt thrown by Lord Truro upon the principle that you might retain the surety, if that formed part of the original contract as to not suing the principal; and Lord Cranworth said that he thought it right to protest against the doubt, because he thought the doctrine was perfectly clear and established. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Oriental Financial Corporation v. Overend, Gurney, & Co., 7 L. R., Ch., 142, 150, 151; 41 L. J., Ch., 332; 23 L. T. 813; 20 W. R. 253.

16. Paterson v. Wallace (1 Macq. H. L. Ca.

748). Lord Cranworth, C., there says, "It is the master's duty to be careful that his servant is not induced to work under a notion that tackle or machinery is staunch and secure, when, in fact the master knows, or ought to know, that it is not so; and if from any negligence in this respect damage arises, the master is responsible." Upon which Pollock, C. B., said, "That is merely a declaration of the Lord Chancellor in a Scotch case, not a decision of the House of Lords." *Vose v. 1. Peek v. North Staffordshire Railway Co. (4 B. & S. 627) is a remarkable case, and I think it may practically be said to have been right, because the Exchequer Chamber ought, in the judgment of the Lords, to have affirmed the decision of the Queen's Bench, in which case it would have given costs, and so when by the effect of the judgment of the Lords the decision of the Court below was practically affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, the plaintiff was entitled to costs. I cannot help thinking, however, that the course adopted in Walsh v. Trimmer (1 L. R., H. L. Cas., 208) was the more regular one. I think that the application in Peek v. North Staffordshire Railway Co. should more properly have been made to the House of Lords, because the 42nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 gives a discretion to the Court of Appeal, so that it seems to me a question whether the Court of Queen's Bench did not in Peek's case assume a jurisdiction which more properly belonged to the Lords. At any rate, to make that case apply here would be straining the law; if I had thought it did apply, I should have been inclined to grant a rule that the question might be considered. Per Willes, J., in Gann v. Johnson, 21 L. T., N. S., 753, 754; 40 L. J., C. P., 227, 228; 6 L. R., C. P., 461.

As regards the case of Peek v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., I have some difficulty in seeing on what legal foundation the Court of Queen's Bench awarded costs. It is, however, sufficient to say that this case is distinguishable from it. Per Montague Smith, Jb.

I have more than once expressed a strong—I may say something more than a strong—inclination of my opinion, that Pell's case was originally rightly decided; but I am, of course, bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal, sitting here, as I do as Vice-Chancellor, and should follow it if it governed this case; but it appears to me that the ratio decidendi does not extend to this case, and therefore I must act upon what I conceive to be the law applicable to it, which I think is a very simple one. Per Lord Justice James, in Dent's case, Anglo-Moravian Hungarian Junction Railway Co., Re, 15 L. R., Eq., 407, 411; 42 L. J., Ch., 474; 28 L. T. 264; 22 W. R. 45. Affirmed 42 L. J., Ch., 857; 8 L. 22. Phillips v. Beal (32 Beav. 25). The question is, what is the effect of a legacy to a widow for life of perishable articles which cannot be used without being consumed. . . . Now, there are conflicting cases on the effect of such a gift, and I am disposed to think, after looking at all the cases and examining them all, and particularly the last case before the present Lord Chancellor (Hatherley), when Vice-Chancellor, i.e., Groves v. Wright (2 Kay & J. 347), that the rule cannot be considered as quite settled; but I think that the distinction which I took in Phillips v. Beal (32 Beav. 25) is the correct view of the case, which is to hold, that where the subject of the legacy is really farming stock, such as is necessary in order to keep up the business, the legatee only takes a life interest. If she takes the stock in specie, she is bound to keep up the amount of it, and if it is sold, the proceeds must be invested, and the income paid to the legatee. Per Lord Romilly, M. R., in Cockayne v. Harrison, 41 L. J., Ch., 509, 510; 13 L. R., Eq., 432; 26 L. T. 385; 20 W. R. 504.

3. Phillips v. Phillips (31 L. J., Ch., 321; 5 L. T. 655; 10 W. R. 236; 5 De F. & J. 208) observed upon in Cave v. Cave, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 639; 49 L. J., Ch., 505; 42 L. T. 730; 28 W. R. 798.

4. Phillips v. Phillips (1 Myl. & K. 649) overruled in Taylor v. Taylor, 3 De G. M. & G. 190; 17 Jur. 583; 22 L. J., Ch., 742.

5. Phillips v. Phillips (9 Hare 471; 22 L. J., Ch., 141) explained in Makepeace v. Rogers, 34 L. J., Ch., 396, 398; 11 Jur., N. S., 215; 13 W. R. 450, 566; 12 L. T., N. S., 12, 221; 4 De G. J. & S. 649; 5 N. R. 199.

Knight Bruce, L. J., did not think that Turner, L. J., when, as Vice-Chancellor, he had disposed of this case, had intended to say that a bill in equity for an account would not lie unless there had been receipts and payments on both sides (Makepeace v. Rogers, 4 De G. J. & S. 649, 652). Phillips v. Phillips went upon the footing of the account there in question being a current account between the parties, and the bill made no case of general agency, alleging only an isolated agency transaction connected with the sale by the defendant of some railway shares belonging to the plaintiff. That case had no reference to a case of general account between principal and agent; and if his language in giving judgment in that case had been in fact such as to give rise to misapprehension, such misapprehension ought to have been dispelled by what he had said in the subsequent case of Padwick v. Stanley, 9 Hare 628, when averting to the want of correlation between the rights of a principal and an agent to sue in chancery. Per Turner, L. J. Id.

6. Philpott v. St. George's Hospital (21 Beav. 134) observed upon in Warren v. Rudall, 4 Kay & J. 603.

7. Philpott v. St. George's Hospital (21 Beav. 134) founded on the decision of Att. Gen. v. Hodgson, 15 Sm. 146, and cannot be maintained consistently with the principles of former decisions. Hill v. Warren, 9 H. L. Ca. 420.

10. Phipson v. Turner (9 Sim. 227). I must follow this case, even if it were wrongly decided; I could not overrule it at this distance of time. Per Lord Romilly, M. R., in Stark v. Dakyns, 15 L. R., Eq., 307, 310; 42 L. J., Ch., 524.

11. Phipson v. Turner (9 Sim. 227). It would be a serious thing now to disturb the decision of Phipson v. Turner, which had been followed in more than one case, and had been acted upon by the long practice of conveyance, and also approved by Lord St. Leonards in his well-known treatise on Powers. Per Cairns, C., in Stark v. Dakyns, 44 L. J., Ch., 205; 10 L. R., Ch., 35; 31 L. T. 712; 23 W. R. 118.

17. Pigot's case (11 Rep. fol. 27, a). The statement in the second resolution of Pigot's case, "if the obligee himself alters the deed . . . although it is in words not material, yet the deed is void," dissented from. Aldous v. Cornwell, 3 L. R., Q. B., 573; 9 B. & S. 607.

18. Pigot's case (11 Rep. 27, a). The case of Aldous v. Cornwell (9 B. & S. 607; 3 L. R., Q. B., 573) has, I think, established that the proposition laid down in Pigot's case, that "if the obligee himself alters the deed . . . although it is in words not material, yet the deed is void," is no longer to be considered law. Per O'Sullivan, M. R., in Caldwell v. Parker, 3 Ir. L., Eq., 519, 526.

19. Pigott, Re (3 Macn. & G. 268) disapproved of. The order there was made per incuriam. Per Lord Justice James, in Wilkinson, Re, 23 W. R. 51; 44 L. J., Ch., 56; 10 L. R., Ch., 73.

20. Pike v. Fitzgibbon (14 L. R., Ch. D., 837; 49 L. J., Ch., 493; 42 L. T. 525; 28 W. R. 667) approved in Flower v. Buller, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 665; 49 L. J., Ch., 784; 43 L. T. 311; 28 W. R. 948.

21. Pile v. Salter (5 Sim. 411). Against these authorities, Eaton v. Hewitt (2 De G. F. & Sm. 184) and Browne v. Hammond (Johns. 210), there is the case of Pile v. Salter, which appears to me wrongly decided. It was cited in both the cases I have mentioned, and not followed. Per Jessel, M. R., in Underhill v. Roden, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 494, 497; 45 L. J., Ch., 266; 34 L. T. 227; 24 W. R. 574.

22. Pile v. Salter (5 Sim. 411) determined upon its own special circumstances. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Browne v. Hammond, 1 Johns. 210, 213.

1. Pile v. Salter (5 Sim. 411). I am bound to say, with regard to that case, that I doubt whether I should go so far as the Vice-Chancellor of England went under those circumstances; but that case strongly illustrates this principle, at all events, that if it does produce an absurdity, that then the doctrine, that the testator meant the gift over to take effect either on the marriage or the death of the tenant for life, is not to be held. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Eaton v. Hewitt, 8 Jur., N. S., 1120, 1121; 2 De G. & Sm. 184.

6. Pitt v. Jackson (2 Bro. C. C. 56) observed upon in Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 17 Jur., 457; 22 L. J., Ch., 313.
7. Pitt v. Jones (5 L. R., App. Cas., 651). Having regard to the decision of the House of Lords in this case, that the remedies granted by ss. 3 and 5 of the Partition Act 1868 are entirely distinct from each other, a plaintiff in a partition action, who desires a sale instead of a partition, must expressly state in his pleadings that a sale will be more beneficial, so as to give notice to the opposite party that this is the relief which he is claiming under s. 3. The mere statement of facts which tend prima facie to show that a sale will be more convenient, but which do not exclude the operation of s. 5, will not debar the defendant from insisting, under the latter section, on a partition, on his offer to buy up the plaintiff's interest. Evans v. Evans, or Evans v. Jones, 52 L. J., Ch., 304; 48 L. T. 567; 31 W. R. 495.
8. Pitt v. Pitt (4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 627). Quare, whether this case would govern cases like Niboyet v. Niboyet (4 L. R., P. D., 1) if they arose in Scotland. Harvey v. Farnie, 8 L. 11. Plowes v. Bossey (8 Jur., N. S., 352; 31 L. J., Ch., 681; 10 W. R. 332; 7 L. T., N. S., 306) is not an exception to the rule that a parent's evidence cannot be admitted on the question of the legitimacy of his child. Atchley v. Sprigg, 10 Jur., N. S., 144; 33 L. J., Ch., 345; 12 W. R. 364; 10 L. T., N. S., 16.
12. Plumbe v. Neild (29 L. J., Ch., 618; 8 W. R. 335). I am at a loss to understand the distinction of V.-Ch. Kindersley in Plumbe v. Neild, between bonuses derived from profits which accrued during the half-year immediately preceding the declaration of the bonus, and those derived from an accumulation of profits; for as long as they are derived from profits accruing during the lives of the tenants for life, in my opinion it is for the remaindermen to show that they do not belong to such persons. 16. Pocock v. Titmarsh (Bunb. 102). "It is difficult to determine on what principle that case was decided; and, at all events, it cannot be recognised as establishing a rule (contrary to all principle and authority) that a bill, simply asserting the plaintiff's right to receive certain annual payments from the defendants for the tithes of their houses, without alleging the foundation of the alleged right, can be maintained." 2. Potter, Exp. (34 L. J., Bky., 46; 3 De G. J. & S. 240; 13 W. R. 189; 11 L. T., N. S., 435) (inadmissibility of an unstamped deed of assignment to establish an act of bankruptcy), dissented from, and finally and effectually overruled in Ponsford v. Walton (3 L. R., C. P., 167; 37 L. J., C. P., 113; 16 W. R. 363; 17 L. T., N. S., 511), and in Squire, Exp. (19 L. T., N. S., 272; 4 L. R., Ch., 47; 17 W. R. 40), by the Lords Justices; and the ruling in Wensley, Exp. (1 De G. J. & S. 273; 23 L. J., Bky., 23), followed and approved of, notwithstanding the observation of Lord Chancellor Westbury, in Potter, Exp. (3 De G. J. & S. 246), that he "should require considerable argument before he should be prepared to support it." The decision having been inadvertently cited in argument, as a decision of Lord Chancellor Campbell, whereas it was the decision of the Lord Chancellor Westbury himself. Therefore, an unstamped and an unregistered deed of assignment of the whole of a debtor's property for the benefit of his creditors can be made use of against the debtor as establishing an act of bankruptcy, though not receivable in evidence for the purpose of being acted upon and enforced as an available deed in other respects.

3. Potter, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 52; 39 L. J., Ch., 402). I am sorry to find there is so much difference of opinion about this question. It is evident that in the case of Atkinson v. Atkinson (6 Ir. R., Eq., 184) the Master of the Rolls in Ireland expressed dissent from the principle I laid down, and so also did Lord Justice James, when Vice-Chancellor, in Hotchkiss, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 643), and they seemed to think that the case of Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Meriv. 320) had never before been questioned, notwithstanding that it had been treated as a case of no authority at the present day by V.-Ch. Stuart in Parsons v. Gulliford (10 Jur., N. S., 231), and by the present Lord Chancellor (Hatherley) when Vice-Chancellor, in the case of Gowling v. Thompson (11 L. R., Eq., 366. n.). I am satisfied that the rule laid down in Christopherson v. Naylor has worked great injustice in a number of cases. I have repeatedly had the question raised and argued before me since I decided Potter, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 52), but I have invariably adhered to the principle I there laid down. I decided that case after very much consideration, and being convinced that it is one which is calculated to give effect to the intention of testators, and to carry out substantial justice, I shall continue to act upon it until my decision is reversed by a higher tribunal. I should certainly be glad if the parties would take this case before the Court of Appeal, in order that the question may be set at rest one way or the other, and, considering the opinion entertained by Lord Justice James, it is not unlikely that my decision may be reversed, together with the decisions of the two Vice-Chancellors who preceded me in entertaining the same opinion; but as long as it stands unreversed I shall continue to act upon it. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Adams v. Adams, 14 L. R., Eq., 246, 249, 250; 27 L. T. 505; 20 W. R. 881.

4. Potter, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 52; 39 L. J., Ch., 102), doubted, but distinguished in Hotchkiss, Re, 38 L. J., Ch., 631; 8 L. R., Eq., 52, by James, V.-Ch. In this case, if the words of the will had been the same as the words in Potter, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 52), I should, without expressing any opinion of my own, simply have followed the decision of Malins, V.-Ch., in that case; because I do not think it seems that two branches of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction should be found coming to contrary decisions upon similar instruments, and encouraging, as it were, a race, by inducing persons who wish for one construction to go to one court, and those who wish for another construction to go to another. I should simply have affirmed the Vice-Chancellor's decision, with the intimation of my wish that the whole matter should be brought before a court of appeal. But it appears to me that there is a substantial, and not merely a verbal, distinction between the two cases. Per James, V.-Ch., in Hotchkiss, Re 8 L. R., Eq., 643, 647.

5. Potter v. Duffield (18 L. R., Eq., 4; 43 L. J., Ch., 472; 22 W. R. 585). Several cases have been decided on the point now raised, particularly two cases which came before the Master of the Rolls, Sale v. Lambert (18 L. R., Eq., 1) and Potter v. Duffield (supra). In the first of these cases a memorandum of agreement was held to be insufficient within the Statute of Frauds, though the vendor was not described otherwise than as "the proprietor" of the premises, the Master of the Rolls saying that the term "proprietor" was an excellent description, and apparently holding that this word, with nothing else in the document to enlarge it, was quite sufficient. Now, comparing this decision with the later one (Potter v. Duffield), where the same learned judge held that the description "vendor" was insufficient, I have some difficulty in assenting to it. I think, however, that we ought to hold ourselves bound by the last of these two cases, holding that the word "vendor" is insufficient; though, as far as my judgment goes, I can see no distinction between the nature of the memorandum in either case. I think that the description which should enable us to dispense with the actual names of the parties ought to be very precise and exact, and that in neither of the cases was this requirement complied with. To allow so general a description to satisfy the statute seems to me to lead to all the mischief which it was intended to prevent, and I think that no description ought to be held sufficient except where it identifies the party without the necessity of resorting to parol evidence. 10. Prettyman's case (2 Vern. 279, cited in Walton v. Stamford, 2 Vern. 279). As to this case, I need only remark that it does not appear what the circumstances of the case were, and it may well be that the intended grantee of the estate for life had an equity sufficient to entitle him to a decree that he should enjoy the land. Per Bramwell, L. J., in Smith v. Widdlake, 3 L. R., C. P. D., 10, 15, 16; 47 L. J., C. P., 282; 26 W. R. 52.

The facts of Prettyman's case are very shortly stated. It is not reported, but merely referred to in the case of Walton v. Stamford. Probably the decision was on the ground that the intended grantee for life had a claim against the vendor, and therefore against the purchaser as taking with notice. But whatever may be the true explanation of that case, I cannot recognise it as an authority in favour of the conveyance to the plaintiff. Per Cotton, L. J. Id. 17.

20. Upon motion for an injunction to restrain the issuing of an advertisement containing false representations calculated to injure the plaintiff's trade, the Court was of opinion that notwithstanding the decision in Prudential Assurance Co. v. Knott (10 L. R., Ch., 142; 44 L. J., Ch., 192), it now has power by the Judicature Act, s. 25, sub-s. 8, to restrain the publication of such an advertisement, but declined to do so upon an interlocutory application. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 582; 46 L. J., Ch., 713.

21. Purser v. Darby (4 Kay & J. 41). In that case, Wood, V.-Ch., lays down the rule without any qualification that where a person contracts to sell and then devises his property, so that upon his death it becomes vested in an infant, then the necessity of the suit cannot be said to have arisen from the mere act of God: the testator, by his own voluntary act, has made the suit necessary, and his estate should bear the costs. Williams v. Glenton (14 W. R. 294), before the Lords Justices, is to the same effect. Heard v. Cuthbert (1 Ir. Ch. R. 369), where Brady, C., decided that the costs of the suit ought to come out of the purchase money. On the contrary it was insisted that the rule was not as stated on the part of the plaintiff, but quite otherwise, and that it was now well settled that each party should abide his own costs: Hanson v. Lake (2 Y. & C. C. 328), decided by Knight Bruce, V.-Ch., in 1843; Hinder v. Stresten (10 Hare 18), by Sir George Turner, V.-Ch., in 1852; and Bannerman v. Clarke (5 W. R. 37; 3 Drew. 632), by Kindersley, V.-Ch., in 1856. This last case was the subject of great deliberation. It was not cited to Wood, V.-Ch., when he decided Purser v. Darby, which greatly detracts from the authority of that case. All these cases came under the notice of Lord Romilly in Hale v. Bushill (35 Beav. 343), who states his opinion to coincide with that of Kindersley, V.-Ch. The Lords Justices, in Williams v. Glenton, seem not altogether to have agreed as to the rule. The decision of Brady, C., in Heard v. Cuthbert, is clearly unsustainable. Sullivan, M. R., after reviewing the authorities, said that in his view of the case the proper rule, and that which he was prepared to adopt in all such cases, was that each party should abide his own costs. The suit had become necessary in consequence of the infancy of the parties who represented the testator, Archibald Beck, and was not occasioned by any embarrassment created by the testator's will. The difficulty was accidental. There was no neglect or default on either side. Where a party having contracted to sell an estate dies intestate and a suit becomes necessary, it is clear upon all the authorities that each party should pay his own costs, because, as it has been said, it is the act of God. But how can it be said to be less the act of God for a man to die testate? I shall follow the decisions in Bannerman v. Clarke and Hale v. Bushill in preference to Purser v. Darby, and not visit the estate with the costs of the suit. Each party must abide his own costs. White v. Beck, 20 W. R. 275, 276; 6 Ir. R., Eq., 63. See Longinotto v. Moss, 26 L. T., N. S., 828, where Bacon, V.-Ch., decided in a similar way.

2. Pyrke v. Waddingham (10 Hare 1). The principles laid down in this decision approved of, but the decision disapproved of and not followed, by Lord Romilly, under precisely similar circumstances in Mullings v. Trinder, 23 L. T., N. The doubts of Sir William Grant, expressed in this case, that a written memorandum, or note made after the marriage, of a parol agreement, would not be sufficient within the Statute of Frauds, are outweighed by the opinion of Lord Langdale, in De Biel v. Thomson, 3 Beav. 469, and of Lord Cottenham in Hammersley v. De Biel (Baron), 12 Cl. & F. 45, 61. n. See Barkworth v. Young, 26 L. J., Ch., 157.

15. Ranelagh (Lord) v. Hayes (1 Vern. 189). This case, I believe, has never been actually followed. It has been cited over and over again, but the industry and learning of the counsel for the plaintiff have not enabled them to produce a single case in which a decree has been made declaring the right to indemnity, and giving liberty to apply from time to time. Therefore, upon the ground of the great inconvenience of such a judgment, and looking at the fact that no decree can be produced from the time of Ranelagh v. Hayes down to the present time, and looking at the not very clear report of that case, and the difficulty of ascertaining the exact circumstances, and especially what was the duration of the liability in respect of which that indemnity was declared. I feel myself bound to say that I cannot make such a declaration or give such a liberty to apply. Per Fry, J., in Lloyd v. Dimmack, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 398, 401; 47 L. J., Ch., 398; 38 L. T. 173; 26 W. R. 458.

5. Rayner v. Koehler (14 L. R., Eq., 262; 41 L. J., Ch., 697; 27 L. T., N. S., 506; 20 W. R. 859). That was a case which very plainly brought out the point. It was argued by very able and experienced counsel, who appeared in support of a plea. My decision has not been appealed against, and my recollection of the case is, that, if the counsel who argued the case had entertained any reasonable hope of success, they would have appealed. . . . Now I read that as a recent decision, not because it was my own decision, but because it has not been followed, it is said, by a more recent decision of the Master of the Rolls. The Master of the Rolls having decided a case of Cary v. Hills (15 L. R., Eq., 79; 42 L. J., Ch., 100; 28 L. T., N. S., 6; 21 W. R. 166), that case having been cited to him, the reporters have inserted in head-note "Rayner v. Koehler, not followed." Finding that in a head-note I expected at least that the Master of the Rolls would have given some reason why he did not follow it. Possibly it escaped his notice altogether, and he did not even know of it, and from what I know of the Master of the Rolls, I think that if he had intended to dissent from me, he would at least have paid me the respect of stating the ground of his dissent when I had so explicitly decided this case in the month of July preceding. No notice appears to have been taken of it, however. Therefore I cannot regard the Master of the Rolls as deciding contrary to me, and even if he had, I am sure I should feel constrained, with the most perfect respect, to decide in accordance with my own decision in Rayner v. Koehler. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Cooté v. Whittington, 16 L. R., Eq., 534, 543, 544; 21 W. R. 839; 29 L. T., N. S., 206; 42 L. J., Ch., 846.

6. Whether the Court can administer an estate without having before it the legal personal representative of the testator or intestate, where an executor de son tort or the legal personal representative of such an executor is before the Court. But for two recent decisions of the V.-Ch. Malins, I should have thought that the question was unambiguous. I have always supposed that this Court could not make a decree for general administration in the absence of the legal personal representative. In Rayner v. Koehler (supra), the first of his two decisions, the V.-Ch. Malins decided the contrary, but he did not go into the subject very fully, nor perhaps very carefully. Then followed a case of Cary v. Hills (supra), in which my predecessor, Lord Romilly, declined to follow Rayner v. Koehler. Then came Cooté v. Whittington (supra), the second of the two cases, and in it unquestionably the Vice-Chancellor did examine the subject with the greatest minuteness and care. I have read his judgment most carefully, but am unable to follow his reasoning or to agree with his conclusion. I should not, however, have ventured to express so strongly my dissent from the Vice-Chancellor, had not my attention been called to two decisions which are in opposition to his, one by Lord Cottenham, Penny v. Watts (2 Ph. 149), which is binding on me, and the other by Lord Hatherley, Beardmore v. Gregory (2 Hem. & M. 491), which is not absolutely binding, but is of equal authority with the decisions of V.-Ch. Malins, and I should prefer to follow it in a case where difference of opinion exists. Per Jessel, M. R., in Rossell v. Morris, 17 L. R., Eq., 20, 22, 23; 22 W. R. 67; 43 L. J., Ch., 79; 29 L. An appeal in bankruptcy, though by way of motion, must be entered within twenty-one days from the date of the pronouncing of the order appealed from, and the above case to the contrary is not law or correctly reported, or the order therein was made by consent. 13. Rees v. Berrington (2 Ves. J. 540; 2 White & Tudor's Leading Cases, 887). As early as Rees v. Berrington, a case decided in 1795 by Lord Loughborough, it was held, on what certainly seems somewhat artificial reasoning, that where any time is given by a creditor to a principal debtor without the consent of the surety, the surety is in equity discharged, however short the time may be, on the ground that the giving of time interferes with the right which the surety has to come to the principal debtor to say, "I pay you the money and require you, on my giving you a proper indemnity, to hand over all your right to me." If he did that, and it turns out that the creditor has, by giving time to the debtor, precluded himself from suing, and so deprived the surety of the right of suing in his (the creditor's) name, though for ever so short a time, it has been held to discharge the surety from his obligation. Lord Eldon, in Samuel v. Howarth (3 Mer. 272), cited in the notes to Rees v. Berrington, says:—"The rule is that if a creditor, without the consent of the surety, gives time to the principal debtor, by so doing he discharges the surety—that is, time is given by virtue of positive contract, between the creditor and principal, not where the creditor is merely inactive. And in the case put, the surety is held to be discharged, for this reason, because the creditor, by so giving time to the principal, has put it out of the power of the surety to consider whether he will have recourse to his remedy against the principal or not, and because he, in fact, cannot have the same remedy against the principal as he would have had under the original contract. . . . It has been truly stated that the renewal of these bills might have been for the benefit of the surety; but the law has said that the surety shall be the judge of that, and that he alone has the right to determine whether it is or is not for his benefit. The creditor has no right—it is against the faith of his contract—to give time to the principal, even though manifestly for the benefit of the surety, without the consent of the surety." Such is the principle which Lord Eldon lays down; I think it is impossible to read it without saying, with due respect for so great a judge, that it is based on highly technical reasoning, however accurately and strictly logical the reasoning may be. That the creditor who gives time to the principal without expressly reserving his right against the surety does alter the rights of the surety, and so discharge him, is clear. But that time given by a lenient creditor which, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, does not injure the surety should yet discharge him, is to my mind not justice, although established by courts of equity; and if in the course of legislation which is contemplated it should be enacted, as is proposed, that where law and equity conflict, the rule of equity shall prevail, I, for one, shall be very reluctant to administer such a doctrine of equity as that I have mentioned. The law would have to adopt the doctrine, that giving of time discharges the surety unless the rights are saved. Now the whole ground of the doctrine there is that it is against good faith, that is, against the duty of the creditor, that he injured the surety with his eyes open, that he did it in such a way that it was a breach of duty and good faith. Per Blackburn, J., in Petty v. Cooke, 25 L. T., N. S., 90, 92, 93; 6 L. R., Q. B., 790, 794; 40 L. J., Q. B., 281; 19 W. R. 1112.

3. Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534). Since this case it must be taken that there never could have been a valid marriage in England before the Reformation without the presence of a priest episcopally ordained, or afterwards without the presence of a priest or of a deacon. When a bridegroom was himself a priest, there being no other priest present, a valid marriage was not contracted by him. The law requires that equally in the case of the clergy, as of the laity, marriage in this country must, in the absence of express statute, take place in the presence and with the assent of a clerk in holy orders, who must be a third person, and whose duty it is to prevent or put off the marriage if there is opposed a just impediment, and who, in case he allows of its proceeding, is then, in the primary sense of the word, to marry the parties by receiving their mutual consent to become man and wife. The ceremonies enjoined by the rubric, such as addressing the congregation, putting the ring on the finger, pronouncing the benediction, etc., are not absolutely essential to the validity of a marriage in facie ecclesie, the essential part being the reciprocal taking of each other for wedded wife and wedded husband, and being declared married persons. Quere, whether the decision in Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534) would apply to a marriage bonâ fide contracted in the colonies, or on board a ship, where it was impossible to procure the attendance of a minister of religion. Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. Ca. 274; 8 Jur., N. S., 770; 11 Ir. Com. Law Rep. 511; 5 L. T., N. S., 97.

4. Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534; 8 Jur. 717), which was an appeal from a judgment holding that by the common law of England a valid marriage could not be contracted without the presence of a priest canonically ordained; the question having been put that the judgment be reversed, there was an equality of the votes of the peers who were present and took part in the decision. Thereupon the House affirmed the judgment, deciding that by the common law of England a valid marriage could not be contracted without the presence of a priest canonically ordained. I by no means concurred in that decision, thinking that the common law of England accorded with the canon law upon this subject which prevailed over the whole of the Western Church till the Council of Trent, and that a valid marriage might be contracted by the solemn assent of the contracting parties, as Lord Stowell had often laid down, and for fifty years had been considered clear law in Westminster Hall. But subsequently, when presiding as Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, I several times, with the approbation of my brother judges, ruled that the question as to the validity of such marriages was settled by the decision of the House of Lords in Reg. v. Millis. And if this question were again to be mooted in this House upon an appeal, I conceive that this House would be bound to decide that such a marriage was always null and void, although every peer present should be of opinion that Reg. v. Millis was improperly decided, and that in England, till Lord Hardwicke's Act, the presence of a priest was as little necessary for making a binding marriage contract, as a binding contract of hiring and service. Per Campbell, C., in Att.-Gen. v. Windsor (Dean and Canons), 6 Jur., N. S., 834, 835.

5. Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534; 8 Jur. 717). I shall never believe to be a binding authority. In the House of Lords there were three law peers against three. Per Willes, J., in Reg. v. Mainwaring, 26 L. J., M. C., 10-13.

21. Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (2 L.R., H.L., 175). Lord Westbury's opinion on the uncertainty and complexity of the judicial decisions of modern days.—This case was heard by six judges in the Court of Exchequer Chamber on a writ of error from the Court of Queen's Bench. The six judges differed in opinion, four being for reversing, and two for affirming the judgment of the Court below. The four judges in the Queen's Bench were unanimous. Deducting, therefore, the two from the four judges in the Exchequer Chamber, the unanimous judgment of the four judges in the Queen's Bench has been annulled by two judges in the Exchequer Chamber. By the same majority the case of Senior v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 2 H. & C. 258, decided by the Court of Exchequer in 1863, and the case of Cameron v. Charing Cross Railway Co., 16 C.B., N.S., 430, decided by the Court of Common Pleas in 1864 (which are the authorities for the judgment in the Court of Exchequer Chamber in the present case), have also been overruled. They are, therefore, the judicial opinions of ten or twelve judges opposed to the present judgment, which is the judicial opinion of four. It is a matter of regret that our judicial institutions should admit of these anomalies. It is also painful to observe the number of conflicting decisions on the law of compensation by railway companies, which is the subject of the present appeal. It is impossible to reconcile these decisions by any sound distinctions, and the result is, that to a great extent they neutralize each other. Moreover, it is distressing to be told (as we are in the judgment before us) that the Court of Exchequer in Senior v. Metropolitan Railway Co., and the Court of Common Pleas in Cameron v. Charing Cross Railway Co., founded their judgments on the supposed effect of the judgment given by the Court of Exchequer Chamber so recently as in the year 1863 in the case of Chamberlain v. London & Crystal Palace Railway Co., 2 B.

& S. 605, 617, but that both the Common Pleas and the Court of Exchequer did not understand the judgment on which they so relied. It is a striking example of the uncertainty of all law which rests on judicial decisions. Per Lord Westbury in Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 16 L. T., N. S., 547; 2 L. R., H. L. 175, 201; 15 W. R. 937, 942.

1. Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (36 L. J., Q. B., 205; 2 L. R., H. L., 175), 16 L. T., N. S., 542; 15 W. R. 937. Affirming 5 B. & S. 156, which reversed 5 B. & S. 149). It is our duty to endeavour to extract from the case of Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway Co. in the House of Lords, the principle upon which the decision is based. That principle is, that no case comes within the purview of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 68, or the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 6, unless there has been damage to the land itself or to some interest therein, and unless that damage would have been the subject of an action at law before those statutes. The two things must concur, mere personal interest or injury, though connected with the enjoyment of particular land, is not ground for compensation. In the present case it is plain that there is no injury to the land or to any interest therein, and therefore we must give judgment for the defendants, unless we adopt the very powerful reasoning of Lord Westbury. But the other noble and learned lords, whose judgment has now become the law of the land, were opposed to it. They have laid down a principle which disposes of the present case, and it would be unbecoming in us to express any disapprobation of it. Per Hannen, J., in Reg. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 10 B. & S. 391, 398; 4 L. R., Q. B., 358; 38 L. J., Q. B., 201; 17 W. R. 1094.

3. Ridgway v. Wharton (6 H. L. Ca. 238). In this case it was held that the act of sending a paper containing the terms of an agreement to a solicitor, to have the matter reduced into form, affords generally cogent evidence that the parties do not intend to bind themselves till the matter is reduced into form. I was counsel in that case from the commencement, and I doubt if it can properly be cited as an authority for that position. It shows merely that all the circumstances must be considered in order to determine whether what has taken place is an agreement or a mere proposal for an agreement. Per Bramwell, B., in Barker v. Allan, 5 H. & N. 61, 68.

The case of Ridgway v. Wharton only proves that parties may come to an incomplete agreement, which is to be worked out by a written agreement, and that in that particular case the intention of the parties was, that there should be no agreement until the written document was complete. Per Watson, B., delivering the considered judgment of the Court, in Barker v. Allan. Id.

4. Ridgway v. Wharton (3 De G. M. & G. 677). Is there not a later case, in which we declined to follow that case? Per Turner, L. J., in Heys v. Astley, 4 De G. J. & S. 34, 37. I do not think it necessary, in the view which I take of this case, to say anything with respect to Ridgway v. Wharton before the Lord Chancellor. Per Turner, L. J., in Heys v. Astley, 4 De G. J. & S. 34, 37, 39. The case of Ridgway v. Wharton is referred to by Lord St. Leonards without remark. See Sugden, V. & P., 13th edit., p. 122, and 14th edit., p. 149, and see Wood v. Midgley, 5 De G. M. & G. 41.

5. Ridley v. Plymouth Grinding Co. (2 Exch. 711) observed upon in Greenwood's case, 3 De G. M. & G. 459; 18 Jur. 387; 23 L. J., Ch., 966.

7. Riley v. Garnett (3 De G. & Sm. 629) distinguished in Abbiss v. Burney, Finch, Re, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 211; 50 L. J., Ch., 348; 44 L. T. 267; 29 W. R. 449. Reversing 49 L. J., Ch., 710; 43 L. T. 20; 28 W. R. 903.

8. Riley v. Garnett (3 De G. & Sm. 629). If I were at liberty to follow the case of Riley v. Garnett, before Knight Bruce, V.-Ch., which was cited by Mr. Kay, the law would seem to be clearly in her favour. There are, however, those other cases which were mentioned. Hodgson v. Bective (Earl) (9 L. T., N. S., 18; 10 H. L. Ca. 656) and Holmes v. Prescott (11 L. T., N. S., 38), in which the very point was clearly decided, and decided then after deliberate consideration and examination of all the cases, which were numerous, which had preceded the decision in Holmes v. Prescott; and I do not feel myself at liberty to dissent from the rule which I find there established, that there being no gift of the intermediate rents, they must of necessity fall into the residue. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Eddels, Re, 24 L. T., N. S., 223, 224; 11 L. R., Eq., 559; 40 L. J., Ch., 316; 19 W. R. 815.

9. Ring v. Jarman (20 W. R. 744; 14 L. R., Eq., 357; 41 L. J., Ch., 535; 26 L. T. 690). (Succession duty.) An appeal was presented from the decision of Wickens, V.-Ch., in this case, and came on to be argued in July 1872, and soon after the opening of the case their lordships said that whatever view they might take of the Act they should feel a difficulty in differing from the decision of the Court of Exchequer in Att.-Gen. v. Gell (13 W. R. 900; 3 H. & C. 615, 630), upon the authority of which Wickens, V.-Ch., made the order appealed from. Their lordships therefore suggested that the best course would be to carry the appeal at once to the House of Lords. The matter stood over that the parties might consider what they should do. Ultimately they determined not to prosecute the appeal, and it was arranged between them and the Crown that an agreed sum should be paid for succession duty. Ring v. Jarman, 21 W. R. 213.

11. Rishton v. Cobb (5 Myl. & Cr. 145) doubted in Boddington, Re, Boddington v. Clariat, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 685; 53 L. J., Ch., 475; 50 L. T. 761; 32 W. R. 448.

12. Rittson v. Sturdy (3 Sm. & G. 230; 1 Jur., N. S., 771) dissented from in Barrow v. Wadkin, 24 Beav. 1; 3 Jur., N. S., 679; 27 L. J., Ch., 129.

1. Roberts v. Walker (1 Russ. & M. 752) approved of in Simmons v. Rose, 6 De G. M. & G. 411; 2 Jur., N. S., 70; 25 L. J., Ch., 615.

2. Roberts v. Walker (1 Russ. & M. 752) observed upon and distinguished in Bentley v. Oldfield, 18 Beav. 225.

5. Robertson v. Norris (1 Giff. 421) not followed in Martinson v. Clones, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 857; 51 L. J., Ch., 594; 46 L. T. 882; 30 W. R. 795.

6. Robins v. Mills (1 Beav. 227). The decision in this is inapplicable where the merits of the cause must enter into the discussion. Webb v. Grace, Vines & Hobbs, Re, 12 Beav. 489.

7. Robinson, Exp. (Buck. 113). So an agent, employed to procure a bill or note to be discounted for his principal, may, if it be necessary or proper to accomplish the end, indorse the same in his own name, although not indorsed by his principal, and in such case he will be entitled to be indemnified by his employer. Story on Agency, s. 57, citing Robinson, Exp., Buck. 113; Bayley on Bills, c. 2, s. 7, 5th edit. Robinson, Exp., is no authority at all for the proposition it is cited for in Story's book. Per Willes, J., Fitzgerald v. Dressler, 5 Jur., N. S., 598, 600.

8. Robinson, Re (Fonb. Rep. 205), overruled by Bacon, Com., in Chichester, Re, 19 L. T., N. S., 188.

9. Robinson v. Geldard (3 Macn. & G. 735; 16 Jur. 955) adopted and approved of in Tempest v. Tempest, 2 Kay & J. 635; and on appeal, S. C. 3 Jur., N. S., 251; 26 L. J., Ch., 501.

10. Robinson v. London Hospital (Governors) (10 Hare 29) overruled in Calvert v. Armitage, 8 L. T., N. S., 269.

11. Robinson v. Lowater (5 De G. M. & G. 272; 18 Jur. 363; 23 L. J., Ch., 641). I cannot say on looking into the authorities on this subject, which I have taken the opportunity of doing, that the title can be held to be good. It may be so if the case of Robinson v. Lowater is to be followed to its full extent; but I observe that doubts have been expressed in the profession, whether that case should or should not be followed to its full extent, and I must respectfully say that I think the purchaser has done very wisely in escaping from his purchase. Per Turner, L. J., in Cook v. Dawson, 30 L. J., Ch., 359, 360; 3 De G. F. & J. 128.

Robinson v. Lowater shows that a charge of debts enables the executor to sell. Lord St. Leonards has expressed a doubt as to the correctness of that decision; and a doubt from such a quarter deserves attention. Per Knight Bruce, L. J. Id. See Hays' and Jarman's Concise Forms of Wills, by Badger, p. 429.

17. Rochdale Canal Co. v. King (2 Sim., N. S., 78) distinguished in Cooper v. Crabtree, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 589; 51 L. J., Ch., 544; 47 L. T. 5; 30 W. R. 649. Affirming 19 L. R., Ch. D., 193; 51 L. J., Ch., 189; 45 L. T. 587; 30 W. R. 285.

18. Rochfort v. Battersby (2 H. L. Ca. 388; 14 Jur. 229). I may observe, however, with reference to that case, that though I should be very unwilling to express a doubt about any decision of the House of Lords, especially in a case which has been so much considered, yet that it seems a startling proposition, as stated in the marginal note, that a person being improperly made a defendant, and against whom a decree has been pronounced (other than that of dismissal of the bill with costs), could not be heard to appeal. That is a proposition which, I think, is too broadly stated. I have no doubt but that the object of that appeal was, that the bankrupt might get relief, as it were, in bankruptcy or insolvency, and not on the ground that he was improperly made a party. Per Cranworth, C. Wearing v. Ellis, 6 De G. M. & G. 596, 608; 2 Jur., N. S., 1147; 26 L. J., Ch., 15. Affirming 2 Jur., N. S., 204; 25 L. J., Ch., 248.

19. Rochfort v. Battersby (2 H. L. Ca. 338; 14 Jur. 229) recognised in Dyson v. Hornby, 7 De G. M. & G. 1.

20. Roddam v. Morley (1 De G. & J. 1; 3 Jur., N. S., 449; 26 L. J., Ch., 438. Reversing 2 Kay & J. 336; 2 Jur., N. S., 805; 25 L. J., Ch., 329). The case of Roddam v. Morley, which, notwithstanding all that has been said of it in Coope v. Creswell (2 L. R., Ch., 112; 36 L. J., Ch., 114), or elsewhere, I conceive to be of unquestionable authority, has decided that payment of interest by the tenant for life of a devised estate keeps a specialty alive against the persons entitled in remainder. But the case is also of great value by reason of the close and careful examination into the Statutes of Limitation, as well by the common law judges, whose assistance was procured by the Lord Chancellor, as by Lord Cranworth himself. The judges pointed out that the action to be brought could only be one and the same action on the specialty, and not on any new promise, express or implied, from the terms of the acknowledgment, whatever it might have been. They held that a devisee who might plead the bar, if it existed, could only plead it on such single action; and, observing that he was capable of making the acknowledgment—and the Statute of Fraudulent Devises having declared that the devisee should be liable and chargeable in the same manner as the heir—they concluded, without hesitation, that the devisee might as properly be said to be "liable by virtue of the indenture," as either the real or personal representative, and, therefore, that by the acknowledgment the action—the only action that could be brought—was set free generally, the statutes having nowhere said that it could be brought only against the party making the acknowledgment. Lord Cranworth, who concurred with the judges "not only in the result at which they had arrived, but in the reasoning which led them to their conclusion." Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Pears v. Laing, 24 L. T., N. S., 19, 21, 22; 40 L. J., Ch., 225, 229; 12 L. R., Eq., 42, 55, 56; 19 W. R. 658.

1. Roddy v. Fitzgerald (6 H. L. Ca. 823). The decision in that case proceeded upon the expressed purpose of re-settling the law upon the basis on which, thirty-eight years earlier, Jesson v. Wright (2 Bligh 1) had been supposed to have placed it. A tendency had arisen, after Jesson v. Wright, to draw a distinction between "heirs of the body," which are the words in the will in that case, and "issue," and to lay hold of smaller circumstances to warrant the Court in giving to the issue estates in fee; in which case it was considered, with some lingering regard for the intentions of testators, that it ought to be held that issue did take as purchasers in fee, and not as inheritors per formam doni. That is the rule sanctioned, though not applied, by V.-Ch. Wood, in Kavanagh v. Morland (Kay 16), and adopted with some amplification by Mr. Jarman. But Roddy v. Fitzgerald disaffirmed the attempted distinction between "heirs of the body" and "issue" (so far at least as the Jesson v. Wright doctrine is concerned), and determined that the circumstance there relied on for giving a fee to the issue, namely, the power of appointment amongst them in such manner, etc., was as ineffectual for that purpose as had been, in Jesson v. Wright, a nearly similar power for so dealing with "heirs of the body." The principle, or rather the motive, for this decision is stated in the last paragraph of Lord Cranworth's judgment. "It is," he says, "in these cases, to the last degree important to have a settled rule of construction, which may make it possible to advise confidently on titles; and this object cannot be attained if, from any speculation as to what the testator had on his mind, we endeavour to raise distinctions between decided cases and those under consideration where no real distinction exists." Per O'Hagan, C., in Colclough v. Colclough, 4 Ir. R., Eq., 263, 290.

The decision in Roddy v. Fitzgerald is one to which, I must confess, my submission is not a willing one. I have always thought that, when Lord Cranworth rose to move the judgment of the House of Lords in that case, the weight of reasoning, as well as of individual authority amongst the judges of both countries, preponderated strongly against the conclusion which he recommended to the house. All, however, gave way to the policy of having a settled rule of construction, which might make it possible, as Lord Cranworth said, to advise confidently on titles. Per Christian, L. J., 4 Ir. R., Eq., 294.

3. Rodgers, Exp. (2 Madd. 449). The only case supporting the argument in favour of an implied gift, but I am satisfied that that case cannot in its integrity be now treated as an authority. It has been doubted by Lord Cranworth and, as I stated on a former occasion (see Webster v. Parr, 26 Beav. 236), Lord Cottenham declined to follow it in a case in which I was counsel. Per Romilly, M. R., in Neighbour v. Thurlow, 28 Beav. 33, 37.

The practice laid down in Rosenthal, Exp., supra, that before entering an appeal in bankruptcy the registrar ought now to give a direction to the Bank of England to receive the deposit payable on the entry, and not to enter the appeal until he receives from the bank a certificate that the money has been paid, applies to appeals from the Chief Judge to the Court of Appeal, as well as to appeals from a county court to the Chief Judge. Lawson, Exp., Pidsley, Re, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 701; 51 L. J., Ch., 928; 47 L. T. 211; 31 W. R. 71.

13. Ross v. Laughton (1 Ves. & B. 349). In order to dispose of the case satisfactorily, therefore, we must consider whether Ross v. Laughton was overruled by Lord v. Wormleighton (Jacob 580). I am of opinion that it was not. Lord Eldon certainly did not say that he was overruling the former case, which he probably would have said if he thought he was doing so; and, in fact, the cases were distinct, for an executor strictly represents and continues his testator's interest in every respect, whereas an assignee in bankruptcy comes in by a title adverse to the bankrupt; an assignee may elect whether or not he will carry on the suit; if he does so, he is not obliged to employ the same solicitor. Per Wood, L. J., in Simmonds v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 38 L. J., Ch., 87, 88.

If Ross v. Laughton had not been cited in the argument of Lord v. Wormleighton, there might have been more strength before us that the former case was overruled by the latter. I cannot but think, considering the great care and accuracy of Lord Eldon that if he thought he was overruling the earlier case he would have said so expressly. Per Selwyn, L. J. 1b.

8. Romley v. Adams (4 Myl. & C. 534; 8 Sim. 205; 6 L. J., Ch., 24), which decides that executors are liable as for a breach of trust in not assigning leaseholds to an insolvent person, in order to get rid of their liability to the covenants. I entertain doubts whether, in such circumstances, the Court could make executors liable for a breach of trust. The case seems to me at variance with the fundamental principles of equity. It is a startling proposition. The law has always held that an assignee may get rid of a lease by assignment, but the lessee cannot get rid of his covenants; though an assignee can get rid of the consequential liability for the future, because he is liable only during the time he holds the lease. Per Romilly, M. R., Mexican & South American Co. Re, Lund, Exp., 5 Jur., N. S., 400, 401; 28 L. J., Ch., 628, 629; 27 Beav. 465.

9. Romsell v. Morris (17 L. R., Eq., 20; 43 L. J., Ch., 97; 29 L. T. 446; 22 W. R. 67). I am aware that the case of Coot v. Whittington (16 L. R., Eq., 534; 42 L. J., Ch., 846; 29 L. T. 206) was subjected to criticism by Sir George Jessel in Romsell v. Morris, and I think, in answer to the observations made by him, I may say that he expressed himself somewhat incautiously, for he decides that you cannot administer an estate in this court without having before it the legal personal representative of the testator or intestate, although an executor de son tort or the legal personal representative of such an executor is before the Court. If, as he says, you cannot sue a person as executor de son tort, then any person may enter upon and take possession of the property of a deceased, and he cannot be sued for doing so. I know of no character in which such a man can be sued except it is that of an executor de son tort, as I pointed out in the case of Coot v. Whittington. It would be the height of injustice if a man could possess himself of the assets of a testator, and because he did not choose to clothe himself with the character of administrator, could not therefore be sued in respect of such assets. I have already decided the contrary, first in Rayner v. Koehler (14 L. R., Eq., 262; 41 L. J., Ch., 697; 27 L. T. 506; 20 W. R. 859), and then in Coot v. Whittington; and I believe that what I decided in those cases has been the rule ever since the statute of Elizabeth. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Ambler v. Lindsay, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 198, 205; 45 L. 22. Ryall v. Rowles (1 Ves. sen. 375). This case has been referred to at very great length, and it has been said that that case has never been disputed; and no doubt there is a great deal to be found in that case that never was disputed when that case was decided. There the Court ultimately decided that the interests were choses in action, except all the fixtures, and that they passed under the order and disposition clause. But the law has been wholly altered since then. No choses in action now pass under the order and disposition clause except debts due in the course of trade or business. The alteration of the law was made not unadvisedly, because very hard cases had occurred. However, I need not more particularly refer to that. . . . With the greatest respect and veneration for the case of Ryall v. Rowles, I do not think that that case has the remotest application to this question before me, now that the law is altered respecting choses in action. Per Bacon, C. J. 11. Sanders v. Franks (2 Madd. 147). I think I have heard this case unfavourably commented upon from the bench. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Johnson v. Routh, 3 Jur., N. S., 1048, 1049.

12. Sanders v. Miller (25 Beav. 154) inconsistent with Pickford v. Brown, 2 Kay & J. 426, and not followed in Stringer v. Harper, 5 Jur., N. S., 401.

followed in Middleton, Re, Thompson v. Harris, 50 L. J., Ch., 525; 45 L. T. 40; 29 W. R. 731.

14. Sanders v. Richards (2 Coll. C. C. 568). It is very true that it was formerly held in this case, that where a power of sale was given by an executor upon a mortgage, the title under that power of sale could not be forced upon a purchaser. That case, I find, is cited by Lord St. Leonards (Sugden, V. & P., p. 390, n., ed. 14) as an authority. But I think (and indeed the learned counsel for the defendant has not disputed it) that the doctrine laid down in that case can be no longer maintained as the rule of the court, for in the case of Russell v. Plaice (18 Beav. 21; 23 L. J., Ch., 441), the Master of the Rolls decided directly the contrary, namely, that a good title could be made under a power of sale created by an executor. That case of Russell v. Plaice having been cited before the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices in the case of Vane v. Rigden (39 L. J., Ch., 143, 797; 5 L. R., Ch., 663; 18 W. R. 1092), was commented upon by the Lord Chancellor, who expressed his approbation of it, and I therefore think it may be considered as an authority upon the point. There is another case before myself of Chawner, Re (38 L. J., Ch., 726; 8 L. R., Eq., 569), which is to the same effect. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Cruickshank v. Duffin, 41 L. 17. Sandford v. Vaughan (1 Phill. 39). It was further contended, that the repetition, in the same words, in the second will, of legacies given by the first will, which, it is probable, were not intended to be cumulative gifts, proves an intention to revoke; and Sandford v. Vaughan was cited. In that case, Sir John Nicholl does say, that the repetition of a specific legacy proved that both papers were not intended to operate, and he applies the circumstance to the principle which he had previously laid down, viz., that in order to establish all the papers, the Court should be satisfied that it was the intention of the testator that all of them should compose his will. But this principle is inconsistent with Lemage v. Goodban (1 L. R., Prob., 57) and Birks v. Birks (34 L. J., Prob., 90), where it could not have been affirmatively the intention of the testator that the two papers should be admitted to probate, but there was nothing to show an intention to revoke certain dispositions of the earlier will. Within this principle, the value of Sandford v. Vaughan as an authority seems to fall, and it appears to me that it would be dangerous for the Court to conclude, first, that certain repeated gifts would, according to the doctrines of a court of construction, be cumulative; second, that the testator could not have intended cumulative gifts; and third, that, therefore, it was the intention of the testator to revoke other gifts wholly unconnected with the repeated bequests. Per Warren, J., in Leslie v. Leslie, 6 L. R., Eq., 332, 336.

10. Scales v. Maude (6 De G. M. & G. 51; 1 Jur., N. S., 1147; 25 L. J., Ch., 433). The dictum attributed to Lord Cranworth in this case, that a mere declaration of trust in favour of a volunteer is invalid, corrected. The dictum, said his Lordship, attributed to me in Scales v. Maude, probably had reference to the special circumstances of that case, and is clearly wrong as a general statement of the law. I have no reason to doubt that the case is correctly reported, and I think the decision itself is perfectly right; but I am glad to have this opportunity of repudiating the dictum in question, for there is no doubt that there may be a valid declaration of trust in favour of a volunteer. 13. Scott v. Avery (5 H. L. Ca. 811; 2 Jur., N. S., 815). There were dicta in this case, no doubt, which it was not possible to reconcile with each other; but the general principle laid down was, that it was illegal, by any agreement between the parties, to withdraw the decision of the question at issue from the determination of the ordinary tribunals of the country; but if A. agreed with B. that, in the event of his doing or omitting to do a particular act, A. would pay, not a particular sum of money for damage, but such an amount as an arbitrator to be appointed should agree upon, that was lawful, and was not a withdrawing; and he, the Vice-Chancellor, did not find that either Lord Cranworth or Lord Campbell, who agreed with him, or the common-law judges who assisted the House of Lords, put it on the footing of a negative clause; and it was therefore not necessary to consider whether a negative clause was on the same footing as an agreement for arbitration, or an agreement between the parties. Horton v. Sayer (4 H. & N. 643; 5 Jur., N. S., 989) was not inconsistent with Scott v. Avery; and the Court of Exchequer was of opinion that if there was an arbitration clause, and, superadded upon that, a negative clause that neither party should bring an action before the arbitrator had made his award, that was an illegal withdrawing of the decision of this question. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Lee v. Page, 7 Jur., N. S., 768, 769.

15. Scott v. Nesbitt (14 Ves. 438) as to the right of heir of a consignee of a West Indian estate on the corpus of the estate. The report of this case seems to be very imperfect, and it is not easy to collect from it with accuracy the principles which were laid down by the great judge (Eldon) who decided it. Per Lord King-down, P. C., in Fraser v. Burgess, 13 Moo. P. C. 314, 347; 6 Jur., N. S., 327, 328.

16. Scott v. Scholey (8 East 467) observed upon in Gore v. Bowser, 1 Jur., N. S., 392; 24 L. J., Ch., 316; 3 Sm. & G. 1. Affirmed 24 L. J., Ch., 440.

17. Scurfield v. Homes (3 Bro. C. C. 90), an authority entitled to great respect, is decidedly in his (the appellant's) favour. There the testator bequeathed 500*l.* to A. for life, and after her decease to her two children, share and share alike; but if either of them should die before the decease of their mother, the whole to the survivor. Both died in the mother's lifetime, and it was held that the whole sum of 500*l.* belonged to the representatives of the survivor. This was the solemn decision of a very able judge, Lord Alvanley, when Master of the Rolls. For the assertion that this case has been overruled there seems to me to be no foundation; on the contrary, it appears to have been followed in several subsequent cases, cited by the appellant's counsel. Per Campbell, C., in White v. Baker, 6 Jur., N. S., 591, 592; 29 L. J., Ch., 577, 579; 2 De G. F. & J. 55.

For the reasons which I have given, I do not think the case of Scurfield v. Homes, as suggested by the late Mr. Jarman (see 1 Jarman, Wills, 705, 2nd edit.), at variance with the other authorities to which he has referred. Per Turner, L. J. Id.

18. Sea and River Marine Insurance Co., Re (2 L. R., Eq., 545; 12 Jur., N. S., 779; 35 L. J., Ch., 820), not followed by Malins, V.-Ch.

3. Seaman v. Wood (22 Beav. 591), There the testator gave the property "unto, between, and among such child or children of my said son as being a son or sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters, shall attain that age or be married, whichever shall first happen." I may say that this case is identical with the present case. I do not think it is possible to distinguish the two cases, and therefore, if I am bound by this case, I must hold this limitation to be void. In Seaman v. Wood, the words are also, "But so that the child or children collectively of any deceased son of my said son shall take only the share which such son would have taken if living." Now, the judgment of the Master of the Rolls is very short, and appears to have been given at the end of the argument. It is in these few words: "My opinion is that this gift is void for remoteness. I concur in the argument that this is a question of construction upon the meaning of the words of the gift. But the way I look at it is this: If a man gives an estate or a sum of money to all the children of A. and all the grandchildren of B., to be divided among them in equal shares and proportions, and both A. and B. survive the testator, I have very little doubt that such a gift would be void for remoteness." I have not a shadow of doubt that it would be void for remoteness, because there it is a class—children of A. and grandchildren of B.—all thrown together to take per capita. Then, the Master of the Rolls puts this question: "Would the case be varied if the children were to take one-half of what the grandchildren were to take?" That is not exactly so. I see in Jarman they interpret the question he puts in this way: "Would the case be different if the children of A. were to take one-half, and the grandchildren of B. the other half?" In my opinion it would totally vary it, because if you give one moiety of the property to the children of A. at twenty-one, that is a valid limitation; but if the gift is to the grandchildren of A. at twenty-one, it is invalid. Therefore such a gift would be as to one moiety good, and as to the other moiety bad. On looking at Mr. Jarman's book (vol. 2, p. 245, 3rd ed.), I see that the editors answer the question just as I had answered it in my own mind; namely, that undoubtedly, the limitation of one moiety would be good and the limitation of the other would be bad. The Master of the Rolls came to the conclusion that the limitation was void for remoteness. With great respect, I come to an entirely opposite conclusion, and I think every principle of justice required that he should have held that the class was necessarily reduced, that the maximum of the children to take was reduced. The result should have been that the limitations to the children who attained twenty-one were good and to the subsequent class void, because the gift to one class was good and the gift to the other bad. I may also state that there are observations upon the judgment of the Master of the Rolls in the case of Webster v. Boddington, at pp. 246 and 249 of the 1st vol. of Jarman, with which observations I generally concur. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Moseley's Trusts, Re, 24 L. T., N. S., 260, 261; 11 L. 9. Seidler, Exp. (12 Sim. 106). The case of Seidler, Exp., was one of questionable authority, as it was not to be found in the Registrar's Book. This question had been considered by the Master of the Rolls in Murrow v. Wilson (12 Beav. 497), where it was decided that filing affidavits would not in general waive the right to security for costs, and under the circumstances that judgment must be taken to establish the balance of authority. It was important that such matters should be decided, and on the authority of that case he should hold that the respondents were entitled to security for costs, and on the authority of Latta, Exp., Royal Bank of Australia, Re (3 De G. & Sm. 186; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 387; 14 Jur. 908), the only case to be found upon the subject, he should hold that the amount of such security must be 100*l.* Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Home Assurance Association, Re (19 W. Selwood v. Mildmay (3 Ves. 306) is not overruled by the cases of Miller v. Travers, 8 Bing. 244, and Doe d. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & W. 363. Id.

3. Sewell v. Godden (1 De G. & Sm. 126) overruled. Zulueta v. Vinent, 3 Macn. & G. 246; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 474; 15 Jur. 277.

4. Shadbolt v. Thornton (17 Sim. 49; 18 L. J., Ch., 392; more fully reported in 13 Jur. 597), disapproved of. This case raises a question as to the authority of Shadbolt v. Thornton. I must confess that I think that case went too far. All the other authorities, including Myers v. Perigal (2 De G. M. & G. 599; 22 L. J., Ch., 431, reversing 18 L. J., Ch., 185), fall short of that decision. Shadbolt v. Thornton goes a long way; it lays down that the property in such a case as the one before me must be converted. I cannot say that I distinguish that case from this; but I am compelled to go straight against that authority. The rule appears to be this, that if property is given to one individual with absolute control over it, then no case of conversion arises, and the property must be taken to be of the quality in which he took it, but where, on the other hand, property is given to one with a direction that it is to be sold, and the proceeds divided between himself and several other persons, there, inasmuch as the individual legatee had no control over the property, and he must sell it in order to divide the proceeds, the property must be deemed to be converted. The case is analogous to those in which the questions of conversion have arisen between the heir-at-law and next of kin of a testator, as Wheldale v. Partridge (8 Ves. 227, 255). Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Lucas v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ch., 602, 604; 4 L. R., Eq., 73; 15 W. R. 738.

5. Shaftes's Charity (3 L. R., App. Cas., 872) approved in Sutton Coldfield Grammar School, Re, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 91; 51 L. J., P. C., 8; 45 L. T. 631; 30 W. R. 341.

6. Shailer v. Groves (6 Hare 162. See reports of same case 11 Jur. 485, and 16 L. J., Ch., 367) questioned. The present case appears most strongly to resemble Atkinson v. Bartrum (28 Beav. 219), the word "surviving" applying to the whole class. The period of distribution is the death of the surviving tenant for life, and in order to take, they must survive the period of distribution, and they take per capita, and not per stirpes. This decision is consistent with Shailer v. Groves, although not with the reasons for the decree given in the judgment in Mr. Hare's reports. Probably the words in that case were "or their issue," and not "and their issue," which would explain the inconsistency. Per Romilly, M. R., Fox, Re, 11 Jur., N. S., 735; 13 W. R. 1013.

7. Sharples v. Adams (32 Beav. 213). There is no doubt that you cannot gain priority by obtaining the legal estate from a trustee who commits a breach of trust in transferring it to you; but Sharples v. Adams seems to go beyond that, for Lord Romilly says, "If the owner in fee simple, having the legal estate, creates an equitable charge in favour of A., and afterwards a second equitable charge in favour of B., and then a third equitable charge in favour of C., I apprehend that he cannot alter these equities by transferring the legal estate to any one of them, and the fact of the transfer of the legal estate to C., the owner of the third equitable charge, would not affect the rights of the first or second." . . . I wish to state so distinctly, because I am not quite sure that, without further authority, I should go quite so far as my predecessor did in the case of the illustration he gave in Sharples v. Adams. Per Jessel, M. R., in Manfield v. Burton, 17 L. R., Eq., 15, 17, 19; 43 L. J., Ch., 46; 29 L. T. 571; 22 W. R. 148.

8. Shattock v. Shattock (2 L. R., Eq., 182; 14 L. T., N. S., 452). It is true, that in Shattock v. Shattock, the Master of the Rolls (Lord Romilly) expressly overruled the judgment of the Lord Justice Turner in Johnson v. Gallagher (3 De G. F. & J. 513), and held, that even a promissory note given by a married woman living separate and apart from her husband, and having property settled to her separate use for life, with a power to appoint it by will, was not a debt payable out of the property so appointed. In that judgment he bases his dissent from the Lord Justice Turner on the ground that the authorities cited by the latter do not warrant his conclusion. Their lordships are not able to concur in that view of the authorities, and have arrived at the conclusion that Lord Justice Turner's judgment is expressed with his usual accuracy. Per James, L. J., in delivering the reserved judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lemprière, 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 426, 456; 4 L. R., P. C., 572; 29 L. 10. Shaw v. Borrer (1 Keen 557) approved of in Ball v. Harris, 8 Sim. 485; 4 Myl & C. 264; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114; 1 Jur. 706; 3 Jur. 140.

11. Shaw v. Neale (20 Beav. 666; 1 Jur., N. S., 157; 24 L. J., Ch., 563); the decision in this case, as to the effect of omitting to re-register within five years, in substance overruled. Beavan v. Oxford (Earl), 6 De G. M. & G. 492; 1 Jur., N. S., 1121; Shaw v. Neale was itself reversed on appeal to the House of Lords, 6 H. L. Ca. 581; 4 Jur., N. S., 695; 27 L. J., Ch., 444.

14. Shoe v. Hale (13 Ves. 404). Sir William Grant, in 1807, decided in Shoe v. Hale that an annuity may be given with a proviso cutting it short. The case of Day v. Day, 1 Drew. 569, was pressed on me in 1869, in the case of Power v. Hayne, 17 W. R. 733; 8 L. R., Eq.

262, when I fully and carefully considered it, and deliberately came to the conclusion that I could not follow it. The reasons for my decision are perfectly conclusive to my mind now, as they were then. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Halton v. May, 24 W. R. 754, 755.

1. Sheffield v. Kennett (27 Beav. 207; 4 De G. & J. 593). To my mind that is about one of the most unsatisfactory cases I have ever met with, because, as reported, it is a case in which the decision stands without any reasons whatever being given, when strong reasons were manifestly required to support it. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Bryden v. Willett, 7 L. R., Eq., 472, 477.

2. Sheffield v. Orrery (3 Atk. 282) determined on its own special circumstances. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Browne v. Hammond, Johns. 210, 213.

3. Sheil, Exp., Lonergan, Re (4 L. R., Ch. D., 789; 36 L. T. 270), approved in Bayly, Exp., Hart, Re, 43 L. T. 181; 15 L. R., Ch. D., 225.

5. Shelley's case (1 Co. Rep. 88). The rule in Shelley's case must always be regarded as a guiding principle of the law of real property. The cases to which this rule (which is a rule of law and not of construction) is applicable are well defined by a long course of authoritative decisions. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Parker v. Clark, 3 Sm. & G. 161, 165; 1 Jur., N. S., 605; 3 W. R. 471. Affirmed 2 Jur., N. S., 335; 6 De G. M. & G. 104.

6. Shelley's case. In the application of the rule in this case there is no distinction between a will and a deed. White and Hindle, Re, 47 L. J., Ch., 85; 37 L. T., N. S., 574; 26 W. R. 124; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 201.

7. Shelley's case. Semble, the rule in this case applies only where the remainder is created by the same instrument which creates the particular estate. Coape v. Arnold, 4 De G. M. & G. 574; 1 Jur., N. S., 313; 24 L. J., Ch., 673; 3 W. R. 187. Affirming 2 W. R. 482; 18 Jur. 506.

8. Shepherd v. Beane (2 L. R., Ch. D., 223; 24 W. R. 363) not followed. With regard to this case, I do not think the Vice-Chancellor (Hall) intended to lay down that a counter-claim is the right form of such a pleading as between co-defendants. He does not, in fact, use the word in his decision, and it seems to me, therefore, that the head-note of the case is incorrect in so laying it down. However, it stands as a reported decision in your favour, Mr. Heath, and, therefore, I shall not make you bear the costs of the application. Per Jessel, M. R., in Furness v. Booth, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 586, 587; 46 L. J., Ch., 112; 25 W. R. 267.

9. Shepherd v. Harrison (5 L. R., H. L. 116; 24 L. T., N. S., 857; 40 L. J., Q. B., 148; 20 W. R. 1). We think that there is very great ground for saying that the language and reasonings of all the learned Lords who advised their House in the case of Shepherd v. Harrison would apply to this case; that, from the course of dealing between the parties, there would be implied that which would not, according to mercantile courtesy and usage, be said in so many words, namely,

"I send you the remittances on the faith that you will accept the draughts." That would, no doubt, appear to be inconsistent with the decision of Giffard, V.-Ch., in Trimmingham v. Maud, 7 L. R., Eq., 291; 19 L. T., N. S., 554. But it is to be observed that that decision was pronounced some years before the case in the House of Lords, and further that, as a matter of fact, the Vice-Chancellor came to the conclusion that there was only one general account, and that the remittances were made on that general account. It is not necessary for any present purpose critically to examine that decision, but we are not sure that we can reconcile the premises and the conclusion in the judgment. Per James, L. J., in Gomes, Exp., Yglesias, Re, 32 L. T., N. S., 677, 680, 681; 10 L. R., Ch., 639; 23 W. R. 780; 45 L. J., Bky., 54.

10. Sherley v. Fagg (1 Ch. Ca. 68, cited 1 Vern. 52). "A decision of Lord Nottingham's is reported in 1 Ch. Ca. without the circumstances which are mentioned in the narrative of the case in Vernon, of the actual fraud which appears to have existed, and according to which the case is an authority to its full extent, that even a fraudulent act on the part of a purchaser without notice would be supported in order to maintain his title. Vernon, in narrating the case, states, that Sir John Fagg, on walking into a room and seeing some deeds which he thought of value, possessed himself of them, evidently without any authority; in fact, stole them; and was, nevertheless, supported in the possession of those deeds. That fact does not appear as the case is narrated in the more full report in 1 Ch. Ca., and I should apprehend it is sufficiently clear that a case to such an extent as that would never be upheld." Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Carter v. Carter, 4 Jur., N. S., 65 66; 27 L. J., Ch., 74, 81.

11. Sherman v. Abell (2 Vern. 64; 2 Eq. Cas. Ab. 307, pl. 2) not adopted by Romilly, M. R., in Webb v. England, 7 Jur., N. S., 153.

12. Sherwin v. Shakspear (5 De G. M. & G. 517). The principle of this case applies as well to an actual defect of title as to imperfections in the abstracts delivered. Palmerston (Lord) v. Turner, 4 N. R. 46; 33 Beav. 524; 10 Jur., N. S., 577; 33 L. J., Ch., 457; 12 W. R. 816; 10 L. T., N. S., 364.

14. Shipperdson v. Tower (8 Jur. 485) (Apportionment) was decided as long ago as 1844, and no attempt has been made to shake or question it. We must, therefore, take it to be the curius curie, and also the settled understanding of conveyancers, that the Apportionment Act did apply to cases of this kind. The new Act of the 33 & 34 Vict., c. 35, extended the principle of the Act of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, in the same direction, so as to make it applicable to every form of reservation of income, which was in all cases to be treated as if it were interest accruing de die in diem, so that there might be no more questions on this subject. Per James, L. J., in Clive v. Clive, 7 L. R., Ch., 433, 437, 438; 41 L. J., Ch., 386; 26 L. T. 489; 20 W. R. 477.

3. Sidebotham, Exp. (1 Mont. & A. 655, and 2 id. 146) overruled in Cutts, Exp., Goren, Re, 3 id. 549; 3 Dea. 242.

4. Sidney v. Wilmer (4 De G. J. & S. 84; 9 L. T., N. S., 18; 25 Beav. 260; reversed on appeal, 10 Jur., N. S., 217; 9 L. T., N. S., 737). In another case referred to, a case decided by one of the same judges who decided Hodgson v. Bective (Earl) (1 Hem. & M. 376, 391; 9 L. T., N. S., 18; 34 L. J., Ch., 489), in the House of Lords, I mean Sidney v. Wilmer, a direct and contrary decision was arrived at, the Court in that case being influenced to some extent, no doubt, by the construction that was put upon the will, and a great deal more by the general principle found in the judgment. And if there was no such case as Hodgson v. Bective (Earl), I do not hesitate to say that I would rather adopt the decision in Sidney v. Wilmer, than the principle of the decision in Hodgson v. Bective (Earl). But I am bound by Hodgson v. Bective (Earl), and have no alternative. The law is plainly decided, and I must obey the law, and should be outraging and acting contrary to the decision in Hodgson v. Bective (Earl), if I yielded to the strong temptation which I feel, and to the strong solicitations which have been presented to me, not to leave the income of this property any longer in suspense, to wait for an event which may never happen, and in all probability never will happen, and not to hand over the income of the property in the meantime to the person whom the law has designated as being entitled to that intermediate enjoyment, if the testator has not taken it away from him. If he has given it to nobody else, he has not taken it away from him. In my opinion the heir at law and the next of kin are, therefore, entitled to the intermediate proceeds of this estate, real and personal until it shall be ascertained whether the contingency, which in any event will put the plaintiff in possession, has happened. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Wade-Gery v. Handley, 34 L. T. 233, 235; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 653, 663; 45 L. J., Ch., 457.

It is utterly impossible to say that the case before Lord Westbury (Sidney v. Wilmer), which is so entirely different from all the other cases, would justify us in departing from the rule which was so well settled long before Hodgson v. Bective (Earl), and so clearly established by that case as to the title of the heir at law and next of kin respectively. I think the Vice-Chancellor could not do otherwise than follow that decision. Per James, L. J. S. C. on appeal, 35 L. T. 85, 86; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 374, 375; 45 L. J., Ch., 712.

8. Silvester v. Jarman (10 Price 78) distinguished in Field's Mortgage, Re, 9 Hare 414; 15 Jur. 1004; 21 L. J., Ch., 175.

9. Simmons v. Bolland "has not been overruled by Dean v. Allen, 20 Beav. 1." Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Debney v. Eckett, 4 Jur., N. S., 805, 807.

10. Simmons v. Bolland (3 Meriv. 547). In this case Sir W. Grant says, that the decree of the Court is no prohibition to the executor; but Mr. Beavan has given, in a note to Dean v. Allen, 20 Beav. 1, what I think is the proper answer to that: "It appears from the argument in Simmons v. Bolland, that that suit was not for the general administration of the estate; and this circumstance might, therefore, justify the observations of Sir W. Grant, that the decree would not protect the executors." Now, this must be guarded against in my observations. I do not mean to say that where an executor is simply ordered to pay a sum of money, it will protect him from creditors; but where, in a suit for the administration of assets, the Court orders him to pay money, that is a perfect security to him. Unless that were so, it would paralyse the functions of this court." Per Romilly, M. R., in Waller v. Barrett, 4 Jur., N. S., 128, 129.

11. Simpson v. Chapman (4 De G. M. & G. 154). The plaintiffs seek to make the executor pay to them all the profits which have been made by him through this breach of trust. But the executor, on the authority of a decision of the Lords Justices, in the case of Simpson v. Chapman, insists that no inquiry can be directed on this subject in the absence of the persons whom he assumed as partners in the business in which he employed the assets. This proposition, supported by such authority, embarrassed me so much that I have taken time to consider the decision of the Lords Justices and the other authorities. It appears that no authority was quoted in the arguments before the Lords Justices, and no authority is referred to, in their Lordships' judgment, on this point. And the Vice-Chancellor cites Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Meriv. 43, 45; Docker v. Soames, 2 Myl. & K. 655, 673; and Palmer v. Mitchell, 2 Myl. & K. 672. n.; and concludes thus: "If these authorities had been cited to the Lords Justices, it seems not probable that they would have overruled them, without stating clear and satisfactory grounds." Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Macdonald v. Richardson, 1 Giff. 81, 87, 88; 5 Jur., N. S., 9.

12. Simpson v. Howden (Lord) (1 Keen 583; 3 Myl. & Cr. 9). The doctrine laid down in this case does not apply where, the bond being lost, the objection would not at law appear on the face of it. Williams v. Flight, 5 Beav. 41.

13. Simpson v. Paul (2 Eden 34). Certainly, in Simpson v. Paul, Lord Northampton does seem to hold that, as a general proposition, the exercise of a primary power to a partial extent does preclude any exercise of the secondary power. But Lord St. Leonards has expressed his opinion very strongly that the view of Lord Northington is wrong (see Sugden on Powers, vol. 2, pp. 218, 235, 6th edit.); and I think I am justified in adopting the view of Lord St. Leonards, that the partial execution of a primary power does not exclude the exercise of a secondary power. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Mapleton v. Mapleton, 4 Drew. 515, 519.

1. Sitwell v. Barnard (6 Ves. 539) considered in Macpherson v. Macpherson, 16 Jur 847.

2. Sivell v. Abraham (8 Beav. 598) followed in Hennet v. Lucard, 12 Beav. 479.

3. Sivell v. Abraham (8 Beav. 598) appears to have been misunderstood. All that was there described, was that a plaintiff might apply to the Court to stay proceedings, and order the defendant to pay the costs of the suit, and that if the defendant made no objection, the suit might be disposed of in that manner. Per Turner, L. J., in Wilde v. Wilde, 10 W. R. 503.

4. Skidmore v. Bell (2d Inst. 660), the second resolution in this case, to the effect that such houses as were never letten to farm, but inhabited by the owner, are a casus omissus, and shall pay no tithes by force of the decree, is not now law. *Vivian v. 17. Smith v. Butcher (10 L. R., Ch. D., 113; 48 L. J., Ch., 136; 27 W. R. 281) explained and commented on in Stannard, Re, Stannard v. Burt, 52 L. J., Ch., 355; 48 L. T. 660.

18. Smith v. Collyer (8 Ves. 89) declared not to be law. I very much doubt if that decision would be followed at the present day. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Currow v. Ferris, 37 L. J., Ch., 569, 575; 16 W. R. 454; 18 L. T., N. S., 199.

19. Smith v. Copleston (11 Beav. 482). I am at a loss to understand the grounds of the decision in Smith v. Copleston, unless there were special circumstances in that case. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Knapp v. Burnaby, 30 L. J., Ch., 844.

20. Smith v. Dale (18 L. R., Ch. D., 516; 50 L. J., Ch., 352; 44 L. T. 460; 29 W. R. 330) followed and not followed in McEwan v. Crombie, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 175; 53 L. J., Ch., 24; 49 L. T. 499; 32 W. R. 115.

24. Smith v. Horsfall (24 Beav. 331) is a decision pronounced apparently without much discussion by Romilly, M. R., and somewhat reluctantly followed by Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Ure v. Lord (13 W. R. 41), to the effect that when one of several residuary legatees being co-plaintiffs dies, the suit is abated, and revivor necessary, notwithstanding the new procedure of the Court, under which one residuary legatee may obtain a decree without making the others parties, and which was not followed by Wood, V.-Ch., in Hinde v. Morton, 2 Hem. & M. 368.

25. Smith v. Hull Glass Co. (8 C. B. 668; 11 C. B. 897) observed upon in Greenwood's case, 3 De G. M. & G. 459; 18 Jur. 387; 23 L. J., Ch., 966.

26. Smith v. Iliffe (20 L. R., Eq., 666; 44 L. J., Ch., 755; 33 L. T. 200; 23 W. R. 851). "Report inaccurate." Hamley v. Pearson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 545; 41 L. T. 673.

27. Smith v. Lereaux (1 Hem. & M. 123; 9 Jur., N. S., 1140; 8 L. T., N. S., 792). The rule that a bill for an account will not lie at the suit of an agent against his principal, except in cases of mutual accounts, or great complication, does not extend to a case where there have been receipts by the principal of the particulars whereof the agent is ignorant, on which a commission is payable to the latter, overruled on appeal, S. C. 12 W. R. 13; 9 L. T., N. S., 313.

4. Smith v. Phillips (1 Keen 694). This case has been doubted by Mr. Fisher in his Treatise on Mortgages, but it is cited by Lord St. Leonards (Sugden's V. & P. 748, 14th ed.) as an authority for the proposition that, if a mortgagee purchases with notice of an assignment to grant a lease, he is bound by it, although, having been made subsequently to his mortgage, it could not have been enforced against him in his character of mortgagee; and I prefer to rely on the authority of Lord St. Leonards, who cites the case without any qualification. Per Chatterton, V.-Ch., in O'Loughlen v. Fitzgerald, 8 L. R., Eq., 483, 485.

5. Smith v. Sierra Leone (Justices) (3 Moo. P. C. 361, and Dowie and Arrindell (3 Moo. P. C. 414) were very special in their circumstances, and leave was given to appeal in those cases from some peculiar objections to the committals for contempt. But no case is to be found where there has been a committal for contempt by one of the colonial courts, where it appeared clearly upon the face of the order that the party had committed the contempt, that he had been duly summoned, and that the punishment awarded for the contempt was an appropriate one, in which the Judicial Committee has ever entertained an appeal against the order. McDermott v. British Guiana (Judges of), 20 L. T., N. S., 47; 17 W. R. 352; 2 L. R., P. C., 341; 38 L. J., P. C., 1.

7. Smith v. Smith (5 L. R., Ch., 342; 18 W. R. 742) approved of in Pearks v. Moseley, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 714; 43 L. T. 449; 29 W. R. 1.

8. Smith v. Smith (2 C. & M. 231) may be reconciled with Timson v. Ramsbottom (2 Keen 85), on the ground that, in the latter case, there was no subsisting notice at the time of the second incumbrancer giving notice. Meux v. Bell, 11 L. J., Ch., 77; 1 Hare 73.

9. Smith v. Smith (1 Dr. & Sm. 384). Having, on a former occasion, considered the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, not to be retrospective in the above case, I had occasion to observe that a different opinion was entertained in other branches of the Court, and that my view was therefore erroneous, and I have communicated with the other judges, and Lord St. Leonards, on the subject. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Dodson v. Sammell, 30 L. J., Ch., 799, 800.

10. Smith v. Vaughan (8 Vin. Abr. 381; Dev. Z. C. pl. 32) is not an authority to be followed. Kimberley v. Tew, 2 Oon. & L. 371; 4 Dr. & War. 189; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 389.

11. Smith, Exp., London Marine Insurance Association, Re (4 L. R., Ch., 611; 38 L. J., Ch., 681; 17 W. R. 941; 21 L. T., N. S., 97.

Affirming 17 W. R. 784; 7 L. R., Eq., 176). The letter and the policy form parts of one agreement; the policy is properly stamped, and, therefore, the ground of the objection which was successfully taken in Smith, Exp., where no policy was issued, is removed. 18. Sollory v. Leaver (9 L. R., Eq., 22; 39 L. J., Ch., 72). But if it is said that I decided Sollory v. Leaver without having my attention drawn to Foster v. Foster (Pre. Ch. 122; 2 Vern. 386), Manly v. Hawkins (1 Dr. & Wal. 363), and Cupit v. Jackson (McCl. 495; 13 Price 721), I answer that the decision was not made in the absence of authority, for I proceeded upon the decision of Lord Eldon in the case of Buxton v. Monkhouse (Cooper 41), and here Lord Eldon gave the very reason upon which I decided Sollory v. Leaver, that the trustee had power to distrain. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Kelsey v. Kelsey, 17 L. 3. Spalding v. Thompson (26 Beav. 637) is a decision of my own, but I do not find that it has ever been reversed or doubted. 12. In this state of things, an application had been made to the Master, on the authority of Spottiswoode's case (6 De G. M. & G. 315) in particular, and, on the tender of further evidence, for leave to review the decision of 1852 upon the recent decisions and upon such further evidence. It appeared that the evidence had not been looked at by the Master, but he decided upon the citation and argument of the cases, and the allegation of further evidence that there was enough to justify an order to review. On appeal, the Court confirmed this decision. Curzon (Viscount), Exp., 3 Drew. 508.

18. Stanley v. Leigh (2 P. W. 656) is impeached by the case of Clare v. Clare, Forrest 21, before Lord Talbot. Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Madd. 346.

19. Stanley's case, British Provident and Life Assurance Society, Re (10 L. T., N. S., 674; 33 L. J., Ch., 535; 4 De G. J. & S. 407; 10 Jur., N. S., 712; 12 W. R. 894). The question in this appeal is whether a power in a deed of settlement of a joint stock company, authorising the directors to mortgage or charge the property of the company, gives them authority to include in such mortgage or charge future calls, or in other words, the unpaid capital of the company. There was a difference of opinion amongst the judges of the Supreme Court, before which the question was brought on appeal from the order of the primary judge. The majority was of opinion that the word "property" included future calls, and that the law had been so settled in this country by Lishman, Exp., Colonial and General Gas Co., Re (23 L. T., N. S., 759; 19 W. R. 344), a Vice-Chancellor's decision, cited from the Law Times. The dissentient judge who had made the order then under appeal, admitted that this was so, but thought that the context of the deed excluded that construction in this particular case. It is much to be regretted that the attention of the judges was not called to Stanley's case (supra), a decision of the Court of Appeal which has been followed in other cases, and has been cited and referred to in every text book as the leading case authoritatively setting the rule of law. In that case the words of the power were "property and funds," and it was held that a charge on future calls was ultra vires and void. It is impossible to distinguish that case from the one under appeal, and the contention on the part of the respondents was, that their lordships, or the ultimate Tribunal of Appeal, should review that decision, and overrule it, as not being a correct exposition of the law. Even if their lordships had any doubt as to that decision, they would not have felt themselves warranted in disturbing a rule which has been uniformly (with the exception of Lishman, Exp.) assented to and acted upon in this country. And it is to be noted, with respect to Lishman, Exp., that, although it was after Stanley's case had been decided by the Court of Appeal, the Vice-Chancellor does not appear to have referred to that case, and Lishman, Exp. has not found its way into the authorised reports or text books. The decision in Stanley's case appears to be based on very intelligible and reasonable grounds. Per James, L. J., in Bank of South Australia v. Abrahams, 32 L. T., N. S., 277, 279; 44 L. J., P. C., 76, 78; 6 L. R., P. C., 265; 23 W. R. 668.

1. Stansfield v. Habbergham (10 Ves. 273). According to Vesey, junior, a very careful and accurate reporter, Lord Eldon said, in Stansfield v. Habbergham, "I should, by dissolving this injunction, contradict what has been understood to be the doctrine of this Court, that where there is an executory devise over, even of a legal estate, this Court will not permit the timber to be cut down." But this doctrine is not to be found in any text writer, and it has never been acted upon. Per Lord Campbell, C., in Turner v. Wright, 6 Jur., N. S., 809, 810.

2. Stansfield v. Hobson (22 L. J., Ch., 457; 20 L. T., N. S., 301; 1 W. R. 216; 3 De G. M. & G. 620) commented on in Sanders v. Sanders, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 373; 51 L. J., Ch., 276; 45 L. T. 637; 30 W. R. 280.

3. Stanton Iron Co., Re (25 L. J., Ch., 142). The decision of the Master of the Rolls, Stanton Iron Co., Re, seems to be quite contrary to that of this Court in Hickman v. Coe, 27 L. J., C. P., 129, which case was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. Per Willes, J., in Moore v. Rawlings, 28 L. J., C. P., 247, 253.

4. Stanton v. Tattersall (1 Sm. & G. 529). Mr. Pearson was very anxious to impress upon me that the Court never entertains a suit for the rescission of a contract unless it has been obtained by fraud. I expressed my strong impression, derived from many years' experience in cases of vendor and purchaser, that mistake, where it is satisfactorily established, as where a purchaser has been led by the conduct of the vendor to believe that he has been purchasing one thing when in fact he has been purchasing another, is just as good a ground for rescuing persons from a contract as fraud. A remarkable instance of this is Stanton v. Tattersall, which was a decision of Stuart, V.-Ch., never appealed from, but always acquiesced in, and accepted as a binding authority by Lord St. Leonards. . . . The clear doctrine of the Court is, that where contracts are entered into by mistake they must be rescinded. That is shown by the passage in Lord St Leonards on Vendors and Purchasers (14th edit., p. 120), where Stanton v. Tattersall is referred to, and the rule is laid down that mistake is a ground for rescinding a contract in this court just as much as fraud. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Torrance v. Bolton, 14 L. 14. Stewart v. Garnett (3 Sim. 398) observed upon in Turner v. Barclay, 9 Moo. P. C. 264.

15. Stewart v. Jones (3 De G. & J. 532). The only other case is Stewart v. Jones, where I am astonished to find the present Lord Chancellor (then Wood, V.-Ch.) held that the children of a parent who died before the date of the will and the testator's death were not entitled to take, and that decision Lord Chelmsford affirmed on appeal, stating that he entertained no doubt upon the case. There the language of the will was somewhat different to this, but the case appears to me to be so contrary to sound principle, that even if it had been precisely similar to the present, I should have decided the other way, in order that it might have been reconsidered. I think if the question ever came before the Court again, the decision would be totally different. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Potter, Re, 39 L. J., Ch., 102, 106; 8 L. R., Eq., 60.

16. Stewart v. Jones (3 De G. & J. 532). Mr. Glasse has drawn my attention to a passage in the judgment in Potter, Re (8 L. R., Eq., 60; 39 L. J., Ch., 102), bearing upon the decision in Stewart v. Jones, in which I made the following observations: "The only other case is Stewart v. Jones, where I am astonished to find that the present Lord Chancellor (then

V.-Ch. Wood) held that children of a parent who died between the date of the will and the testator's were not entitled to take; on appeal, Lord Chelmsford affirmed the decision, stating that he entertained no doubt upon the case. There the language of the will was different from this; but that case appears to me to be so contrary to sound principle, that even if it had been precisely similar to the present I should have decided the other way, in order that it might have been reconsidered. That is the opinion which I then expressed, and to which I adhere now. The construction adopted in Stewart v. Jones was one which certainly defeated the intention of the testator, and did the greatest injustice. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Re Shearman, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 620, 624; 46 L. J., Ch., 608; 35 L. T. 731; 25 W. R. 225.

2. Stillman v. Weedon (16 Sim. 26). The case of Stillman v. Weedon, to which I was referred, seems to have a contrary tendency; but that case must be considered as resting on its own foundation exclusively. That case was very peculiar, and was affected by two different powers contained in it. Per Lord Romilly, in Elgood v. Cole, 21 L. T., N. S., 80, 81; 17 W. R. 953, 954.

3. Stockton & Darlington Railway Co. v. Brown (9 H. L. Ca. 246; 6 Jur., N. S., 1168). I think it very important that the principle laid down in this case should be considered as settled, and that the Court should be saved from a deluge of affidavits as to whether land is wanted or not, by simply saying that the Court will take the engineer's word for it when he gives it with a reasonable appearance of accuracy. Per Lord Hatherley, C., in Kemp v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 7 L. R., Ch., 364, 375; 41 L. J., Ch., 404; 26 L. T. 110; 20 W. R. 306.

10. Stokes v. Heron (12 Cl. & F. 161). The opinion of Lord Brougham, expressed in this case, that the rule in Wald's case (6 Rep. 17), applies equally to personal as to real estate, not assented to, because it was not necessary for the decision in that case, and that the applicability of the rule to bequests of personality has been disputed in a great variety of cases. Per Romilly, M. R., in Audsley v. Horn, 26 Beav. 195, 198; 28 L. J., Ch., 293.

14. Swan, Re (12 W. R. 738; 2 Hem. & M. 34), questioned. Mr. Willis has attempted to justify the payment into court on the ground that one moiety of the fund is given to a married woman, and an authority has been cited which very much surprised me, for the position that in all cases where money is given to a married woman, whether she desires it or not, trustees are justified in paying it into court. certainly shall not follow that case unless I am obliged. I do not agree with the decision, and I hope some day it may be reconsidered. I wish it to be understood that I do not follow it. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Roberts, Re, 17 W. R. 639, 640; 38 L. J., Ch., 708, 709.

15. Swan v. North British Australian Co. (7 H. & N. 603; 11 W. R. 862; 2 H. & C. 175). I do not think it necessary to remark particularly upon the cases at law on the effect of negligence which were cited by Mr. Rigby. I may, however, remark that some of them were not decided in accordance with the principles of this court. Taylor v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. (4 De G. & J. 559) was decided as it was on the ground, that as the purchaser did not acquire a good title under the blank transfers, the ultimate transferees of the shares had notice of the transfers having been executed in blank. They, therefore, took with notice; and it was upon that ground only that the decision was come to. That decision contrasts in a remarkable manner, I am bound to say, with the case of Swan v. North British Australian Co. There all the judges, except Mr. Justice Keating, decided that the transfers executed in blank handed over to the transferee who neither had notice, nor possibly could have notice of the circumstances under which they were executed, did not give a good title. Mr. Justice Keating dissented from the rest of the Court, and I am bound to say, if I had been a member of the Court, that I should entirely have agreed with him. The case is in contrast with the case of Taylor v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co., where the decision was against transferees solely on the ground that they had notice that the transfers had been executed in blank. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Hunter v. Walters, 11 L. R., Eq., 292, 319, 320.

It is still doubtful at law whether a person not being blind or illiterate, who executes a deed on a false representation of its contents, is not estopped from denying its validity as between himself and a person who innocently acts upon the faith of it. Swan v. North British Australasian Co. (supra), does not decide that a person cannot be estopped from denying the validity of a void deed. Per Mellish, L. J., in S. C. on appeal, 20 W. R. 218; 7 L. It required reconsideration, and if the case were brought before him he should decide against it, that it might be taken to the Court above to be reconsidered. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in *Jefferys v. 10. Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts (1 Rob. App. Cas. 296) followed in Zetland (Earl) v. Haslop, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 427.

Semble, though Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts (1 Rob. App. Cas. 296) does determine that the superior cannot enforce a restriction on property, unless he has some legitimate interest; that case does not lay down the doctrine, that an action at the superior's instance, which merely sets forth the condition of his feu right and its violation by the vassal, must be dismissed as irrelevant, because the pursuer has failed to allege interest. The vassal in consenting to be bound by the restriction concedes the interest of the superior, and therefore the onus is upon the vassal, who is pleading a release from his contract to prove that any legitimate interest which the pursuer may originally have had in maintaining the restriction has ceased to exist. Id.

20. Tarbuch v. Tarbuch (4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129) decides the question. Although I agree with Mr. Williams that, sitting here as a court of error, it would be quite competent to us to decide contrary to that case, which is a decision of the Master of the Rolls, if we saw fit so to do, yet the burden upon him is far heavier than it would have been had there been no such decision against him. Were the general question open, I should desire to look further into it, in order to ascertain the most correct view to take. It might be that, after consideration, I might come to the one conclusion or to the other. But finding that Sir C. Pepys, then Master of the Rolls, decided the point one way so long back as thirty-seven years ago, and not finding that his decision was appealed against at the time, or that it has been, as far as I can ascertain, ever judicially attacked or shaken in any subsequent case, then, unless I have very clear and cogent grounds for upsetting the authority of that decision, I must say that I do not like to shake the rules on which conveyancers act, or to upset a case which has stood so long. Per Cockburn, C. J., in Exchequer Chamber in Brookman v. Smith, 26 L. T., N. S., 974, 978; 41 L. J., Exch., 114; 7 L. R., Exch., 271; 20 W. R. 906.

The learned counsel for the appellant was forced to admit that the case of Tarbut v. Tarbut is in point against him, and, moreover, that it is a decision which has never been judicially shaken. An attempt, indeed, was made to show that the case of Doe d. Todd v. Duesbury (8 M. & W. 514; 10 L. J., Exch., 410) had in some way shaken the authority of Tarbut v. Tarbut, but I confess that I cannot see it. For the reasons given by my Lord Chief Justice, it appears to me that Tarbut v. Tarbut was well decided. That decision, therefore, remains unimpeached; and, though we have the power to overrule it, yet I think that we ought not to do so, unless we entirely disagree with it. I think, on the contrary, that we are bound and ought to uphold that decision, and to affirm the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in the present case upon the first point on which they denied it. Per Keating, J. Ib.

Even if I felt inclined to question the authority of the case of Tarbut v. Tarbut, I should undoubtedly hesitate to do so upon considering the very eminent judge by whom it was decided, and the length of time that the decision has stood unquestioned by any other Court. But, so far from being disposed to question it, I entirely agree with it; and if there had been no such decision at all I may say for myself that I should have come to the same conclusion upon the words of this will. 8. Tarney v. Crowther (3 Bro. C. C. 161). I do not hesitate to say that Lord Thurlow there was wrong; and from what Lord Redesdale afterwards says of that case, in Clinan v. Cooke (1 Sch. & Lef. 22), it appears that Lord Thurlow himself was not satisfied with it. Per Cranworth, C., in Ridgway v. Wharton, 4 Jur., N. S., 173, 175; 6 H. L. Ca. 265; 27 L. J., Ch., 48.

With respect to the case of Tarney v. Crowther, I can hardly say that Lord Redesdale and Lord Thurlow are in conflict, for I am strongly inclined, with Lord Redesdale, to think that Lord Thurlow had great distrust in the judgment given in that case; but, be that so or not, I am strongly inclined to agree with Lord Redesdale, and not with the judgment of Lord Thurlow. Per Lord Brougham. Id. 175.

As to the case of Tarney v. Crowther, it is not at all material whether Lord Thurlow was right in construing the words to amount to an acceptance of the agreement. It is an authority for this, that if terms be reduced to writing, and a man says that he will abide by those terms, and will sign the agreement, although he does not sign, he is bound by that agreement: that is what the case amounts to as an authority, and it is a very important case. 4. Taylor v. Portington (7 De G. M. & G. 328; 1 Jur., N. S., 1057), a very peculiar case. See Samuda v. Lanford, 4 Giff. 42.

5. Taylor v. Portington (7 De G. M. & G. 328). This is a case in which there is evidence of a clear contract in writing, between the plaintiff and the defendant, signed by both. The defence is rested, first, upon the ground that there is an uncertainty in the terms of the written agreement, from the use of the language as to "painting, repairing, decorating, etc." I am of opinion that there is no uncertainty whatever occasioned by those words. They must have a reasonable interpretation; and being so interpreted they import what can be made perfectly certain. No doubt a decision of the Lords Justices has been reported, I mean the case of Taylor v. Portington (supra), in which there were very remarkable words in an agreement for a lease. The words were introduced to import a condition into the agreement, viz., that the lease would be granted if the plaintiff put the "premises into thorough repair, and the drawing-rooms were handsomely decorated according to the present style. Paint is required both inside and outside, although perhaps for some parts one coat might be sufficient." The Master of the Rolls, held, properly I think, that there was no uncertainty in these words. The Lords Justices, however, came to a different conclusion. Their conclusion, which is to be treated with every respect, is founded upon the particular circumstances of the case. But where a question arises whether particular expressions are certain or not in their meaning, and one man of judgment and experience considers the language to be certain, while two others consider it uncertain, the uncertainty cannot be very great. The case of Taylor v. Portington is, however, a very strong decision. When a judge has determined that to his mind the meaning of an agreement is sufficiently clear, and has decreed specific performance to be enforced in his chambers, it is a very strong thing for the Court of Appeal to reverse that decree on the ground of the uncertainty of the agreement. Perfect certainty is a thing very seldom attained in agreements. An agreement to paint a house with two coats of paint could not be considered as uncertain, although it is clear that, as to the colour, quality, and other circumstances, you may, if you are so determined, introduce into the agreement an element of uncertainty. But in these cases, what the Court looks at is, whether, according to the plain and sensible interpretation of the language used—as language ordinarily is understood—the real meaning and intention of the parties can be seen. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Dean v. Verity, 20 L. T., N. S., 263, 269, 270; 38 L. J., Ch., 297, 301, 302; 17 W. R. 567, 568.

B., 346), as to the necessity of a cessio bonorum in cases of deeds of trust for the benefit of creditors, disapproved of in Morgan, Exp., Woodhouse, Re (9 Jur., N. S., 559; 32 L. J., Bky., 15), and a cessio bonorum is no longer necessary under deeds of arrangements between debtors and creditors. See Clapham v. Atkinson, 12 W. R. 342.

17. Teversham v. Cameron's Coalbrook Steam Coal and Swansea and Lougher Railway Co. (3 De G. & Sm. 296; 13 Jur. 333; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 5 Rail. Ca. 492) observed upon in Murray's Executors, case, 18 Jur. 1063; 5 De G. M. & G. 746.

18. Tewira v. Evans (cited 1 Anst. 228). The only case cited in favour of the validity of a deed in blank, afterwards filled in, is that of Tewira v. Evans, where Lord Mansfield held, that a bond was valid which was given with the name of the obligee and sum in blank to a broker to obtain money upon it, and he borrowed a sum from the plaintiff, and then inserted his name and the sum. But this case is justly cited by Mr. Preston, in his edition of Shepherd's Touchstone, 68, as it assumes there could be an attorney without deed, and we think it cannot be considered law. Per Parke, B., in Hibbleswhite v. M. Morine, 6 M. & W. 200, 215.

19. Tewira v. Evans (1 Anst. 228) overruled by Hibbleswhite v. M. Morine, 6 M. & W. 200. See Taylor v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co., 5 Jun., N. S., 331, 333; 28 L. J., Ch., 285. Affirmed 4 De G. & J. 559; 5 Jur., N. S., 1087; 28 L. J., Ch., 709.

1. Thames Ironworks Co. v. Patent Derrick Co. (6 Jur., N. S., 1013). There Wood, V.-Ch., held that a judge's order made by consent, directing proceedings in an action to be stayed upon certain conditions, was not an agreement to perform the conditions, and a bill filed in a court of equity for specific performance would not lie. But see Blackett v. Bates (2 Hem. & M. 610; 11 Jur., N. S., 500), in which Wood, V.-Ch., held that, although the validity of an award must be decided by the Court, of which the submission is made a rule, yet when the award is once established, it may be enforced either by an action in any court of law, or by specific performance in equity. The Vice-Chancellor's decision was overruled, on appeal, by Lord Cranworth, C. (12 Jur., N. S., 151), on the ground that, in the case in question, a court of equity could not give relief to each party; but the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, that an award made after a submission to arbitration in a court of law can be enforced by a court of equity in a suit for specific performance, appears to remain untouched in the Court of Appeal. 12. Thomson v. Waterlow (6 L. R., Eq., 36; 37 L. J., Ch., 495; 18 L. T. 545; 16 W. R. 586) not followed in Barkshire v. Grubb, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 616; 50 L. J., Ch., 731; 45 L. T. 383; 29 W. R. 929.

13. Thomson v. Waterlow (6 L. R., Eq., 36) comes to little more than this: you have a way from the high road to your house, a way from the house to your garden, from your garden to your orchard, and from your orchard into your field, to which there is another approach. Nobody could say that a person who bought the field from you would have a right to use the way through your house, garden, and orchard. Per James, L. J., in Watts v. Kelson, 6 L. R., Ch., 166, 171; 40 L. J., Ch., 126; 24 L. T. 209; 19 W. R. 338.

16. Thornton, Exp., BARNED'S BANKING CO., Re (15 W. R. 189), decided that the Court of Chancery will not vacate the registration of a winding-up order by the official liquidator, as a lis pendens against a shareholder in the company. But on appeal, the registration of the order was directed to be vacated by the Lords Justices, as s. 114 of the Companies Act 1862 was intended only to enable the registration of a winding-up petition to be made as against the company, and not against the persons who were, or were alleged to be, contributories. 17. Thorpe v. Jackson (2 Y. & C. Exch. 533) dicta in observed upon in Jones v. Beach, 2 De G. M. & G. 886; 32 L. J., Ch., 425.

18. Thorpe v. Jackson (2 Y. & C. Exch. 553) went the longest way in favour of the notion that notes of this kind might be held joint and several; but it seems to me a mere obiter dictum; and I confess I cannot but hesitate to assent to the proposition laid down in that case as law, especially when I consider that the present Lord Chancellor (Lord Cranworth) and Lord Justice Knight Bruce seem to have questioned the doctrine. (See Jones v. Beach, 2 De G. M. & G. 886, 888, 889.) When I find this, I cannot take it to be the law, that where B. lends money to three persons on a joint cheque, or note, or bond, he is entitled to proceed against one of those parties in the same manner as if the instrument had been joint and several; that is, looking at the case on the footing of the instrument itself. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Other v. Iveson, 3 Drew. 177; 1 Jur., N. S., 568; 24 L. J., Ch., 654.

19. Thynne (Lady) v. Glengall (Earl) (2 H. L. 5. Tomkins v. Colthurst (1 L. R., Ch. D., 626; 33 L. T. 491; 24 W. R. 267). The decisions of V.-Ch. Stuart in Collins v. Lewis, 8 L. R., Eq., 708, and V.-Ch. Malins in Dugdale v. Dugdale, 14 L. R., Eq., 334, and Tomkins v. Colthurst (supra), are in accordance with the decision of Lord Cottenham in Mirehouse v. Scawfe, 2 Myl. & Cr. 695, and I shall follow them. I do not consider that in so doing I am acting in opposition to the authority of the Court of Appeal in Lancefield v. Iggliden, 10 L. R., Ch., 136; 44 L. J., Ch., 303; 31 L. T. 813; 23 W. R. 223. 8. Tomlinson, Re (5 L. T., N. S., 13), is inapplicable to the state of the bankrupt law, under the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, the 185th section of the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106 having been repealed thereby, and no corresponding discretion given to the commissioners under the new Act. Per Goulburn, Com., in Strong, Exp., Comber, Re, 12 W. R. 767; 10 L. T., N. S., 387.

9. Tooker v. Annesley (5 Sim. 235). Form of order in this case adopted in Consett v. Bell, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 569; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 401; 6 Jur. 869.

10. Topham v. Portland (Duke) (11 H. L. Ca. 32; 32 L. J., Ch., 257). (Obligation of the decisions of the House of Lords.) My duty is simply therefore to abide by the decision of the House of Lords. That decision is binding on every Court in the kingdom, including the House itself in its judicial character. Some old writers have said that even the great Zeus himself submitted to the decrees of fate. Perhaps the Duke of Portland, illustrious member as he is of the House of Lords, may be persuaded to submit to the decision of that House, and to feel that he ought not to struggle any more against the irreversible fiat of the law, even in his pious and honourable desire and resolve to do what he believes and knows (as, if it were permitted to me to speak otherwise than in my judicial capacity, I should say I believe and know) to have been the real wish of his deceased father, the creator of the power reposed in him. Per James, V.-Ch., in Topham v. Portland (Duke), 38 L. J., Ch., 513, 522; 17 W. R. 911.

11. Topping, Exp., Levy, Re (34 L. J., Bky., 13; 12 L. T., N. S., 3; 4 De G. J. & S. 551; 1 Jur., N. S., 210; 13 W. R. 445). Now the trustee of Roger Allday Kerrison seeks to prove against the separate estate of Sir R. Harvey for his contribution as co-surety. This is endeavoured to be supported by the reasoning contained in the case before Lord Westbury, of Topping, Exp. I do not express any opinion as to that case, though it surprised me considerably when cited to me on Saturday; but it does not govern this case. Per Lord Romilly, M. R., in Lacey v. Hill, 27 L. T., N. S., 504, 505; 21 W. R. 153.

12. Torquay Bath Co., Re (32 Beav. 581; definition of the words "unregistered company," in Companies Act of 1862, in Part 8), overruled in Bones v. Hope Mutual Life Insurance & Honesty Guarantee Society, 11 Jur., N. S., 643; and when used, mean companies registered antecedently to that Act.

13. Totty, Exp., Northumberland and Durham District Banking Co., Re (2 L. T., N. S., 687; 1 Dr. & Sm. 273; 29 L. J., Ch., 702; 8 W. R. 624; 6 Jur., N. S., 849), was decided on the grounds of the secrecy of the terms of compromise, and has no application to the present case, where there was no agreement for, nor attempt at secrecy, but where, on the contrary, all matters were completely laid before or known to the Court. Bank of Hindustan, China, & Japan v. Eastern Financial Association, 20 L. T., N. S., 889; 17 W. R. 554; 2 L. R., P. C., 489.

14. Toulmin v. Steere (3 Meriv. 210). The plaintiff and his brother were jointly and severally liable for the prior mortgage debts, and the plaintiff contended, on the authority of Toulmin v. Steere, that when the equity of redemption was bought by the defendant, the prior charge was merged, and the subsequent one might be set up, and that the effect of the transaction was to release him from his covenant to pay. The case of Toulmin v. Steere was a very strong one, and there would have been an appeal, but that a compromise was made. But this would be much stronger if, when an estate was subject to two mortgages, and the first mortgagee got in the equity of redemption, he not only released his own charge, but let in the second mortgagee to a better position. Toulmin v. Steere clearly was not intended to go that length. Per Romilly, M. R., in Hayden v. Kirkpatrick, 13 W. R. 1010, 1011; 13 L. T., N. S., 56, 57.

15. Toulmin v. Steere (3 Meriv. 210) is said not to be the law of the Court; but it is of great importance that cases should not be shaken and their authority weakened. There is nothing in Lord St. Leonards' great work upon Vendors and Purchasers to impugn the authority of Toulmin v. Steere, although the decision was given against his own argument and that of Sir S. Romilly. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Wilkins v. Sibley, 4 Giff. 442, 448.

16. Tracy v. Hereford (Lady) (2 Bro. C. C. 128) commented upon in Sharshaw v. Gibbs, 1 Kay 333; 18 Jur. 330; 23 L. J., Ch., 451.

5. Trulock v. Roby (2 Phil. 395). The correctness of the proposition laid down by Lord Cottenham in this case, that bills of review are confined to cases in which the decree is contrary to the forms and practice of the Court, doubted by Turner, L. J., in Green v. Jenkins, 6 Jur., N. S., 515, 517.

And the costs of a petition by a tenant for life of a fund paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, asking that the dividends may be paid to the petitioner during his life, must be paid out of the income, not out of the corpus of the fund.

22. Tweeddale v. Tweeddale (10 Sim. 453). Mr. Jacob was very much dissatisfied with that decision, and it was intended to appeal, but it was compromised. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Hill v. Potts, 8 Jur., N. S., 555; 10 W. R. 411.

23. Twyne's case (3 Rep. 80 b). I think the principle of Twyne's case, as to non-delivery of possession, is to be applied in much the same way as the rule in bankruptcy with respect to order and disposition—which is, that the goods must remain in the order and disposition of the bankrupt up to the time of the bankruptcy, and when possession is given before the bankruptcy there is no ground for saying that it is fraudulent. Per James, L. J., in Wilson, Exp., 22 W. R. 241, 242; 29 L. T. 860.

24. Tyson v. Fairclough (2 Sim. & S. 142) remarked upon in Searle v. Smales, 3 W. R. 437.

25. Ulrich v. Litchfield (2 Atk. 372). Described by Lord Brougham, C., in Sherratt v. Beniley (2 Myl. & K. 162), as a case reported in a very slovenly way; but it is also reported in 2 Purton Cooper, tempore Cottenham, C., p. 531, under the name of Francis v. Ditchfield, where it is stated from the Jodrel MSS., and in substance to the same effect as in the report in 2 Atk. 372. Per Brady, C., Jessup, Re, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 424, 428.

6. Usticke, Re (35 Beav. 338). With regard to this case which was also pressed upon me, I confess that I should have come to a different conclusion upon the construction of that will in that case from that of the Master of the Rolls; but his lordship proceeded upon the particular language of the will, and did not profess to decide in opposition to Eyre v. Marsden (4 Myl. & C. 231). I do not, therefore, feel pressed by that case. Per Malins, V.-Ch., Arnold, Re, 10 L. R., Eq., 252, 258; 39 L. J., Ch., 875; 23 L. T. 837; 18 W. R. 912.

13. Vaughan v. Vanderstegen (2 Drew. 176), Johnson v. Gallagher (7 Jur., N. S., 273) does not impeach it. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Blackford v. Woolley, 9 Jur., N. S., 568, and Hobday v. Peters, 28 Beav. 354; 6 Jur., N. S., 794, upholds the principles of that decision.

18. Veitch v. Russell (Car. & M. 362; 3 Q. B. 928). It is very important to observe that, although, by reason of the general custom of physicians not to charge, it has been held that they could not sustain an action for their services, the ground being that the patient dealt on the faith of the general custom, still they can, by special contract, charge. This was decided in Veitch v. Russell. There seems to have been cited there a much older case, of Style v. Smith, a case cited by Popham, J., in Marsh v. Rainsford (2 Leon. 111), where it was said to have been determined "that if a physician, in the absence of a father, give his son medicine, and the father, in consideration thereof, promise to pay him, an action will lie for the money." I have looked at the original authority in Leonard, and it does not say "giving him medicine," but it says "attending on him." It might have made a considerable difference, in my mind, in the case, if the law of the land had been that a physician could under no circumstances charge in respect of the pains and attention that he bestowed; because the bye-law does not prohibit physicians from making a charge, but only from selling drugs. The power of charging on special contract therefore remained; and if physicians had the power of charging for their practice, then, I apprehend, the moment they repealed their bye-law, their licensee would go forth entitled both to attend a case and to supply the medicines which he should prescribe. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Att.-Gen. v. Royal College of Physicians, 1 John. & H. 561, 591; 7 Jur., N. S., 511, 515; 30 L. J., Ch., 757.

19. Venner's Settled Estates, Re (6 L. R., Eq., 249; 16 W. R. 1033). I cannot in this case follow the order in that case. By reliance on that case the parties here have, on my view of it, been led astray. Per Lord Justice James, in Clough, Re, 15 L. R., Eq., 284, 288; 42 L. J., Ch., 393; 28 L. T., N. S., 261; 21 W. R. 452.

21. Vernon. The cases reported in the second volume of Vernon are very inaccurate. They were published after the death of Mr.

Vernon, which may perhaps be the reason. Per Turner, L. J., in Mornington v. Keene, 4 Jur., N. S., 982. n.

1. Viant, Re (22 W. R. 686; 18 L. R., Eq., 486; 43 L. J., Ch., 832; 30 L. T. 540). I regret to have to add one more to the many decisions upon a point which V.-Ch. Kindesley considered, and which I considered, to be concluded by authority, but which has, unfortunately, been re-opened by the decision of V.-Ch. Bacon, in Viant, Re. . . All the modern cases on the subject, four of which have been cited by Mr. Rogers, concur; the line of authority is unbroken down to the latest case, that of Viant, Re. I am bound to say that, in my opinion, that decision was erroneous, and I cannot follow it. Per Jessel, M. R., Jones, Re, 24 W. R. 697, 698; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 362; 45 L. J., Ch., 428; 35 L. T., N. S., 25.

2. Villareal v. Galway (Lord) (Ambl. 682; 1 Bro. C. C. 292), an authority not to be followed upon the abstract question, whether the devise of an annuity to a widow, charged upon lands out of which she is dowable, is a bar to her claim of dower out of those lands. Hall v. Hill, 1 Con. & L. 120; 1 Dr. & War. 94; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 27.

3. Viner's Abridgment, tit. Distress (1): "If there are several joint tenants, and one grants a rent charge out of the land, the grantee may distrain the cattle of the grantor. But he cannot distrain the cattle of the other joint tenants. But he may distrain the cattle of a stranger that come upon the land." To the last proposition, however, it is added quære. Brady on Distress (2nd edit., pp. 41, 76) repeats the same proposition. Per Winslow, Q.-C., arguendo. The authorities which have been referred to do not, in my opinion, in the slightest degree touch this case, except that dictum upon which Mr. Winslow very properly relied, that cattle of a stranger being upon land which is held in joint tenancy may be distrained for rent due from one of the joint tenants. I cannot follow that dictum. Before I could adopt it as an exposition of the law I must find it distinctly stated, and have the authority of some decided case for it. I can see reasons against it. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Park, Exp., Potter, Re, 18 L. R., Eq., 381, 385; 43 L. J., Bky., 139; 30 L. T. 618; 22 W. R. 768.

18. Walker v. Mottram (19 L. R., Ch. D., 355; 51 L. J., Ch., 108; 45 L. T. 659; 30 W. R. 165) followed in Danson v. Beeson, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 504; 48 L. T. 407; 31 W. R. 537.

19. Walker v. Walker (29 L. J., Ch., 856). With regard to the case of Walker v. Walker, which has been cited, the report was very meagre, and he could not help thinking that the decision turned a good deal on the request referred to in the case; but anyhow he did not think it applied to this case. Per Wickens, V.-Ch., in Middleton v. Windross, 21 W. R. 822; 42 L. J., Ch., 555; 21 W. R. 822.

20. Walker v. Woodward (1 Russ.) observed upon in Tomlin v. Tomlin, 1 Hare 236.

21. Walker's case (3 Co. Rep. 22 a) explains very clearly the difference between a lessee and an assignee. Between lessor and lessee there are two privities—privity of estate, and privity of contract. Between lessee and assignee there is only one privity, that of estate. Per Malins, V.-Ch., in Russell Road Purchase Monies, Re, 12 L. R., Eq., 82; 40 L. J., Ch., 673; 19 W. R. 520, 706; 23 L. T., N. S., 839.

22. Wall v. Wall (15 Sim. 520) overruled. The case of Wall v. Wall is certainly a direct authority in favour of the petitioner, but, in my opinion, that case was decided through some oversight, for the decree cannot be reconciled with the remarks in the judgment. The Court cannot bind Mrs. William on the doctrine relating to fraud, as there could be no legal fraud where she had no power to give up what she purported to deal with. On this point Nicholl v. Jones (3 L. R., Eq., 701) is a strong authority. Although in so doing I must overrule Wall v. Wall, I must hold that a married woman cannot by election, any more than by any other means, deal with her reversionary choses in action. Per Walsh, M. R., in Williams v. Mayne, 16 W. R. 173.

2. Wallace v. Pomfret (11 Ves. 542) not maintainable. Hall v. Hill, 1 Dr. & War. 94; 1 Con. & L. 120; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 27.

3. Wallace v. Pomfret (11 Ves. 542). The decision of Lord Eldon in this case has been much disapproved of. Lord St. Leonards, in Hall v. Hill, 1 Dr. & War. 94, 122; 1 Con. & L. 147; 4 Ir. Eq. Rep. 27, says he does not see how it is possible to maintain that decision consistently with the authorities. I confess I do not quite understand the force of that observation. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Ferris v. Goodburn, 27 L. J., Ch. 574, 576.

4. Wallis v. Taylor (8 Sim. 241). I think I have heard this case unfavourably commented upon from the bench. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Johnson v. Routh, 3 Jur., N. S., 1048, 1049.

5. Wallworth v. Holt (4 Myl. & C. 619) followed in Deeks v. Stanhope, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 453.

6. Wallwyn v. Coutts (3 Meriv. 707) has been much doubted. 3 Sim. 1. n., and see a full statement of that case, id. 14.

12. Want v. Stallibrass (8 L. R., Exch., 175) followed in Tanqueray-Willaine and Landau. Re, 45 L. T. 181. Affirming 20 L. R., Ch. D., 465; 51 L. J., Ch., 434; 46 L. T. 542; 30 W. R. 801.

13. Warburton v. Hill (Kay 470; 2 W. R. 365; 23 L. J., Ch., 633) might, if the authorities which were afterwards cited in Scott v. Hastings (Lord) (4 Kay & J. 633) had been cited to me, have been placed upon higher ground than that on which I rested the case. It might have rested on the ground that a charging order against the debtor could not affect property which had previously been dealt with by the debtor. I said in the course of my judgment that the date to be looked at was not that of obtaining the order nisi, but subject to the operation of the 15th section of the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, as to intermediate charges, that the real charge was acquired when the charging order was made absolute. The expressions I then used were not necessary for my judgment, and were perhaps erroneous. The statute does this: it directs the judge to make an order nisi; this, if sufficient cause is shown, falls to the ground, but if not it remains in force; in the meantime, however, it is not inoperative; it takes the fund out of the control of the debtor, and the only question is, whether sufficient cause can be shown. Per Wood, L. J., in Haly v. Barry, 37 L. J., Ch., 723, 725; 3 L. R., Ch., 452, 456, 457; 16 W. R. 654, 656, 657. I think the strongest point made in this case on the part of the appellant was the reference to one passage in the judgment of my learned brother in Warburton v. Hill. I think the explanation he has given is corroborated by a short passage in the subsequent judgment in Scott v. Hastings (Lord). Per Selwyn, L. J.

14. Warde, Re (2 John. & H. 191) I cannot understand the decision in this case. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Clergy Orphan Corporation, Re, 30 L. T., N. S., 806, 807; 18 L. R., Eq., 280; 22 W. R. 789.

15. Ware v. Cumberlege (20 Beav. 503; 1 Jur. N. S., 745; 24 L. J., Ch., 630) overruled. Edwards v. Hall, 6 De G. M. & G. 74; 25 L. J., Ch., 82; 1 Jur., N. S., 1189. Affirming 11 Hare 6; 17 Jur. 593; 22 L. J., Ch., 1078.

16. Ware v. Polhill (11 Ves. 257) observed upon in Lantsbery v. Collier, 2 Kay & J. 709; 25 L. J., Ch., 672; 4 W. R. 826.

17. Ware v. Rowland (15 Sim. 587, 593). Where the words of gift are "to the next heir," or "to the heir at law," there seems to be comparatively little difficulty; but where the word is "heir" only, considerable doubt arises; and here, I confess, I was struck with the remark in the judgment in the case of Ware v. Rowland, where the Vice-Chancellor of England observes that it cannot be argued, with any show of reason, that there is any substantial difference between the words "heirs at law" and "heirs." I should be very sorry to pronounce an opinion at variance with one of Sir Lancelot Shadwell, who was so remarkable for his powers of construing ambiguous instruments; but although I do not concur in the learned Vice-Chancellor's observation, I find sufficient peculiarity in the circumstances of the case to prevent my regarding it as a binding authority in the present instance. There the gift upon which the question turned was "to and among the heirs at law" of the testator himself, "share and share alike;" here it is to the heirs of a stranger. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Steevens, Re, 15 L. R., Eq., 110, 113.

18. The principle of Waring, Esq. (19 Ves. 345; 2 Rose 182; 2 G. & J. 404), that where A. and B. are acceptor and drawer of bills, and property of the one comes to the hands of the other, as security against the bills, and then both become bankrupt, the billholders have a right to have the property applied, in the first instance, in payment of the bills, is applicable as well to cases of double insolvency as of double bankruptcy; and the principle is applicable, although the property held as an indemnity is not sufficient to pay the bills in full. Ponles v. Hargreaves, 17 Jur. 1083; 3 De G. M. & G. 430; 23 L. J., Ch., 1.

1. The rule in Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345), only applies to cases of double bankruptcy or insolvency, in which the estates of both parties are subject to an obligatory administration, and are under the control of the Court. It has no application, therefore, to a case where one of the parties residing abroad had entered into a composition with his creditors which did not operate to bring him or his estate within the jurisdiction of the Court. General South American Co., Exp., Yglesias, Re, 45 L. J., Bky., 54; 10 L. R., Ch., 635; 23 W. R. 843; 33 L. T., N. S., 112.

2. The doctrine of Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345), established a special mode for the payment of creditors, applicable to the administration of the estate in the bankruptcy, but not to the administration of the trust in equity. Laycock v. Johnson, 6 Hare 199; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 350; 11 Jur. 688.

3. The doctrine of Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345), does not apply to a case where the bills drawn by one of the insolvent firms on the other have not been accepted, nor in any other case in which the holder of the bills has no right of double proof against the two firms. Vaughan v. Halliday, 9 L. R., Ch., 561; 22 W. T. 886; 30 L. T., N. S., 741. Reversing 22 W. R. 503; 30 L. T., N. S., 249.

4. The principle laid down in Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345), only applies where specific securities are deposited to secure specific bills, and not to the case of a deposit of securities to answer a general credit. Levi, Exp., New Zealand Banking Corporation, Re, 17 W. R. 565; 20 L. T., N. S., 296; 7 L. R., Eq., 449.

5. Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345), distinguished in Lambton, Exp., Lindsay, Re, 32 L. T., N. S., 380; 23 W. R. 662; 10 L. R., Ch., 405; 44 L. J., Bky., 81. Affirming S. C. nom Greener, Exp., Lindsay, Re, 32 L. T., N. S., 205; and in New Zealand Banking Corporation, Re, Levi, Exp., 7 L. R., Eq., 449; 17 W. R. 565; 20 L. T., N. S., 296; and in General Rolling Stock Co., Re, Alliance Bank, Exp., 4 L. R., Ch., 423; 38 L. J., Ch., 714; 17 W. R. 631; 20 L. T., N. S., 685.

6. Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345; 2 Rose 182; 2 G. & J. 404). Of course, we know perfectly well that, upon the principle of Waring, Exp., if both the drawer and the acceptor of the bills under those circumstances become bankrupt, then the holders of the bills are entitled to stand upon what is called the equity of the drawer with reference to any security which may have passed between the other parties to the transaction. But it has always been most carefully said that that right is not a right founded on contract; it does not spring out of the contract, but it springs out of the necessities connected with the administration of the two insolvent estates. Per Lord Cairns, in Banner v. Johnston, 5 L. R., H. L., 157, 174; 40 L. J., Ch., 730; 24 L. T. 542.

We know very well that the doctrine of Waring, Exp., will raise that equity where it is necessary to be raised, in consequence of a double insolvency, or an insolvency of both sides, in order that the one whose estate is being administered in bankruptcy may not be injured by another bankrupt from getting the benefit of the securities, whilst at the same time it cannot discharge the obligation it has incurred to pay the bills. But it is only in that case that the holders of bills or securities of this description have ever been held to be entitled to such an equity as is here asserted. Per Lord Hatheley, C., 5 L. R., H. L., pp. 168, 169.

7. Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345), explained in Ponles v. Hargreaves (3 De G. M. & G. 430; 23 L. J., Ch., 1, 17 Jur. 1083). Now, we know what was said in Waring, Exp., but how far that has been acted upon must be gathered from the subsequent authorities. One cannot say with certainty that they are uniform; we believe that doubts have been expressed as to the extent of the doctrine, but the case of Ponles v. Hargreaves is an authority directly in point, and shows that the bank is entitled to file a bill, and to have the security applied in the manner I have mentioned. Per Cleasby, B., in the case of Ireland (Bank of) v. Penny, 41 L. J., Exch., 9; 7 L. R., Exch., 14; 25 L. T. 845; 20 W. R. 300.

8. Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 344), the principle established in, is not to be restricted to cases of judicial insolvency. Ponles v. Hargreaves, 3 De G. M. & G. 430; 17 Jur. 1083; 23 L. J., Ch., 1.

9. Waring, Exp. (19 Ves. 345; 2 Rose 182). The rule of the English bankruptcy system fixed by this case, and as extended in subsequent cases, has not been adopted in Scotland, and is inconsistent with Scotch bankruptcy law. Royal Bank of Scotland v. Commercial Bank of Scotland, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 366; 47 L. T. 360; 31 W. R. 49.

Semble, assuming that the positive rule of administration which has been accepted as the law in England since the rule in Waring, Exp., was made, must be understood in accordance with the determination in Ponles v. Hargreaves (3 De M. & G. 453), still so far as it is a positive rule, and not the necessary result of equitable principles, it cannot be held to be of force in Scotland, merely because it is so in England. Ib.

The reasons assigned by Lord Cranworth in Ponles v. Hargreaves (3 De M. & G. 453), to justify the extension of Waring, Exp., to the case of a deficient security are unsatisfactory if applied to such a contract as this, and appear to overlook the fact that, when the whole benefit of a deficient security is given to the billholder, the estate of the bankrupt acceptor may lose some part of the indemnity to which, by the contract, he is entitled. Ib.

16. Watts's Settlement, Re (9 Hare 106), so far as this case decides that an order under the 10th section of the Trustee Act 1850, to vest the trust in continuing new trustees, would sever the joint tenancy, is overruled by Bute (Marquis), Re, Johns. 15; 5 Jur., N. S., 487; 33 L. T. 178.

17. Waugh v. Waddell (16 Beav. 521) commented on in Thomas v. Cross (5 N. R. 148), 10 Jur., N. S., 1163; 13 W. R. 166; 11 L. T., N. S., 430.

18. Waugh v. Waugh (2 Myl. & K. 41). The case is directly in conflict with my opinion. In that case the testator gave a sum of money in the event of the death of his nephew John Waugh, without leaving issue, to be equally divided among all the brothers and sisters of John Waugh who should be living at the time of his death, and the children then living, if any, of his brothers and sisters who should have previously departed his life, but so that the children of such deceased brother and sister should take only the shares which their parent would have taken if living. The Master of the Rolls observed, that it was plain that the words used in the first part of the bequest would comprise Eleanor Waugh, for she was the child of Alexander Waugh, a brother of John, who had died before John; but by the subsequent part of the gift it was expressed that the children of a deceased brother of John were to take only the share which their parent would have taken if living, and the parent of Eleanor being dead at the date of the will could not share in the bequests, and therefore Eleanor took nothing. I take the liberty of not concurring in that reasoning, which I conceive is not sound for the solution of the case, and indeed Waugh v. Waugh has been considered as overruled, which in effect it was in Tytherleigh v. Harbun (6 Sim. 329), in which case Shadwell, V.-Ch., observed, that the decision in Waugh v. Waugh might have been supported on the ground of the evident intention of the testator, and therefore that he did not consider that he was overruling that case. I think that the decision in Waugh v. Waugh has been commented on in such a manner that it is no longer to be considered as an authority. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Loring v. Thomas, 1 Dr. & Sm. 497, 521, 522; 30 L. J., Ch., 789, 795.

21. Webb v. Direct London & Portsmouth Railway Co. (9 Hare 129; 1 De G. M. & G. 521) doubted in Eastern Counties Railway Co. v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Ca. 331.

22. Webb v. Hewitt (3 Kay & J. 438) explained. The question in this case is whether the plaintiff, who is surety is released or not. If he is released, of course he is entitled to an injunction; if he is not released his bill must be dismissed. Now, the first and main authority relied upon on the part of the plaintiff is Webb v. Hewitt. I have only to say this as to the decision in Webb v. Hewitt, that it seems to me to proceed entirely upon this view of the transaction, that there had been a contract between the principal debtor and the principal creditor that a certain transaction should amount to payment and to extinguishment; and that being so, it renders it unnecessary to allude to that case further, for it has no application to the present. Per Giffard, V.-Ch., in Green v. Wynn, 38 L. J., Ch., 76, 77, 78, and see S. C. on appeal 38 L. J., Ch., 220, 222.

24. Webster v. Cook (15 W. R. 140; 36 L. J., Ch., 753) (Sale of Reversion) reversed, on appeal, 2 L. R., Ch., 542; 36 L. J., Ch., 753; 15 W. R. 1001; 16 L. T., N. S., 82. But contrary to Croft v. Graham, 2 De G. & Sm. 155; and Tottenham v. Emmet, 14 W. R. 3. Webster v. Cook lately came before the Master of the Rolls, and was decided by him on the principles which have governed the Court in similar cases; but his decision was afterwards, on appeal, overruled by Lord Chancellor Chelmsford. Under the circumstances of the case, however, I should not be justified were I to treat it as an authority for overruling the law, already so well settled. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in *Wyatt v. 6. Wensley, Exp. (1 De G. J. & S. 273; 11 W. R. 241), overruled. Lord Westbury, C., did not wish to be held as agreeing with the decision in this case; it would take a good deal of argument to convince him of the soundness of that decision. It is possible that I may have used the expressions imputed to me in this case, at the same time I think that they go much further than what I intended to say; if I said that nothing would warrant the vacating an enrolment short of mala fides, I stated the practice too narrowly. 5. Wild's case (6 Co. Rep. 17). Semble, the rule there laid down is inapplicable to bequests of personal estate. Heron v. Stokes, 2 Dr. & War. 89; 1 Con. & L. 270; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 284. Reversing 3 id. 163.

6. Wild's case (6 Co. Rep. 17) does not apply to personal estate. Per Lord Campbell, C., in Audsley v. Horn, 6 Jur., N. S., 205, 206; 1 De G. F. & J. 226; 29 L. J., Ch., 201; 8 W. R. 150.

7. Wild's case (6 Co. Rep. 17). I think that Wild's case does not apply here. The devise there, according to the report in 6 Rep. 17, was to Rowland Wild and his wife, and after their decease to their children. Here the gift is to Amelia Rossiter, and her children, but if they should die without issue, then over, and this distinction seems to have been commented on in the case of Stokes v. Heron, 12 Cl. & F. 183, at least according to Lord St. Leonards' note of that case in his comments upon the decision of the House of Lords (page 236); but I have not been able to find any case, except that of Stokes v. Heron, where it has been laid down, or even stated obiter, that the rule in Wild's case applied to personal estate. In the case of Stokes v. Heron, this point was not decided by the House of Lords, although Lord Brougham expressed his opinion to that effect strongly; he thought that the rule applied equally to personal estate as well as to real estate. But it should be observed, that it was not necessary for the decision in that case, and that the applicability of this rule to bequest of personality has been disputed in a great variety of cases, such as Knight v. Ellis, 2 Bro. C. C. 570, Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220, and Stone v. Maule, 2 Sim. 490. Upon a review of the whole of the cases upon this subject, I think that, setting aside some contradictory decisions, which it is not very easy to reconcile, the tendency of modern decisions has been, in cases like the present, to hold that, in personality, the bequest gives an interest for life to the mother, with an interest in remainder to the children. Per Romilly, M. R., in Audsley v. Horn, 26 Beav. 195, 198; 28 L. J., Ch., 293; 4 Jur., N. S., 1267.

8. The rule in Wild's case (6 Co. Rep. 17) is not inflexible, and will not be applied where its application would defeat the manifest intention of the testator as collected from the whole will. Grieve v. Grieve, 36 L. J., Ch., 952; 41 L. R., Eq. 180; 16 L. T., N. S., 201; 15 W. R. 572.

11. Wilkes, Exp. (5 De G. M. & G. 418). It may be right also to add, that the case of Wilkes, Exp., seems to me to have been pushed, in the argument in Irving v. Gray, 3 H. & N. 34, far beyond not only what was intended, but what was expressed. The judgment of the Court, however, takes a more correct view of the case. All that was meant to be said in it was, that the property must be devoted to the creditors, not that it must be assigned in trust for them. Per Turner, L. 4. Williams v. Owen (13 Sim. 597), which is a case about which I desire to say as little as may be, has a very remote application to this case, if it has any. It would, in my opinion, as I read it at present, be at variance entirely with the principle of Hopkinson v. Rolt, 9 H. L. Ca. 514. . . . I should find it difficult, if it were necessary, to reconcile Williams v. Owen with that universal principle in the law of suretyship, that the surety is entitled to the benefit of any security which the secured creditor may hold. It is true that the surety there had not been a party to the transaction. I cannot conceive that that makes any difference if the law be, as I take it to be, that a surety is entitled to the benefit of any security held by the mortgagee in the transaction in respect of which the surety incurs an obligation. Per Bacon, V.-Ch., in Dawson v. Whitehaven (Bank), 4 L. R., Ch. D., 639, 649, 650; 36 L. T., N. S., 310, 312; 46 L. J., Ch., 545; 25 W. R. 582. But see S. C. reversed on appeal; 6 L. R., Ch. 9. Williams on Executors (1604, 5th edit.) and Smith's M. L. (425, 4th edit.) It is laid down in these treatises:—"If a man enters into a continuing guarantee and dies, his executor, it seems, is not liable upon it for advances made after the testator's death, which operates as a revocation." This statement is incorrect, as the authorities cited for it do not support it. Bradbury v. Morgan, 31 L. J., Exch., 462; 7 L. T., N. S., 104.

10. Willingale v. Maitland (3 L. R., Eq., 103). Being, therefore, driven to see what Willingale v. Maitland decided—without attempting for a moment to say that I can or that I should wish to overrule it, it being decided by my predecessor in the year 1866, I must see what it did decide. Now what it decided was this, that a Crown grant to the inhabitants of a parish to take certain profits a prendre out of a royal manor was valid; and that the effect of the grant was to incorporate the inhabitants for the purpose of enalling them to exercise the rights. That is all Willingale v. Maitland decided. Per Jessel, M. R., in Chilton v. London Corporation, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 735, 741; 38 L. T., N. S., 498, 500; 47 L. J., Ch., 133; 26 W. R. 474.

22. Wilson v. Lloyd (16 L. R., Eq., 60; 42 L. J., Ch., 599; 28 L. T. 331; 21 W. R. 507). In the case of Wilson v. Lloyd, the chief judge in bankruptcy held that a surety was discharged by the creditor voting in favour of accepting a composition from the principal debtor. There were, however, a great many points in that case, and we think that the difference between a composition by a voluntary deed or agreement and by composition under the Bankruptcy Act was not sufficiently considered. On the other hand, in the case of Megrath v. Gray (9 L. R., C. P., 216), the Court of Common Pleas appears to have come, after great consideration, to a directly contrary conclusion. In that case, among the liabilities of the firm of Megrath and Highton were two acceptances; the partnership between the two was dissolved, Highton undertaking to pay all debts and to indemnify Megrath. Highton filed his petition under the Bankruptcy Act, and the Adelphi Bank, the holders of the bills, voted in favour of the resolution, and it was held that they had not, by so doing, discharged Megrath. We entirely agree in the decision of the Court of Common Pleas, and in the reasons they have given for it. We think that the discharge of a debtor under a liquidation or a composition is really a discharge in bankruptcy by operation of law. Per James, L. J., in Jacobs, Exp. & Re, 23 W. R. 251; 10 L. 5. Wilson v. Wilson (1 De G. & Sm. 152) is a very peculiar case, and I cannot conceive that the Vice-Chancellor could have meant to decide, that an unattested will would put an heir-at-law to his election. But if the case really did go to that length, I should not follow it. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Middlebrook v. Bromley, 9 Jur., N. S., 614, 615; 11 W. R. 712.

6. Wilson v. Wilson (5 H. L. Ca. 40; 23 L. J., Ch., 697). 9. Wilton v. Colvin (3 Diew. 617). I am very glad to have this opportunity of correcting an impression as to what I said in Wilton v. Colvin. In Macburcan v. Lane (5 Jur., N. S., 591), Stuart, V.-Ch., considered that I had expressed a doubt whether Blythe v. Granville (13 Sim. 190) was properly decided. Now, that was a case of reversionary interest, and Sir L. Shadwell held, that it came within the meaning of the covenant; and I had not the smallest idea of intimating that I felt the smallest dissatisfaction with that decision, and I am of opinion that a reversion which falls into possession does come within the covenant. The objection I made applies to one part of the judgment, in which he says, "The covenant, therefore, plainly applies to that property which the wife would become entitled to as soon as the coverture took effect. The coverture was the futurity referred to; and immediately on the marriage taking place the wife became entitled to the property during the coverture." The reasoning, therefore, is, that though she was entitled before coverture, yet after coverture she is become entitled during coverture, and therefore there is a change of condition; and from that I ventured most respectfully to dissent. And this appears from the report of Wilton v. Colvin (25 L. J., Ch., 850; see also 2 Jur., N. S., 867, 4 W. R. 759), in which it is clear that the only observation I made intimating any dissent related to that particular part. Per Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Aicher v. Kelly, 6 Jur., N. S., 814, 815.

11. Wiltshire v. Rabbits (14 Sim. 76). The only doubt I have felt arises from the decision in Wiltshire v. Rabbits. But in Foster v. Blackstone (1 M. & K. 297) the House of Lords decided that money to be produced by the sale of land is within the doctrine of notice. Wiltshire v. Rabbits cannot easily be reconciled with Foster v. Blackstone. Per Stuart, V.-Ch., in Consolidated Investment & Insurance Co. v. Riley, 1 Giff. 371, 375, 376.

14. Windham v. Graham (1 Russ. 331) seems to be a case which was decided the other way; but I think, upon examining that case, that the distinction taken by Mr. Jessel is a correct one, and that Windham v. Graham does not affect the rule at all. I repeat again that it has always been a contest between the two rules of the vesting of the estate and the period when the class is to be ascertained. In Windham v. Graham there were two funds, 4,000*l.* and 6,000*l.*; and the Master of the Rolls (Lord Gifford) determined that with respect to one of those sums there could be no question, because the words of the settlement were distinct and positive that it should become a vested interest on birth and treated specially. Lord Gifford considered that this indication of what was to be done with respect to the sum of 4,000*l.* was a clue to show what the intention was with respect to the 6,000*l.*, and that they must both go in the same way. Therefore he determined that the rule of vesting applied in that case, and not the period of distribution. Of course it is admitted, in all these cases, that the settlor or the testator, whichever it is, can fix the time if he pleases, and give directions exactly as he likes; and any directions given by him will control the rule of law upon the subject. It is, therefore, really a question of intention. In Windham v. Graham Lord Gifford determined that the intention was shown by the words which were used in the direction for the vesting of the property. In this case I think that the intention to be gathered from the settlement is the other way. I think that the rule of construction is the same whether in a will or a settlement. I do not think there is any difference. I admit there might be some distinction if it were an executory settlement, as in the singular case which Mr. Hall referred to, in which articles of settlement were executed on the same day; but there is no question of that sort upon the present occasion. Per Lord Romilly, Bailey, Re, 21 L. T. N. S., 195, 196, 197; 39 L. J., Ch., 388; 18 W. R. 481; 9 L. R., Eq., 491.

See 6 Jur., N. S., Part 2, 447; 2 De G. F. & J. 350; 30 L. J., Ch., 22), and Eno v. Tatham (32 L. J., Ch., 311), were two decisions of equal authority, and it was his business to reconcile them if he could. Pembroke v. Friend (1 John. & H. 132) gave him the opportunity. A direction to pay out of personal estate pointed out a particular fund out of which debts were to be paid; there was none such here, and he must follow Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft, and hold that there was no signification of a contrary intention within the meaning of the Act 17 & 18 Vict., c. 113. But as between the two properties included in the mortgage securities, he thought that the residuary devise must bear the burden of the debt in exoneration of that specifically devised, for the fact of making a specific devise signified a contrary intention. 22. Wortham v. Pemberton (1 De G. & Sm. 641) discredited from Mahns, V.-Ch., said that he considered the interpretation of the Act 18 & 19 Vict., c. 43, Infants Settlement Act, given by Mr. Pearson to be the correct one, and that no jurisdiction was given by it to the Court to entertain applications made against infants, or without their consent. The object of the Act was this; seeing that infants under twenty-one were capable of contracting valid marriages, but were not capable of doing that which is incidental to marriage, settling their property, the law gave them this power, subject to the sanction of the Court of Chancery, and with certain restrictions. Then, had the Court any jurisdiction over this young lady, independently of that Act. He thought not; certainly Wortham v. Pemberton seemed to be in favour of the application on behalf of an infant married woman without her consent; but he had been counsel in that case, and was of opinion that Knight Bruce, V.-Ch., the judge who decided it, had been induced by his strong sense of the husband's misconduct to go beyond the strict limits of the law; in fact, the case was an instance of the proverb, that hard cases made bad law; he must decline, therefore, to follow Wortham v. Pemberton. and as the present application seemed altogether misconceived and unjustifiable he should dismiss the petition with costs of all parties to be paid by the next friend. 14. Yates, Ex p. (2 De G. & J. 191; 4 Jur., N. S., 649; 27 L. J., Biv., 9). In the case of Yates, Ex p., the Lords Justices on overruling the case in the Queen's Bench, seem to have altogether overlooked the distinction between a bill of exchange and a promissory note. They lay down what is contrary to the common law, without hearing argument on the point, and apparently without thinking of the point at all, although they are overruling a decision of a court of law on a point of law. Per Willes, J., in Leece v. Kirkman, 6 Jur., N. S., 17.

15. Yates v. Jack (1 L. R., Ch., 295; 14 W. R. 618; 14 L. T., N. S., 152) has made it clear that the right of a person living in a town to protection from interference with his light is not different from the right of a person living in the country. The observation of the Lord Chancellor in that case, that he was to regard the possible uses to which the plaintiff's house might be put, may be reconciled with the malt-house case (Martin v. Goble, 1 Camp. 320), by supposing that his lordship meant the uses of the house as it stands at the time of the complaint, and not if and when rebuilt for some other and totally different purposes. Per Wood, V.-Ch., in Dent v. Auction Mart Co., 14 W. R. 709; 2 L. R., Eq., 248; 12 Jur., N. S., 417; 35 L. J., Ch., 555; 14 L. T., N. S., 827.

16. York (Mayor) v. Pilkington (2 Atk. 302). Why ought a court of equity to interfere with the ordinary proceedings of a criminal court? I am not aware that any such power exists. The point came before me in Saull v. Browne (10 L. R., Ch., 64; 44 L. J., Ch., 1; 13 Cox C. C. 30; 23 W. R. 50; 31 L. T. 493), where I declined to interfere with criminal proceedings or to follow Lord Hardwicke's doubtful decision in York (Mayor) v. Pilkington. My decision was appealed from, and the Lords Justices thought it a right decision. With the exception of that case before Lord Hardwicke, there is no instance in which a court of equity has interfered in criminal proceedings. I do not say that the Court might not interfere in a possible case, but, as a general rule, it will not. Per Jessel, M. R., in Kerr v. Preston (Corporation), 6 L. R., Ch. D., 463, 467; 46 L. J., Ch., 409; 25 W. R. 264.

18. Young v. Hassard (1 Jones & Lat. 467) not consistent with Boughton v. Boughton, 1 H. L. Ca. 406. Simmons v. Rose, 6 De G. M. & G. 411; 2 Jur., N. S., 73; 25 L. J., Ch., 615.

19. Young v. Robertson (4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 314), although apparently acted upon by the Lords Justices in Gregson, Re (2 De G. J. & S., 428, 442; 10 Jur., N. S., 1138; 3 L. J., Ch., 41; 5 N. R. 99; 13 W. R. 193; 11 L. T., N. S., 460), was not followed by the Court of Exchequer in Richardson v. Power, 11 Jur., N. S., 739.
